The American Academy

SINCE 1889 The Academy has served as a common meeting ground for those who have our political and social responsibilities at heart. Through its publication, THE ANNALS, The Academy has come to be an educative stimulus to thousands of thoughtful and mature readers not only in America but also in many other parts of the world. Its objective is education, not propaganda. It is a medium for passing on constructive, accurate interpretations of the facts involved in key problems facing America and the world, prepared by widely recognized professional authorities in a readable and intelligent manner.

Libraries and the many thousands of Academy members, from foreign presidents and premiers to country high school teachers, have learned to value THE ANNALS as one of the most reliable, objective sources of information about contemporary problems.

The officers and directors of The Academy will be honored to have you among us.

Dear Mr. Alderfer:

Our Secretary-Treasurer estimates that we could undertake the mailing proposed in your letter of January 27 for about $35.00 for clerical staff time, plus postage. Allowing for duplications, our mailing list would run about 4,000.

Only one problem outstanding: This arrangement assumes the use of our addressograph machine, which will accomodate nothing wider than the normal letter size (No. 10) envelope. Unfortunately, our machine requires an expensive adjustment to run off the addresses on tape, and we simply don't have the clerical staff available to address the envelopes individually. Is there any possibility of your invitation being folded for a number ten envelope? If that can be worked out, we should be glad to proceed at your convenience.

We too would like for our subscribers to know about the March issue of The Annals. Failing a promotional mailing, we can at least insert a notice of it in our monthly publication.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming,
Assistant Director.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

It was a pleasure to hear from you. I hope you will disregard my wire in the light of your kind letter of January 25.

I appreciate very much your willingness to cooperate in publicizing the March volume of THE ANNALS, and I can also appreciate your binding policy that names on your mailing lists may not leave the office. The difficulty I face in the light of this policy is the fact that announcements that we send out also double as personalized invitations to membership in the Academy; a sample of our January promotion is enclosed to illustrate. Furthermore we compare all names used in our promotion mailings with our present membership so that current members of the Academy are omitted from such mailings.

I am wondering, however, whether your office would be willing to undertake the following, even though it sounds a bit complicated, - we would, of course, be willing to pay for whatever costs are involved. For the sake of discussion let us assume that we sent you 3500 envelopes and invitation forms, along with a geographically arranged strip list of Academy members in the states covered by the Southern Regional Council. Would it be possible to employ your staff on comparing our list of names with yours, filling in the names of members of the Council who are not members of the Academy, and mailing out these invitations or announcements directly from your office? As I say, I realize this may be suggesting ~~the~~ a process that your staff would not undertake to do, but if you would be able to consider it I would much appreciate having from you an estimated cost of the total operation.

I would not so thoroughly pursue this matter with you were it not for the fact your Council so admirably represents the type of individual we are so eager to communicate with regarding this volume. I know Dr. Reid feels the same way about it.

Cordially yours,

Gordon Alderfer

Dear Mr. Alderfer:

Our problems seem to be at an end. The smaller of the two envelopes that you sent will work in our addressograph, and we can go ahead anytime on the basis described in my last letter.

I think we are clear about the use of your membership strip list to avoid duplications and our estimate took that into account.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

I appreciate so much your willing to bear with us! Just to be sure to make it as easy as possible, I am enclosing two types of envelopes so your office can let me know which can best be used on your addressograph. The odd-sized envelope, measuring 5 x 6½", is the one we normally use for sending our our invitation-announcements. The other envelope, measuring 6½ x 3 5/8", is a standard size which we can supply, but its use will require that the printer fold the invitation form twice rather than once as is usually done. To use a regular No. 10 envelope as you suggest just doesn't seem to be feasible because the invitation form would have to be redesigned.

To save your office the trouble of filling in the invitation form by writing the name of the person addressed, I will instruct our printer to to change the copy on the front to read "The American Academy etc. cordially invites you to membership etc." Hence, the individual name will not need to be written in.

I am not sure you understood our reference to sending you a strip-list of our members in the states covered by your Council. What I meant to say was that I would like your office to compare the names you run off on our envelopes with the names of our own members in your states and eliminate any duplications so that those of your members who are already members of The Academy will not receive an invitation. Our strip list is, of course, arranged geographically by states and cities. If this seems like too cumbersome a procedure, let me know and perhaps we can alter our long-standing policy in this instance.

Evidences are accumulating that the March volume will have a wider than usual audience and sale. I am sending along a proof copy of our March invitation. I know your own contribution on "Resistance Movements" will add much to the meaning of the whole volume.

Cordially yours,

Gordon Alderfer

Dear Mr. Fleming:

I hope by now you have received the March issue of THE ANNALS on " Racial pesegregation and Integration," and that you will find the volume as a whole informative and interesting. We deeply appreciate your assistance in making this issue what seems to me to be an outstanding symposium on the problem.

RESISTANCE MOVEMENTS AND RACIAL DESEGREGATION

Harold C. Fleming

Since the era of Reconstruction, every period of crisis in the relations of the South and the Nation has given rise to resistance movements below the Potomac. The archetypal pattern was set by the original Ku Klux Klan. Political developments around the turn of the century wove the ethos of white supremacy into the social, economic, and political fabric of Southern life. During the past half century that fabric has been so stretched, patched, and retailored that in many respects it is hardly recognisable. But the tough strands of the Lost Cause have managed to hold together, providing today virtually the last reminder of a once-united white South.

Since the Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, at least twenty pro-segregation groups have appeared on the Southern scene.[1] Among these organizations there are wide variations in ideology and effectiveness; but they have in common the aim of mobilizing resentment against "outside interference" in the racial affairs of the region. And a substantial number of them are loosely federated under the spiritual authority of the White Citizens' Councils.

It is a measure of Southern progress that the mummery and frontier methods of the old Ku Klux Klan are no longer respectable. There is, to be sure, a newly chartered organization which seeks to trade on the name. But it is little more than a pallid ghost of its adopted ancestor. Indeed, since the demise of the powerful Klan of the 1920s, successive incarnations have declined steadily in strength and in influence. The revival of the hooded order after World War Two lasted only a few embattled years. Then it found itself denounced from the pulpit and the platform, legislated against in state capitols, and prosecuted by state and federal law enforcement agencies. Its bankruptcy was complete when it appeared on the United States Attorney General's list of subversive organizations.

The current Klan's attempts to exploit reaction to the Supreme Court's ruling have hardly been noteworthy so far. The self-styled Imperial Wizard is an Atlanta paint-sprayer named E. L. Edwards, who has two arrests and one conviction for gambling to his credit. Edwards has made speeches and distributed literature in parts of Georgia, South Carolina, and Texas. Aside from these efforts to recruit dues-paying members, the Klan has shown little vitality. Ineptly led, unmasked by state laws, and inhibited by the unfriendly attentions of the F. B. I., it is a "fringe" group in the full meaning of the term.

1 Carolina Committee of 52, States Rights League of South Carolina, Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, Tennessee Society for the Maintenance of Segregation, Defenders of State Sovereignty of Virginia, Virginia League. (Based on reports in Southern School News and files of the Southern Regional Council.)

One of the factors contributing to the decline of the latter-day Klan has been its appeal to anti-Catholic and anti-Jewish bigotry. The South has its share of prejudice against these religious minorities, but extreme manifestations of it are generally considered disreputable. A case in point is the experience of the National Association for the Advancement of White People (NAAWP), the first and most widely publicised pro-segregation group of the present cycle.

The NAAWP -- the personal creation of Bryant Bowles, a Floridian with a well documented police record -- won overnight notoreity for its role in the Milford, Delaware, controversy. At the beginning of the 1954-55 school term, the Milford Board of Education had admitted eleven Negro students to the hitherto white high school. Bowles quickly seized the opportunity to rally resentful white people of the area and to direct them in a campaign of school boycotts and demonstrations. State authorities reacted with equivocal and confused public statements, which had the practical effect of repudiating the Milford school board. In the end, segregation was restored, the school board replaced, and Bowles elevated to a position of honor in segregationist circles.

The outcome of this local skirmish unquestionably gave encouragement and impetus to the resistance movement throughout the South. But the subsequent career of the NAAWP has been anti-climactic. Bowles's attempt to exploit anti-desegregation sentiment in Baltimore was thwarted by prompt and resolute action on the part of civic groups and public officials. Unsavory details of Bowles's background came to light, and he found himself indicted on a charge of violating state school laws.

These liabilities alone might not have prevented Bowles from extending the NAAWP into the South and making of it the mass movement he had predicted it would be. It soon became apparent, however, that he was making overt and blatant use of anti-semitism. He distributed to NAAWP supporters thousands of copies of such anti-Jewish nationalist publications as Common Sense and The American Nationalist. He also shared the platform with individuals whose anti-semitic records were well known, and himself startled audiences with diatribes against "the Jews who are alien to the white race and most influential and instrumental in the spoiling, looting, and defilement of it...."

By these tactics Bowles forfeited the possibility of securing influential community backing for his organization. During the summer of 1955, a segregation-minded group in Charlotte, N. C., invited Bowles to address a rally, looking toward the establishment of a local chapter of the NAAWP. A public airing of Bowles's anti-semitic activities, however, caused several of the local sponsors to withdraw and evidently destroyed any prospects of an effective organization in Charlotte. At this writing, the NAAWP appears to have little or no following outside of southern Delaware, and its long-range hopes there seem none too bright.

The contemporary Klan, the NAAWP, and other organizations of extremist temper cannot be dismissed as of no consequence. In a disturbed social situation, fringe groups of this kind can constitute a serious threat. During quiescent periods, they maintain a hard core of professional organizers and dedicated followers. When tension in a given area reaches a sufficiently high level, these experienced agents may serve as catalysts of violence.

While the danger of mob action should not be overlooked, neither should it be exaggerated. There is reason to believe that even the most vocal champaions of segregation among Southern state officials would act to quell public disorders. They are well aware the widespread or prolonged violence would have disastrous consequences for their respective states, in terms of both economic penalties and possible federal intervention. Thus rioting and other forms of mob action, if they occur, are likely to be localized and short-lived.

In short, the organizations whose overt appeal is to the violence-minded are not yet extinct, but they are becoming obsolete. The legitimate heirs of the Reconstruction Klan use a subtler approach. They have translated the lawless elements of the resistance tradition into more modern idiom -- modern, that is, in terms of the plantation culture which persists in the subregion commonly called the Black Belt.

This band of agricultural counties, stretching from southeast Virginia to east Texas, was the heartland of the slave South, just as today it is the last stronghold of segregation. Both the economy and the social system of the Black Belt have traditionally depended on the subservience of the large Negro Population, which ranges from 40 to 80 per cent of the county totals. During the last century, the planter aristocracy of this area imposed its will on the reluctant, and sometimes rebellious, South of the highlands and the piedmont. And in the decades following the Civil War, the values of the plantation society were fixed in the states of the lower South by means of distorted legislative apportionment and similar political devices.

The agrarian Black Belt, weakened by a steady outflow of population and the ascendancy of urban industrialization, has made many concessions in the last generation. Nevertheless, in coalition with some urban business and industrial interests, it still exerts a powerful influence on the state governments of the deep South, and it still clings fiercely to the doctrine of white supremacy. It is not surprising, then, that the most formidable of the existing pro-segregation movements was born in the Mississippi delta.

The first White Citizens' Council was established in Indianola, Mississippi, a few months after the Supreme Court's 1954 school decision. A state headquarters was later opened in Winona, Mississippi, the home of the executive secretary, a young planter named Robert B. Patterson. The movement was extended into surrounding counties through mimeographed mailings and semi-secret meetings. By October 1954 the WCC, organized in some 21 counties, was strong enough to play a significant role in the passage of two state constitutional amendments -- one designed to facilitate disfranchisement of Negro voters, the other aimed at circumventing the Supreme Court rulings.

Today the WCC claims more than 250 chapters in Mississippi, with a membership of 60,000. The organization has also established itself in Black Belt counties of Texas, Arkansas, Alabama, and South Carolina, as well as maintaining close ties with similar organizations elsewhere in the South. In the words of Robert B. Patterson, "In some of the states they go by different names, but we are all seeking the same goal, and that's what counts."

The constituency of this loose federation was defined, at least in part, in the first issue of the WCC's official publication. An introductory editorial announced that subsequent issues would be mailed not only to WCC members in the several states, but also to members of seven other pro-segregation organizations.[2]

[2] Tennessee Society for the Maintenance of Segregation, Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, American States Rights Association of Birmingham, Georgia States Rights Council, Patriots of North Carolina, Defenders of State Sovereignty of Virginia, The Virginia League. (The Citizens' Council, Vol. 1, No. 1, October 1955, Jackson, Mississippi.)

The WCC's published statements of purpose have been couched in relatively lofty and generalized phrases. The official slogan, for example, reads: "Dedicated to the maintenance of peace, good order, and domestic tranquility in our Communities and in our State and to the preservation of our State's Rights."

The main object of the WCC's official pronouncements appears to be two-fold: to create an aura of respectability around the movement; and to divest the central organization of responsibility for the utterances and actions of its component groups. Toward the first end, WCC literature has stressed the claim that its leaders are drawn from the "best" people and that its program is essential to the prevention of violence. The leaflet just quoted declares:

> The highest type of leadership has been provided in each community where councils have been formed. We intend to prevent violence, friction and race hatred. We intend to carry out the peaceful relations we have had with our colored citizens....

Even critics of the WCC will concede that many of the leaders of the movement have community status in terms of political influence, economic power, or both. What these critics do not concede is that status of this kind automatically confers respectability on the aims and methods of the movement. As Hodding Carter has commented:

> ...by and large, the men who thus far have led the Councils' movement have standing in their communities. They are, primarily, men with an obsession -- namely, that integration of the public schools means blood integration as well -- and this obsession is shared by many who abhor the Councils. It may be remembered unhappily, that at the outset of the Klan's revival in the '20's, men also gave way to their obsessions, whether about Negro, Catholic or Jew or all three.

Some uneasy recognition of this fact may underlie the WCC's insistence on decentralized responsibility. The literature of the organization asserts that local councils are independent -- a point that is repeatedly emphasized by spokesmen for the parent Mississippi Association. One WCC official typically disclaimed knowledge of techniques being used with the statement, "You must realize that the Citizens' Council movement is not a closely controlled movement."

The advantages of such vaguely defined lines of responsibility are obvious when one turns to the question of method. Initially, the WCC made no secret of the fact that its chief weapon would be economic pressure. One of the original leaders of the movement, former state senator Fred Jones of Inverness, Mississippi, issued a public statement in October 1954, in which he said:

> We can accomplish our purposes largely with economic pressure in dealing with members of the Negro race who are not cooperating and with members of the white race who fail to cooperate, we can apply social and political pressure.

In the context of the Black Belt, this was little more than a verbalization of the obvious. The livelihood of Negroes in this agricultural area, except for an occasional professional man, has traditionally depended on the good will of white landlords, bankers, merchants, and local officials. This economic dependence has always been a major instrument of social control. For example, it largely accounts for the fact that the counties with the densest Negro populations have few or no Negro voters.

As the WCC spread outside the Mississippi delta, however, the principle of economic coercion drew strong criticism. At an organizing rally in Dallas County, Alabama, one speaker spelled out the principle in this bald language:

> The white population this county controls the money, and this > is an advantage that the council will use is a fight to legally maintain complete segregation of the races. We intend to make it difficult, if not impossible, for any Negro who advocates desegregation to find and hold a job, get credit or renew a mortgage.

This widely publicized statement was roundly condemned by many newspapers, in the South as well as elsewhere. The Montgomery Advertiser, for example, in an editorial entitled "Economic Lynch Law," declared:

> The manicured Kluxism of these White Citizens' Councils is rash, indecent and vicious.... This ("economic thuggery") is rash because the Negro himself holds a powerful and growing economic power of his own. The merchants, the bankers, the grocery stores and the auto dealers could find that they have grasped a two-edged sword that cuts wickedly in two directions .... What is proposed is indecent and vicious because we find a dominant group standing in the shadows threatening to confiscate the meat, drink, and shelter of dissenters.

Since that time, leaders of the WCC have minimized or disavowed organizational responsibility for economic reprisals. Illustrative was the answer to press queries given by Alston Keith, chairman of the Dallas County WCC, after some 16 Negro signers of an integration petition lost their jobs. Keith declared that the council would not take "credit or censure" for what he called a "spontaneous reaction" to the filing of the petition. But he added, "I don't believe there would have been the unity of action that there was without the educational work of the citizens. They did jut what we have been advocating right along."

More circumspection is displayed by some, as witness this endorsement by South Carolina's Lt. Governor Ernest F. Hollins:

> It is my belief that the Citizens' Councils, by mobilizing the best leadership at the community level, can help to restore decency in government and maintain peace and security for all people, both white and Negro. I am glad that responsible spokesmen for the movement say they do not use organized economic > pressure as a weapon against anyone.... The organization of pressures is full of dangers.

Whatever degree of direct responsibility may be attributed to the WCC, both economic and social pressures have been widely used against advocates of desegregation. Negro teachers have been discharged, Negro farmers have been denied credit, and Negro merchants have been boycotted by wholesale distributors. In a number of instances, signers of desegregation petitions directed to local school boards have recanted after their names and addresses were published by the newspapers. In a few cases, white persons believed to hold unorthodox racial views have been "advised" by organized groups of their neighbors to move; and a small but growing number of white ministers have lost their pulpits because of their opinions on segregation.

The relatively few publicized incidents of this kind clearly do not measure the full extent of economic and social pressure. Furthermore, "economic lynchings," like the physical lynchings of years past, are intended as object lessons; they are meant not only to penalize the individual victim, but to silence and neutralize other potential dissenters. The effectiveness of this inhibiting function is a matter of speculation, but there is no doubt that a climate of fear and repression is widespread.

It should be noted, however, that the double-edged quality of economic sanctions has been felt in some communities. In Orangeburg, South Carolina, merchants and food distributors who cooperated in the WCC program found themselves boycotted by the Negro students of State College. Reports from other communities in the Black Belt indicate similar declines in Negro patronage of business establishments operated by WCC members. A counter-measure of another sort was the deposit of $250,000 in the Tri-State Bank of Memphis by the NAACP and other organizations to supply credit to victims of the WCC economic blacklist. The outcome of this economic tug-of war cannot yet be foreseen, but it is apparent that Negroes will not be the only ones to suffer.

Fundamentally, the Southern resistance movement is a desperate rearguard action against the slow but inexorable advance of democratic values. The plantation culture's area of influence has shrunk steadily, until today it clearly dominates only four state governments -- those of Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana -- and in most of these states it is not wholly unchallenged. The resulting awareness of threat, from both within and without, has heightened the intolerance of the resistance leaders.

The propaganda of the WCC and related groups advances the segregation dogma with inquistional fierceness. Integration, according to this orthodoxy, is an aim of the Communist conspiracy, designed to bring about "mongrelization" of the races and the consequent collapse of our society. The NAACP and other organizations with like purposes are stigmatized as agents of this vast alien plot. The Supreme Court is vilified as the "political tool" of the conspirators, while the schools and churches are represented as honeycombed by "neo-communist and neo-socialist teachers and preachers."

Indeed, the new resistance doctrine has political implications far transcending the issue of racial segregation. Doubtless for the rank and file adherents Negrophobia is the sole motive force. But the leaders of the movement evidently view the segregation issue as a rallying point for broader purposes. W. J. Simmons, executive secretary of the Jackson, Mississippi, Council, made this revealing statement in an interview with Associated Press reporter Bem Price:

> I think (the WCC) is much more than a white supremacist group and I think it is much more than a protectionist group. I think it is fundamentally the first real stirrings of a conservative revolt in this country, judging by the responses we've gotten from other states.... Some of the people who are attracted to this movement may not be concerned about the Negro. What would be classes as the old white supremacist movement has no place. It is too narrow.

The WCC lays great stress on political participation by its members. Each local council, declares the prospectus, should have a Political and Elections Committee.

> This committee studies candidates for local and state elections and presents their qualifications to the voters. It attempts to get candidates to voice their opinion on vital subjects prior to election. It can reach each voter personally to present the truth on all matters to the people.

The criteria to be applied in judging candidates are not stated. But in the same leaflet appears this suggestive passage:

> The idea now is seemingly to pride ourselves in the fact that everybody in the world should be made equal by law, regardless of aptitude or heritage. The "have nots" must share equally with the "have gots" in this new world order.... This integration scheme ties right in with the new, one world, one creed, one race philosophy fostered by the ultra-idealists and left-wingers.

The political orientation of the resistance leadership emerges even more clearly in the announcement of a new regional organization called the Federation for Constitutional Government. This super-organization lists among its officers the principals of the WCC and its affiliated groups; it also boasts the sponsorship of many of the leaders of the 1948 States Rights or "Dixiecrat" movement, including J. Strom Thurmond and Fielding Wright, who were the presidential and vice-presidential nominees, respectively.

The preservation of segregation is, of course, one of the aims of the new Federation; but this aim is overshadowed by such purposes as "resisting nomination of leftist candidates for president and vice-president and other offices" and "opposing adoption of socialistic (national party) platforms." Plainly, a new political movement is under way, its voting strength hopefully vested in the membership of the WCC and other resistance organizations.

Summary and Conclusion

Any assessment of the Southern resistance movement at this date must be tentative. So far, attempts to implement the several desegregation rulings of the Supreme Court have not reached a decisive stage in the Deep South. Only as litigation is carried to its ultimate conclusion will the effectiveness -- and the dangers -- of the pro-segregation groups be fully measured.

Meanwhile, it is possible to sum up the strengths and weaknesses of the resistance movement as it appears today.

Strengths

(1) In areas of the South with proportionately large Negro populations, white sentiment is overwhelmingly opposed to desegregation. The very real anxieties and fears of the public offer a fertile field for racist exploitation.

(2) Negroes are politically impotent and economically dependent in precisely those areas where their numbers are largest; hence, they are unable to make their full weight as a group felt in the struggle against oppressive measures.

(3) Advocates of extreme pro-segregation views are far more vocal than moderates or liberals; many white Southerners who are opposed to the resistance groups fear the consequences of speaking out.

(4) Political control of at least four Southern states is in the hands of politicians who are wholly sympathetic with the aims and methods of the resistance groups; the States Rights Council of Georgia, for example, was organized by the governor and other leading office-holders. In four additional states, the resistance groups exert strong, if not always decisive, influence on the legislatures and public officials.

Weaknesses

(1) The once-solid South is solid no more. School desegregation is proceeding apace in such border states as West Virginia and Oklahoma; is under way in parts of Texas, Arkansas, and Kentucky; and appears in prospect in eastern Tennessee and western North Carolina. As the domain of segregation shrinks, the resistance groups' claims on sectional loyalty will be steadily weakened.

(2) The growing Negro vote is gradually but relentlessly eroding the political base of die-hard resistance to racial change.

(3) All of the principal religious bodies active in the South are officially committee to the principle of desegregation. Although opposition to this principle is widespread at the congregational level, church leadership is not likely to recede from its position. As time goes on, more and more clergymen and church people may be expected to challenge segregation on moral grounds.

(4) While the individual Negro in the Black Belt is relatively powerless, Negroes in the mass are capable of formidable economic retaliation. White merchants and businessmen are becoming uncomfortably aware of the potentially disastrous effects of organized boycotts by Negroes.

(5) The ultra-conservative political aims of the resistance leadership may ultimately alienate much of its following. Many rank-and-file members of the WCC are working people whose economic interests conflict with those of the "Dixiecrats," who are generally hostile to organized labor, progressive tax measures, and government programs benefitting low- and middle income groups. This conflict of interests is presently obscured by racial feeling, but it is likely to be recognized in time.

(6) The "respectability" of the WCC is threatened by its affinity with extreme nationalist movements elsewhere. The WCC has admitted distributing the anti-semitic literature published by such groups, with the defense that only the anti-Negro content was considered relevant.

(7) Despite loud public denials, leaders of the resistance movement realize that it can only be a delaying action. No one seriously believes that the Supreme Court's decisions will be reversed or that a handful of states can resist the national policy of desegregation indefinitely. And, although delay might be extended for a long time by determined efforts, the knowledge that defeat is ultimately certain should have an increasingly demoralizing effect on the movement.

In sum, the Southern resistance movement is a foredoomed effort. The question is, how long can it be sustained, and at what cost in human suffering and degradation?

Dear Professor Rose:

I have your recent proposal regarding an article about the Council in next January's Annals. I shall be glad to do it, comforted at this time by your September 1st deadline.

It was very good of you and Mrs. Rose to come out to my house while you were in Atlanta. We enjoyed very much meeting you, and I hope that when you next returnwe can offer better hospitality.

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

I am greatly pleased to learn that you have accepted Professor Rose's invitation to prepare an article for the January 1965 issue of The Annals, a volume which should prove to be a real contribution to the subject it covers, considering the high caliber of the contributing authors.

Enclosed you will find a memorandum, which I hope you will read carefully and when the time comes, give it to your secretary to help her in the preparation of the typescript. This will aid us greatly in getting your article ready for the press.

May I call your special attention to the imperative need of observing the deadline of September 1, because shortly after that Professor Rose is leaving for the Far East. Please observe also the word limit set on your article by Professor Rose. I am working on a tight budget and considering the number of articles planned for the volume, any overrun would be embarrassing.

Thank you again for your willingness to participate.

Sincerely yours,

MEMORANDUM FOR AUTHORS OF ANNALS ARTICLES

We greatly appreciate your promise to write an article for THE ANNALS. We hope that you will take note of the following suggestions and thereby make it unnecessary for us to pester you later with correspondence.

1. Please keep in mind that you are writing for educated laymen and not for specialists in your field.

2. Please do not exceed the word limit assigned by the editor.

We operate on a tight budget. You will prefer to trim your own article to the length assigned rather than to have us do so.

3. Please observe the deadline strictly.

Our publication schedule allows little leeway. Delays get us in trouble with our printers.

4. Please send us the original typescript.

Carbons smudge too easily. Please keep the carbon for checking with galley proof.

5. Please supply subheads.

We use subheads only to break the monotony of the printed page, not as an outline of the article.

6. Please furnish an abstract — not more than 200 words — which we can put at the head of your article. See sample.

We could prepare one but you would prefer your own, which would no doubt be better.

7. Please attach a brief autobiographical note. See sample.

Academic degrees, present position, etc.

8. Please give full name or initials of persons mentioned in your article.

We need this information for our index.

9. Please do not attach a numbered bibliography, or any bibliography.

We do not use the style of referring in the text to bibliographical items placed in a separate and numbered bibliography at the end of an article. It is a practice common in medical and certain other publications. We do not favor it.

10. Please supply the following information in your footnote references:

For books: Author's full name, title of work, place and year of publication, page reference.

For articles: Author's full name, title of article, name of journal, volume number, month and year of publication, specific page reference.

11. Finally, please ask your typist to:

a. Leave wide margins
b. Double-space text, including material quoted
c. Double-space all footnotes.

Thank you!

Automation—End or a New Day in Unionism?

By James L. Stern

Abstract: Automation adversely affects unions by changing the nature of work and reducing the solidarity of the work group. Strikes become more difficult to conduct because automation facilitates continued operation by nonbargaining-unit personnel. Organizational efforts are retarded by the changes in occupational characteristics, number, and location of jobs in the various sectors of the economy. Union power is reduced by the erosion of the bargaining unit caused by the creation of the increased number of technical jobs outside of the traditional unit. Automation enables corporations to extend their boundaries across industry lines while political considerations presently prevent the unions from revising their structure to match the increased corporate power at the bargaining table. Although all of these considerations make the task of the union more difficult, none of these pose insurmountable problems. A reorientation of union program and function in line with the changes in work, in occupational characteristics, and in the background and attitudes of new young potential members is possible. Solidarity may be rebuilt upon common vocational interests in the establishment of nationally recognized training programs for the new technical occupations. Declining effectiveness of strikes may be offset by increasing effectiveness of political activity to achieve union goals.

James L. Stern, Ph.D., Madison, Wisconsin, is Professor of Economics and Labor Education in the Department of Economics and School for Workers of the University of Wisconsin. He previously worked for the United Auto Workers Union and for the Economic Cooperation Administration on productivity and collective-bargaining problems and on the impact of technological change. He served as a consultant to the Automation Subcommittee of the President's Labor-Management Advisory Committee and has written numerous articles on automation.

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

September 25, 1964

MEMO TO: The Executive Committee
FROM : Leslie W. Dunbar
RE : Suggested Topic for Discussion on September 30, 1964

A very strong attempt is being made for the Executive Committee meeting to minimize the business issues that come before you so that there can be more discussion of program. Ray Wheeler shares my hope that this can be done, not only at the meeting this coming week but frequently.

At the meeting on September 30, one business item which must be taken up is the approval of grant-in-aid allocations to the State Councils. It seemed, therefore, fitting to Ray and me that the Committee give concentrated discussion at this time to the whole area of the State Council program. You can expect therefore, for most of the meeting on September 30 to be given to the review of this most important activity.

I am enclosing two documents which may prove useful as background material: perhaps you will be able to read them on the train or plane coming in.

The mimeographed document is self-explanatory, and contains very important recommendations. These are not before you at this time for action, but which certainly should deepen your discussion.

The Xeroxed item is a manuscript I have written at the request of The Annals of The American Academy of Political and Social Science. The Annals is doing an issue on civil rights movement and is including in it a short sketch written by the staff head of various agencies about the strategies of their agencies.

It occurred to me that what I have tried to put down in this brief article might help supply a framework for your discussion of the State Councils.

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

The Southern Regional Council, 20 years old in 1964 and successor organization to the old Commission on Interracial Cooperation begun in 1919, has been an indigenous strand of southern history. In some measure, which others must estimate, it has also helped shape that history. Contrary to the view widely held, a concern for racial justice and democracy has always been an element of the southern tradition, and even when ineffective and hard pressed was never altogether extinguished among the region's whites. The Council has embodied and increased this element, deriving strength and opportunities from its growth, shortcomings from its vicissitudes.

The Council was formed during the War years, at one of those occasional moments in the region's history when there was a widespread opening of the mind of the white South to a disposition toward, and even a hope for, change. Indeed, without this happy climate the Council would not, perhaps could not, have been established. But a large part of the Council's difficulties since had their origin in the same happy fact. For the Council was intended by its founders to be a body of commanding regional stature and authority; indeed, the prominence of a large number of the 292 white persons who signed the "Atlanta Statement" of 1943 promised that it would be. This founding assumption withered quickly, however, as the liberal moment passed and prestigious names deserted the infant they had helped birth, and as over the South Negroes turned to the more immediately productive leadership of the NAACP lawyers to advance their cause. When the Council in 1951 took an explicit and public stand against segregation, many (but not all!) remaining whites of power quietly departed. In the last few years, there has been a return, not of the same persons of course but of new men of prominence, and the white side of Council membership again approximates in distinction the Negro membership.

If it may seem passing strange for an employee of the Council to write in these detached terms of it, the explanation is at once both simple and basic. For the Council, as was said before, is a part of the South's history, and one must look at it not only with love but with realism. The Council never had nor has a realistic chance to be anything more than the South at its best. It can never exceed (though of course it can fall short of) its environment of men and ideals and intelligence.

The intellectual midwife of the Southern Regional Council was Howard W. Odum, who saw in its creation the possibility of an immense catalyst furthering his dream of regional development. True to Odum's view that the racial relations of the South could not be changed and perfected by a frontal assault, but only by encountering and solving them in the context of the other political, social, educational, and economic problems of the region, the Council set out in its early days with all these interests. Very soon, however, its program focused on race, and has stayed there. Odum's great strategy was artificial; race so undercuts and overhangs every southern problem that none can be rationally treated without first wresting it from enslavement to a debilitating system of race relations. Somewhat paradoxically, Odum's strategy may now, 20 years later, be the road for continued usefulness of the Council.

Again, this is said with the detachment that sees the Council not merely as an organization to which one has grown deeply attached and identified, but as the representative of liberalism in the southern region. The civil rights movement will have overcome the old race relations of the South for but unsatisfying results if the same energy and intelligence are not soon addressed to making the political, social, and economic life of the region (and the nation) adequately responsive to the needs of the newly emancipated people; this is to say that emphasis must shift from the cultivation of human relations to the cultivation of human resources.

Even in the boldness of its first days, the Council proposed as its methods research, information, and interracial dialogue. Essentially, these are still the methods. Especially since 1951, when the Council publicized its stand against segregation, its research and information work has been faced with an interesting challenge. Thoroughly committed to one side of the era's most bitter controversy, the Council has nevertheless claimed objectivity and factual accuracy for its research publications and information services. Combining partisan commitment and objectivity is sufficiently rare as to be a delight for those who attempt it, and the steady growth of attention to the Council's publications and the rather dizzying increase of demand on its information services suggest that the attempt has not failed.

Early publications of the Council had an impressive circulation. Among them, such pamphlets as The South: America's Opportunity Number One (1945), Rupert B. Vance, Wanted: The South's Future for the Nation, with an introduction by Governor Ellis Arnall of Georgia (1946), and Dorothy Dickens, Wanted: A Healthy South (1946) reveal something of the initial thrust of the Council. Among the many publications of this pre-1954 period another which had wide attention and direct influence on southern practices was Race in the News (1950). The Council has always had a basic interest in limitations on suffrage, and has reported and commented frequently; two pamphlets in particular, released in 1957 and 1959 and both by Margaret Price, had substantial impact on the legislative history of the civil rights acts. The Federal Executive and Civil Rights (1961) received similar careful attention by the in-coming Kennedy administration. George McMillan's, Racial Violence and Law Enforcement (1960) has been widely used in southern police training. Vivian W. Henderson, The Economic Status of Negroes (1963), and Robert Coles The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study (1963) offered light and bearing on basic issues. Many of the Council's recent publications have sought to interpret confused events to a perplexed but deeply concerned nation: an example of these was Howard Zinn's, Albany: A Study in National Responsibility (1962). With caution, SRC has ventured into the book field: to date, there have been Benjamin Muse, Virginia's Massive Resistance (Indiana University Press, 1961); Muse, Ten Years of Prelude (Viking, 1964); and James McBride Dabbs, Who Speaks For the South? (Funk & Wagnalls, 1964). Through the years, a monthly magazine, New South, has come out.

In 1954, the Council ceased being a membership organization in the usual sense. Originally, it had absorbed and maintained several state groups created under the guidance of its predecessor, the old Commission. Now it was to decentralize, establishing in the various southern states Councils on Human Relations, to which all membership was transferred and which, about 1957, became legally autonomous bodies. The Southern Regional Council is now a co-optative body of about 100 members. Between it and the state Councils on Human Relations the relationship that has developed is somewhat like that between parents and their adult children: as intimate as desired, but not binding. The state councils are an expression of the "grass roots" philosophy of one of my predecessors, the late and much beloved Dr. George S. Mitchell. They, and their many locals, give strength, outreach, and a capacity for local attentiveness and action. It is within them that the old, and still firmly held, belief in the essentiality of inter-racial contact and dialogue and cooperative action on real problems is today largely expressed.

The present structure has had the unintended beneficial consequence too that, freed from the exigencies of a mass membership, SRC has during these years of tension been able to move, usually quietly but generally freely and effectively (one believes), in field work of many kinds. There have also been unending consultations with people well outside the orbit of the civil rights movement; during these years, the much lamented breakdown of communication between the races has not been nearly so real as that between the white South and the rest of the nation, and SRC has been one of the few open transmission lines.

A not so beneficial consequence has been that the new structure almost inevitably yielded, as a by-product, a heavily staff-oriented operation for SRC. This has enabled SRC to develop an unusual degree of flexibility of program and versatile staff skills; but surely long run interests, not only of the organization but of the liberalism which it expresses for the South, require that the SRC lay membership ("the board") resume active policy direction. Or, to put it differently, in the days of "massive resistance", when only defense strategies were possible, they were probably best left to the professionals; in the fluid and progressive present, lay leadership all over the South must assert itself in behalf of the new opportunities.

This is not to say that the "board" is idle. Its members comprise a very large chunk of the progressive leadership of the South, active in all fields of struggle and reform. But for the most part the conspicuous leadership they supply in outside the program activities of the Council itself. They greatly strengthen that program, however, and not only by the weight of their names. At least as important is the base they give to SRC's strategic contacts and influences throughout the region, and the deeper dimensions they give to the staff's understanding of events and policies by their frequent informal reports.

There seems to be a growing intellectual awareness throughout the nation that some measure of conflict, even a large one at times, is indispensable to social reform. Yet concurrently, we have the emergence and grwoth of the new profession of "intergroup relations," which has always, even though sometimes unacknowledged, the aim of minimizing if not preventing conflict, and of containing it whenever loosed. Another paradox is that the most radical wing of the civil rights movement has a thorough intellectual devotion(almost obsession) to a fuzzy "power structure" theory of social control and change, surely almost the purest of conservative theories.

Undoubtedly a good bit of SRC's work, both in the field and at the writing desk, in the decade since 1954 has sought to minimize conflict and to reach the "power structure." More in keeping with the founding vision of SRC has been the program which since early 1962 has been its largest; that is, the administration of the Voter Education Project. Here is a combined effort by all the principal civil right groups and many local Negro organizations to increase voter registration dramatically and, in decisive places, decisively. The Project, which will close its field work in late 1964, promises to telescope into a couple of years the voting growth which by normal trends would have taken a decade or more. Voting is no panacea and registration even less so; but without them there is no progress at all.

From the Project, SRC will draw and publish research findings, directed at the question of the effectiveness of organized activity to counter-balance depressing socio-economic conditions. But for the present, the Project can illustrate another facet of the SRC program. Only because SRC is a non-competitive and generally trusted agency has it been able to administer the Voter Education Project. In other ways too numerous to list, a great deal of SRC's activities involve cooperation with other agencies.

As the Voter Education Project is loyal to SRC's founding hopes, so too is the state Council on Human Relations movement. The ties between the state groups and SRC are today drawing steadily closer, and nearly everywhere the state groups and their local chapters are stronger than they have ever been. How they may prosper in the future depends chiefly on two questions. Can they shift from being defensive bands, waging a brave fight against hostile racists, to the role of creative artisans, contributing to an intelligent and humane cultivation of all the human resources of the region? Will white and Negro liberals of the South continue to find a bi-racial association a valued instrument for achieving their interests?

SRC's own future depends also on these same questions. We shall have the rule of civil rights in the South, but only the bold would today predict whether we shall also have an integrated social order. We stand a better chance of building one if Negroes and whites continue to believe that it is worthwhile to join and work with each other, with a candor which embraces their separate identities and their common interests. The Council has taken pride in being a useful organization, free of restraining strategies and versatile enough to meet many issues. For the future, how the Council may evolve depends, as it always has, on the configuration of southern society.

May I take this opportunity to express the appreciation of The American Academy to you as editor of the January 1965 issue of THE ANNALS. We are particularly grateful for the way in which the material was organized, and the promptness with which the work schedule was executed.

Because you have contributed your time and efforts in making this volume possible, I am now writing to seek your further assistance in suggesting ways in which the issue can be publicized so that it may reach the widest audience. We believe you can help to promote the volume by indicating the names of organizations whose members may be particularly interested in its contents. You may also wish to list for us names of specific individuals who would like to know of this volume and be invited to membership in The Academy. Or perhaps you know where the volume might be used as required or supplementary reading in colleges and other educational institutions. A very considerable number of issues of THE ANNALS are used, and we have each year a sale of some thousands of copies of back issues, some of which are used in this way.

Let me thank you in advance for your suggestions, and also express again our appreciation for your contribution.

Metropolitics and Professional Political Leadership: The Case of Nashville

By Daniel R. Grant

Abstract: Adoption of a single metropolitan government for Nashville and Davidson County in 1962, at a time when many metro reform proposals have been rejected elsewhere, provides an opportunity to examine the role of professional political leaders in its formulation and adoption. Thirty years of Nashville suburban spillover without annexation led to the familiar pattern of a service vacuum, inequalities, rivalries, and confused responsibility. During the 1950's, two surveys by professional staffs, working closely with the Nashville mayor and a rival Davidson County judge, led to a proposal for major structural change (city-county consolidation) which was endorsed by both the mayor and the judge. Their support was undoubtedly helpful in the 1958 metro campaign, but it was rejected by the voters outside Nashville. Two windfall issues —annexation and an auto tax—and the opposition of the Nashville mayor contributed to a new and successful metro vote in 1962. The Nashville experience indicates that active involvement of rival professional political leaders in all stages of a metro reform movement is possible, it not necessarily a kiss of death, does not prevent "radical reform," and may actually constitute a tactical advantage for metropolitan reformers.

Daniel R. Grant, Ph.D., Nashville, Tennessee, is Professor of Political Science at Vanderbilt University. He served as consultant for the Nashville and Davidson County Planning Commissions in the formulation of the "Plan of Metropolitan Government" adopted in 1962 and is consultant for the U. S. Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. In 1958–1959 he was Visiting Professor of Municipal Government and Planning at the Institute of Public Administration, Thammasat University, Bangkok, Thailand. He is coauthor with H. C. THE NEGRO PROTEST
Professor ARNOLD M. ROSE, Special Editor

A. The Historical Context of the Present

1. The American Negro Problem in the Context of Social Change--
The forces of social change as they affect the position of the American Negro today. Analysis of historical trends creating the present problem.

2. The Rise of the Negro Protest--
The history of the Negro protest and of "race pride" from slave songs to Muslim movement. The slowness of social change when it means discrimination, insult, and danger. The Negro's historic goals.

B. Specific Conditions and Problems

1. Protest against the economic status of the Negro. The economic opportunities and the economic obstacles, North and South.

2. Protest against the political status of the Negro. Extent of voting and obstacles to voting, North and South.

3. Protest against the legal status of the Negro. Lawlessness and the Negro: failure of Southern law-enforcement authorities to provide protection for law-abiding Negroes.

4. Protest against segregation of the Negro in the South. In governmental facilities, outside schools, and in privately owned public accommodations.

5. The protest against housing segregation. What housing segregation means to the Negro, North and South.

6. The protest against school segregation. What effects school segregation have on the Negro child. The nature of school segregation, North and South. The protest movement.

C. Forces of Change Abetting the Negro Protest

1. Economic forces. Industrialization, urbanization, prosperity, "modern" business attitudes, etc., and how they aid the Negro protest.

2. Governmental action: legislative, executive, and judicial. How government action aids the Negro protest and expresses it.

3. Ideological forces. The ideology of the American Creed, of the Christian religion, of Marxism and anti-Marxism, etc., in the United States and how they aid the Negro protest.

4. The new international setting for the American Negro problem. How the rise of independent African nations aids the American Negro protest.

D. Different Means to the Goal

1. The NAACP and Its Strategy

2. The Urban League and Its Strategy

3. The Southern Regional Council and Its Strategy

4. The Congress of Racial Equality and Its Strategy

5. The Southern Christian Leadership Conference and Its Strategy

6. The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and Its Strategy

Dear Miss Murray:

We have not received the 500 copies of a reprint of the article on the Southern Regional Council which appeared in the January issue of The Annals. Mr. Dunbar filled in a printed blank requesting the reprints, and to the best of his recollection, this was some time in October, or early November. We are wondering if the order got misplaced, and if it is still possible for us to receive the 500 copies.

Mr. Leslie Dunbar

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

I have been asked to edit a special issue of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science on the topic "The Negro Protest". I am sure you are familiar with the Annals, which has been published continuously since 1890 and has come to be one of the most distinguished of social science journals. The Academy's membership, who provide the bulk of the regular subscribers to the Annals, is international in scope and now consists of over 12,000 professional persons, businessmen, community leaders, legislators, college professors. There are also 4,000 library subscriptions.

As editor, my first task is to select a limited number of experts on the topic who can prepare scholarly and clearly written articles. For this reason, I am inviting you to contribute an article on the specific subject of The Southern Regional Council and its Strategy, which is D. 3 in the enclosed outline. The title can be changed at your pleasure, but -- unless you recommend something else that would fit into my outline -- you would be expected to write on this subject. Articles should be around 2,000 words (including tables and diagrams). The style of writing should be straightforward and should avoid jargon, so that the volume can be read with profit by the educated layman. The deadline for all articles is September 1, 1964 (the issue will be distributed in January, 1965).

The Annals operates on a non-profit basis, and all proceeds go into the publication. Thus, there are no honoraria to the authors or editors. I trust you will find the opportunity to contribute to such a distinguished and influential journal its own reward. Authors are entitled to eleven copies (one clothbound) of the issue in which their articles appear (an order form will be sent to you).

Please let me know very soon whether you can write the article.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold M. Rose

Dear Fred,

As you know, a change in my position made it impossible for me to attend the NAIRO meeting in Pittsburgh. I hope you met Ed Boyd and had a chance to talk to him. Although I have already taken up my new duties with the American Association of Junior Colleges, I left a few letters behind, saying goodbye to old friends.

Mr. Algernon D. Black will be Acting Director for a short time, and I am sure will be very happy to hear from you about any ideas you may have for selecting students for the 1959 Encampments through the Southern Regional Council. Last summer we did have two students, one Bill Barnette from North Carolina and Lorraine Rousseve from Louisiana. Both ably represented your organization and we feel sure were strengthened by their experience. We all hope we will have your continued cooperation in the selection and sponsoring of students.

I do hope that I will be able to keep in touch with you and your fine work as time goes on. If you have a chance when you next visit Washington, I hope you will drop in at my new location at 1785 Massachusetts Ave., N.W, Washington, D.C. It has been a fine pleasure to have worked through your office and with you, and I hope that we will continue our association, limited as it has been, in the future.

Dear Fred:

I too hope that we shall keep in touch with one another as time goes on to keep informed about our respective work and to see if at any point our paths might cross again. If you have any college-related programs on your book I hope that you will give consideration to junior colleges. As you may have already gathered there is a great deal of work to be done in the whole field of college education and particularly in the field of the junior colleges with regard to academic freedoms, civil liberties, etc.

When you next get to Washington I hope you'll have a chance to drop in at the office here for a chat or for a luncheon date.

I have just received a letter from Al Black indicating that Saal Lesser has been selected to succeed me as Executive Director of the Encampment. You can be assured of continued close cooperation with NAIRO.

As I become more involved and acquainted with the work here I'll get in touch with you again to see if there is any project that we might want to work out together. I greatly appreciate all that you did in the Emcampment work and I sincerely hope that you will continue along the same lines.

Dear Bob:

As you probably know we reprinted Joe Margolis' article in New South, after receiving permission from the AAUP Bulletin and from Joe. I don't know that his leaving the University of South Carolina is in any way connected with having published the article, but since it originally appeared in the Bulletin I should think the Association would have a high priority interest in ascertaining the facts in the situation.

I have sent a copy of this to Glenn Brooks at the Committee on Government and Higher Education.

Dear Mr. Routh:

Professor Margolis has requested the American Association of University Professors to intervene in his case and we are at the present time in correspondence with him to determine whether he wants us to communicate with the administrative officers of the University of South Carolina at this time. Since Mr. Margolis is on a term appointment at the University of South Carolina it may be difficult for the Association to document a charge that the non-renewal of his contract is being influenced by the AAUP Bulletin article or by his views on the race issue. If we do go ahead with a formal investigation in the case we shall need every bit of evidence that we can find to show that improper considerations are influencing the University's decision.

I appreciate your concern about this matter and will keep you informed about further developments.

Dear Bob:

Thanks for your letter of June 19 in reply to my letter about developments at LSU. I am sure you are aware that the state legislature has now ordered investigations of "pro-integration sentiment" at nine state colleges. This appears to me as direct interference with academic freedom.

I note in your letter that the Association is not planning any intervention or inquiry unless "things take a turn for the worse". I trust that the addition of eight schools to the inquisitors lists is regarded as a sufficient worsening of conditions that the Association will now take action.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

Upon my return from vacation in August, I saw a letter from a member of your staff to this Association in reference to our concern in the projected legislative investigation of faculty members at Louisiana State University. Unfortunately, the letter has been misplaced, and I sincerely apologize for using this tardy and indirect method of reply.

As I recall, the staff member who wrote us was under the impression that this Association had taken no action in the affair at LSU. On the contrary, I telephoned one of our Chapter officers at LSU within a few hours after I read newspaper accounts of the difficulty. During the ensuing weeks, when the legislative committee was making its plans to investigate, I was in almost daily contact with faculty members at LSU and Tulane University, requesting their advice about the most appropriate action for the Association to take. After conferring with this office, the Tulane Chapter of the Association passed a strong resolution in protest (copy enclosed) and obtained considerable newspaper publicity. Following the advice of the professors under attack, the Washington Office of the Association made no public statement.

This Association will continue its inquiries into the situation at LSU and will offer its resources, to the full extent that it is able, to the faculty members at LSU at such time as they think we can be of assistance to them.

We shall be happy to confer with you at any time about matters of mutual interest, particularly those that relate to the impact upon academic freedom of the issues arising from the desegregation problem.

Sincerely yours,

William P. Fidler

La. State Univ.

Tulane Profs Defend LSU Petition Signers

Tulane university professors today defended the right of 66 Louisiana State university teachers to sign a petition opposing bills to close public schools under federal orders to integrate.

The resolution of the 160-member Tulane chapter of the American Assn. of University Professors (AAUP) came as the Louisiana Senate prepared to take final action on the House-approved measures. The AAUP, a national organization, is concerned with the academic freedom of university professors.

The LSU faculty members were listed among 600 persons who signed the petition, circulated by the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union (LCLU) and presented June 9 to a House of Representatives committee holding a public hearing on the segregation bills. Discovery of the LSU names opened a hunt by a special 10-man legislative committee for pro-integration sentiment at the state university.

Fear 'Great Damage'

"We deplore the fact that the mere exercise of the right of petition by certain faculty members of Louisiana State University has resulted in their being called to account by the Legislature," the resolution said.

"We fear that this discriminatory harassment of certain faculty members will result in great damage to higher education in Louisiana."

The resolution urged legislators to show respect for the tradition of academic freedom and "to refrain from direct or indirect intimidation of persons, either individually or in groups, holding opinions opposed to their own.

"Otherwise the Legislature may do irreparable damage to the institutions of higher learning it has so patiently built."

Text of Resolution

The text of the resolution:

"We, members of the Tulane University Chapter of the American Assn. of University Professors, are concerned for the welfare and effectiveness of Louisiana State University, some faculty members of which are now being investigated by a joint committee of the Louisiana State Legislature.

"We do not question the right of the Legislature to conduct any investigation which may contribute to the making of State laws.

"However, we wish to call the joint committee's attention to the possible consequences of such an investigation if it is not conducted with justice and reason. The rules of academic freedom and tenure now in effect at Louisiana State University, and at most other colleges and universities throughout the country, are designed to guarantee the scholar's right to seek for truth wherever it may be found, and to publish his results. These rules also guarantee that a faculty member has all the rights of any other citizen, including the rights of petition. The rules of academic freedom apply as much to faculty members without tenure as to those with tenure.

"The AAUP, as an organization, is dedicated to the defense of academic freedom and tenure, because without these guarantees there can be no higher education worthy of the name. We deplore the fact that the mere exercise of the right of petition by certain faculty members of Louisiana State University has resulted in in their being called to account by the Legislature. We fear that this discriminatory harassment of certain faculty members will result in great damage to higher education in Louisiana.

"We therefore:

"(1) Support the right of the 66 LSU faculty members and the other citizens who signed a petition sponsored by the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union opposing certain bills to take this action.

"(2) Commend Troy Middleton, President of LSU, for his statement and defense of the tradition of academic freedom and tenure."

(Middleton appeared before the joint investigating committee on June 11.)

"(3) Urge the members of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana to respect and to abide by the tradition of academic freedom and tenure and to refrain from direct or indirect intimidation of persons, either individually or in groups, holding opinions opposed to their own. Otherwise the Legislature may do irreparable damage to the institutions of higher learning it has so patiently built.

"BE IT RESOLVED that copies of this action be sent to the President of Louisiana State University, to the presiding officers of the House and Senate of the Louisiana Legislature, and to the Presidents of the other colleges and universities in Louisiana, with the request that the action of the Tulane University Chapter of the American Assn. of University Professors be made known to the faculty of Louisiana State University, to the members of the Louisiana State Legislature, and to the faculties of the other colleges and universities in Louisiana."

Dear Dr. Fidler:

Harold Fleming, SRC's Director, has shared with me your letter of September 10th. As he explained in his note to you of September 16 it was I who wrote Bob Carr regarding the situation at LSU.

I am a member, of some six years standing, of the AAUP. We are often in a spot to know about attacks on academic freedom before they become general knowledge. I also have always felt free to write the Association on certain matters even when I was relatively certain they were already involved. I look upon such letters not as criticisms but rather as expressions of support.

I am much impressed with what the Association's chapter at Tulane said in their resolution regarding academic freedom at LSU.

Dear Mr. Dunbar,

The day after four Negro girls were killed in the bombing of a church in Birmingham, Alabama, you may recall that a young local lawyer, Charles Morgan, Jr., made a memorable speech before a businessman's club, condemning his city for the crime.

Mr. Morgan has now written a short book - partly about himself, and perhaps more importantly (because he feels it's more important), about a time, certain people and places. We will publish the book on April 22nd.

I am sending you an advance copy of the book under separate cover. I do hope you find time to read it. Any comment you might have to make about the book would be most welcome.

Sincerely,

Evan Thomas

Dear Mr. Reardon:

We are very interested in the examination the Association is conducting and would be most grateful if we could know of the results when they are available.

We are not in a position to answer, to any benefit, your questionnaire. You have probably already done so but, if not, may we suggest three persons in Atlanta who could probably be of help. They are:

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON FAIR TRIAL AND FREE PRESS

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

December, 1965

Dear Sir:

As part of an extensive American Bar Association project on Minimum Standards for Criminal Justice, I am serving as chairman of the Advisory Committee on Fair Trial and Free Press. The creation of this Committee, which is composed of nationally known judges and lawyers from all sections of the United States, stems directly from the recommendations of the Warren Commission.

We are conducting examinations of practices and problems with respect to the reporting of criminal matters in selected cities throughout the country, to obtain the data on which our deliberations and recommendations will be based. In particular, in your city we are asking persons involved in various stages of the administration of criminal justice to aid us by responding to questionnaires. We are also undertaking a content analysis of a local newspaper.

We have sought to make the enclosed questionnaire as brief and convenient for you as possible. Nevertheless, we should greatly appreciate any degree of elaboration you are able to provide, and any additional comments or information you think would be helpful to us. The identity of individuals responding will not, of course, be disclosed.

In order to obtain a number of different perspectives, responses have been requested from representatives of the trial bench, the bar (prosecution and defense counsel), police departments, and the news media. We are anxious to obtain as full a response as possible, and your cooperation will be of definite assistance in resolving current problems in the field of fair trial and free press.

Many thanks for your assistance.

Sincerely yours,

Paul C. Reardon

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON FAIR TRIAL AND FREE PRESS

QUESTIONNAIRE FOR DEFENSE COUNSEL

[In connection with questions 1-8, we would appreciate any additional detail relating to specific cases that you might be able to give us.]

1. On how many occasions have you handled criminal cases in which you thought reporting by the news media created a significant problem of possible prejudice to the defendant?

2. Have you ever asked the court to caution or reprimand the news media concerning reporting relating to a pending case? Do you think such warnings or reprimands are effective?

3. Have you ever moved for a continuance on grounds of prejudicial publicity? With what success? What sort of proof did you offer in support of the motion? Do you think there are occasions on which a continuance is an effective remedy?

4. Have you ever moved for a change of venue on grounds of prejudicial publicity? With what success? What sort of proof did you offer in support of the motion? Do you think there are occasions on which a change of venue is an effective remedy?

5. Have you ever moved for a mistrial or new trial or appealed from a conviction on grounds or prejudicial publicity? With what result?

6. In cases you have tried, how often has a voir dire examination been conducted to determine whether jurors have been prejudiced by publicity? Do you think the voir dire is an effective method of assuring an impartial jury? Do you have any suggestions as to the appropriate standard for the acceptability of a juror?

7. How often is a jury sequestered during trial in your jurisdiction? Do you regard sequestration as an effective means of preventing the harm that might result from publicity during the trial?

8. How often does the judge give admonitory instructions to the jury not to read or listen to news reports during the trial? Do you believe such warnings are effective?

9. Do you believe there are occasions when the public, including the news media, ought to be excluded from preliminary hearings, other pretrial hearings, or hearings during trial outside the presence of the jury?

10. We would appreciate your views as to whether attorneys for the prosecution or defense ought to give statements or interviews to the news media before or during trial and, if so, what the scope of such statements or interviews should be.

11. What benefits do you believe are derived from news reporting of criminal matters? Could such benefits still be obtained if attorneys and law enforcement officials were prohibited from releasing, before completion of trial or disposition without trial, such information as confessions, prior criminal records, test activity, opinions as to guilt or the merits of a case, and identifications of the accused by witnesses?

12. We would welcome any additional comments on the appropriate relationships between the news media and attorneys and law enforcement officials, and on the type of restrictions on the bar and on official sources which ought to be adopted or avoided.

Dear Dr. Mitchell—

Your backgrounding as well as your recorded statement contributed a great deal to our broadcast Sunday. This is simply a note to thank you again for your help. I hope you were able to hear the show. I'd be most interested in your comments.

I saw you on the Severeid show too (I liked your statement far, far better.)

LITHOED IN U.S.A.

From EDWARD P. MORGAN'S BROADCAST -- August 2, 1955
American Broadcasting Company

This is an open letter to Senator George and Senator Russell of the State of Georgia.

Gentlemen:

I wonder if your constituents in Georgia realize how much certain officials and others in your state have been undermining the positions of prestige and international influence that you both occupy in the United States Senate. They are obviously proud of the personal popularity and eminence you each command as individuals, as distinguished members of Congress and as chairmen of two of the most important committees of the Senate, Foreign Relations and Armed Services. But I wonder if it has occurred to them that domestic problems can't be separated any more from world events, and that the way they approach problems at home may have a direct effect on the way you, Senator George, and you, Senator Russell, are able to do your jobs in the field of foreign affairs, jobs whose main objective is the security and welfare of our country, including the sovereign state of Georgia.

Yesterday, as you know, the Board of Education of Georgia, taking its cue from the State Attorney-General, ordered all teachers who are members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to resign from it by September 15th, or have their teaching licenses revoked "for life." Let's not dwell, now, on the obvious, even arrogant, threat which that action poses to the constitutional guarantees of civil rights and civil liberties of Negro school teachers in Georgia.

Let's explore, instead, the threat that action poses to your position as statesmen. We are at a critical stage in the cold war, a turning point at which not only the Communists but the neutrals, and the countless dubious citizens among the nations allied with us are watching to see whether the United States is really prepared to follow through with deeds the bold, provocative words that President Eisenhower uttered with such bracing effect at Geneva. How much importance, Senator George, do you think an Indian, a Burmese, a native of North Africa, will attach to your statements as an American spokesman about our desires for peace and freedom and our solicitude for the oppressed if those desires and that solicitude are stopped at the borders of, say, the state of Georgia? By the same token, Senator Russell, how sincerely do you suppose will be read abroad your views, as a military expert, that our posture is a defensive one, aimed at the exploitation of nobody?

I may have put them clumsily but as men of experience and vision, I am sure you will agree these questions are not far-fetched. The world has shrunk, and just as sure as two and two make four in a segregated or a non-segregated arithmetic book, what happens in Athens, Georgia, has an impact in Athens, Greece, Afghanistan, and Alma-Ata, USSR. States' rights are an issue but the essence of the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in the schools is, I think, that states' rights don't supersede human rights.

I believe more Georgians, more southerners and other Americans as a whole, accept this than bigots will permit themselves to admit. This was the feeling I got when I flew to Atlanta last year to try to measure a little of the public reaction to the Supreme Court decision.

I realize there are tight emotional problems, bound with the thongs of prejudice and habit, which must be handled on the local level. I remember, Senator George, your interpretation of the Court's implementing decision last May. The Court, you remakred, "is now saying to go slow, but to go; to proceed, but proceed with care."

Perhaps as you two statesmen go home from Congress, you Senator George and you Senator Russell, may want to explain to your constituents what we all have at stake, so they may indeed proceed with care instead of retreat with recklessness.

Sincerely yours,

This is Edward Morgan, saying good night from Washington.

From EDWARD P. MORGAN AND THE NEWS -- Friday, February 24, 1956
American Broadcasting Company

I would respectfully suggest to the civic leaders of Montgomery, Alabama, that if they can find the time they would be doing themselves and the nation a service to bone up a little on what they may have forgotten about the recent history of India.

Do you remember the symbol of the wizened little man with loin cloth and spinning wheel? Do you remember how the world used to hang on the suspenseful news of Mohandas K. Gandhi's latest passive resistance bout with the British; how Americans, with their instinctive affinity for the underdog, cheered quietly as the Mahatma won round after round with the Viceroy, whether it was on a boycott of foreign goods, defiance of the salt tax or the longer deeper protest against the core of the matter, the denial of freedom?

And the British in their exasperation fell back on measures which did little more than eloquently confess the desperately embarrassing bankruptcy of their position. They threw Gandhi in jail. Not once but many times. Then he fasted and his weakness from it only gave his followers strength. It is remarkable how the inspirational chemistry of a cause can contribute to the endurance of people who believe in it. The momentum of Gandhi's movement was irresistable.

Who would have thought to look at him that in the frail bones of this wisp of a human being lay the marrow of independence of a nation? Ah, but there's the clue. For the passion of righteousness, by stubborn, enduring but gentle defiance, can transform a puny man into a giant. Who would have thought, looking back just 90 days, that a $14 fine against a Negro seamstress named Mrs. Rosa Parks for refusing to move to the Jim Crow section of a municipal bus in Montgomery, Alabama, would galvanize a show of passive resistance that may well become a key symbol in another struggle for independence?

For this in essence is what the racial issue is all about. It is not a sinister conspiracy of black hordes to impress a pagan supremacy on genteel citizens of lighter skin. It is not a swaggering ultimatum, bloodshot with passion as so many seem to fear, that a Negro shall marry your sister. It is the insistence, springing from the innards of some of the gentlest souls God ever fashioned, to choose their own seat on a municipal bus, to travel afoot or on horseback, in a Cadillac convertible or to stay at home.

Pierced by this simple shaft of truth, the city fathers of Montgomery, Alabama, can do nothing more than fall back in consternation, as the British did in India, and clap the leaders of the Negro community into jail. And yet really they have done more, far more. What they have done, rather pathetically in fact, is to reveal the transparency of the sincere but mistaken claims of white supremacy. For who has had the superior record of civilized behavior in this tortured episode? From which side came the extremism and the ugly little bursts of violence, and from which side the restraint? The record is not on the side of the white citizens.

Yet this in itself is not unique. People are human and this can and does happen in other communities. Perhaps there was a time even when it was strictly a community affair. But Montgomery and the rest of us are involved in something that thrusts beyond the city limits, girdles the globe and comes home again.

It just happens that the U.S. government is about to export an exhibit on the way America lives. Although far from perfect, it is a capsule picture of the upward growth of American life. It will be shown in India. It may arouse interest there. But another exhibit has preceded it: the press accounts of the Montgomery story. It needs no prophet to foretell which exhibit will make the deeper impression on the disciples of Gandhi who have now become the free citizens of India.

This is Edward Morgan, saying good night from Washington.

From EDWARD P. MORGAN AND THE NEWS -- Tuesday, February 28, 1956
American Broadcasting Company

Fate can sometimes cut the fabric of life in two directions at once. It did so in the death of West Virginia's Senator Kilgore this morning. For not only has a liberal and reasonable man been removed from the scene but in the hierarchy of the Senate, thanks to the sometimes ironic working of the machinery of seniority, there emerges in his place one of the most unliberal and defiantly prejudiced figures in public life of this or any other day.

Kilgore was Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, one of the most important and powerful committees of the Senate. The next ranking Senator on the committee, who now succeeds him, is 51-year-old James O. Eastland of Mississippi, who has just begun his third full 6-year-term. The Democratic Party label attached to both men but the ramifications of the change of leadership in the Judiciary Committee are numbingly profound. Eastland suddenly ascends to a position of power and possibly decisive influence which could hardly suit his own apparent goals more snugly or--to judge from his record--be more of a blinding cinder in the eye of responsible, sensitive, forward-looking public service.

Although in taking the oath of office as U.S. Senator, he has solemnly sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution, Eastland not once but many times has publicly urged open defiance of the Supreme Court in its declaration that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

He is in a position now to make his attitude even more strongly felt. He has a long and consistent record of opposition to legislation protecting civil rights. He has attacked the Supreme Court itself in the most vicious terms. He has attempted to obstruct judicial appointees because the appointees did not conform with his, no doubt, sincere but narrowly squeezed views.

Now Eastland becomes chairman of the committee whose province is nearly all the controversial legislation on civil rights, on constitutional amendments and which passes on all Presidential nominations to the federal judiciary from the Supreme Court down. Already, and due largely to Eastland's efforts, the nomination of Solicitor General Simon E. Soboloff to the Circuit Court of Appeals, has been sidetracked in the committee, which Eastland now commands. A Civil Rights Subcommittee had been working on legislation fortifying a citizen's right to vote. Now it is questionable when or whether this will be offered for full Judiciary Committee consideration.

The Senate only recently voted the Judiciary Committee more than a million dollars in extra funds for various investigations. Eastland is already chairman of the Internal Security Subcommittee and is likely to retain that post. That group's most celebrated recent activity was an investigation of Communism on the staff of the New York Times, an inquiry which might have been more correctly labeled as an inspection of "ex-Communism" and which was widely albeit belatedly denounced as an attempt to embarrass The Times which has defended the civil rights Eastland holds in contempt.

The Judiciary Committee also handles immigration bills. The President has asked Congress to liberalize the McCarran-Walter Act and correct its injustices. Kilgore was inclined in this direction. Eastland gives no such indication.

Eastland was one of the most consistent supporters of the Bricker Amendment to the Constitution to limit the President's treaty-making powers. That issue is not dead and, to repeat, constitutional amendments fall in Judiciary's bailiwick.

If this lugubrious prognosis turns out to be wrong, this reporter will be the first to adjust it, and happily. Meanwhile, one can only meditate on how suddenly death may change things.

This is Edward Morgan, saying good night from Washington.

I should think the best thing to do is to contrive an early opportunity for us to get together.

In peace and quiet that would be April 11 and quite possibly I will be in Washington April 12. Leave a message at the Cosmos Club by or before April 11 as to where I could reach you by telephone.

More hurriedly but with twenty minutes if the trains all right I shall be North bound to Philadelphia on the Seaboard Silver Comet at breakfast time the morning of Wednesday, April 4. I think the Comet gets into Washington about 8:30 and heads out for Philadelphia about 9:00. I will have arrived in Washington on B-70, Lower 5.

I should expect you to choose April 11 or 12, but I offer you the in-transit arrangement in case there is haste. In any case I look forward to time for us to talk.

EDWARD P. MORGAN • 4461 CONNECTICUT AVE., N. W. • WASHINGTON 7

RECEIVED MAR 30 1956

March 28, 1956

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

In the past two years I have recalled many times the valuable help you gave me shortly after the Supreme Court decision on segregation in May, 1954. I was in the process then of preparing a broadcast on CBS radio on the impact of the decision, and what I found in Atlanta then encouraged me.

Since January, 1955 I have been broadcasting a program of news and comment over ABC, and one of the issues that has concerned me most is segregation and the whole complicated problem of this so-called racial question. I am far more troubled than reassured about developments in recent months. I wish it were possible to have another visit with you. Barring that, I hope you don't think it presumptuous of me to ask some questions. Your answers will help clarify my own thinking. Some of them might be useful to quote, but you may feel you can speak more freely if you are not quoted. I will leave that entirely up to you.

The President has made some guarded statements in support of the Supreme Court and integration. Do you think he should be more outspoken and forthright? Do you think it would ease the tension if he were to make a direct appeal to the nation in a kind of Fireside Chat? An appeal which would throw the whole weight of his prestige on the side of calmness and moderation, but making it plain that the Constitution and the Court were there to be upheld?

Do you see any merit in the President's recommendation that a bi-partisan commission be created by Congress? Norman Thomas has endorsed this. Do you think it would be wiser for the President to call a conference himself? What kind of a conference should this be? The New York Times has suggested that something might come from a conference on a so-called middle level, getting responsible industrialists and civic leaders together with representatives of Government, Labor, and national groups. The implication was that if the industrialists who control so many payrolls, so much advertising, and have so much influence were really to commit themselves to integration as the "soundest long-run business policy", it might have a great effect.

Do you think the Department of Justice is doing too much or not enough, or in actuality nothing at all in investigating violations of the Constitutional rights of citizens eligible to vote?

Am I wrong in my impression (strengthened indidentally on that visit to Atlanta) that there are a lot of respectable people in the South who though they don't accept integration do not accept lawlessness and violence either, and would so indicate if they weren't afraid of reprisals. I get an occasional letter from persons of this type after listening to one of my broadcast comments, but I have no way of knowing, of course, how representative they are. (I am taking the liberty of sending you a few of my comments on the subject).

I know this is a matter of conjecture, but your own considered opinion would be helpful on how serious you consider the threatened revolt of Southern extremists. Is it your impression that the White Citizens Councils continue to gain ground?

Do you feel that the passive resistance in Montgomery might conceivably spread throughout the South as the best answer to the extremists.

What I seem to be groping for is an approach to the problem as one sits here in Washington, somewhat (but not entirely) removed from the problem. An approach that will encourage progress without being recklessly provocative.

I hope you won't take this as an impertinence--my writing you in this fashion--I am genuinely disturbed, but have a great feeling of impotence and inadequacy in trying to comment intelligently and with some purpose and effect on the subject.

I will be more than grateful for any remarks you would care to make on this subject.

Sincerely yours,

Edward P. Hyan

April 4, 1956

Mr. Edward P. Morgan
4461 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Morgan:

Meanwhile I will try my hand at some of your questions.

Should the President say more? Yes, but not a lot more and the thing to say is that while the decision allows time it expects compliance.

Congressional bi-partisan commission? Yes, this would do a lot of good. I myself think that the most good it will do will be to afford means of fetching up into the public view the many somewhat sinister characters who are having a lush time inside the Citizens' Councils. All sorts of queer, crawling things are in there and nobody knows it. Subpoena powers would do the trick. And the country would only hear what is going on to be revolted.

Industrialists conference, etc? It would do a lot of good. If the objecting parts of the South hear that industry wants integration the objectors would begin to get into line.

Is D.J. doing enough? I don't know. What does it do?

What about the silent South? A great many people in the South of old habit simply go along about their business while ranters rant. We have always had these people who speak extremely. They are embarrassing but they are seldom in position to do much more than talk. A great many people are now tending their own knitting and listening to as little such talk as they can.

You have not fallen into the trap so widely set of terming "both extremes: The Citizens' Councils and the NAACP." I regard the Citizens' Councils as extremes, but I don't think the NAACP is. It asks for the enforcement of the Constitution and that is lawful. The other people when they refuse to abide by the decision embark on an unlawful course.

I rather think that a lot of the news about the revolt of the South is synthetic. You remember during the McCarthy business somebody said:"Where there is smoke there is fire." That is true enough but it may be true that there is just a smoke machine. I think a racket is on to frighten the North into supposing the South won't do it and therefore the North had better lay off. It is probably true that in some parts of the South it willprobably be some number of years before desegregation gets very far. But in some other parts of the South it can and should proceed speedily.

Yes, I hear that the Citizens' Councils continue to grow.

In regard to passive resistance in Montgomery, Alabama. I would expect that the spirit of that general idea will not long hence bring about a situation in which it will be found that Negro people can no longer be got to work on the old diet of scorn. Dignity will become the price of performance. And here and there people will be willing to pay the price and in those towns there will be peace and growth. And it won't be so very long before the word will spread that that's what you do.

And not so long after that courtesy will become an old Southern custom.

Much more that we could talk about and I hope we will have a chance.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

Dear Al:

Thanks for your letter and the returned material which arrived today.

It is our opinion that the Edwards show was extremely well handled. From what we are able to determine, the show was received with much interest and approval in this area. Certainly Edwards was not helped, especially in his "Christ, No!" response and his somewhat confused reliance on Scripture. The statements from local ministers were good and used effectively. In short, we are happy and think the region is.

We stand ready to be of any possible assistance. Perhaps next time you can give us a little advance warning and we can do more thorough spadework.

RESOLUTION ON SURVEY OF INSTITUTE SCHOOLS

WHEREAS, (1) the movement of populations during and immediately following World War II; (2) the disruption of family life; (3) unprecedented advances in technology and the consequent need for new moral controls together with new skills; (4) the changes in pre-war occupational patterns — displacement of old and creation of new types of occupations; and (5) the growing critical need for guidance in local, regional, national, and world-wide personality and social adjustment; all combine to focus the attention of world leaders on needed reorganization in institutions designed to provide the desired situation for education in world citizenship, and

WHEREAS, school systems, public and private, are feeling an increasing need for an adequate picture of

1. What they are doing at present
2. How well it is being done
3. What needs to be done, and
4. What revision of structure, purposes, and objectives, and administration is needed to secure desired results in terms of actual living in a democratic community — all within the limits of available finances, time and effort, and

WHEREAS, the institutions of the American Church Institute for Negroes, with their rich heritage of spiritual leadership, are all in the region where progressive change is most needed and most likely to occur in the immediate future, and

WHEREAS, the American Church Institute for Negroes is fundamentally concerned, not only with maintaining these schools on a level of performance and achievement which is at least equal to that of the best institutions of similar type in their respective areas, but also in their making some unique contributions to the public weal,

BE IT RESOLVED, that the American Church Institute for Negroes project in the immediate future a comprehensive survey of the nine institutions under its supervision for the following purposes:

1. To get an adequate picture of what each one is doing at present and how well it is being done in terms of the end product — the students who are turned back into communities or who go on for further formal education.

2. To determine the present and changing needs for effective citizenship — personal, social, and vocational — in the immediate, regional, and world community, and

3. To recommend needed changes in organization and administration — including location, physical plant, staff personnel, curricula, financial support and instructional equipment which will enable these institutions to be effective in meeting desirable present and evident future needs of students within the accepted purposes and objectives of each institution, and within the limits of its financial resources.

FURTHER: that the American Church Institute for Negroes name:

1. A National Advisory Committee of seven or nine members

2. A local Advisory Committee for each institution, of five members

3. A Survey Committee of five qualified persons to gather the data and report its findings to the Trustees of the Institute.

FURTHER: that the Survey Committee include at least one member who is not connected with any one of the nine institutions who will be qualified to study the two institutions of higher learning and the non-academic institutions.

FURTHER: that plans for the Survey be drawn immediately so that data may be gathered prior to the closing of the present academic year in each school, and in ample time for the final report to be received and examined by the Church Institute prior to the meeting of the next General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

AND: that the necessary funds for the Survey be made available by the Board of Trustees of the Institute.

Dear Mr. Hunter:

This will acknowledge your letter of July 1.

I am happy to know that Mr. Bentley has returned to his work with the Institute. I trust, however, that this does not mean losing your valuable counsel from the deliberations on the work and future of the Institute schools. You have done a remarkable job, and it has been a pleasure and privilege to be associated with you.

With kindest good wishes, I remain

Yours very sincerely,

TO ALL TRUSTEES:

I am happy to report that, after a distinguished service of fifty months with the Navy, Mr. Bentley has returned to us - resuming today his position as Director. In relinquishing my temporary post as Acting Director, I extend hearty thanks for the cooperation which has been extended to me by our Trustees and all Schools.

At the invitation of Mr. Bentley, Mr. Millikan will continue as Secretary and Assistant Director of the Institute. I believe the Trustees will share the pleasure Mr. Bentley and I have in knowing that the Institute is to continue to have the benefit of Mr. Millikan's helpful services.

For the present, at least, Mr. Bentley and Mr. Millikan will continue to make their headquarters with me in Room 522, 82 Devonshire Street, Boston 9, Massachusetts.

A letter substantially like this one has been sent to each school.

Cordially yours,

Minutes of the Meeting of the Board of Trustees of the American Church
Institute for Negroes, September 4, 1946.

Pursuant to call by the President, the Board of Trustees of The American Church Institute for Negroes met in the office of the Presiding Bishop at 2:30 P. M. Wednesday, September 4, 1946. There were present Bishops Tucker and Penick, Messrs. Paine, Trigg, Williams, Hunter, Wieland and Plaskett, constituting a quorum. The Secretary was present and recorded the proceedings. Director Bentley was also present.

Dr. Wieland opened the meeting with prayer and presided during the first few minutes of the deliberations, being succeeded in the chair by the President who was delayed briefly by attendance at another meeting.

The Minutes of the last meeting having been circulated, on motion duly seconded and unanimously adopted, the actions recorded in said Minutes were confirmed and the Minutes approved.

Mr. Williams proposed a rising vote of welcome by the members of the Board present for Mr. Bentley, recently returned to the directorship of the Institute after more than four years' absence with distinguished service in the United States Navy. The vote was enthusiastically and unanimously expressed.

The Treasurer presented a financial report for the period from the last meeting, and a list of all securities transactions from September 23, 1945 to August 20, 1946. On motion duly seconded and unanimously adopted the reports were accepted and ordered filed.

The Treasurer also presented a budget for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1946, reviewing the same by item. On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried the budget was approved.

The Assistant Director presented a brief report of the administrative activity since the last meeting which was received and filed.

Over a period of several months the officers of the Institute had worked with and received from the Boards of Trustees and managements of the affiliated institutions reports of the needs of the various establishments to be used as a basis for requesting grants from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. The requests totalled $1,350,000. On August 15, 1946 these statements were incorporated into a letter by the officers of The American Church Institute for Negroes addressed to the Committee for Allocation of Reconstruction and Advance Funds, asking that a grant be made to the Institute to be used for the needs as requested by the schools. On motion duly seconded and unanimously adopted the letter was approved. Bishop Tucker, Dr. Wieland and Mr. Hunter presented arguments supporting the needs of the schools all for the purpose of providing Dr. Wieland with material for his use in placing the program before the Committee on Allocations.

The report by The American Church Institute for Negroes to the General Convention was reviewed before the Board by the Director. After discussion it decided to delegate Bishop Penick to present the report to the Convention and he was so delegated by the President.

The Director presented a summary of the Survey report recently received from Dr. Brewton stating that copies of the full printed report would be forwarded by mail to those trustees requesting them.

It was the concensus of the meeting that the Brewton report constitutes an invaluable aid and guidance in the further administration of the Institute.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously adopted, it was voted to adjourn at 5:00 P. M.

Dear Mr. Millikan:

I thank you for the copy of the Survey and your letter of September 23 which accompanied it.

This report constitutes a significant contribution of the Institute to the progress and welfare of these nine institutions. It has come at an opportune time and certainly sets up a program for action in the period of years before us.

From time to time, as I have the opportunity to visit the localities in which these institutions exist, I shall be happy to call on the administrative head and observe the activities of the institution itself.

Dear Dr. Trigg:

In compliance with your request at the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees, we enclose a copy of the Survey Report by the Division of Surveys and Field Services of Peabody College.

In our opinion we have here the guidepost for planning the long-term administration of the institutions affiliated with The American Church Institute for Negroes.

There is much material in the report for constructive application, as well as useful criticism of this great work by the Church. Perhaps it is inevitable in such a group of institutions that have always been financially handicapped to find deficiencies, but it is refreshing to have them frankly discussed by the survey staff.

In one or two instances the survey staff arrived at erroneous conclusions as a result of incomplete information supplied by the schools. The surpluses that appear in table 35 are an example. These figures largely represent funds appropriated for special needs but unexpended at the time reviewed by the staff and were not explained by the schools.

The material applicable to each school is being collected as a separate report for the individual schools and will be furnished to them for their use.

We believe the report should be treated confidentially as nothing is to be gained by revealing the general comparisons to the various boards and principals. They all have a natural sense of loyalty and local interest that lends itself to partisanship and the possibility of reaching conclusions inimicable to the general good.

Very truly yours,

M. M. Millikan

Institute Has Vital Role in Future of the Negro

CONTINUING its cooperation with the Reconstruction and Advance Fund, FORTH presents two articles by graduates of schools of the American Church Institute for Negroes. These articles, one by a skilled artisan residing in the South, and the other by a trained social worker who lives and works in the North, indicate the contribution which these schools make to the development of the Negro race and the unparalleled opportunity which these schools will have in the days to come. Next month the Reconstruction and Advance Fund article will describe the urgent opportunities facing the Church in Latin America.

NO schools should be better equipped to take the lead in promoting the principles of learning to live together amicably than those under Church auspices, such as the schools of the American Church Institute for Negroes. This type of school is interested not only in academic courses, but also, and perhaps more importantly, in the development of Christian character and leadership. They are interested in the personality of their students. The schools of the Institute, despite their very limited material resources, have achieved marked success in such education.

In the postwar world Institute schools will face an even greater challenge than in the past, and can be a major contributing force in providing the stable guidance that will be so sorely needed in helping young people find a sense of direction and purpose. Recent war experiences have brought about much changed thinking on the part of Negro youth. They have matured rapidly. They have seen a world at war over ideas and ideals. They have learned that equality of economic, educational, and social opportunities is the right of every citizen regardless of race, creed, or color. No longer will they accept a second-class citizenship role.

Institute schools, conscious of these problems, can be a vital factor in contributing to the personality development of Negro young people by furnishing progressive, well-trained teachers who will be able to give the kind of understanding, tolerance, and guidance which will help students to attain their objectives. A large number of young people have been inspired to seek higher educational levels. Federal and other funds will be sought for this purpose. The strength of our country will be determined by its citizens; and the Institute schools can take the lead in directing and developing Negro youth, as Christian citizens eager and able to live together with themselves and their white neighbors in harmony and understanding.

By JOSEPH K. WALL
Lawrenceville, Virginia

FORTY years ago I went to work in a small Virginia town. In that same town was a school of the American Church Institute for Negroes. And each day as I went to and from work I had to pass that school, St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, now St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute.

I became interested in the way the boys of that school behaved and the interest they took in learning trades: bricklaying, carpentry, shoe repairing, blacksmithing, and others. This was an opportunity that the Negroes of this community had not had before.

In those days very few Brunswick County boys were in the Trade Department but gradually as they began to realize the great opportunity the school was offering they began to enroll in large numbers.

During this period the county was without skilled mechanics and real jobs had to be performed by mechanics brought in from the large cities; but today, the county has skilled Negro mechanics in all popular trades. They are located throughout the county and adjoining counties, owning their own homes, operating shoe repair shops, blacksmith shops, tailor shops. Others work as contractors, mercantile business men, and still others are operating profitable farms. All this grew out of the opportunity that St. Paul's Institute, one of the earliest Institute schools, gave the Negroes of this region.

Besides the industrial and academic training, the Institute school offers religious and moral training that molds the student and fits him to be a leader in the life of his community.

The educational opportunities, offered by Institute schools, has made a real contribution to the entire race and what has been true at St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute, Lawrenceville, Virginia, has been true of the other Institute schools throughout the South.

I am fully aware that my race needs doctors, lawyers, clergymen. teachers and others in the professions but the masses of my race must raise their living standard by being good artisans. I therefore feel that the Institute schools can make a greater contribution by expanding these opportunities and by furnishing these schools with better buildings and equipment in order that the teachers and other instructors may do a better job for a greater number of students, as the postwar era will have a great demand for the industrial man in all walks of life.

Since I resigned my first position of forty years ago, my earning capacity has increased from four dollars a month to one dollar and fifty cents an hour, a direct result of my training received in an Institute school.

Roger N. Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, has been active in the many-sided fight for civil liberty since the outbreak of the first World War. He then at once volunteered his services to combating war-time restraints on freedom of speech, press and conscience, severing his connections in political reform and social work in St. Louis, Missouri, where he had worked for ten years following his graduation from Harvard. He organized in New York and Washington the National Civil Liberties Bureau, and directed its activities throughout the war.

After the war, the Bureau was expanded into the American Civil Liberties Union, which has been the one national non-partisan agency defending and promoting the civil rights of all persons without distinction. Its only platform has been the Bill of Rights. Mr. Baldwin has directed its varied campaigns and court cases, involving the rights of labor, aliens, Negroes, racial and political minorities, censorship and academic freedom, and in World War II the issues of war regulations and freedom of conscience.

Besides having acted as director of the Union since its origin, Mr. Baldwin has also been active in many other organizations concerned with civil liberties, with peace and with international relations. He has been a member of the faculty of the New School for Social Research in New York, where he has given numerous courses. He is a member of the Harvard Overseers' Committee on the Economics Department, and delivered at Harvard in 1938 the Godkin lecture on "Civil Liberties and Industrial Conflict", published by the Harvard University Press.

Mr. Baldwin is also a member of the directing boards of the National Urban League, the India League, the National Audubon Society, and a trustee of the Robert Marshall Civil Liberties Trust.

In addition to his activities in the United States, Mr. Baldwin spent considerable time in Europe between 1927 and 1935 in connection with international anti-fascist and anti-imperialist movements, in which he held official positions representing American agencies. His study of liberty and repression in Soviet Russia was published under the title "Liberty Under the Soviets". He is joint author of "Juvenile Courts and Probation" written when he was secretary of the National Probation Association. He is also the editor of a volume of Kropotkin's "Revolutionary Pamphlets".

Mr. Baldwin was born near Boston, Mass. and educated in the public schools and at Harvard.(A.B.and M.A.) He is married, and lives in New Jersey. He is an independent in politics.

Dear Mrs. Millis:

Roger N. Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, is planning a trip in the South from January 17th to February 11th for the purposes of first hand contacts with members and friends and with public and private agencies dealing with one aspect or another of civil liberties problems.

He will visit Atlanta on Monday, February 5th and will be glad to address either a public meeting or confer privately with friends interested in civil liberties.

I am attaching a biographical sketch, and call your attention to the list of subjects which may be changed to suit the particular needs of your locality.

We would appreciate it greatly if you would advise us if it will be possible for you to arrange for either or both of these meetings. Perhaps you can fit Mr. Baldwin in as a speaker at a meeting already arranged, such as the Chamber of Commerce or City Club meetings, etc., where a small fee would be paid that would help defray expenses, although this is not essential.

As soon as we have heard from you of your willingness to cooperate, we shall send you a list of our members and friends in Atlanta.

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DRAFT OF A STATE CIVIL RIGHTS LAW

The object of the attached draft of a civil rights law is to prohibit discrimination on account of race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin, and the denial of equal rights to any person: (1) in admission to or in accommodation in places of public amusement or resort, (2) in employment in certain industries and businesses and (3) in labor unions.

Twenty-eight states have no civil rights laws whatsoever. Many of the other twenty-two states have laws which are inadequate and therefore largely inoperative. In those states which have some anti-discrimination legislation on the books, the bill is designed so that sections may be taken to supplement present legislation.

SEC. 1. This section is adapted from a bill introduced in Congress by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It makes illegal not only active discrimination, but also punishes anyone who directly aids or causes it. The section is limited only to discrimination in admission or accommodation or service of any person in places of public accommodation, whether licensed by the state or not.

SEC. 2. This section, adapted in part from the federal bill, is purposely not all-inclusive, since a bill enumerating a multitude of various places where equality is required would be strictly construed, and hence a failure to list certain other places would be held by the courts to be specifically excluded. Those provisions of the section referrable to educational institutions are adapted from the New York Civil Rights Law (Section 40) with the additional prohibition directed against institutions obtaining tax exemption. For obvious reasons, it does not cover educational institutions which limit admission on the basis of religious belief or affiliation.

SEC. 2(b) is designed to prohibit placing of signs or advertisements calling attention to the fact that the particular place of public accommodation or conveyance discourages or refuses patronage or service on the basis of race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin. A ny such notice or advertisement is made prima facie evidence that the owner or manager of the particular place authorized publication.

SEC. 2(c) is designed to hold liable both the actual owner and his agent of any place practicing discrimination.

SEC. 3. This section is adapted from the New York Civil Rights Law, Section 40(b) and modifies the common law rule holding theater tickets to be a license revocable at the will of the theater owner. This law was recently held constitutional in Christie v. 46th St. Theater Corporation, 1944. 292 N.Y. 520, 643, cert. den. 89 L. Ed. (Adv. Sheets) 35.

SEC. 4. is adapted from the New York Civil Rights Law, Section 40(a) and prohibits either the refusal to hire or the making of inquiries concerning the race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin of any person seeking employment in public schools.

SEC. 5. is adapted from the New York Civil Rights Law, Section 42 and prohibits public utility companies or common carriers from refusing to employ or promote employees on account of their race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin.

SEC. 6. is adapted from the New York Civil Rights Law, Section 44 and applies the same standard as in Section 5 to concerns doing business with federal, state or local agencies.

SEC. 7. is adapted from the New York Civil Rights Law, Section 43 and prohibits labor unions from discriminating or segregating on the basis of race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin either within the union or in employment opportunities. It extends the New York law by adding protection for union members after admission.

SEC. 8. is adapted from the New York Civil Rights Law, Section 41. This section provides a civil remedy for the violation of the prohibited discriminatory acts listed in previous sections. SEC. 9 makes the unlawful discrimination a misdemeanor. It is desirable to provide both a civil and criminal remedy, and in terms not too severe to discourage enforcement. Where criminal penalties fail, civil damage suits can be used.

SEC. 10. This section empowers the Secretary of State to revoke the license of any person who has twice or more violated the act within a year. This section may be amended, however, to suit the particular instances, and it might be well to empower the Secretary of State, if it is within his jurisdiction, to revoke charters of incorporation or articles of partnership, etc. The revoking power, of course, may also be delegated to some other governmental agency.

SEC. 11 is adapted from the New York Penal Law, Section 700, and is a cover-all provision to punish discrimination.

SEC. 12. This is the usual separability clause which should be included wherever the proposed civil rights law is introduced as a whole.

To assure to all persons within the State of____full and equal privileges in places of public accommodation, resort, entertainment and amusement, and equal rights in employment and labor unions, and for other purposes.

SEC. 1. That within the jurisdiction of this State any person, natural or corporate, who shall make any distinction, discrimination, or restriction on account of race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin, or for any reason not sanctioned by law and not applicable alike to persons generally, in the admission of any person to, or the accommodation or service of any person in any place of public accommodation, resort, entertainment, or amusement, whether licensed or not, or any public conveyance, or any public meeting or assemblage, or who shall directly aid or cause the making of any such distinction, discrimination, or restriction, shall for each such act or denial be liable as hereinafter provided for in Sections 8 and 9.

SEC. 2. (a) Places of public accommodation, resort, entertainment, or amusement shall be deemed to include hotels, restaurants, stores, or shops where foodstuffs, drinks, goods, or wares are sold or offered, advertised, or displayed for sale to the public; hospitals, clinics, theaters, motion-picture houses, concert halls, amusement parks, public parks and public buildings under the jurisdiction of the national or municipal governments; buildings residential or otherwise enjoying eminent domain, or receiving any tax exemption from any source, or the construction of which was directly financed in whole or in part by any public funds or grants; public libraries, kindergartens, primary and secondary schools, high schools, academies, colleges and universities, extension courses, and all educational institutions under the supervision of the state authorities; and any such public library, kindergarten, primary and secondary school, academy, college, university, professional school, extension course or other educational facility, supported in whole or in part by public funds or by contributions solicited from the general public or obtaining any tax exemption from any source, except those institutions, admission to which is based on religious belief or affiliation; provided, that the foregoing enumeration shall not be construed as limiting in any way the meaning of the general phrase, "places of public accommodation, resort, entertainment, or amusement".

(b) The publication of any order, notice, or advertisement reasonably calculated to prevent or discourage the patronage or custom of persons of any race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin, as well as the actual exclusion or segregation of or discrimination against any person on account of race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin shall be deemed an unlawful distinction, discrimination, and restriction within the meaning of this Act. The production of any such order, notice, or advertisement purporting to be made by any person being the owner, lessee, operator, proprietor, manager, agent, or employee engaged in or exercising control over the operation of any public conveyance or any place of public accommodation, resort, entertainment, or amusement, shall be prima facie evidence in any civil or criminal action that the same was authorized and published by such person.

(c) The provisions and requirements of this Act shall bind and obligate every owner, lessee, operator, proprietor, manager, agent, and employee, whether natural person, corporation, or unincorporated association, engaged in or exercising control over the operation of any public conveyance or any place of public accommodation, resort, entertainment, or amusement: provided, that whenever any agent or employee shall so exercise any function or employ any power with which he is charged or entrusted as to violate any provision of this Act, both he and his principal or employer shall be held equally responsible and liable.

(d) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to prohibit the providing of separate accommodations or facilities for persons of different sex.

SEC. 3. No person, agency, bureau, corporation or association, being the owner, lessee, proprietor, manager, superintendent, agent or employee of any place of public entertainment and amusement as hereinafter defined shall refuse to admit to any public performance held at such place any person over the age of twenty-one years who presents a ticket of admission to the performance a reasonable time before the commencement thereof, or shall eject or demand the departure of any such person from such place during the course of the performance, whether or not accompanied by an offer to refund the purchase price or value of the ticket of admission presented by such person; but nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prevent the refusal of admission to or the ejection of any person whose conduct or speech thereat or therein is abusive or offensive or of any person engaged in any activity which may tend to a breach of the peace.

The places of public entertainment and amusement within the meaning of this section shall include but not be limited to legitimate theatres, burlesque theatres, music halls, motion picture houses, opera houses, concert halls and circuses.

SEC. 4. No person, agency, bureau, corporation or association employed or maintained to obtain or aid in obtaining positions for teachers, principals, superintendents, clerks or other employees in the public schools of the State, and no individual or individuals conducting or employed by or interested directly or indirectly in such an agency, bureau, corporation or association, and no board of education, trustee of a school district, superintendent, principal or teacher of a public school or other official or employee of a board of education, shall refuse to employ or promote any person on account of race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin, or directly or indirectly ask, indicate or transmit orally or in writing the race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin of any person seeking employment or official position in the public schools of the State.

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any public utility company, or a common carrier as defined by Sections _____ of the Statutes of _____ to refuse to employ or promote any person in any capacity in the operation or maintenance of a public service on account of the race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin of such person.

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation engaged to any extent whatsoever in the production, manufacture or distribution of equipment or supplies for any public agency whether federal, state, or local to refuse to employ or promote any person in any capacity on account of the race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin of such person.

SEC. 7. As used in this section, the term "labor organization" means any organization which exists and is constituted for the purpose, in whole or in part, of collective bargaining, or of dealing with employers concerning grievances, terms or conditions of employment, or of other mutual aid or protection. No labor organization shall hereafter, directly or indirectly, by ritualistic practice, constitutional or by-law prescription, by tacit agreement among its members, or otherwise, deny a person or persons membership in its organization by reason of his race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin, or by regulations, practice or otherwise, segregate or deny to any of its members, by reason of race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin, equal treatment with all other members within such labor organization or in any designation of members to any employer for employment, promotion or dismissal by such employer.

SEC. 8. Any person who or any agency, bureau, corporation or association which shall violate any of the provisions of sections 1,3,4,5, or 6 or who or which shall aid or cause the violation of any of said provisions, and any officer or member of a labor organization, as defined by section 7, or any person representing any organization or acting in its behalf who shall violate any of the provisions of section 7 or who shall aid or cause the violation of any of the provisions of such section shall for each and every violation thereof be liable to a penalty of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, to be recovered by the person aggrieved thereby or by any resident of this state, to whom such person shall assign his cause of action, in any court of competent jurisdiction in the county in which the plaintiff or the defendant shall reside.

SEC. 9. Any person who or any agency, bureau, corporation or association which shall violate any of the provisions of sections 1,3,4,5, or 6 or who or which shall aid or cause the violation of any of said provisions, and any officer or member of a labor organization, as defined by section 7, or any person representing any organization or acting in its behalf who shall violate any of the provisions of section 7 or who shall aid or cause the violation of any of the provisions of such section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, or shall be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 10. The Secretary of State shall revoke any license issued pursuant to the provisions and requirements of Section _____ of the Statutes of the State of _____ whenever it shall have been judicially determined that the licensee or person operating or doing business under said license has violated this Act in the course of such operation or business two times or more within any twelve-month period, No similar license shall be issued to the offending person or for the use of the place where said violations shall have occurred for a period of sixty days following such revocation. The provisions of this section may be enforced by an action of mandamus filed against the Secretary of State by any citizen of the State of _____.

SEC. 11. All persons within the jurisdiction of this state shall be entitled to the equal protection of the laws of this state or any sub-division thereof. No person shall, because of his race, color, creed, ancestry or national origin, be subjected to any discrimination in his civil rights by any other person or by any firm, corporation or institution, or by the state, or any agency or subdivision of the state. A person who shall violate this section is guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars or more than five hundred dollars.

SEC. 12. The provisions of this Act are hereby declared to be separable. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

City, Name of State

Dear Mr. _____:

Roger Baldwin, Director of the American Civil Liberties Union, is making a tour of the South to discuss the problem of race relations with interested individuals and leaders of organizations in this field.

He is to be in Atlanta on Saturday, February 3, and a luncheon meeting has been arranged at 1 P. M. in the Atlanta University Dining Hall, 50 Chestnut Street, S.W.

We hope that you will be able to attend this luncheon and participate in the discussion. The fee is $1.00. A card is enclosed for your acceptance.

Cordially yours,

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

It was a great pleasure to have you here in Atlanta. I am sure that all those who attended the luncheon at Atlanta University found the discussion most illuminating. Mr. Frank McCallister told us that you would like to have the list of those present at the luncheon. This is enclosed.

I am also enclosing $1.00 which was sent in by Mr. J. E. Matthews, Vice-President of Local Union #10 of UAW-CIO. Mr. Matthews was unable to attend the luncheon but wanted to make a contribution to your work.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION
170 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

August 3, 1945

To the Members of the National Committee,
State Correspondents, Local Representatives, and organizations in the race relations field:

Friends:

The Navy Department alone of all departments in the federal government still bars all its services to Japanese Americans. They are the only minority barred by the Navy. The excuses for this policy rest on grounds of practical military considerations, said to have been determined by commanding officers in the field. The restrictions even apply to service in the WAVES, where no military considerations could prevail. The reason given for that is that if they bar the men, they should in fairness also bar the women.

The Navy Department has made very considerable progress in opening up its services to Negroes and even in abolishing various forms of segregation. That was accomplished by insistent pressure. It would seem a reasonable prospect that wide protests might also overcome the barriers to the service of Japanese Americans.

We are, therefore, urging all interested individuals and organizations to address the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. James V. Forrestal, urging prompt consideration of the removal of the ban on the service of Japanese Americans. The arguments rest not only upon the obvious fairness of permitting the service of all loyal American citizens regardless of race, but also on the distinguished record of Japanese American troops on the fighting fronts of Europe and in the South West Pacific. The universal testimony of Army officers praises the Japanese American combat teams in the highest terms. Not a single case of espionage or sabotage has ever been reported on the part of any Japanese American, civilian or military.

Your prompt action would assist in overcoming the last general racial barrier in any federal service.

Sincerely yours,

Roger Baldwin

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

Attached hereto is a blank which was filled in and should have been mailed to you some days ago. We regret that it has been delayed in reaching you.

The statement under "Purpose" is a portion of our charter. The Council might be described in fewer words, however, as "an organization devoted to economic advancement of the South and betterment of racial relations." The enclosed folder THE SOUTH IS YOURS will give you further information concerning the organization.

This is the first opportunity I have had since my visit to Atlanta to let you know how appreciative the Union is for the time and good advice you gave me when I spoke with you recently about the possibility of developing an ACLU affiliate in Atlanta. We are now evaluating the information that was collected to determine our next step. Hopefully, Mr. Pemberton will visit Atlanta in late March or early April to talk with our members and friends about the affiliate. We certainly will be in touch with you.

CHAPTER IN ATLANTA — LUNCH MEETING, APR 12 '63

There will be a dinner and public meeting on May 15th, to be addressed by Mr. Pemberton of the ACLU office in New York. While Mr. Pemberton is in town, we shall try to arrange for him to meet persons who would be interested in the ACLU.

The dinner meeting should be quite small; and its main purpose should be to honor the four national board members, Rufus Clement, Sylvan Meyer, Lillian Smith, and M.E. Tilly.

Arrangements will be carried out as follows:

1 Mailing: Mr. Moran

2. Contact with national office: Mr. Dunbar
(Get mailing list, clear date; see if literature is available; see if ACLU will cover mailing costs) [N.B. On 4/15/63 Mr. Dunbar did check with national and got affirmative answers on all these matters.]

3 Reserve place Mr Sanford.

4 Sign invitation: Those present plus those invited but not present, so far as they indicate a willingness by telegraphing Mr. Moran; each national board member.

5. Contact key persons. As indicated on attached list of names:

Dr. Rufus E. Clement
President

Dear Dr. Clement:

As you may know, some time ago Mr. Alan Reitman spent several days in Atlanta exploring the possibility of organizing an Atlanta or Georgia chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. Mr. Reitman was encouraged by conversations he had while here, and after his return he asked several of us to continue to think about the matter and to take preliminary steps toward organizing.

I have the pleasure of reporting to you and the other Georgia members of the ACLU National Committee that arrangements are being made now for a visit to Atlanta by Mr. John DeJ. Pemberton, May 15 and 16. We are planning a public meeting May 15 which Mr. Pemberton will address. We are also planning a private dinner beforehand, to welcome him to Georgia and to honor you and the other National Committee members, who are, as you know, Miss Lillian Smith, Mrs. M. E. Tilly, and Sylvan Meyer.

We do hope that you and Mrs. Clement will have the evening of May 15 free, and will be with us for what we hope will be the beginning of a strong ACLU chapter. As soon as we make arrangements about time and place, we shall write to you further.

Announcements of the meeting will go out in a few days to all residents of Georgia who are members of the ACLU (of whom Mr. Reitman informs us there are nearly 200), and also to a large number of other persons.

Serving with me on the ad hoc local arrangements committee have been Mrs. Donald Ross Green, Mrs. Neil Moran, Dean B. R. Brazeal, Leslie W. Dunbar, Ted V. Fisher, Eric Lincoln, and Morgan Sanford.

As this organizational effort proceeds, I am sure that we shall need to call on you for guidance and counsel.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

Edward T. Ladd

PROGRESS REPORT

(Note: This report is for those working on the plans for the first meeting; it is not for publication or general distribution.)

Meeting on Wednesday, May 15th. The meeting for all interested persons will be at 8:00 p. m., on Wednesday, May 15th, in the auditorium of the 7th floor of the Life Insurance Company of Georgia Building, 573 West Peachtree Street (Linden St. entrance). John deJ. Pemberton, Jr., national Executive Director, will be the speaker. Depending on the extent of participation and interest, first steps will be taken toward the establishment of a Georgia chapter.

Invitations to the meeting. These are being sent out under the general supervision of Mrs. Charlotte Moran, 1802 East Clifton Road, N. E., (DR 7-6832). Contact her with individual names or lists of names of persons who should be invited, or requests for copies of the invitation letter.

Printed materials about the ACLU. These are very helpful for persons not familiar with the ACLU. They can be obtained in quantity from Mrs. Mildred Johnson, c/o Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth Street, N. W. (522-8764).

Dinner before the meeting. Those who have been working on the project are invited to a dinner before the meeting, to honor the four Georgia members of the National Committee and to welcome Mr. Pemberton. The dinner will be at 6:00 p. m., at the Progressive Club, 1050 Techwood Drive, N. W. The charge per person will be $3.54, payable in advance when the reservation is made. Send reservations and checks as early as possible to Mrs. Johnny Glustrom, 1860 Wellbourne Drive, N. E., Atlanta 9 (TR 2 -8402). Please feel free to invite to this dinner other key persons you know who are already interested in the ACLU and may be able and willing to make a significant contribution to the building of a chapter. Leaders in the press, radio, and TV will be welcome.

Publicity. This is being handled by Mrs. Frederick E. Robin, 926 Crane Road, N. E. (CE 7-2071). Contact her with information, suggestions, or offers of help.

This progress report. Additional copies are available for sending to potentially key people (not the press). Get in touch with Edward T. Ladd, Division of Teacher Education, Emory University, Atlanta 22 (DR 3-1621, ext 591, 592) or 1236 Springdale Road, N. E. (DR 7-7775).

Dear Ray:

This is to put in writing the information I mentioned to you over the telephone about the American Civil Liberties Union.

Mr. John deJ. Pemberton, Jr., national Executive Director, will be in town next Wednesday, May 15th, for a day or two, talking with interested persons. He will speak to an open meeting at the Life of Georgia auditorium at 8:00 p.m. that evening.

Mr. Pemberton will be welcomed at an invitational dinner at the Progressive Club at 6:00 p.m., the major purpose of which will be to honor the four Georgia members of the ACLU National Committee. Interested members of the press will be welcome.

Mrs. Frederick E. Robin, 926 Crane Road, N.E., is handling the publicity for Mr. Pemberton's visit.

I am asking to have printed materials about the ACLU sent to you under separate cover.

We appreciate your interest in this matter, which we believe may have real significance for the future of Georgia.

Yours sincerely,

Mr. Ralph McGill
Publisher
The Atlanta Constitution
10 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. McGill:

The formation of a small chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union is not a headline-making event in the ordinary sense. But in the long run, the existence of such a chapter in Georgia will certainly affect future positions on such crucial matters as:

1. should there be any book, magazine, or movie censorship — whether pre-censorship at the source, or by local civic boards of censors;

2. what constitutes freedom of expression on college campuses;

3. Do we provide adequate legal safeguards for helpless individuals who get in trouble with the law?

4. should classroom prayers in public schools be eliminated;

5. whose rights should prevail when the rights of individual property owners conflict with the rights of minority groups -- as in cases of restaurant segregation.

The Civil Liberties Union, as you know, constantly deals with these issues which generate such heated emotions. But it brings to them no partisan bias, no commitment to any pressure group. It acts solely in behalf of the individual rights of every American citizen as spelled out in the Bill of Rights. For this reason, Union positions and test cases have great influence and frequently set new legal precedents.

We invite you to be with us as our guest at a dinner meeting at the Progressive Club on May 15th at 6:00 p.m., when the Georgia Civil Liberties Union will be born. At this small private dinner, which precedes a large open meeting, you will have an opportunity to talk with the Union's National Executive Director, John De J. Pemberton, Jr., as he sets forth briefly the Union's general goals and discusses with the Civil Liberties Planning Committee what specifically can be achieved in Georgia.

If you wish to attend, please call Mrs. Robin, our Acting Publicity Director at CE. 7-2071. She will make certain that a place is reserved for you.

Date: May 10, 1963

A public meeting to establish the Georgia chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union will take place on Wednesday, May 15th at 8:00 p.m., at the Life Insurance Company of Georgia Building. John de J. Pemberton, Jr., National Director of the Union will be the speaker.

The Civil Liberties Planning Committee also announced that there would be a dinner preceding the meeting to welcome Mr. Pemberton and to honor the four Georgia members of the Union's National Committee -- Mrs. Dorothy Tilly, Dr. Rufus Clement, Miss Lillian Smith and Mr. Sylvan Meyer. Georgia members of the President's Advisory Board on Civil Rights, of which Mr. Meyer is chairman, will also be guests. The dinner meeting will be held at the Progressive Club at 6:00 p.m.

In announcing the formation of a Georgia chapter, Professor Edward T. Ladd, temporary chairman of the Civil Liberties Planning Committee stated:

"The only purpose of the American Civil Liberties Union is to defend and promote the liberties of each American citizen as set forth in the Bill of Rights. In Georgia, as elsewhere, there is a great need for a dispassionate voice to speak up for the rights of all without partisan bias, whether the issue concerns censorship, academic freedom, minority rights or religious freedom."

FORMER FBI COUNTERSPY, KARL PRUSSIAN, STATES "THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION IS THE STRONGEST RIGHT ARM OF THE COMMUNIST CONSPIRACY IN AMERICA."

In this age of idealogical and nuclear warfare, subversion has progressively replaced traditional warfare as a positive instrument of enemy attack. It is of paramount importance therefore that each individual knows that he has become a front line troop in this battle for survival of freedom.

Subterfuge, lies and deceit are major weapons of the enemy. We must carefully analyze all group action to determine the real aims and objectives.

The Communist conspiracy has for years hidden behind fronts designed to ensnare and trap the unsuspecting. Fortunately we are becoming more suspect. We are learning the enemies technique.

Those of you who have not heretofore researched the American Civil Liberties Union are urged to do so! Find out what it really stands for and why the American Legion at its National Convention requested Congressional investigation of the organization. Don't join to be a joiner. Let the ACLU explain its record of:

Opposing loyality oaths

Defending Fascist and Communist causes

Seeking to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities

Seeking to abolish the FBI

Opposing all restrictions and laws regulating the sale of obscene literature

Endorsing the Foreign Policy Association.

Dear fellow-member of the Interim Planning Committee:

I'm sure you will agree that to capitalize on the momentum gained on Wednesday evening we should proceed promptly to enlarge our group and get the organizational work done.

Would you, therefore, please block out on the attached sheet all the times for a committee meeting that would be impossible, and get the sheet into the mail in time to reach me on Monday or Tuesday morning. I shall then call a meeting right away.

Please be thinking about persons to add to the committee. Pemberton will send sample constitutions.

Dear Dr. Dunbar:

Mr. Reitman has asked me to tell you that I have been unable to locate the memorandum by Daniel Pollitt which you and he spoke of in your telephone conversation today. I am not sure where Mr. Pemberton filed his copy of it; he may, in fact, have it with him in Minnesota. Mr. Reitman would very much appreciate, therefore, your sending him another copy as soon as possible. Please forgive this inconvenience.

MINUTES OF STEERING COMMITTEE MEETING
GEORGIA AFFILIATE
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION
Monday evening, September 3, 1963
Edward Ladd's Home--1236 Springdale Road, N.E., Atlanta

Present: B. R. Brazeal, Leslie Dunbar, Marian Glustrom, Virginia Harbin, Edward T. Ladd, Charlotte Moran, John B. Morris, Frances Pauley, Eleanor Richardson, Florence B. Robin

The meeting was called to order by Edward Ladd, Chairman, who filled the Committee in on what has happened since the general meeting in the spring. In accordance with the wishes of the general membership the Steering Committee has been enlarged and a nominating and constitution committee have been appointed.

Mr. Brazeal, Chairman of the Constitution Committee, distributed copies of the constitution as drafted by his committee. The constitution was read, discussed, and certain changes made. Frances Pauley is to have copies mimeographed for the membership and they are to be mailed along with notices of the next meeting plus the ballot for officers.

Mr. Dunbar presented the following slate of officers for approval:

President: Elliot Levitas has been asked but has not yet accepted.
First Vice President: Donald Hollowell
Second Vice President: Sylvan Meyers
Secretary: Eleanor Richardson
Corresponding Secretary: Patsy Morris
Treasurer: Edward Ladd

If Mr. Levitas does not accept, the Nominating Committee is to select someone else whom it considers appropriate and his name is to be placed on the ballot. It was agreed that a lawyer should be the chairman if it is at all possible.

The general membership is to be asked to submit names for the Board of Directors so that we can get representation throughout the state and the Board will be elected at the membership meeting.

It was decided that biographical information should accompnay the names of the officers on the ballot.

It was moved and seconded that the length of time of service of each member of the first Board of Directors shall be determined by lot on the occasion of their first meeting in order to have staggered terms for the directors.

It was moved and seconded that we have a general membership meeting as soon as possible and that Mr. Ladd appoint two members of the Committee to assist him in planning for the meeting.

The correspondence was read by Mr. Ladd and the following letters were discussed:

1. A letter has been written to the Young Republican Club concerning the alleged "ugly" remarks that had been made at one of their meetings about the American Civil Liberties Union. No reply has been received.

(Over)

2. The Jewish Educational Alliance in Savannah is looking for a speaker for their Civil Liberties Meeting, and Frances Pauley is to help find them one.

It was decided that the general membership meeting should have substance rather than be just a business meeting. It was thought that perhaps the program could center around various areas which could be the concern of the Georgia chapter. Interested people are to be invited and membership dues will be accepted at the meeting.

The meeting was adjourned at 10:30 p.m. by Mr. Ladd.

Marian Glustrom

Later Notes:

1) The Nominating Committee has settled on Edward Ladd as nominee for President and Robert Cohn as nominee for Treasurer.

2) The membership meeting is being called for 8:00 p.m., Wednesday, November 20th, in Rooms 304-305, YWCA, 72 Edgewood Avenue, N.E., Atlanta.

3) Charlotte Moran (mailing) and Florence Robin (program) are assisting in arrangements for the meeting.

4) Morgan C. Stanford has agreed to speak to the Jewish Educational Alliance in Savannah.

Dear Mrs. Bermel:

I was delighted to talk with you this afternoon about the possibility of Professor Dan Pollit's article appearing in Harper's Magazine. We couldn't think of a better publication to present the issue of the right to counsel for the unpopular client. As I explained, Professor Pollit does plan to use this article for the Duke University's Law and Contemporary Problems, as a law review article, but I am sure that if Harper's decides it wants to publish the piece, we can work out the problem of timing.

Because of our desire to move ahead on this project, I hope that you will be able to give us a prompt reaction.

Dear Mr. Maloof:

I was asked by Ed Ladd to chair the Nominating Committee to propose officers for the Georgia Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, which you and I and a number of others hope to get launched this fall.

The Committee met with me, and the unanimous choice of the Committee members for the first presidency of the new chapter was you.

I might note that the Committee, in turning to you, di so chiefly because of the high regard it had for you: and secondly because of its conviction that, at least initially, the chapter would be greatly strengthened by having a lawyer at its head.

Incidentally, the Nominating Committee met several weeks ago and I have been very dilatory in approaching persons for their consent to have their names placed in nomination. In the course of the days, however, I have run into three selectees, all of whom have agreed. You will, I think, be helped in making your own decision by knowing that Sylvan Meyer has agreed to accept a vice-presidency; Mrs. Eleanor Richardson, immediate past President of the DeKalb County League of Women Voters, will accept as recording secretary; and Mrs. John Morris will accept as corresponding secretary.

I do hope that you will assume this responsibility for leadership. If you would need to discuss it, my office telephone is Ja. 2-8764 and my home telephone is Me. 4-0182.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

I was in New York on October 2 and went by the ACLU office. Alan Reitman asked me to bring back to you the enclosed memoranda, etc., about Mr. Ashton Jones.

Alan also suggested that we send to him a draft copy of the proposed Constitution so that they could look it over in advance to make sure there are no bugs in it. I think this would be a good idea.

1. A draft constitution has been prepared by a subcommittee consisting of B. R. Brazeal (Chairman), Maurice Maloof, Charlotte Moran, and Morgan C. Stanford and approved by the Steering Committee. It will be submitted to this organizational meeting. A copy is enclosed. Please look it over in advance and bring it with you.

   The national office has informed us that some such clause as the following must be added: "All officers and members of the Board of Directors and members of all committees shall conform to the requirements of the 1960 resolution of the American Civil Liberties Union, Inc., relating to governing personnel." Such an amendment will be presented from the floor.

2. A slate of officers has been drawn up by a subcommittee consisting of Leslie Dunbar (Chairman), Harry Elson, Marian Glustrom, and Frances Pauley. This slate has been approved by the Steering Committee and will be submitted to the organizational meeting. Names and some biographical information are enclosed.

3. Members of the Board of Directors will be elected at the meeting. ACLU members are hereby invited to make nominations on the enclosed form. The Steering Committee urgently requests nominations of persons fom all over the state. Be sure that persons you are nominating are willing to serve. Members of the Steering Committee recommend that ten positions on the Board be filled at this juncture.

4. Florence Robin is arranging for a panel presentation on

Dear Officer or Board Member:

I hope it has helped you withstand the savage blows of the past days to know that it is to strengthen constitutional processes that we in the ACLU of Georgia have just banded together.

This is to call a meeting of the officers and directors at my home, 1236 Springdale Road, N.E., Atlanta, on Saturday afternoon, December 7th, 1963, at 4:00 p.m.

I am giving you a good deal of notice in the hope that you can arrange your schedule so as to reserve the time and be there. Please let me know as soon as possible if you cannot.

And please send me suggestions for our agenda or for procedures for getting our program under way.

Yours sincerely,

Edward Ladd

ACLU - (Georgia)

December 7, 1963

A meeting of the officers and board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held at the home of the president, Edward T. Ladd, on December 7. The following were present; Bacote, Morris, Robin, Pauley, Ladd, Richardson, Cohn, Hollowell, Steinmetz. Meyer and Dunbar had advised Mr. Ladd that they were unable to attend.

President Ladd proposed an agenda for the meeting plan and participants agreed to proceed with same. In addition, three subjects were mentioned by members present: possibility of having regular observors of the judicial processes in Georgia; Peace Walkers; and entire area of Press relations.

1. A committee of lawyers was appointed consisting of Robert Cohn, Donald Hollowell, Elliott Levitas, Maurice Maloof, Morgan Stanford. Robert Cohn assumed the responsibility of calling the committee together. Other names suggested were Hugh Gibert, Herbert Johnson, Oscar Kimsey, Jr., J. Haas. This committee is to make recommendations to the executive committee of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia, to screen cases, to be staff for all legal problems, to be responsible for the legal aspects of a pamphlet, "If You are Arrested in Georgia"(anothe r committee would actually do correlation, publishing etc.). It was moved by Frances Pauley and seconded by Florence Robin that this Committee of Lawyers be a standing committee of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia. Motion was adopted.

2. It was moved by Florence Robin and seconded by Harry Steinmetz that the executive committee (the officers) serve as a strategy committee on representation. In an emergency situation, the President is authorized to take action; if the President is out of town, the first Vice-President is so authorized.

3. Eleanor Richardson moved and Frances Pauley seconded the motion that a Public Relations Committee be appointed with the work of a Speakers' Bureau part of its responsibility. It was suggested that Helen Bullard be asked to chair this committee and that Rabbi Rothschild be asked to serve on same. Motion was adopted.

4. In respect to a Newsletter, Florence Robin offered to get members together who had expressed an interest in this endeavor and to secure a chairman for this committee.

5. Charlotte Moran and C. Bacote were to be asked to serve as co-chairmen of a membership committee. Frances Pauley offered to help on this and Florence Robin volunteered help on a membership letter. It was moved and seconded to authorize the membership committee to spend funds for a membership mailing to approximately 1000 names in January, 1964 using an ACLU pamphlet as enclosure (to be selected by E. Ladd). Motion was adopted.

6. It was decided that fund raising be kept separate from membership drive work, that this be worked on later and Florence Robin volunteered to do this fund raising letter when time came.

7. Donald Hollowell moved the adoption of a resolution to open a bank account in the name of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia with either the Treasurer or President to sign checks upon authorization of the expenditure. This resolution was adopted.

8. Donald Hollowell further suggested that the President write National in regard to the allocation of dues and to get in writing from them procedure in the remittance of dues.

9. In reply to a letter from the New York office of ACLU, Robert Cohn moved and Donald Hollowell seconded that our board recommend that the name of Martin Luther King be placed in nomination for the National Committee of the ACLU. Motion was adopted.

10. Frances Pauley and Harry Steinmetz explained the procedures the Peace Walkers were using through Georgia. They were asked to word a resolution on the condemnation of use of cattle prods on human beings. The President and executive committee would approve the resolution and distribute same after agreement on same.

11. Charlotte Moran and Eleanor Richardson would be asked to keep the Board in touch with any necessary action in regard to Constitution Revision.

12. Next meeting of the officers and board of directors was called for January 8, 1964 at 7:30 at the home of Florence Robin. This meeting was adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,

Eleanor L. Richardson

7 AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF GEORGIA

Memo from the State President

At our organizational meeting on November 20th, attended by approximately 60 members, the constitution for the ACLU of Georgia was adopted. Changes from the draft circulated to you were minor, except that the clause suggested by the national office was added. You will eventually receive a copy. Meanwhile, inquiries may be directed to any of the officers.

The proposed slate of officers was elected unanimously. In addition to the undersigned they are:

First Vice-President:	Mr. Donald L. Hollowell (Atlanta)
Second Vice-President:	Mr. Sylvan Meyer (Gainesville)
Secretary:	Mrs. M.E. Richardson (Decatur)
Corresponding Secretary:	Mrs. John B. Morris (Atlanta)
Treasurer:	Mr. Robert Cohn (Atlanta)

For the present the size of the Board of Directors was limited to ten persons, exclusive of the officers. From a slate of 25 the following were elected: Mr. C.A. Bacote, Miss Helen Bullard, Mr. Leslie Dunbar, Mr. John Glustrom, Mr. Maurice Maloof, Mrs. William Pauley, Mrs. Frederick Robin, Mr. Morgan Stanford, and Mr. Harry Steinmetz. (One other person elected could not serve because of the pressures of time). The Board is confident that soon more of our organization's leadership will come from outside the Atlanta area.

On December 16th the national Board of Directors granted our state affiliate official recognition.

Since its election your state Board has been trying to keep up with a rush of civil liberties crises and demands, as well as simultaneously to build an organization.

Our first public statement, calling for respect for the constitutional rights of the "Peace Walkers", was well received in the office of the Governor. For several weeks state officials appear to have been conducting themselves well with respect to that group. Our Committee of Lawyers, under the chairmanship of Mr. Hugh Gibert, has been in touch with an attorney for the Peace Walkers under arrest in Albany, but was told that no additional legal help was needed.

We have recommended nomination of a distinguished Georgian for election to the ACLU National Committee.

Miss Helen Bullard is heading a speakers' bureau; Mrs. Frederick Robin is temporarily handling public relations; and Mrs. Neil Moran is planning a membership drive.

FROM YOU, THE MEMBERS, WE SHALL NEED
Help in getting new members..Useful services of many kinds..Money..
Please give all of the above.

Amer. Civil Liberties Union (Georgia) Acly

January 8, 1964

A meeting of the officers and board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held at the home of Mrs. Frederick Robin on January 8, 1964. The following were present: Ladd, Robin, Dunbar, Steinmetz, Bacote, Stanford, Cohn, Glustrom, Morris, Pauley, Richardson. The following had advised that they were unable to attend: Bullard, Meyer, Hollowell, Maloof. Mr. and Mrs. Howard Moore were visitors.

The secretary read the minutes of December 8 and with the corrections made that items 1, 3, 5 should be amended to read "motion was adopted", it was moved by H. Steinmetz, and seconded by L.Dunbar that the minutes be accepted as corrected. The minutes would be reproduced and sent to all before the next scheduled meeting each time in order to conserve time taken in said reading at the meeting itself.

1. E. Ladd reported that the by-law materials had been sent to National office, that the National Committee had recognized and adopted the Georgia affiliate by acclamation. National had sent a news release which was carried on TV and in the Atlanta papers.

2. E. Ladd announced that Elliott Levitas had found it necessary to resign from the Board of Directors due to pressure of his business office but would continue to work with the Committee of Lawyers.

3. R. Cohn reported that the Committee of Lawyers (present-Stanford, George, Levitas, Maloof, Kimsey, Gibert, Hollowell, Cohn) had met early in December. Hugh Gibert was named chairman of the Committee. They considered a letter which had been sent in connection with the further delaying of the execution of Mr. Pugh. Consensus of the Committee was that there was not sufficient time to examine records, determine civil liberties issue involved but that D. Hollowell was to make some phone calls. In connection with the preparation of a pamphlet concerning what to do if arrested in Georgia, Messrs. George and Kimsey will work on this.

4. E. Ladd reported that Helen Bullard could not assume chairmanship of Public Relations Committee but that she would head a Speaker's Bureau. We were asked to help out in this connection by offering our services or suggesting speakers. F. Robin has been helping out in the area of Public Relations but a chairman is needed to advise about public and news releases and handle same. Several names were suggested. It was moved by Dunbar and seconded by Pauley that F. Robin, who would continue to be responsible for Public Relations until a new chairman could be found, be authorized to recruit and appoint with E. Ladd's approval a new chairman.

5. F. Robin reported that she had contacted all members who had listed the Newsletter as an interest and she will call a meeting of same. There was much discussion on the number of copies to be distributed and to whom. The first issues will be sent to the membership, press release people and others as the need arises. H. Steinmetz mentioned that the board members might receive 5 copies for distribution to interested people. E. Ladd emphasized that any statement made in connection with our work be copied and copies supplied to Newsletter, Public Relations and several copies to himself in order to keep National office properly informed.

6. R. Cohn stated that he still had not received a reply from National regarding the procedure of dues handling or when we would receive our share. It was suggested that National might be waiting for the 1964 dues receipts under the new change of date. In connection with this, National had provided the postage and C. Moran had sent out a letter from E. Ladd (report of our activities to date) along with the renewal notices.

7. In regard to membership, Moran, Bacote, Ladd will meet to discuss next recruitment steps.

8. E. Ladd reported that a statement (copy attached for secretary's report and copies were circulated at this meeting) regarding the Peace Walkers was sent to the Governor, Mr. Barnard (Executive Secretary to the Governor), Colonel Lowell Connor (Head, State Patrol), the mayors of eleven towns on the Peace Walkers' route through Georgia, three TV stations, the Constitution and Journal. Members present did not see any pickup of this statement in the mass media. The reply from Mr. Barnard was read.

9. E. Ladd reported on a phone call and letter from the Managing Editor of the Albany Journal.

10. In following up a letter from National ACLU in response to a wire they had received from Boulder, Colorado, concerning one of the Peace Walkers from that area, H. Gibert phoned Mr. C. B. King to ascertain if there had been any violation of civil rights. Mr. Gibert talked to B. Deming and Mr. King and they both stated that there was no problem of violation of rights in the condition of the Peace Walkers in detention at Albany, nor any illness. Mr. King stated that at that time there was no need for help from the ACLU of Georgia. E. Ladd emphasized that the ACLU has two roles-that of support of legal action and that of educational action. It was suggested that the Newsletter might carry a factual statement of the various happenings with the Peace Walkers in this educational action phase. L. Dunbar made a motion which was seconded by R. Cohn that the Committee of Lawyers keep abreast of what is happening to the Peace Walkers as they go through Georgia and stand ready to help when Mr. C. B. King makes it known that he would like our legal services and so provide such services. Motion was adopted. H Steinmetz suggested we use in the Newsletter the last paragraph in Mr. Edward J. Ennis' speech on page 2 of January, 1964, "Civil Liberties" as part of our educational action.

11. In connection with police action many suggestions were made regarding the investigation of civil liberties training given rookie police, possible request to Chief of Police to have lecturers in this field for the police department, the role of ACLU with the new State Police Academy. Mr. Ladd was asked to convey these thoughts to Committee of Lawyers. Mrs. Morris was requested to write regarding the police review mentioned in January, 1964 "Civil Liberties." It was moved by F. Robin and seconded by R. Cohn that the Board consider a special committee to deal with the police and that J. Glustrom be authorized to study the problem and determine the most effective persons to deal with this area. Motion was adopted.

12. M. Stanford asked the ACLU for suggestions for new chairman of State of Georgia Advisory Committee on Civil Rights as S. Meyer feels he must resign.

13. A letter from Mrs. Leon Goldberg was read regarding the proposed revision of Georgia election laws. F. Pauley moved and L. Dunbar seconded that E. Richardson (chairman), C. Moran, C. Bacote, F. Goldberg prepare a statement on election laws, and after approval of officers, release same to our Newsletter, to press, and legislature. Motion was adopted.

13. L. Dunbar, former chairman of former nominating committee suggested and placed in nomination the names of Eugene Gadsden, a lawyer from Savannah, and Mrs. Rachel Neely Parker from Norcross. Mr. Gadsden was elected by ballot vote, to fill the vacancy left by resignation of E. Levitas.

14. The matter of travel expenses was deferred. Mrs. Richardson offered secretarial help to E. Ladd.

15. Next meeting was scheduled for Thursday, January 30, at 8 P.M. at home of R. Cohn, 3037 Mornington Drive, N.W., Atlanta 5, Ga.

Statement of Position adopted by the officers and Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia on January 30th, 1964

The American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia is compelled to express its disagreement with the policy of the City of Atlanta recently announced by Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr. in a letter to Calvin Craig, Grand Dragon of the Georgia Ku Klux Klan. In this letter, Mayor Allen stated that the request of the United Klans of America for permission to use Hurt Park for a peaceful meeting would not receive favorable consideration from the City unless United Klans first discloses a list of its membership and proves that it is not affiliated with any of the groups classified as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States. This policy, if pursued, constitutes an unwarranted invasion of the fundamental rights of freedom of assembly and association conferred by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Our country, from its inception, was founded upon the proposition that the fundamental rights of freedom of speech, press, association and peaceable assembly guaranteed by the First Amendment, are indispensable to the functioning of a republican government dedicated to the establishment of justice and the preservation of liberty. These basic constitutional freedoms cannot be abridged under the guise of regulating the use of public parks. Indeed, the use of public parks for purposes of peaceful assembly by dissident groups of citizens is in the greatest tradition of our country.

The right of a group, whether the Ku Klux Klan or the NAACP, to use a public park for the purposes of peaceful assembly and discussion is well established. A municipality may not close its parks to those with whom it disagrees. As Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking of another restraint upon free speech, said: "If in the long run the beliefs expressed in proletarian dictatorship are destined to be accepted by the dominant forces of the community, the only meaning of free speech is that they should be given their chance to have their way."[1] Nor may it condition the right to use these parks upon the disclosure of membership lists. The Supreme Court of the United States, in a number of recent cases, has upheld the right of an organization to keep its membership lists confidential, rejecting all attempts by state and municipal authorities to compel their disclosure.

1 Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 673 (1925)

Equally invalid is the attempt to condition the Klan's exercise of its rights of freedom of speech and assembly upon its nonaffiliation with any group now classified as subversive by the Attorney General. No principle is more clearly established than that these rights may not be interfered with except when their exercise produces a clear and imminent danger of violence in the community. Perhaps the mandate of the Constitution has been best expressed by the now historic words of Mr. Justice Holmes when he said: "When men have realized that time has upset many fighting faiths, they may come to believe even more than they believe the very foundations of their own conduct that the ultimate good desired is better reached by free trade in ideas - that the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market, and that truth is the only ground upon which their wishes safely can be carried out ... we should be eternally vigilant against attempts to check the expression of opinions that we loathe and believe to be fraught with death, unless they so imminently threaten immediate interference with the lawful and pressing purposes of the law that an immediate check is required to save the country."[2]

January 30, 1964

A meeting of the officers and board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held at the home of Robert Cohn on January 30, 1964. The following were present: Ladd, Maloof, Steinmetz, Morris, Cohn, Richardson, Pauley, Glustrom. E. Gadsden had advised that he would be unable to attend due to business out of the state. Other members had not communicated with the board regarding their absences.

It was moved by F. Pauley and seconded by M. Maloof that the minutes of January 8 be approved. Motion was adopted.

President Ladd mentioned that the "Feature Press Service", an ACLU weekly bulletin, would be available to any interested members by contacting him.

E. Ladd reported that Mr. Eugene Gadsden of Savannah had accepted membership on the board to fill the vacancy created by resignation of E. Levitas.

E. Ladd distributed copies of the Wall Street Journal reprint of October 30 regarding the ACLU. 1000 copies had been ordered. Mrs. Moran has them and they will also be used in the membership drive.

All prisoner mail either received locally or from the New York office is being channeled to H. Gibert to be screened for civil liberties aspect of the case. E. Ladd is acknowledging letters sent directly to him and stressing the fact that we are not a legal aid society.

A letter from the New York office had been received outlining procedures regarding membership, and dues. $2.50 is retained from each membership check by national as a service charge, and 60% of the balance is sent to Georgia. Permission is necessary for Special Fund Drives and a special percentage applies in this case. A letter to R. Cohn stated that $65 would be sent each month from national and balanced up at a future date. R. Cohn reported a balance in our account of $162.30 at Bank of Georgia with arrangements for president or treasurer to sign checks.

H. Steinmetz and F. Pauley reported on the Peace Walker situation in Albany. After much discussion, H. Steinmetz moved and J. Glustrom seconded that R. Cohn be asked to prepare a letter to Mayor Davis of Albany as soon as possible containing the consensus of the board's concern for civil liberties involved in the arrest of the Peace Walkers in Albany, using some of the statements in our earlier letter of December 16. This new letter would be cleared with the officers and sent by E. Ladd. Motion was adopted. E. Ladd reported that the New York office had replied favorably to the above December 16 letter and action taken then.

P. Morris moved and M. Maloof seconded that the board request the Committee of Lawyers to investigate the legal aspects of the extent of police power in control of parading in general in Georgia, the confining of peaceful picketing to a certain section of town, when the enforcement of the law becomes invalid, and that this information be made the basis of a pamphlet. Motion was adopted.

H. Steinmetz moved and C.Bacote seconded the motion that the corresponding secretary be instructed to write or phone Senator Leroy Johnson expressing our interest in a legislative bill prohibiting cattle prods on human beings and inquiring whether or not he contemplated introducing such a bill in this session of the Georgia General Assembly. Motion was adopted.

R. Cohn and F. Pauley seconded that attendance at ACLU board meetings be limited to the officers and members of the board unless guests are authorized by the president to attend in connection with business that is to be discussed. Motion was adopted.

F. Pauley suggested that J. Holloway, a professor at Mercer be invited to a board meeting. E. Ladd will so do and possibly invite Macon members. Explore idea also with those in Albany, Augusta, Columbus.

J. Glustrom made a progress report on police academy training programs. He had been unable to contact Jim Wood but had talked to M. Schlactus and will explore the matter further with others. Suggestions made that this might be a project for Mercer members using law students. F. Pauley will explore similar idea with University of Georgia area people.

E. Richardson moved and J. Glustrom seconded that E. Ladd ask Mrs. Emily Binkley to chair the Annual Meeting Committee (suggesting a type of program of having civil liberties problems presented by people from areas throughout Georgia) with F. Pauley and L. Dunbar to work with her, and to submit a report to March board meeting of recommended plans from her committee. Motion was adopted.

E. Richardson read letter for the Election Laws appointed committee directed to House Judiciary Committee, Senate Rules Committee with copies to Governor Sanders, Speaker of the House, President of the Senate (copy attached to these minutes). C. Bacote moved and F. Pauley seconded that the board accept the report of this committee and that the letter be sent by the president as directed. Motion was adopted.

R. Cohn reported from the meeting of the Committee of Lawyers. He stated that it was a good group and eager to work. They discussed the proper function of the committee which was to receive requests from the Board and report recommendations back to the Board. They stated they would assist as asked Attorneys Hollowell and Moore in contempt citation cases from Judge Pye. R. Cohn presented the statement they had formulated on Mayor Allen's rejection of the KKK request for a permit to use Hurt Park. It was moved by M. Maloof and seconded by C. Bacote and adopted by the board that the board accept the recommendation of the Committee of Lawyers and to ask P. Morris to send the above statement with a cover letter to the Mayor, C. Leftwich (Aldermanic Parks Committee), with copies to H. Bowden, Vice-Mayor Massell, and the press.

R. Cohn reported that information had been received that the National ACLU would pay court costs of a case providing the lawyer is serving on a free basis. It was stated that the Committee of Lawyers should volunteer advice to the board as to what cases ACLU should be involved in. M. Maloof felt that if the Hurt Park case gets to the State Supreme Court, the ACLU should file a brief.

Next board meeting will be on March 5, place to be accounced later.

Respectfully submitted,

Eleanor Richardson

March 5, 1964

A meeting of the officers and board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held at the home of Edward Ladd on March 5, 1964. The following were present: Ladd, Cohn, Bullard, Morris, Dunbar, Pauley, Richardson, and Mrs. Neil Moran as Membership Chairman. The following were unable to attend: Glustrom, Gadsden, Hollowell, Robin.

A correction was made to the January 30th minutes to the effect that Miss Bullard had notified us that she could not be present. With this correction, Morris moved and Bullard seconded that the January 30th minutes be approved as presented.

E. Ladd read a letter of resignation from the Board from F. Robin due to pressure of prior commitments. It was decided to wait until the April annual meeting to fill this vacancy.

E. Ladd made following reports:

1. That the statement of position regarding the use of Hurt Park by the Georgia Ku Klux Klan had been sent and read some of the communications that had been received in regard to this action.

2. That a letter had been sent regarding voter registration procedures as proposed in the new Georgia election code to the Senate Rules Committee, the House Judiciary committee with copies to Governor, Speaker of the House, and President of the Senate. No answers received.

3. That Emily Binkley had been contacted to chair the April annual meeting committee. E. Ladd thought she would if held latter part of April. Decision was made to leave it to E. Ladd and E. Binkley to set date and use suggestions in January 30th minutes regarding program.

4. That a letter was sent to the mayor of Albany regarding the Peace Walkers in that community. No answer received.

5. That Mrs. Morris had phoned Senator L. Johnson regarding a possible bill he might present to legislature regarding the prohibition of the use of cattle prods. He was not at home, left message, no such bill introduced that we knew of.

6. That National Board had issued an invitation to Mr. King to serve on the national ACLU Board but that Mr. King had declined. We shall consider a nomination at a later date.

7. That H. Gibert had been given a pamphlet published by ACLU regarding parading, etc. which E. Ladd had picked up in New York.

R. Cohn reported for the meeting which the Committee of Lawyers held. They will file a ACLU friend of the court case if D. Hollowell is held in contempt. An effort was made to interest the Atlanta Bar and Georgia Bar Associations in this move. R. Cohn also reported that several areas of legal research had been accepted by committee members: the authority of Judge Moore to reassign cases; the investigation of the possibility of a federal court suit in connection with present cases in the local court; research and preparation of a memorandum concerning parading (see minutes of January 30th). H. Gibert will screen all prisoner mail for civil liberties issues involved and if any, will assign to committee members.

Dunbar moved and Cohn seconded that the secretary draw lots for the term of office each director would serve in order to conform with the By-laws. The following terms were drawn:(after motion was passed)

1 year, expiring, April, 1964 Glustrom, Stanford, Robin, Pauley

2 years, expiring April, 1965 Gadsden (filled a vacancy and vacancy then to be filled for the unexpired term by the membership), Bacote, Steinmetz

3 years, expiring April, 1966 Bullard, Dunbar, Maloof

Dunbar moved and Richardson seconded that the following be asked to serve on the Nominating Committee; Marion Glustrom, Chairman; Leonard Haas, Loretta Chappell with Pauley and Bacote from the Board. Motion passed.

Pauley moved and Richardson seconded that up to 14 positions be filled at this time, making 8 for three years at April, 1964 meeting and the unexpired term of one director. Motion passed.

Mrs. Morris was to write the members of the nominating committee asking them to serve.

Mrs. Moran reported on membership committee work and plans. 23 new ones since December and approximately 237 members now. She needs clarification re "unshared members" and will phone New York. She plans a welcome letter to new members with a yellow invitation sheet, and another enclosure. Richardson moved, Dunbar seconded, and it was passed that this be done. A mailing to prospective members was authorized using 1000 names on Georgia Council on Human Relations list and first 100 lawyers in Atlanta phone book. Moran to decide on enclosures. Richardson will bring "President's memo" up to date for possible use by Moran.

Richardson will contact suggested people to handle Newsletter.

Cohn moved and Bullard seconded that we write Atlanta Public Library for permission to hold our April board meeting there any night at 7 P.M. week of April 6th. Richardson will do-motion was passed.

Dunbar moved and Cohn seconded that the matter of the National Legislative Action Committee be postponed indefinitely. Motion passed.

Meeting adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,

Eleanor Richardson

October 27, 1964

The October board meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held October 27 at the home of John Glustrom. The following members were present: Glustrom, Cohn, Pauley, Bacote, Broiles, Stanford, Morris, Ladd, Steinmetz, Richardson, with committee chairmen Moran and Barnum and with Mr. Charles Morgan as guest. Members Boaz and Dunbar had phoned regrets as well as chairman Gibert.

With the insertion of the words "teaching about" before the word communism in the third paragraph of the September minutes, the minutes were approved, on motion of J. Glustrom, seconded by C. Bacote.

Mr. Charles Morgan was introduced and spoke briefly of his role in the Southeastern Regional Office of the ACLU and the needs he saw for a large membership and recruitment of lawyers in Georgia to take cases elsewhere in the South.

C. Moran reported on her meeting with Gordon Haskell when he was in Atlanta for a day and also on the 1965 Expansion Fund for membership and contributions (we now have 101 members outside Atlanta). The Newsletter will be used for an appeal for the expansion of contributions.

After much discussion on the need for stated goals for the Georgia affiliate, F. Pauley moved and R. Cohn Seconded that the Glustrom-Richardson motion in the September 16th minutes authorizing the sub-committees for action and study be made the basis of a broad statement of goals for the Georgia affiliate and that the statement be approved by the officers and used in the Newsletter. Motion passed unanimously.

Mr. Morgan stated that his office would provide labor for the Newsletter production through December, billing ACLU for the paper and stamps only. R. Cohn reported over $600 in the treasury.

After lengthy discussion, D. Broiles moved and R. Cohn seconded that the policy passed in the September 16th board meeting regarding submission of material to be used in the Newsletter to the institution or individual charged be applicable only where there is a question of libel and that the lawyers' committee shall decide whether or not to use the policy as stated in the September 16th minutes. Motion was carried 7-2.

D. Broiles moved and H. Steinmetz seconded that the lawyers' committee investigate the Loyalty Oath used in the University System of Georgia. Motion carried.

J. Glustrom moved and E. Richardson seconded that Professor Elizabeth Stack be sent a note of thanks from the Board for answering the questionnaire on "Teaching About Communism in the Schools." Motion carried.

It was requested that copies of correspondence dealing with matters of interest be sent to B. Barnum.

J. Glustrom moved and C. Bacote seconded that a cover letter and the entire statement made by a group of 50 lawyers from both political parties on October 12th regarding the attacks on the courts made during the political campaign be sent to the four daily Atlanta newspapers. Motion passed. R. Cohn would handle this.

It was agreed that an open membership meeting with Mr. Charles Morgan as the speaker be held on Friday, December 4th with F. Pauley, C. Moran, M. Glustrom to make arrangements with a top price of $75.00 for expenses. C. Morgan, F. Pauley and L. Dunbar were asked to work on a list of key members of the press and selected persons to be invited to a function prior to the meeting proper.

December 1 will be next board meeting at home of B. Barnum, 2308 Springside Lane, Decatur.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGIA CIVIL LIBERTIES

No. 2 November, 1964

New ACLU Impetus in the South

The ACLU of Georgia faces a variety of challenging tasks, according to Charles Morgan, director of the new southern regional office of ACLU in Atlanta. From these varied tasks Mr. Morgan pinpointed four major areas which he saw as being of first importance.

"First," he said, "we should assure the growth of the chapter as an active, vigorous, self-sustaining organization. Second, we must appeal to the chapter's legal talent to be prepared to offer assistance throughout the entire South. Third, a corps of local volunteers must be recruited to assist the office typing, mimeographing, etc. And, finally, the membership in general can initiate or stimulate action on a broad scale in general society."

Mr. Morgan feels that it is of primary importance that the existence of the ACLU of Georgia should be publicized as much as possible. "Suppose an out-of-state citizen (or, for that matter, a Georgia resident) finds himself in need of ACLU assistance," he asked, "where would he appeal? This may seem a trivial matter he stated, "but it can be of crucial importance." He feels a communication center would be extremely useful.

> Come and meet Mr. Morgan. Come and meet your fellow ACLU members. Attend the general membership meeting on Friday, December 4, at 8:00 p.m. in Room 1015 of the Biltmore Hotel, W. Peachtree at Fifth. Bring your friends -- the ACLU of Georgia wants to grow.

"Furthermore," he added, "our state organization is in an excellent position to furnish speakers who are prepared to go anywhere in the South and talk on a variety of civil liberties subjects -- police practices, peaceful picketing, reapportionment of legislatures, school prayer, loyalty oaths, and speaker bans (University of Georgia!) to mention just a few."

"Due to a system of largely one religion, and one political party, the South has been generally devoid of civil liberties and much work remains to be done although some improvement is taking place currently."

"There is another area in which Georgia ACLU members can become active," Morgan said. "They can promote or even propose legislation in our fields of interest and otherwise exercise influence to further the safeguarding of civil rights and civil liberties. One example might be ot apply pressure to assure more widespread application of the system of self-signed bail."

Mr. Morgan, while stressing the independence of the Georgia ACLU, is willing to offer his assistance in anyway he can. He is, however, limited by the demands on his time since he must serve the needs of thirteen states. He considers it of prime importance to help establish independent affiliates in each of these states where only a few now exist.

A large scale educational effort to make the general public aware of ACLU's existence and its functions, throughout the southern region, is one of his first areas of concentration.

Report of the Lawyers' Committee

The Lawyers' Committee participated in the brief to the Fifth Circuit in the case of Joni Rabinowitz, charged with perjury for participating in racial disturbances this past summer.

The ACLU took the position that the defendant was entitled to waive a jury as a matter of due process. The appeal is pending in the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Legislative Report

Now that the elections are over, Georgians can turn again to face some of our problems temporarily put aside. One of these is the question of how to obtain more equitable representation in the Georgia House of Representatives. The Georgia Legislature is under court order to reapportion its lower house on a predominantly population basis by 1966. After months of delay, waiting for possible action by Congress, a special House Committee on Reapportionment is now planning to hold public hearings in the ten Congressional Districts of the state. In January it will submit its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly. We hope ACLU members will take advantage of this opportunity to speak out, as private citizens, for the recognition of "equal protection" as applied to the equality of the weight of our votes.

Months ago, when our affiliate was being organized, there was some discussion as to whether it should be a statewide group or an Atlanta chapter. It was, of course, decided that it should be the ACLU of Georgia; and we are gratified to say that the wisdome of this plan is continually being born out by our expanding membership throughout the state. Athens, Augusta and Savannah in particular, are adding to our rolls, but we would also like to recognize, and give thanks for, the support of those members from the smaller towns and the rural areas of the state. We hope that we can continue to strengthen the lines of communication among all of Georgia's ACLU members. Please give us your thoughts as to how this might be done.

1965 Approaching

November marks the beginning of the 1965 expansion drive of the National Office of ACLU. One of the many reasons for this intensive effort to increase both membership and income is the establishment of the Southern Regional Office. Another is the hoped-for creation of affiliates in other southern states and the further development of such young ones as ours. Because the Georgia affiliate is still in the process of formulating plans and procedures for the coming year, the Board of Directors has decided not to engage immediately in the pledge program outlined by the National Office. Instead, we will continue to urge you to:

1. Increase your support upon renewal of your membership next January.

2. Help us increase our membership rolls by letting your friends know about ACLU.

In this way you can help our Georgia chapter achieve the goals outlined elsewhere in the Newsletter.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Mr. James Holloway of Macon has resigned from the board of ACLU of Georgia because he has moved from the state. The board has asked Mrs. Frances Pauley to fill this vacancy until the next annual meeting in April, 1965.

Georgia Runner-up

According to the September issue of Civil Liberties, Georgia achieved 121% of its membership income goal for the first part of this year and was surpassed only by Michigan's 127%. In order to remain realistic, however, it should be stated that Michigan's goal was $21,300 as against Georgia's $1,700, the lowest for any area of comparable size. But, if we continue like this for, say, ten years - - - -!

Georgia and the ACLU Biennial Conference

The Georgia delegate to the biennial conference held by the ACLU June 21-24 at the University of Colorado in Boulder, Colorado, reported to the president of ACLU of Georgia on the proceedings. We quote the following from Mr. Hugh Gibert's report.

> The convention dealt with internal and external problems.
> 1. That the ACLU supports the adoption of discovery rules for criminal cases. (This would allow a defendant to know in advance of trial what evidence the prosecution intends to rely upon.)
> 2. That the ACLU consider that a person is entitled to an attorney from the time of his arrest.. (The effect of this would probably be to exclude from evidence any confession extracted prior to the appointment or employment of an attorney.)
> 3. That the ACLU favors either a public defender system or a system of appointed counsel paid with public funds for indigent persons accused of crimes.
> 4. That the ACLU opposes the provision of President Johnson's anti-poverty legislation that would provide public funds to church related grammar and high schools for certain special purposes.
> 5. That the ACLU sympathises with Negro efforts to obtain equal treatment, and each affiliate shall decide what assistance to give.

Some of the sessions that were most interesting and revealing were those dealing with matters of organization, finances and the like. Four ACLU chapters have had particular success and their representatives discussed the methods whereby their success was achieved. The state of Washington was one of these. In addition to the regular dues, they collect money from their membership and others for what they call a sustaining fund. They tell their prospects that they consider that commitment to the principles of the ACLU can be measured in money, and that it should equal or approximate commitment to their churches. Therefore, they ask for annual pledges in the hundreds of dollars. Washington has a population of approximately one-half Georgia's and last year they collected approximately $32,000 as compared to Georgia's $2,000.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Board of ACLU of Georgia has authorized the establishment of seven areas for action and study, and of four internal committees as well.

The seven substantive committees are listed below. Your participation in one or more areas is solicited. Tear off the form at the bottom to indicate your area of interest, and mail it to:

December 1, 1964

The December board meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held December 2 at the home of Mrs. David Barnum. The following members were present: Steinmetz, Morris, Richardson, Ladd, Meyer, with committee chairmen Moran, Barnum, Gibert and Mr. Charles Morgan as guest. Bacote, Glustrom, Boaz, Pauley, Broiles, Bullard had notified regrets.

H. Steinmetz moved and Morris seconded that the minutes of October 27th meeting be approved as distributed. Motion passed.

E. Ladd announced that R. Cohn had resigned as he is moving out of Atlanta and the state and that the Constitution directs the Board to elect an interim treasurer from among the present board members. P. Morris nominated John Glustrom as treasurer. E. Richardson moved that the nominations be closed. John Glustrom was elected treasurer by unanimous vote. P. Morris moved and E. Richardson seconded that the new treasurer be authorized to assume immediately all the necessary duties of the office. Motion passed.

E. Richardson moved and P. Morris seconded that the subject of the appointment of a nominating committee (2 from board, 3 from membership outside the board) be put on the agenda for the January board meeting. Motion passed.

It was announced that the letter and statement made by a group of 50 lawyers on October 12th regarding the attacks on the courts during the political campaign was sent by R. Cohn to the papers. It was only seen in the Journal on November 2nd. There was a letter to the editor shortly afterwards from Alabama disagreeing.

A request had come from National office to have the Georgia affiliate advice on ACLU policy on libel. The following committee had been appointed to work on this: Henry Pratt, chairman, Helen Bullard, Louis Regenstein, Harold Abrams, Henry Bowden.

P. Morris noted that a thank you letter had been received from Mr. C. B. King of Albany for money sent him earlier in the year. She has also received a few questionnaires back from October Newsletter from members indicating their interest.

H. Gibert reporting for the Lawyers' Committee announced that at the request of National, he had filed a brief in the J. Rabinowitz case (see October Newsletter), had secured the removal of a prisoner with T.B. from Milledgeville to Battey State Hospital. The Committee will screen prisoner mail for the type of case which would test the denial of right of council (Gideon vs. Wainwright) in Georgia and possibly one for securing a free record. They are investigating such a one now. It was moved by Steinmetz and seconded by P. Morris that the lawyers' committee should secure the approval of the majority of the board or in case of an emergency, of the officers, before entering into litigation in any specific case. Motion passed. H. Steinmetz moved and E. Richardson seconded that $200 be made available to the Lawyers' Committee for expenses. Motion passed.

H. Steinmetz moved and P. Morris seconded that the President appoint an ad hoc committee to investigate the Loyalty Oath and the Security requirements in the State of Georgia for employment and securing of licenses. Motion passed.

E. Ladd made the following report from the committee on committees which consisted of F. Pauley, L. Dunbar, E. Ladd:

Church and State: Mr. Samuel C. Wexler, Chairman, Savannah; Mr. Richard B. Spicer, Statesboro; Mr. Don Franks, Augusta; Dr. Gordon De Wolfe, Statesboro; Mrs. Edward Mackay, Atlanta.
Academic Freedom: Mr. Jon Johnston, Chairman, Atlanta; Mr. David Broiles, Athens; Mr. George Hayes, Decatur; Dr. E. Graham Roberts, Atlanta; Dr. Richard Hocking, Atlanta; Mr. Henry Pratt, Atlanta.
Implementation of the Civil Rights Act: Mrs. R. N. Parker, Chairman, Norcross; Mr. Hubert B. Ross, Atlanta; Mrs. Edward Vinson, Atlanta; Mr. William George, Forest Park; Mrs. J. C. Neiman, Atlanta; Mr. William Frey, Atlanta; Rev. Martin Buss, Atlanta; Dr. Philip Brachman, Atlanta.
School Desegregation: Dr. Alexander McPhedran, Chairman; Mr. Kai Erikson, Decatur; Mr. John Gould, Atlanta; Mr. David Comer,III, Atlanta; Dr. Raphael Levine, Atlanta; Mr. Leon Eplan, Atlanta.
Police Powers: Dr. Lloyd A. Moll, Chairman, Americus; Dr. David S. Shapiro, Columbus; Mr. Clarence Jordan, Americus Criminal Justic e and Due Process: Mr. Frederick Robin, Atlanta, chairman; Mr. H. Eugene Hall, Atlanta; Miss Loretta Chappell, Conley; Mr. William G. Cornelius, Atlanta; Miss Katherine Akin, Atlanta; Miss Opal Futch, Atlanta.

S. Meyer moved and P. Morris seconded that this report of committee on committees be accepted. Motion passed. Letters will be sent to each of the above.

There will be no reapportionment committee appointed as the subject is regarded as a moot one.

S. Meyer moved and H. Steinmetz seconded that the Board appoint a representative to speak for the ACLU point of view at the public hearing on the reapportionment of the Georgia House in Atlanta on December 4, 1964. Motion passed.

It was decided to inquire among the members present at the December 4th membership meeting concerning their ideas for subject matter at a possible February memmber ship meeting. National had requested a meeting to secure membership views on Capital Punishment and shared time as far as ACLU was concerned. The question of a February meeting will be put on the January board agenda.

E. Richardson was instructed to compile from the minutes a report of attendance of Board members including those who had notifed ahead of time their inability to attend. C. Moran will report to January meeting, members who still have not paid dues or been dropped by National.

The January board meeting will be held Sunday afternoon, January 10th at 3 P.M., place to be announced later.

Respectfully submitted,

MEMORANDUM

TO: Charles Morgan, Jr.
Leslie Dunbar
Wiley A. Branton

FROM: Jean Levine

The Georgia ACLU, as you know, is in the process of organizing committees and manning them.

Last evening the Committee on School Desegregation held its initial meeting for the purpose of organizing and establishing policy.

This committee has requested me, because of my proximity, to request of each of you, a short interview for the purpose of seeking your advice and thoughts. There are, at the moment, only four members on this committee and for their convenience as well as yours they would like to have these three meetings all on the same day. If you can see these four men on January 12, or January 13 would you write your choice of date and hour in the margin of this memo and return to me.

Thank you.

January 10, 1965

The January Board Meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held January 10 at the home of Edward Ladd. The following members were present: Ladd, Morris, Broiles, Dunbar, Glustrom, Hocking, Pauley, with committee chairmen Moran, Johnston, Parker, Pratt, McPhedran, Gibert. Richardson, Bullard and Boaz had notified regrets.

J. Glustrom moved and P. Morris seconded that the minutes of the December 1 Meeting be corrected to change the date on line 2 to read "December 1", and that they then be approved as distributed. Motion carried.

The resignation of Maurice Maloof from the Board was accepted. It was the concensus of the Board to leave the position vacant until the Annual Meeting in April.

The December 4 General Meeting of the ACLU of Georgia was deemed valuable, in spite of the inability, due to flying conditions, of Charles Morgan to be present. Members of the Board who were present are urged to pay their own expenses at the rate of $1.00 per drink, and to send their remittance to the treasurer, John Glustrom, 1286 West Peachtree Street, N.W. as soon as possible. F. Pauley moved and D. Broiles seconded that the treasurer be authorized to pay the bill in full. Motion carried.

E. Ladd noted that he had sent letters to various members in response to criticism that the General Meeting was held on a Friday night which is a Jewish holiday.

F. Pauley moved and D. Broiles seconded that the committee who planned the General Meeting be thanked. Motion carried. P. Morris moved and D. Broiles seconded that Frances Pauley, the chairman, be especially thanked. Motion carried..

C. Moran, Membership Chairman, was authorized to obtain copies of the new "What is the ACLU?" and the pamphlet on the Civil Rights Act.

John Glustrom, treasurer, is authorized to investigate and report on the financial needs of the ACLU of Georgia.

L. Dunbar moved and J. Glustrom seconded that the Board instruct the Chairman to appoint a Nominating Committee to prepare a slate of officers and Board Members to be presented at the Annual Meeting. Motion carried.

H. Gibert, Chairman of the Lawyers Committee, reported that a sub-committee studying the state loyalty oath believes it can easily be declared unconstitutional.

A discussion was held concerning the role and relationship to the Board of the new standing committees, namely, should the Board or the committee itself determine the direction and emphasis of the committee's work. Mrs. Parker, Chairman of the Implementation of the Civil Rights Act Committee requested clarification of the work of this committee. It was suggested that one area of concern should be to be alert to civil liberties threats resulting from the enforcement of the Act.

Mr. Johnston, of the Academic Freedom Committee, reported that his group felt that the Loyalty Oath was of prime importance and should be dealt with first.

Mr. Pratt, of the Ad-Hoc Committee on ACLU Libel Policy, reported on the work of his group. The Board will consider the statement of this committee which will be sent to National at its next meeting.

E. Ladd was requested to instruct committee chairmen concerning board policy and other information at the request of the committees.

The February Board Meeting will be held on February 8th at 8:00 P.M. at the home of John Glustrom.

Respectfully submitted,

Patsy Morris, for E. Richardson

The February Board Meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held at the home of John Glustrom on February 8th. The following members were excused: Branch, Broiles, Hocking, Morris, Richardson. Committee members Mrs. Glustrom, Dr. Goldstein, and Dr. Pratt were present.

The minutes of the January 10th board meeting were approved.

The report of the nominating committee (copy attached to Secretary's minutes) was presented for information purposes.

Treasurer John Glustrom presented the following budget which was approved for next fiscal year (until February 1966).

Expenditures
Newsletter, eight issues at $25.00 ---------	$200.00
Office supplies	150.00
Postage (to 1000)	400.00
Travel in state	150.00
Telephone	100.00
Possible litigation	700.00
Miscellaneous	100.00
	$1800.00
Income
On hand	$1000.00
Per annum, from National	1200.00
	$2200.00	estimated income

Mr. Glustrom presented his request to Charles Morgan for a national grant, in the amount of $5000, to the Georgia affiliate to permit an educational campaign, sociological and legal research, more legal activity, and partial employment of a staff person or persons.

Cognizance was taken of ACLU growth in neighboring states.

Dr. Pratt's report of his committee's study of the ACLU libel policy was accepted with thanks. It will be sent to national office before due date of February 15th. (Please correct your copy on page 1, 15th line up from bottom: change "dissenting" to concurring.) Dr. Pratt agreed to formulate a summary for the next Georgia Newsletter (see copy attached to Secretary's minutes).

The Board agreed to ask the Lawyers Committee to proceed as advised by Mr. Charles Morgan in the case involving adoption of a young Korean orphan.

Discussion of the annual meeting in APRIL ended in consensus that the President would ask all chairmen of committees to be prepared to report on the concerns of the committees, and that Mrs. Glustrom would chairman the arrangements committee.

Note was taken of the unseemly number of absences from board meetings without prior notice given by some board members.

Respectfully submitted,

Harry Steinmetz, Sec.-Pro-tem

Dear Fred:

I hope to initiate a program in the five Deep South States (Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina) to organize affiliates of the American Civil Liberties Union there, and to staff each of these affiliates with an Exeutive Director. It is currently impossible for us to finance such an ambitious undertaking.

What prospects, if any, are there that we might secure the services of an Eleanor Roosevelt intern for each of these affiliates on a one-year, or longer, term basis? The ACLU presently has affiliates in Louisiana and Georgia. Recently an Alabama affiliate was formed. Affiliates do not existsin Mississippi or South Carolina and there is no indication that any can be formed there.

You are familiar with the ACLU and the work that it does. The trainees need not be attorneys, although that would be helpful. Theymmust have a broad scale interest in and dedication to the preservation of rights guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and the Due Process and Equal Protection clauses of the Fouttenth Amendment.

Since the problem of race is at the core of civil liberties problems in the South, their work would be interesting, sometimes controversial, and fruitful.

I would appreciate your letting me have your thoughts about this at your earliest convenience. I intend to discuss this further in New York on or about February 12, 1965.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely,

Charles Morgan, Jr.

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

February 11, 1965

MEMORANDUM

To: Free Speech/Association and Due Process Committees

From: Norman Dorsen and Peter Winograd
(Hays Civil Liberties Program)

Re: Position Paper on Free Press and Fair Trial

This memorandum attempts to put in comparatively short compass the considerations underlying the continuing conflict between the claims of an unfettered press and those of criminal defendants who may be prejudiced by information reported to the public that interferes with their fair trial. Both these values are of constitutional dimension but neither can be absolutely protected except at the cost of the other. Accordingly, many responsible suggestions have been put forward in an attempt to reconcile these goals. The memorandum makes liberal use of these ideas, but because of Dean Erwin Griswold's eminence, we attach his recent statement on the issue for special consideration in the formulation of Union policy.

The free press-fair trial problem requires consideration of two separate though related questions: (1) whether the scope currently given the press under the First Amendment has impinged upon the fair administration of criminal justice and, if so, what steps should be advocated to protect the Sixth Amendment guarantee of a fair trial; (2) whether the introduction of television cameras into criminal courts can be justified as an extension of press freedom. These issues, long under examination by the ACLU, have received increased public attention since the recent events in Dallas. This memorandum is concerned exclusively with the first of these questions.

Our survey of the problem leads to the tentative conclusion that, despite the preferred constitutional status of freedom of press, some action is necessary to cope with a serious and apparently increasing problem that threatens to vitiate the possibility of a fair trial in large numbers of cases. A carefully tailored statute might be the best solution, although there are obvious political and other problems involved in achieving a legislative consensus. In the absence of legislation, voluntary action by law enforcement agencies and bar associations, enforced through meaningful sanctions, could result in an amelioration of the present unsatisfactory situation.

I. BACKGROUND OF THE PROBLEM

Any potential interference with press coverage of trials or other public events must take account of the well-established constitutional protection accorded all media of communication. The reasons for this preferred status of the American press were carefully explained by the Supreme Court in Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 101-02 (1940):

> The freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the Constitution embraces at least the liberty to discuss publicly and truthfully all matters of public concern without previous restraint or fear of subsequent punishment. The exigencies of the colonial period and the efforts to secure freedom from oppressive administration developed a broadened conception of these liberties as adequate to supply the public need for information and education with respect to the significant issues of the times.  Freedom of discussion, if it would fulfill its historic function in this nation, must embrace all issues about which information is needed or appropriate to enable the members of society to cope with the exigencies of their period.

In accordance with these principles, which of course have been at the heart of the philosophy animating the activities of the ACLU, the Union has been extremely reluctant to approve or countenance any interference of any character in freedom of expression.

Apart from a few, well-know exceptions, mostly in the realm of internal security, the Supreme Court has invalidated attempts to curb the press. Accordingly, judicial approval of effective sanctions has been rare. As the Court said in Bridges v. California, 314 U.S. 252, 265 (1941), "the only conclusion supported by [the history of the contempt power] is that the unqualified prohibitions laid down by the framers were intended to give to liberty of the press, as to the other liberties, the broadest scope that could be countenanced in an orderly society." See also Pennekamp v. Florida, 328 U.S. 331 (1946); Wood v. Georgia, 370 U.S. 375 (1962).

As a result, newsmen have been free to report whatever criminal items they are able to obtain and which might be of interest to readers. While the press has not been wholly undisciplined, its representatives having cooperated on occasion with police and other authorities to release only limited information or even to maintain silence on pending investigations, the general trend has been otherwise. Misleading headlines, accounts of "confessions" which are never introduced at trial, one-sided leaks from the prosecutor's office -- all these are common fare in the better papers as well as in the tabloids. It has thus become difficult to assure that criminal cases will be heard by jurors who are in fact unbiased.

Existing procedures have, on the whole, proved incapable of curing this problem. The voir dire examination is often relied upon to keep from the jury box individuals who have already formed opinions about the case at hand. In practice, however, this has not been an effective screen. Simply showing that a juror has read certain prejudicial material does not necessarily disqualify him; the courts seem to require proof that bias actually exists. In some instances, admittedly prejudiced jurors have been found acceptable on the basis of their self-claimed ability to grant the defendant a presumption of innocence. (Stern, 14 Syracuse L. Rev. 450, 460). The ease with which persons are willing to assert impartiality in order to qualify to sit in judgment raises serious doubts regarding the validity of the test being used.

Where so great a prejudice has been created by pretrial publicity as to make a fair hearing impossible, a change of venue may be permitted. Such motions are rarely granted, however, for it is most difficult to establish that a satisfactory panel cannot be obtained. Furthermore, where the case is of national concern, a mere change of location may not have any practical value. In such a situation, a continuance might be sought, postponing trial until the publicity and attendant emotions subside. Should the defendant not be bailable, however, this possibility becomes unrealistic. In any event, publicity will likely resume in advance of the delayed trial, thereby eliminating whatever benefit had been anticipated. Much the same criticism can be raised with regard to the usefulness of new trials as a cure for unfair proceedings. And, finally, to claim that a judge's instructions may overcome press-induced prejudice is tantamount to assuming that "with one wave of his verbal wand, the judge is to eclipse the clamor of outraged sentiment and the knowledge of facts never received in evidence." (Goldfarb, 36 N.Y.U.L. Rev. at 822).

It is this state of affairs that has led the ACLU (and other groups) to grapple with the difficult problem of reconciling the apparent need to impose some restraints with the desire to maintain the First Amendment guarantee of a free press.

II. ACLU HISTORY

A. On October 20, 1958, in response to a request by the Colorado branch for advice, the Board of Directors recommended issuance of a strong statement "admonishing against the release of prejudicial information by public officials and cautioning the mass media to exercise greater self-restraint in publicizing cases prior to trial." It was felt that the primary responsibility was that of the authorities rather than the press. The Board stressed, however, that bench, bar, and press should be encouraged to cooperate to formulate acceptable standards for reporting criminal and/or trial-related news, and that all bar associations should take steps "towards persuading the appropriate judicial body to adopt reasonable rules to prevent prejudicial information from being placed in circulation."

B. In a news release dated December 6, 1963, prompted by the aftermath of the Kennedy assassination, the Union stressed that all parties -- press, prosecutors, and bar alike -- must impose some degree of self-restraint where criminal matters are concerned. While it was conceded that the right of an accused to a fair trial conflicts to some extent with the right of a free press, the ACLU position was that paramount interest must be focused on an accused's right to a fair trial. "Without an abiding concern for the preservation of an impartial atmosphere in criminal prosecutions, the deterioration of fairness in criminal prosecutions is inevitable. ...The news media must themselves accept their share of the responsibility to assure fair trial by curbing their pressure on police and prosecuting officials to publicize the case."

C. On February 4, 1964, in a letter to the Attorney General, John de J. Pemberton expressed the ACLU's objection to a statement in which J. Edgar Hoover was reported by the New York Times as having revealed the prior arrest records of defendants in the Frank Sinatra, Jr. kidnap case. The Union's executive director asked that all Department of Justice personnel be instructed to "cease making public statements that can seriously endanger the basis of a fair trial under our democratic system."

D. In an address to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House on March 20, 1964, Melvin Wulf, speaking for himself and not for the ACLU, expressed the belief that the requirements of due process could be safeguarded only if the disclosure or publication of any information bearing on a criminal charge, beyond release of the minimum data necessary to identify the accused and details of the formal complaint, is prohibited. He noted that exposure of jurors to pre-trial publicity will have an unavoidable effect on ultimate deliberations, and that objectivity, if not made impossible, will at least become more difficult to maintain. Television and press coverage of a criminal being taken into custody, of the police discussing their case, and of evidence which may eventually be excluded by the court leaves, in his opinion, an indelible mark on the prospective juror, who cannot simply forget what he has read or seen.

E. In a memorandum of November 6, 1964, Alan Reitman, ACLU associate director, noted that he, Wulf, and Charles Morgan all agreed that the ABA's proposed canon of ethics relating to extra-judicial statements by prosecuting and defense attorneys was insufficient, since it did not prevent the police from commenting to the press, and defense counsel, in turn, would be hampered in representing the client's best interest in making a rebuttal to the police statement. John Pemberton later added that the proposed canon not only failed to deal adequately with the problem but, more important, that it would actually impose an affirmative disadvantage on the defense.

F. On December 21, 1964, the Union's Philadelphia branch supported "in principle" guidelines proposed by the Philadelphia Bar Association respecting the release and publication of information in connection with criminal proceedings. In effect, the ACLU placed primary responsibility on the police and district attorney, rather than on the news media, for preventing divulgence which would later preclude a fair trial. At the same time, however, the Union agreed that the news media themselves should refrain from publishing, during trial, "information which has not been introduced into evidence and which may affect the fairness of the trial."

III. THE ARGUMENTS

A. For the press

1. Proponents of continued press freedom in the area of crime reporting stress the fact that not only the Federal Constitution, but also every state constitution provides specifically for freedom of speech and of the press. These fundamental rights, they claim, are given priority in our scheme of things because the absence of secrecy is the best guarantee of fair play, while the suppression of news will have exactly the opposite effect. (Letter from William B. Dickinson to Theodore Voorhees in The Legal Intelligencer, 12/28/64; NYU transcript, p. 39). It has often been noted that one of the first steps away from democratic government in the past has been the censoring, and eventual muzzling, of the press. Many believe that wide publicity is the most effective -- if not the only -- way of discouraging secret police detention, interrogation, and brutality.

2. Supplementing the rights of the press is the alleged right of the public to know. This, in turn, would place upon the news media a duty to report anything of current interest and, supposedly, should not be curtailed to protect suspects and defendants in criminal cases. It thus might be claimed that a simple report noting the act committed and naming the individual held by the police in situations arousing general concern, such as the Wylie-Hoffert murders, would be insufficient and therefore unacceptable to the public. Given the claimed obligation of the press, an argument can be made that the facts developed during the course of investigation should be released and publicized. At least one commentator (E. Z. Dimitman, reported in The Legal Intelligencer, 9/14/64, p. 9) has applied such reasoning to justify the media treatment of Lee Harvey Oswald and Jack Ruby. In this regard, it has also been suggested that, if the press is prevented from openly reporting details of a case, gossip and rumor might take hold and do considerable damage in an emotionally charged atmosphere. (William E. Monroe, Jr., in Res Ipsa Loquitur, Summer 1964, p. 11).

3. It has been argued by some that the actual effect of pre-trial publicity remains unknown -- that no empirical data is available to support the conclusion that extensive press coverage destroys the triers' ability to decide a case fairly. Since jurors are not observed during the process of deliberation, and since the relevant psychological and perhaps sociological factors have never been examined analytically, there is very little ground on which to assert that a causal relationship exists between publicity and juror prejudice. (Goldfarb, 36 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 810, 835).

4. Even if it is granted that publicity does have some effect on the jury's objectivity, the real significance of this has been questioned. Mr. E. Z. Dimitman, assistant to the publisher of The Philadelphia Inquirer, recently cited facts indicating that only eight per cent of criminal cases have jury trials, and most of these are not covered by the press. Philadelphia city editors have estimated that only ten to fifteen cases per year receive coverage other than a routine announcement of the trial's opening and later, of the verdict. Furthermore, there is always a delay of several months between the date of indictment and the opening of a trial; since prejudicial publicity will usually be generated at the time of arrest, it will not likely be remembered when the suspect finally becomes a defendant and a jury considers his case. (The Legal Intelligencer, 9/14/64, p. 9).

5. Finally, it has been suggested that, given the apparent inability of law enforcement resources to cope with the rapidly increasing crime rate, it would be unwise to place road blocks in the way of complete reporting of information regarding criminals and their activities. Such coverage should awaken the public to the present serious situation and should also compel officials to take appropriate corrective measures. (Statement of Chief Justice John C. Bell, Jr., The Legal Intelligencer, 12/29/64).

B. For the imposition of restraints

1. It has been argued that the First Amendment guarantee of a free press was never intended to prevent an accused from receiving a fair trial. The constitutional protection of a defendant is frequently interpreted as an unqualified right -- one to which the press must yield when any indication of conflict appears. (Theodore Voorhees, in The Legal Intelligencer, 9/14/64, p. 9). It is claimed, in this regard, that unrestrained action by the news media will impinge upon, if not make impossible, the proper administration of justice. Thus, the State has the burden in all cases of establishing guilt in a courtroom and according to prescribed rules of evidence; the latter cannot be effectively applied, however, when jurors are exposed in advance to evidence unsworn to and uncross-examined. To state that the passage of time alone will erase memories is to put faith in what has been termed unmitigated fiction; detailed presentations by the prosecution and defense counsel will, if nothing else, bring to mind much of what appeared earlier in the press and what might well be inadmissible at trial. A clear and present danger to fair trial does, therefore, appear to exist. (Hon. Abraham N. Geller, NYU transcript, pp. 7-10).

2. The validity of the right to know, upon which many of the points raised by the press are based, has recently been questioned. Anthony Lewis has advanced the thought that there is no such right -- that freedom of the press is freedom to publish, not a compulsion for everyone to tell all to the press for immediate transmittal to the public. (New York Times Magazine, 10/18/64, at 94.) Furthermore, although editors often cite the public interest in being kept posted as justification for their continued attempts to obtain information, they would undoubtedly be shocked if required to publish a particular item because the public had a "right" to know. Indeed, newspapermen prize what might be considered their privilege to determine what is and what is not to be published, and considerable difficulty is encountered when one tries to square this with the "right to know" theory. It has also been suggested that the latter is not compatible with the Fifth Amendment -- that if there were such an absolute right to know, an individual could be compelled to speak even though he preferred to remain silent. (Letter to the editor, The Legal Intelligencer, no date).

3. To advocate that restrictions be imposed on the news media is not to maintain that law enforcement officials should be allowed to function without public scrutiny. Most commentators have been careful to distinguish between editorials and criticisms, which should be given complete First Amendment protection, and the reporting of criminal records, confessions, and similar "judicial" facts. (Goldfarb, New Republic, 2/29/64, p. 14). That the press must remain free to comment on police procedures and efficiency, the work of the courts, and matters in litigation, is generally accepted and may be accomplished without sacrificing the objectivity of jurors.

Satisfactory resolution of the problem at hand is made particularly difficult by the strong constitutional precedents supporting both positions. Yet, a weighing of the arguments advanced does suggest the conclusion that some remedial action is essential. The guarantees embodied in the Bill of Rights were clearly intended to be read in light of each other; at present, however, the leeway granted the press under the First Amendment has on several occasions served to obliterate any possibility of preserving a defendant's right to an impartial consideration of his case.

IV. POSSIBLE SOLUTIONS

A. Expansion of the contempt power

Considerable attention has recently been focused on the British experience in regulating press coverage of crimes and resulting criminal actions through liberal employment of the contempt sanction. Adoption of the English practice without some modification would be impractical, however, for there is obvious danger in arming the courts with broad power in this sensitive area. It is also quite evident that there would be a substantial constitutional barrier to such an approach. The British courts have successfully kept the "streams of justice" pure by issuing citations for any publication -- whether distributed before, during, or even after trial -- which might inhibit proper administration of the law. In fact, the stream of justice doctrine has been expanded to such an extent that one could now question whether the British press is actually free with respect to crime reporting. (Goldfarb, New Republic, 2/29/64, at p. 12).

The December statement of the Philadelphia ACLU's board of directors indicates that the Union would oppose any such sweeping application of the contempt weapon. While approving in principle the guidelines proposed by the Philadelphia Bar Association, the ACLU expressed its dissatisfaction with those portions of the report which would restrain the press and defense counsel from criticizing the courts and the administration of justice after conclusion of trial. At this point, when a verdict has been rendered, a strong argument can be made that any slight benefit to be gained from continued restrictions on news media will be overshadowed by the general policy considerations supporting press freedom. This, of course, would extend to protect the dissenting views and reasons advanced by those who might claim that a miscarriage of justice had occurred.

A lenient application of the contempt sanction has recently been advocated by both a Pennsylvania jurist (see Univ. of Mo. Freedom of Information Digest clipping) and a member of the bar (Thomas D. McBride, in The Legal Intelligencer, 11/9/64). They suggest that, where an anticipatory trial by newspapers has occurred, a continuance should be granted, the reasons therefor and the offending publicity placed in the record, a finding of imminent danger to the administration of justice made and a certified copy sent to each of the mass media involved. Should there be a repetition when the case reappears for trial, the publisher would then be summarily charged with contempt. The inconvenience entailed in a continuance and the resulting evidence problems are serious drawbacks to this proposal, as would be the fact that the originial public brainwashing might well prove insurmountable, even at a later date.

B. Voluntary promulgation by the press, bar, and police of a code of professional conduct.

It is quite apparent that the greatest source of harmful information stems from the police, press and prosecutor. At any time, one need only scan a newspaper to find several crime reports preceded by the words "according to police...." This flow of information could be efficiently shut off by enforcement within the police department of a rule preventing the release of prejudicial matter to the press. (Mortimer Todal, NYU transcript, p. 30). Likewise, attorneys, through their bar associations, might agree not to discuss, in advance of or during trials, certain aspects of criminal cases. Thus, in the Massachusetts Guide for the Bar and News Media, attorneys are warned to avoid, among other things, making statements as to innocence or guilt during this period, discussing admissions or "confessions" obtained from the accused, and issuing statements as to what will be proved or who will be called as witnesses. Relevant limitations are also established for the press. With such a code in effect and ratified by key groups of attorneys, broadcasters, and newspaper editors, one might expect to note some marked change in the Bay State. To date, however, the Guide remains largely unimplemented.

The harsh fact is that, until these codes are supported by meaningful sactions -- e.g. possible disbarment in the case of attorneys and disciplinary action against offending police -- there will not be any stimulus to prod compliance. Indeed, so long as sanctions are lacking, there is every reason for the interested parties not to comply. Heavy newspaper crime coverage provides the police with a source of public recognition and facilitates convictions; for the prosecutor, it provides publicity to help advance a professional or political career. The press also benefits, since concentration on criminal reports has generally resulted in increased sales. (John Lofton, NYU transcript, p. 36). Thus, there appears to be a natural alliance among prosecution, police, and press -- an alliance which will function against fair trial principles unless and until affirmative action is taken to change this course. Codes, by themselves, probably will be ignored; just as Canon 20 of the American Bar Association Canons of Professional Ethics, which essentially prohibits newspaper publications by a lawyer as to pending or anticipated litigation, has been routinely violated. A similar fate can be expected for the recent policy statement of the Philadelphia Bar, for it too lacks teeth. As a result, for the ACLU to encourage self-restraint and the promulgation of codes will be nugatory unless effective sanctions are part of the package, and, in any event, it is doubtful whether such are possible as against the press.

C. Trial by judge

It has been suggested that the effects of pre-trial publicity could be minimized either by placing in the defendant's sole discretion the right to waive trial by jury or by allowing the court to take a case from the jury when it appears that notoriety, public pressure, or press comment will prevent a panel from impartially reaching a decision. (Goldfarb, 36 N.Y.U.L. Rev. at 831-2). Federal policy in the past, however, has been to forbid waiver, and the Sixth Amendment, of course, would prevent a defendant from being deprived without consent of a trial by his peers. The proposed change rests on an assumption that, since the judge must rule on the admissibility of evidence, he should not, at least consciously, be influenced by prejudicial material which might reach him via the press. In theory, this is wholly logical; one must question, however, just how immune the bench actually is to inflammatory coverage by the news media. Furthermore, and most important, both the philosophy and reasons underlying our traditional guarantee in criminal cases of a trial before jurors rather than judges should be given considerable weight. It is doubtful whether curtailment of this practice could be justified so long as other means, if utilized, would make possible the selection of an unbiased jury.

D. Trial behind closed doors

Since judges have been allowed to clear the courtroom where delicacy and gentility warranted exclusion of spectators, it appears that such action would also be justified if taken to protect the proceedings from sensationalism. It is clear that a defendant may demand an un-public trial; at present, however, the case of People v. Jelke, 308 N.Y. 56, 123 N.E. 2d 769 (1954), will -- in New York and other jurisdictions similarly inclined -- prevent a trial judge from excluding the press and general public on his own motion and over the defendant's objection. Although arguments have been advanced in an attempt to show that this position is unsound (Goldfarb, New Republic, 2/29/64, at 13), the advantages to be gained from a closed proceeding are minimal. In many instances, if not most, the news reports published during trial are not as prejudicial as those which appear immediately after commission of the crime and while police investigation is being conducted. As a result, irreparable damage has often occurred before the courtroom doors can be closed. Circumscription of a defendant's right to a public trial on this ground would thus be difficult to justify.

E. Complete "choking off" of press information sources

If nothing is made available for the press to observe and record, then clearly media interference with a fair trial shoud be effectively eliminated. This would require that records of pending cases, along with police records, be kept secret. In addition, silence would have to be maintained by law enforcement officers, the prosecutor, and defense counsel both before and during trial. There would thus be absolutely no publicity and, in this relative vacuum, a dispassionate, judicious proceeding could be had. (Erwin N. Griswold, Harvard Today, Jan. 1965, pp. 9-13.) Records might be effectively removed from reporters' reach, and police and prosecutor could be prohibited from discussing any aspect of a criminal case by appropriate interdepartmental regulations. Thus, U.S. Attorney for the State of Connecticut, Jon O. Newman, recently ordered his assistants not to talk about prejudicial matters with representatives of the press; when in doubt, they were told to remain silent. Something more would be needed, however, to assure compliance by defense counsel. The clamor almost certain to accompany such steps would make legislative rather than administrative implementation preferable. In addition, it would remain essential to impose some obligation upon the press not to publish inflammatory material which it might inadvertently or otherwise obtain.

F. Regulation by court rule

The New Jersey Supreme Court last fall ordered that policemen, defense lawyers, and prosecutors refrain from issuing potentially prejudicial statements to news media at any time before a verdict has been reached. The court claimed its ruling would be enforced on lawyers through disciplinary powers under the canons of professional ethics, and that improper remarks by policemen should be dealt with by superior officers. Similarly, Dean Griswold has suggested that the ABA set up a high level committee for the purpose of formulating rules in this area and recommending them to courts for adoption; where adequate rule-making power is not available, the substance of the rules would be put into statutory form and enacted by the legislatures. (Harvard Today, 1/65, at p. 12).

1. S. 1802

This bill, introduced by Senator Morse in the last congress, provided that it would be a contempt of court for any Federal employee, defendant, or defense attorney, "to publish information not already properly filed with the court which might affect the outcome of any pending criminal litigation, except evidence that has already been admitted at the trial...;" a minimum penalty of $500 was prescribed for each violation. Under this proposal, an aggrieved defendant would have only to show that the jury had access to inadmissible evidence; the burden would then shift to the prosecution to prove there had been no resulting adverse effect on conduct of the trial. (Cong. Record, p. 21).

S. 1802 would effectively prevent the leaking of information to the press by law enforcement officials and other officers of the court. It would not, however, reach newsmen who are able to secure and publish prejudicial information from police and others who might be undeterred by the statute. To this extent, the Morse Bill appears inadequate, for, by failing to restrict activities of the press, it would leave unchecked the vehicle through which much of the harm has been accomplished. Of additional note is the fact that this proposed law limits the usual authority of the court by providing that any contempt under its provisions be punishable only on motion of a party to the litigation. This potential loophole has been criticized by the Judicial Conference of the United States (33 LW 2324, Dec. 29, 1964), and its elimination would appear advisable.

2. The Meyer proposal

Given ACLU approval of the detailed Philadelphia Bar policy statement, it would be consistent for the Union to support legislation similar to a proposal advanced by New York Supreme Court Justice Bernard Meyer. Applicable to newsmen, broadcasters, lawyers, and others involved in criminal proceedings, such a statute would flatly prohibit disclosure of certain specific facts (e.g. existence of a confession or a prior record) and would make other enumerated practices (interviews with victims of a crime, appeals to racial bias, etc.) violations in the event that they were deemed substantially prejudicial in a particular case. (New York Times Magazine, p. 100). This solution appears to reflect a desire to give enhanced importance to the guarantee of a fair trial while still retaining some leeway for operation of the free press doctrine in crime reporting.

Nominations for 1965 - 1966

The nominating committee which is reporting consisted of: Mr. David Comer III, Mrs. Neil Moran, Mr. Howard Moore, Jr. Mrs. Frances Pauley, and Mrs. M. E. Richardson, Chairman.

Officers:
(All of Atlanta save Secretaries, of Decatur and Savannah, resp.)

Mr. Hugh Gilbert, President
Rev. Samuel Williams, First V. Pres.
Mr. Howard Moore, Jr., Second V. Pres.
Mrs. Leon Goldberg, Recording Secretary
Mrs. Frank Spencer, Corresp. Secretary
Mr. John Glustrom, Treasurer

Board of Directors:

Mr. Don Franks of Augusta, to 1968
Miss Jeannette Hume of Atlanta, to 1967
Dr. Edward T. Ladd of Atlanta, to 1968
Mr. Kieve Landesberg of Atlanta, to 1966
Mrs. Neil Moran of DeKalb Co., to 1968
Dr. H. C. Steinmetz of Atlanta, to 1968

Additional nominations may be made by petition of any two members, provided there is an attached signed statement expressing willingness of nominee to serve if elected, such petition to be filed with secretary (Mrs. Eleanor Richardson, 755 Park Lane, Decatur) not later than a month before the annual meeting, according to Sec. VII of Constitution.

Robert Cohn, Treasurer, Resigns.

Regretfully, the board of ACLU of Georgia accepted the resignation of Robert Cohn, who has accepted a position in Washington as trial examiner with the National Labor Relations Board. Mr. Cohn was one of the prime movers in the formation of the Georgia affiliate.

John Glustrom, a member of the board, has agreed to assume the responsibilities of treasurer until the annual meeting.

Threatening Events in the Legislature

Overlooked by the press and public as they concentrate on other more dramatic happenings at the State Capitol was the passage by the Georgia House of Representatives of one of the so-called "Freedom Amendments" now working their way through state legislatures over the country. If it should be passed by the Senate, Georgia would be added to the growing list of states (approximately 20) petitioning Congress for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution which in effect withdraw federal protection from a specific area of political life.

One of three amendments proposed several years ago by the legislative conference of the Council of State Governments, this particular resolution has been given impetus by state reaction to the recent apportionment rulings of the Supreme Court. In dissatisfaction over the one man-one vote decisions, the state legislatures are resorting to proposals which could establish a series of dangerous precedents by suggesting that jurisdiction over apportionment cases be taken from Federal Courts. Obviously a next step could be to remove Federal jurisdiction from other areas whenever there might be disagreements with decisions on, for example, civil rights or church-state relations. Such a sequence could logically lead to the piecemeal destruction of our traditionally independent judiciary and of the equal protection guarantees of our Constitution.

Not only would this proposed amendment overturn the principles of the Fourteenth Amendment, it would, along with a somewhat similar resolution just passed by both House and Senate, permit the states carte blanche in determining the base of representation in their legislative bodies. This could lead to various forms of discrimination in establishing apportionment and could also actually weaken the Constitutional guarantees of a republican form of government. It is indeed disturbing that in frustration over the ruling concerning their own reapportionment, Georgia's legislators have chosen to support proposals which could only undermine those processes which are so basic to our Constitutional system.

Recent proposals in the Georgia General Assembly regarding, among other matters, sterilization, obscene literature, tax listings (relevant to jury selection), and, of course, apportionment, indicate the need for continuing ACLU attention. In other words, our affiliate needs a legislative watchdog committee. If you are interested in any specific legislation appropriate to ACLU activity, or have time to observe at the Capitol, please contact the Board. Remember that the State Legislature, that often belittled branch of government, is responsible for the body of state criminal and civil law, as well as much of the regulation of court and police procedure. It would seem imperative that our Georgia ACLU affiliate have a committee to keep up with legislation affecting these important areas of concern. If you are desirous of being an active member of ACLU and do not know where your talents fit in, this is an area in which you are needed and can make an invaluable contribution.

Report From the Ad Hoc Committee on Libel to the ACLU

In the Spring of 1964 the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a unanimous decision in the case of New York Times vs. Sullivan which had important implications for freedom of speech as it applies to criticism of public officials.

The case involved a suit brought by L. B. Sullivan of Montgomery, Alabama against four Negro clergymen of that state and against the New York Times for an advertisement which appeared in the Times on March 29, 1960. Sullivan was Montgomery's Commissioner of Public Affairs at the time. Entitled "Heed Their Rising Voices," the advertisement began by stating that "as the whole world knows by now, thousands of Southern Negro students are engaged in widespread non-violent demonstrations in the positive affirmation of the right to live in human dignity as guaranteed in the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights." It went on to charge that "in their efforts to uphold these guarantees, they are being met with an unprecedented wave of terror by those who would deny and negate that document...." Succeeding paragraphs purported to illustrate the "wave of terror" by describing certain alleged events.

Of the ten paragraphs of the text in the advertisement, the third (which alleged in part that Negroes at Alabama State College had been padlocked into their dining hall in an effort to starve them into submission after a demonstration on the steps of the State Capitol) and the sixth (which intimated that the local authorities were implicated in the bombing of the home of Dr. Martin Luther King) were the basis of the libel suit. It was uncontroverted in court that some of the statements contained in the two paragraphs were not accurate descriptions of events which occurred in Montgomery. While Sullivan's name was not mentioned nor was that of the Montgomery police, he nevertheless claimed that the signers of the advertisement had him in mind. The Circuit Court of Montgomery County awarded him $500,000 general damages for injury to his reputation, the full amount claimed, add the Supreme Court of Alabama affirmed.

In an opinion of Mr. Justice Brennan the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the Alabama decision. The Court held that "the Constitution guarantees, we think, a federal rule that prohibits a public official from recovering damages for a defamatory falsehood relating to his official conduct unless he proves that the statement was made with 'actual malice'--that is with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not.... We hold today that the Constitution delimits a State's power to award damages for libel in actions brought by public officials against critics of their official conduct."

In separate concurring opinions Justices Black, Goldberg, and Douglas urged that the Court should have decided the case on broader grounds, namely that the private citizen should have an "absolute, unconditional privilege to criticize official conduct despite the harm which may flow from excesses and abuses." Implicit in their general attitude was a suspicion that Southern juries or judges would have no trouble convincing themselves that "actual malice" was present if this was what was required as a basis for damages: "If individual citizens may be held liable in damages for strong words which a jury finds false and maliciously motivated, there can be little doubt that public and private advocay will be constrained."

Several lawyers in high-level positions in the American Civil Liberties Union shared with the three concurring justices a concern that the Times holding would not adequately protect a citizen accused of libel by a local official in the South. A loose definition of "malice" might allow Southern juries to destroy the cloak of immunity intended by the Court. This position was spelled out in a detailed statement by Professor Samuel Hendel, of the Department of Political Science City College of New York. Hendel voted with concern that there were numerous other cases pending in Southern Courts where local officials were trying to choke off criticism of their behavior through libel suits. A contrary view, spelled out by George Soll, a New York attorney, approved the more limited ground taken by the Court majority. There were other points of difference between Hendel and Soll, but this was the main one.

The ACLU New York office decided that the issue was of such magnitude that the opinions of its various state affiliates should be ascertained and wrote to the affiliates accordingly. In December, 1964 an ad hoc Committee on Libel of the Georgia Civil Liberties Union met to go into the question raised by the Times decision and to make a recommendation to the Georgia Board of Directors. The Committee consisted of Miss Helen Bullard, former administrative assistant to Atlanta's Mayor Hartsfield; Mr. Henry Bowden, Legal Councel of the City of Atlanta and Chairman of the Emory University Board of Trustees; Mr. Louis Regenstein, attorney; Mr. Harold Abrams, attorney; and Dr. Henry J. Pratt, assistant professor of Political Science, Emory University, who served as chairman. The ad hoc Committee brought in a recommendation favoring Mr. George Soll's position. The Committee took the position that public officials might still sue for damages, but only if statements against them are proved to have been false and made with a deliberate and malicious intent. The Georgia Board approved this recommendation at its meeting on February 8 and had notified the national office of its stand.

Speaker Snowbound, Meeting Successful

Snowstorms and heavy fog in the Midwest caused the ACLU of Georgia to hold an unscheduled but successful business meeting on Friday, December 4 in the Biltmore Hotel, Atlanta. Charles Morgan, the director of the southern regional ACLU office, was due to address the meeting but was snowbound in Chicago. His absence provided the opportunity to bring up matters of business with the assembled members.

Some technical aspects of the organization were mentioned by the President, Mr. Edward Ladd. He explained that the Board, at its recent meeting, had approved the establishment of six committees--as enumerated elsewhere in this Newsletter--offering an opportunity to each member of the ACLU of Georgia to become personally involved with at least one of the several aspects of its work. He urged participation and stressed the need to make the Georgia UCLA better known. Its growth during the first year of its existence was indicated by the figures supplied by the Membership Chairman, Mrs. Charlotte Moran. She stated that the initial number of 130 members had increased to 270 with nuclei in Savannah, Athens, and Augusta whereas individual members are widely dispersed over the state.

The next subject under discussion was the federal hearing in Augusta held in December by the Civil Rights Advisory Committee. Several members took the floor on this issue and argued that the ACLU of Georgia ought to be officially represented at this hearing. The president agreed. The Board was invited to contact some member in Augusta for this purpose. Mr. Howard Moore elaborated impressively on the issue indicating the need for special attention to be given, among other subjects, to bail bond and public housing not only on the basis of the recently passed Civil Rights Act but of 1866 and 1875.

A discussion followed about discrimination against Negroes in the formation of juries. Mr. Moore reported on a recent rape trial in which a young Negro was convicted by an all-white jury and subsequently sentenced to ten years in prison, although it was obvious from the details of the case that there was serious question as to his actual guilt.

The lack of liberal leadership in Atlanta and the dispersion of effort over too many organizations was also mentioned. One member expressed concern that crucial decisions about local matters, such as reapportionment of the legislature, were not receiving attention and action from liberal groups.

Several more suggestions were made and questions asked, for example, whether there is any school or other desegregation in DeKalb County. A discussion followed about the possibility of initiating action in school desegregation.

The president summarized the meeting and asked those present to consider what the Georgia ACLU faces and what it is supposed to do. He emphasized once more that every individual member should become active even if he is already overburdened by work in other organizations because the ACLU covers an extensive area that is not covered by any other group. The lively and possibly fruitful meeting adjourned at 10:06 p.m.

Re: Position on Rejection of Advertising

The Committee's policy recommendation on rejection of advertising by communications media was not reached for action at the last Board meeting. In the meantime, two additional points have been raised which the Committee may want to consider at its coming meeting, prior to Board action on the recommendation.

1. The Philadelphia affiliate of ACLU has been concerned with the rejection of advertising by communications media for some time. Its Freedom of Expression Committee has considered this Committee's recommendation of February 17, 1965, and proposed two amendments:

> "The Committee endorsed the formulation of policy recommended by the Free Speech-Association Committee of the national ACLU, with the following two amendments:
> 1. In the last sentence, substitute 'criteria and standards' for 'regulations.' (This would constitute ACLU's recognition that a publication could reject advertising that would not comport with the aesthetic or artistic standards that the medium seeks to maintain.)
> 2. Add a sentence to the effect that media which enjoy a monopoly or quasi-monopoly status, such as common carriers (taxicabs, transit companies) are, by virtue of the franchise conferred upon them by government, under an especial obligation to maintain the 'open' policy, quite apart from any legal or constitutional issue."

2. In 1963, our Radio/TV Committee considered a complaint made by the Committee for Morton Sobell. The Sobell Committee had prepared a documentary film giving its version of the history of the Sobell case. It offered the film free to several TV stations, and even offered to purchase time for running the film. Its requests were refused.

The Radio/TV Committee treated the problem of the barring of the film as one of whether TV stations were exercising reasonable discretion in determining program content. The Committee concluded that, since the Sobell case had been the subject of a great deal of radio and TV discussion in which members of the Sobell Committee had participated, the networks were not exercising unreasonable editorial judgment in refusing air time for Sobell material, particularly in view of the networks' policy of producing their own documentaries. The Committee took no position on the broader issue of propaganda groups having the right to buy time for special pleadings -- other than to suggest the criterion of whether significant issues received adequate coverage on the air.

Jack Pemberton raises the question of whether the Sobell documentary should be considered as an "advertisement" under the proposed policy statement. If so, should there be an obligation on the part of radio and TV stations -- in addition to the current FCC requirement that important segments of opinion be fairly represented by broadcast media -- that stations not refuse to sell air time to groups who want to present their views through films, "documentaries," or other audio-visual materials. Is this any different from seeking to publish a full-page ad in the New York Times criticizing our policy in Viet Nam? Should the proposed statement deal with this problem?

The March Board meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held at the home of E. Ladd on March 29, 1965 ~~with the following members~~ present: Glustrom, Ladd, Richardson, Steinmetz, and the committee chairmen, Gibert, Johnston, Barnum, McPhedran, and Moran in attendance. Regrets were received from Bullard, Hocking, and Morris.

J. Glustrom moved and H. Steinmetz seconded that the minutes of the February Board meeting be approved as distributed. Motion carried.

A letter from National office was read denying our request for a $5000 financial grant. The members of the Georgia Board suggested that Mr. Charles Morgan speak at length at a future board meeting on the activities and relationship of the Southern Regional office and the Georgia affiliate in connection with the above mentioned letter.

It was moved by Richardson and seconded by Steinmetz that the corresponding secretary write Board thanks to C. Moran and J. Johnston for their statements on Selma and reapportionment done for the Georgia affiliate during the month. Motion carried.

J. Johnston reported on his committee work in regard to the Loyalty Oath. It was moved by E. Richardson and seconded by J. Glustrom that the Board approve the action of the Committee on Academic Freedom and the Committee on Lawyers in regard to testing the administrative and statutory loyalty oaths, the security questionnaire (used by the Board of Regents), and approve the payment of costs of filing fee, and as much financial help as possible in costs of appeal. Motion passed.

H. Gibert reported for the Lawyers Committee on the Daniel Hinson right to counsel case. Morris Brown and H. Gibert prepared the brief.

A. McPhedran reported for the School Desegration Committee. J. Glustrom moved and E. Richardson seconded that the Board authorize the Committee on School Desegration at the appropriate time to submit an inquiry to the DeKalb County Board of Education as to what action they are taking pursuant to the compliance certificate action. Motion carried.

It was moved by H. Steinmetz and seconded by J. Glustrom that the Board thank the Nominating Committee. Motion carried.

It was moved by E. Richardson and seconded by J. Glustrom that the Board thank the ACLU Libel policy committee. Motion carried.

It was moved by H. Steinmetz and seconded by J. Glustrom that E. Bondurant be appointed a delegate to the Plenary Board Meeting of ACLU in New York City April 3 and 4. Motion carried.

After discussion of the codification of policies and procedures as presented, it was moved by J. Glustrom and seconded by H. Steinmetz that this codification be adopted (copy attached). Motion carried.

The annual meeting of the ACLU Georgia affiliate will be April 28 at the YWCA with Marion Glustrom as chairman and program consisting of reports from the standing committees.

It was moved by H. Steinmetz and seconded by J. Glustrom that the Board be authorized to refer the Ashton Jones case to the Lawyers Committee for study with authorization to act. Motion carried.

It was decided that H. Steinmetz ask Charles Morgan to investigate the situation of Donna Allen before the Executive Committee of the House Unamerican Activities Committee and possible action.

It was moved by E. Richardson and seconded by H. Steinmetz that J.Glustrom initiate a statement against discrimination in any loan of federal money for President's signature. Motion carried.

Meeting adjourned at 11 P.M.

Respectfully submitted,

Eleanor Richardson

By-Laws of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia

I. Meetings of the Board of Directors

ATTENDANCE. The Chairmen of all standing committees and the Director of the ACLU Southern Regional Office shall be invited to all meetings of the Board of Directors and shall receive copies of the minutes of the meetings.

Other guests may be invited only at the President's or the Board's discretion.

MINUTES. Minutes of Board meetings will in so far as feasible be peproduced and distributed to Board members and others entitled to receive them well in advance of subsequent meetings. (After their approval ten copies are to be sent to the national office.)

II. Standing Committees.

The standing committees shall be as follows:

1. Committee of Lawyers
2. Newsletter Committee
3. Membership Committee
4. C ommittee on Church and State
5. Committee on Academic Freedom
6. Committee on Implementation of the Civil Rights Act
7. Committee on School Desegregation
8. Committee on Police Powers and Exercise of the Same
9. Committee on Due Process and Criminal Justice
10. Legislative Committee

CHAIRMEN. Committee chairmen will be named by the Board or proposed by the respective committees and ratified by the Board.

Members of the organization may join and work with committees of their choice.

PROGRAMS AND ACTIVITIES. Except as provided in these By-Laws, each Committee will - within the general limits of organization policy - formulate its own program and choose the means of work it finds most appropriate.

COMMITTEE OF LAWYERS. This Committee will make recommendations to the Board especially concerning legal matters which it believes involve civil liberties issues, and the Board will in turn make suggestions to the Committee. The Committee will take legal action in regard to such matters in accordance with its judgement when such is approved by or in the name of the Board.

The Committee will screen all prisoner mail received by the organization.

The Committee will also advise the Board and the officers on legal problems.

NEWSLETTER COMMITTEE. This Committee shall publish in the organization's newsletter information and materials transmitted to it by the Board for this purpose and such other materials as it deems appropriate, especially news notes on civil liberties situations throughout Georgia. It will check with established sources for the facts. However, where there is an accusation that an individual or institution has violated civil liberties and a question as to whether the proposed report might be libelous, the Committee shall consult the Committee of Lawyers as to whether or not to invoke the following procedure:

1. The institution or individual accused of violating civil liberties will be given a copy of the charges in such a manner as may be approved, with a request for a confirmation, denial, or explanation.
2. Nothing shall be printed or acted upon until answering material has been received or no answer has been received in a reasonable length of time.

Copies of official correspondence dealing with suitable matters shall be sent to the Newsletter Committee by the Board and the officers.

Ten copies of the newsletter will go to the national office.

III. Public Statements

When circumstances do not permit the summoning of a meeting of the Board, emergency action is authorized by agreement of the President or his designate and two other officers, for implementing policies of the organization.

When the President or the Chairman of any standing committee presents to a public official or the press a personal statement on a civil liberties matter which is consistent with the policies of the organization, he is authorized to identify himself by citing his official connection with the ACLU of Georgia.

IV. Budget and Disbursements

The Board will from time to time adopt a budget for a fixed period of time. The appropriate officers and standing committees are authorized to spend funds allocated in the budget consistently with the organization's policiez.

V. Robert's Rules of Order

Except as otherwise stipulated in the Constitution or the

By-Laws, the ACLU of Georgia will abide by Robert's Rules of Order.

VI. Amendment

These By-Laws may be amended at any Board meeting, provided previous notice has been given that amendments will be proposed.

April 28, 1965
Annual Meeting

The Annual Meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held April 28, 1965 in the first floor lounge of the Y. W. C. A., Atlanta, Georgia, President E. Ladd, presiding.

As part of the President's report of the second year's work, the following points were made:

Four issues of the Newsletter under the direction of Mrs. Barbara Barnum; attendance at a Southern regional meeting of the ACLU at which the feasibility of a regional office was discussed (this later became a reality and the location of same in Atlanta is a great advantage to the Georgia affiliate); a press party in honor of Mr. Charles Morgan was held; public statements have been issued on the abuse of the Judiciary (at election time), reapportionment, Selma; two assignments from National office were undertaken and report submitted on teaching about communism and ACLU policy on libel as far as public officials are concerned. Much time was spent in organizational activities, standing committees were appointed. E. Ladd recommended a tremendous push for membership and increased budget in order to secure an office and paid help and thus be able to have a really statewide organization. Work in every field of civil liberties is waiting to be done and therefore there is something for everyone's taste.

Membership Chairman Charlotte Moran reported a 2/3 increase in membership. We now have 280 members, 190 in the Atlanta metropolitan area. Best means of increase in membership by each member telling and securing friends to join. There will be a visit in May by a National office member and membership will be discussed.

Treasurer J. Glustrom expressed thanks to E. Ladd for his leadership as President. Balance as of 4-28-65, $1217.00.

Hugh Gibert, Chairman, reported for Committee of Lawyers. About 15-20 lawyers have been meeting and specific cases worked on were highlighted by H. Gibert. Mr. E. Bondurant will be the new Chairman of the Lawyers' Committee.

Mr. E. Hall reported for the Criminal Justice and Due Process Committee which has met once and suggested the following areas to investigage: the need to post two separate bonds on a single charge (commitment and trial court); the need for a public defender; possibility of decentralizing Atlanta-precinct police stations; possibility of abuses in probation and parole procedures.

Mr. J. Johnston reported for the Academic Freedom committee. They are working in conjunction with the Lawyers' Committee and the ad hoc committee of the State AAUP concerning the security questionnaire, administrative oath, and statutory oath required by State employees. The committee will meet further to consider other areas, possibly the right of the student to academic freedom.

Dr. A. McPhedran reported for the School Desegregation Committee which has been working chiefly in the DeKalb County school system area.

Mrs. N. Mykel reported for Dr. L. Moll for the Police Powers Committee which asked direction of the board and the Annual meeting in the following areas: limit of police authority; a Georgia Bulletin similar to others which have been done in other states-What to do if you are arrested in Georgia ; followup on instances of alleged police brutality; adequacy of police training; survey of policy pay, methods of recruitment, standards, commendation if a good job being done, work for higher standards and increased pay. Members of the meeting suggested also work on a civilian board of review and to check Southern Regional Council to see what survey material in this area is available there.

The results of the election were as follows:

OFFICERS

Mr. Hugh Gibert, President
Mr. Donald L. Hollowell, First Vice-President
Mr. Howard Moore, Jr., Second Vice-President
Mrs. Leon Goldberg, Recording Secretary
Mrs. Frank Spencer, Corresponding Secretary
Mr. John Glustrom, Treasurer

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Don Franks , expires, 1968
Miss Jeannette Hume, expires, 1967
Dr. Edward T. Ladd, expires 1968
Mr. Kieve Landesberg, expires 1968
Mrs. Neil Moran, expires, 1968
Dr. H. C. Steinmetz, expires, 1968

The new board will fill vacancies caused by resignation of Miss Boaz, expires in 1967, and the newly elected Mr. D. Franks, expires in 1968.

President thanked Marion Glustrom for arrangements for Annual Meeting. The new President H. Gibert spoke briefly on the need for more membership meetings and the need to build membership.

Meeting adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. Marlyn E. Richardson
Secretary

MINUTES OF AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF GEORGIA, MAY 1965

The May Board meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held at the home of H. Gibert on May 31, 1965 with the following members present: Gibert, Glustrom, Goldberg, Broiles, Hocking, Hume, Ladd, Moran, and committee chairmen Bondurant, Barnum, Johnston and McPhedran in attendance, along with C. Morgan, Southeastern Regional Director. Regrets received from Parker, Hollowell, Moore, Branch, Moll, Landesberg and Hall. Guests: Mrs. Broiles and Mr. Callan.

J. Glustrom moved and E. Ladd seconded that the minutes of the March Board meeting be approved as distributed. Motion carried.

Treasurer J. Glustrom reported that the treasury had $1,300 on hand with an expectation, based on projected memberships, of $100 a month for the remainder of the year from National. Moran moved and Hocking seconded that the treasurer's report be adopted. Motion carried.

E. Bondurant, Chairman of Lawyer's Committee, reported that there were from twelve to fifteen new recruits for the Lawyer's Committee. Reported that the status of the Loyalty Oath case was that the Board of Regents refused to request a ruling from the Attorney General on the loyalty oath or to take voluntary action, although some of the members were in sympathy with the position taken by the ACLU and the AAUP. A suit will be filed pending the selection of a litigant. In further negotiations with the AAUP, it was agreed that the two organizations share in financial participation.

The Lawyer's Committee, in cooperation with the State Bar Association, will also investigate the possibility of violation of due process in cases where indigents are not permitted the right to counsel in the state courts. H. Gibert added that the Lawyer's Committee had intervened in the case of Douglas Ashley, a man arrested in Atlanta for murder in Texas. Gibert and Bondurant were unsuccessful in waiving extradition on the grounds of insanity.

H. Gibert reported that a lawyer from Columbus asked ACLU help in defense of a sign painter who writes scurrilous messages on his walls about certain public officials in the city. ACLU will follow the case.

B. Barnum raised the question of whether certain high school students are required to take the Loyalty Oath in special instances. J. Johnston asked that information on this be given to the Academic Freedom Committee.

D. Broiles described the case of a Negro school principal in a small Georgia county who was dismissed without cause. C. Morgan pointed out that firing a man because of racial views can be construed as use of a state agency for racial discrimination. H. Gibert suggested that the man refer his problem to the GTEA and if it is unable to act, the Lawyer's Committee could be contacted.

H. Gibert announced that a hearing will be held this summer by a state committee on Capital Punishment. E. Ladd moved and F. Goldberg seconded that the Chairman appoint a committee responsible for stating the ACLU position. Motion carried. D. Broiles selected as chairman with J. Johnston and E. Bondurant as members.

D. Broiles reported the case of a fifteen year old Negro boy charged with murder in an auto accident in which a man allowed him to drive without a license. C. Morgan suggested keeping in touch with the case to make sure it is handled constitutionally.

B. Barnum suggested investigation of Juvenile Court operations which is totally segregated. C. Moran moved and E. Ladd seconded that E. Hall's Committee on Due Process investigate the Fulton County Juvenile Court and submit a report. Motion carried.

J. Glustrom reported incidents of police brutality in Perry, Ga. from Georgia Council on Human Relations files. E. Ladd moved and R. Hocking seconded that these cases be referred to L. Moll in Americus, Chairman of Committee on Police Powers. Motion carried. A letter from L. Moll was read, outlining his recent civil liberties activities.

H. Gibert announced that he has received a solicitation for funds from the Lawyers' Constitutional Defense Committee which will send lawyers to Mississippi to defend civil rights cases.

H. Gibert suggested that Mrs. Florence Robin be hired as Executive Secretary. She will work one day a week at a salary of $150 a month. The Georgia Council office offered space and facilities in return for sharing the expenses which would come to about $40 a month. He read a letter from Mrs. Robin outlining plans for this office which would include writing press releases, helping with the Newsletter, serving as a central office for the organization, etc. J. Glustrom moved and C. Moran seconded that Mrs. Robin be hired for a four-month trial period to begin at her convenience. Motion carried.

It was suggested that the Speaker's Committee be reactivated and coordinated through the central office. Appointment of a chairman was left for a future date.

C. Moran reporting for the Membership Committee said that many new members had been added and that membership was near 300 for Georgia. H. Gibert suggested that high school and college teachers be encouraged to join. B. Barnum pointed out that dues were too high for some prospective members. J. Glustrom suggested setting up a Contributor's Membership for $3 a year. E. Ladd suggested that the Newsletter be sent to members of the press. C. Morgan recommended a program on civil liberties for civics teachers.

It was moved by C. Moran and seconded by J. Hume that a meeting of the Board be held during the summer. J. Glustrom and R. Hocking gave prior notification of their absence from summer meetings. Motion carried.

The meeting adjourned at 11 00 p.m.

Dear Hugh:

Because of personal commitments and plans, I wish herewith to resign from the board of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia. I had a small role in the formation of the Georgia chapter and for this reason I regret that I have not been a more diligent board member. The board will be better off with a more active person and, in any event, it is not possible for me to serve longer.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Leslie

It was a disappointment to me to receive your letter of June 23rd resigning from the Board of the ACLU. I am sure that all of the officers, Board and members share my regret at the loss.

I hope that you will find time to give to us in spite of discontinuing your services to the Board.

REPORT FROM THE PRESIDENT

The new officers and directors elected at the membership meeting April 28th wish to express through me their appreciation for your confidence. We have entered upon our duties and are full of plans for the coming year.

The first meeting of the new Board on May 31st reached a number of decisions. The most important one was to employ Florence Robin on a part-time basis as a professional staff of one. She has worked for ACLU National for some years and combines experience with enthusiasm for our work. The Board and I are sure that you will get more than full value for the money used to pay Florence and set her up in an office.

Loyalty Oath Case

Emmet Bondurant new chairman of the Lawyers' Committee discussed the loyalty oath case with the Board. Emmet and I will be responsible for the case, in which ACLU and the American Association of University Professors are cooperating in an attack upon the 1935 and 1949 Georgia loyalty oaths and the security questionnaire. The 1935 oath is particularly objectionable to teachers and professors because they alone are singled out as of suspect loyalty.

The 1935 oath enjoins the teacher "to refrain from directly or indirectly subscribing to or teaching any theory of government or economics or of social relations which is inconsistent with the fundamental principles of patriotism and high ideals of Americanism." The vagueness of this oath (and of the other one) and the use of pejorative terminology are surely enough to establish their unconstitutionality.

Membership

One of the goals I am anxious to accomplish while in office is a great increase in membership. Our present total of about 300 is less than twenty per cent of what we can reasonably expect within a fairly short time.

Our office will mail out a membership appeal during the summer. Early this Fall, we plan a special meeting designed to attract new members. You can help by sending us the names of membership prospects and by personally recruiting your friends. If you need assistance - either printed material explaining ACLU positions or a personal meeting, get in touch with our Membership Chairman, Mrs. Neil Moran, or with Florence Robin or me. (You'll find a list of ACLU names and addresses to clip at the end of this Newsletter).

Speakers Bureau

We are activating our Speakers' Bureau. The officers and members of the Board are ready, willing and able to speak to groups on the subject of the general purposes and activities of ACLU, or on particular ACLU topics, all of them timely and provocative: The House Un-American Activities Committee and the Klan, Capital Punishment, Equal Justice and the Courts, A Tenure Law for Georgia, Loyalty Oaths and Academic Freedom and the like.

Feel free to establish contact with the group -- whether civic, church, fraternal, labor or political -- even before getting in touch with me or Florence Robin or Ed Ladd . We will provide you with a competent speaker. All we need is reasonable notice. And of course, we would be delighted to add the name of any member to our speakers' list.

Capital Punishment Hearings

This summer in Atlanta, a committee appointed by Lt. Gov. Peter Zack Geer will hold hearings on the future of capital punishment in Georgia. Since our State has, in the past thirty-five years, executed more prisoners than any other state in the Union, a public airing of this issue is long overdue.

Board member David Broiles of Athens is chairman of the committee which will prepare an ACLU statement for presentation at these hearings, which will no doubt reflect the recently adopted position of the ACLU National Board opposing capital punishment.

Civilian Review Board Urged

Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins recently proposed an Inspection Division within the Police Department to investigate police misconduct. The Georgia ACLU responded by proposing instead a review board composed of civilians, not police officers.

Our statement, carried by the Constitution and two television stations, said in part:

"...The community needs to be assured that not only is the Police Department honest, but that it respects the rights of citizens who come in contact with the law. Reports of police brutality, denial of counsel at the time of arrest, and all other charges of illegal police practices need to be investigated fully by an impartial agency not beholden to the Police Department.

"The citizen who is subjected to these practices is likely to be both friendless and penniless and in no position to defend his rights. He needs an avenue of redress which could best be supplied by a Citizens' Board with representatives from every segment of the Negro and white commu nity."

Civilian Review Board (con't.)

Dr. Lloyd Moll, chairman of the Police Powers Committee, is gathering information on how Civilian Review Boards work in other communities, notably Philadelphia.

Visit of National Director

John deJ. Pemberton, ACLU National Director, will be in Atlanta on June 13th and 14th. We are making plans to entertain him and put him to work, too. He will be interviewed by the press and on WSB-TV, although we do not yet know exactly when the TV interview will be shown. Watch your TV listings for Sunday and Monday.

Mr. Pemberton will also meet with key Fulton and DeKalb state legislators at an informal, off-the-record luncheon. Look for a fuller report on Jack Pemberton's activities in our next Newsletter.

ACLU and You

Ed Ladd will be in touch with you this summer to talk with you individually about your ideas for ACLU, as well as to learn ways in which you can work in areas of your interest.

Chiefly we need, as noted above, to increase our membership at least five-fold. This increase will come only as we respond vigorously to the civil liberties issues of the day; plan active programs that reach into the community; and plan public meetings which by their content and number will attract new adherents. For these first steps, as well as for more ambitious, long-range programs, I look to you for assistance and counsel.

RE: First Draft of Pamphlet

Enclosed is a rough first draft of the Know Your Rights pamphlet incorporating the changes you suggested at your last meeting.

ACLU President Hugh Gibert's suggestions are shown in red handwriting.

Will you be kind enough to write in your own suggestions and mail your copy back to us as soon as possible. If your changes are merely stylistic ones, they will be incorporated without further ado. If, however, they are policy changes I believe the decision to include or exclude can be made by telephone conference. Hopefully there will be very few changes indeed since we have tried very hard to follow the committee's suggestions as closely as possible.

It is very important that your annotated pamphlet be returned as quickly as possible. The artist has already started drawing the illustrations on the theory that although the wording may change, the drawings will not. We would like to have this in print by the end of the first week in September.

Many thanks for all your help.

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

BLANK

AS AN AMERICAN, YOU HAVE RIGHTS

This book tells you what they are.
It shows you what you can do, and what you cannot do if you are questioned or arrested.

POLICEMEN HAVE RIGHTS, TOO

A policeman's job is to protect you from crime.
When he is doing this, he has the right to your help.

The pictures on the next pages show what rights you have, and what rights policemen have.

You may want to share this book with your neighbors and friends.

Picture: Officer beckoning citizen

"Say, did you see what happened?"
"Do you know Joe Jones?"

If a policeman asks you a question like this - about something that does not have to do with you personally - it is your job to help him.

Picture: Officer accosting citizen

But suppose he asks you: "What are you doing around here?" or other questions about you personally.

If you want to, you can tell him what you are doing there, but all you need to tell him is your name, your address, and if he asks you, where you work.

Picture: Officer accusing citizen (maybe with hand on suspect's arm)

Ifit sounds like the policeman thinks you did something against the law, ask him: "Am I under arrest?" If he says yes, ask him: "What for?"

If you are under arrest, you do not have to answer any more questions. Whatever you tell the policeman could be used against you.

WATCH WHAT YOU SAY!

5. IF he SAYS: "No, YOU are NOT UNDER arrest," YOU MAY ASK: "MAY I GO?" If he SAYS NO TO THAT, YOU ARE UNDER ARREST and YOU do NOT have TO ANSWER ANY MORE QUESTIONS.

Picture: Citizen looking at policeman's badge number

Try to remember the badge number of the policeman and what he looks like. Also remember what he says and what you say. The same goes for any witnesses.

Later, this could help your lawyer to help you.

Picture: Citizen running from officer.

If you were in trouble before, running away won't help you.

Even if you feel you are being wrongly arrested, DO NOT RUN AWAY.

Picture: Citizen fighting officer
(kicking him?)

Fighting with a policeman is a serious crime.

It will only make things worse. Go with him quietly.

Picture: Citizen being searched by policeman

A policeman does not have the right to search you unless you are being arrested or he has a search warrant.

But even if he searches you when you do not think he has the right, do not try to stop him.

You may tell him: "I do not give you permission to search me."

Picture: Citizen in car stopped by Police.

If you are driving a car, a policeman has the right to see your driver's license and car registration. Show them to him if he stops your car.

If he asks you to, get out of the car right away and walk toward him. Do not give him the idea you are about to run him down or harm him.

Picture: Officer knocking at door

If a policeman asks to come into your home, you do not have to let him in. The law says: "Your home is your castle."

Picture: Tenant opening door to length of chain

If the policeman has a search warrant, ask for a copy of it. Make sure the warrant talks about your home.

Picture: Officer standing in open doorway (his back)

If he insists on coming in without a warrant, do not try to stop him. You may say: "I do not give permission for you to search my home."

The same thing goes for searching your car.

Picture: Officer writing receipt

If the police take anything of yours - from your house or your car or from you - you may ask for a written receipt if they do not offer you one.

This receipt must be given to you by the policeman taking the property.

Condense

Picture: Officer entering apartment, accompanied by landlady with passkey

If the policeman has a warrant for your home, the landlady must let him in.

Picture: Variation of one before
(perhpas officer inside with landlady)

But without a warrant, your landlady has no right to say it is okay to search your home without your permission.

Picture: Citizen at police station

If you don't already know, ask the policeman who arrested you what the charge is.

Other policemen may ask you more questions. All you need to tell them is your name and your address. You may say: "I want to call a lawyer."

DO NOT answer QUESTIONS UNTIL The LAWYER IS present

Picture: Citizen using phone book.

You ~~have the right to~~ may be permitted only one completed telephone call. If you do not have the right change, or you do not know his number, ask the police to make change for you and to give you a telephone book.

If they do not want to, ask and keep asking until they do.

Picture: Citizen using pay phone

If you do not know the number of a lawyer, or are afraid you won't find him in, it might be better to call a friend or a member of your family, who could then telephone a lawyer for you.

YOU DO NOT NEED TO ANSWER QUESTIONS OR SIGN ANYTHING UNTIL YOU TALK TO A LAWYER.

Picture: Citizen at hospital

If you are arrested for drunk driving, you may ask for a blood test.

If you have not been drinking, it will be evidence in your favor. But if you have, it can be used against you.

You may ask for this test or you may refuse it. It cannot be given without your permission.

Picture: Denoting passage of time

GEORGIA LAW SAYS:

If you are arrested with no warrant, you may be held for two days (48 hours)

With a warrant, you may be held for three days (72 hours).

After that, you must be taken before a judge for a commitment hearing.

Picture: Citizen in court

At the commitment hearing, you will find out what the charges are, what the evidence is, and who are the witnesses against you. ~~DO NOT GIVE UP YOUR RIGHT to be there.~~ Ask to have a lawyer for this hearing.

Picture: Suspect being given paper to sign.

JUST AS IMPORTANT AS NOT SAYING ANYTHING IS YOUR RIGHT NOT

~~You do not have~~ to sign any statement. If you do not understand legal talk, you may not know what you are signing.

You may say that you will not sign anything until you talk with your lawyer.

Picture: Lawyer meeting with client

You have a right to meet privately with your lawyer. What you tell him is just between you and him. It cannot be used against you.

So remember, whatever you want to tell - tell your lawyer and no one else.

Picture:

Lawyer, suspect and police.

You also have a right to have your lawyer with you during questioning.

Picture: Lawyer representing you in court.

Your lawyer is like a doctor or a dentist. You don't take out your own appendix or fix your own teeth.

Don't try to be your own lawyer, either.

Picture: Lawyer appointed to represent you.

If you can afford it, it is best to have your own lawyer.

But, if you don't have the money, you have the right to a free lawyer when you are charged with a crime that might send you to jail.

Even though this free lawyer may not see you until just before court, this is better than being your own lawyer.

Picture: Don't know what to suggest, but you are going to have to keep it small.

If you are not treated right by a policeman -- if he calls you "nigger" or "nigger-lover" or "boy", or calls you by your first name instead of Mr. or Mrs., or curses you or abuses you, you should complain about him.

In Atlanta, there is a Police Committee meeting every Monday night, and you can take your complaint there.

In other cities, you may complain to the Mayor, or the City Council and to the Police Chief.

Your complaint will not help or hurt your own case. But maybe it will help the Police Department find out about those few policemen who cannot learn to be fair and polite.

If you have a real complaint, it is being a good citizen to let the right people know about it.

Picture: Grayed-Out Bill of Rights in background. Don't bother with this. I'll work out with printer.

What you have just read, may sound like a lot of rules to remember.

But the important things can be said over again in three sentences:

- o You have the right not to answer questions if you are arrested.
- o You have the right not to sign anything.
- o You have the right to get a lawyer.

These rights, and others, belong to every American. They come to us from the United States Constitution.

They apply to everyone, regardless of race, color, religion or age.

Section I - Name

The name of this association shall be the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia. It shall be a non-profit association.

Section II - Purpose

The purpose of the association shall be to further the objectives of the national American Civil Liberties Union and to advance the cause of civil liberties in the United States and State of Georgia with particular emphasis on the rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage, freedom of religion, due process of law, equal protection of the law, and to take all legitimate action in the furtherance and defense of such purposes. These objectives shall be sought without political partisanship.

Section III - Headquarters

The association's headquarters shall be located at such place in the State of Georgia as shall be determined by its Board of Directors from time to time.

Section IV - Membership

The membership of the association shall consist of all members of the national American Civil Liberties Union (American Civil Liberties Union, Inc.) residing within the State of Georgia. Each member shall have one vote.

Section V - Meetings

The annual membership meeting shall be held during April of each year or such other time and in such place as shall be determined by the Board of Directors. Two weeks notice of the meeting shall be given to the members.

Other meetings of the membership may be called at the discretion of the Board of Directors.

Section VI - Officers

The officers of the association shall consist of a President, first and second Vice Presidents, Secretary, Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer. Each shall exercise duties relevant to his office as shall be prescribed by the Board of Directors and shall serve until his successor is elected.

The officers of the association, along with the other members of the Board of Directors shall be elected at the first general meeting and the annual meeting thereafter.

The Board of Directors shall fill any office which becomes vacant from among its own members.

Section VII - Board of Directors

The direction and administration of the organization shall be under the control of a Board of Directors consisting of not fewer than 10 nor more than 20 members of this association.

The Board of Directors shall meet as the occasion requires, but not less than three times each year; additional meetings may be called by the President. The President shall call a meeting within a reasonable period upon the written request of any three members of the Board of Directors or any twenty members of the association. 50% of the members of the Board of Directors shall constitute a quorum. Unless otherwise required by this constitution an Act, Decision, or Resolution of the Board of Directors shall be considered to be adopted when it has been approved by a majority of the Directors present at a duly called meeting at which a quorum is present or by a majority of the Directors as presented in writing.

Members of the Board of Directors shall receive adequate advance notice of each meeting. Members of the Board of Directors who fail to attend three consecutive meetings without advance explanation to the Secretary may be dropped from membership on the Board of Directors by a majority vote of the Board of Directors.

A vacancy on the Board of Directors shall be filled by the remaining members of the Board until the succeeding annual election of Board members when such vacancy shall be filled for the unexpired term by the membership.

The annual election to fill vacancies in the Board of Directors shall be held at the annual meeting of the membership in the manner set forth in the next succeeding Section. One-third of the Directors so elected shall serve for a period of one year, one-third shall serve for a period of two years and one-third shall serve for a period of three years. A "year" for this purpose is the period between the annual meetings of the membership, thus the first year shall be considered to have terminated at the first annual meeting of the membership to be held in April, 1964, and the second year will begin at that time.

Section VIII - Nominations and Election of Members to the Board of Directors

The Board of Directors, by majority action, shall appoint a nominating committee at least three months before the annual meeting of the membership. The nominating committee shall consist of five members of whom not more than two shall be from the Board of Directors. At least two months before the annual meeting the membership shall be notified by mail of the nominees proposed by the nominating committee. Additional nominations may be made by petition of any two members provided there is attached to such petition a signed statement expressing the nominee's willingness to serve if elected; any such petition to be filed with the Secretary not later than one month before the annual meeting.

At least two weeks before the annual meeting a ballot showing and distinguishing the candidates nominated by the nominating committee and those nominated by petition shall be mailed to every member.

Members may vote in person at the annual meeting or by mailing their ballots to the address designated thereon. No mailed ballot shall be counted unless received at such place at least one day before the date of the annual meeting. Ballots need not be signed but the signature and address of each member voting must be placed on the envelope containing the ballot. Such ballots shall be opened in such a way as to preserve the secrecy of the ballot.

The count of mail ballots in the annual election to fill vacancies on the Board of Directors shall take place the day before the date of the annual meeting.

Section IX - Committees

The Board of Directors shall establish such committees and delegate to them such powers and duties as in its judgment will best aid and promote the work of this association and its cooperation with the National American Civil Liberties Union.

Section X - Adoption of Constitution

This constitution shall be considered to have been adopted if it is approved by a majority of those members who vote thereon at a general membership meeting.

Section XI - Amendment of the Constitution

The constitution may be amended as follows: Any proposed amendment shall be submitted by the Board of Directors to the entire membership of this association at least thirty days before it is to be voted upon. The vote may be by mail ballot to all members or by vote at the annual membership meeting. All amendments must be approved by two-thirds of the votes cast.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION

by Erwin N. Griswold

Dean Griswold (left) with Chancellor Harold MacMillan of Oxford University, where Mr. Griswold in October received the honorary Doctor of Civil Laws degree. Dean Griswold also lectured at Gray's Inn.

FOR A GOOD MANY YEARS, the lawyers and the news media have been battling each other with great vehemence and vigor. The news media champion "The Public's Right to Know." This presented problems enough when only the press was involved. It became far more difficult with the advent of radio, as those who lived through the Hall-Mills and the Hauptmann cases in the 1920's and the 1930's will recall. The excesses experienced there were, indeed, the specific background for Canon 35 of the Canons of Judicial Ethics of the American Bar Association. Finally, with the advent of television, the problem has become even more intense.

On the other hand, the lawyers are concerned with the right to a fair trial, of which they are inevitably the guardians in a society such as ours. And the judges are sworn to uphold the Constitution, and have the solemn obligation to see that no one is deprived of his life or liberty without due process of law. It takes little experience in the modern world to see that pre-trial publicity and many sorts of publicity during a trial are wholly inconsistent with the basic objective of a trial—which is not to entertain the public, not even to let the public know what is going on, but is the meticulous and dispassionate ascertainment of the truth.

We have here a situation which has recently been described by William M. Kunstler as one where "news media . . . hide behind one constitutional guarantee while destroying another." As the Toledo Blade has said: "a fair trial, involving the age-old struggle of the individual against all-powerful government, is the most basic, the most essential of human rights."

At various times in the past, I have taken part in this battle. I have participated in the fight to preserve

This article was presented originally by Dean Erwin N. Griswold of the Harvard Law School in August at the Law-Layman Program of the Section of Judicial Administration of the American Bar Association.

Canon 35, and felt great satisfaction and relief when . . . this was recently sustained, almost unanimously, by the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association.

More recently, I spoke on a Bar-Press Program in Boston last May. In those remarks, I stated that it was my best judgment that by November 24 Lee Harvey Oswald could not have obtained a fair trial any place in the United States, and that the Supreme Court would have so held. This was because of the nature of the television coverage in Dallas in the two days following the death of President Kennedy. In my remarks, though, I tried to be fair, and I directed my observations not only at the radio and television networks, but also at the lawyers and at the sheriffs and police officers involved who participated in and facilitated the radio and television coverage.

As a result, I was criticized on all sides. The District Attorney advises me that he did not outline his evidence against Oswald until after Oswald's death — which seems to me to be bad enough. I have tried to obtain information as to just what did appear on television between November 22 and November 24. But this is a complicated problem, and it has not been possible to work it out.

One columnist, who is widely syndicated, criticized me rather sharply for undertaking to hold "any medium of communications responsible for the district attorney's statements about the Oswald case. The actions of any public official are his own responsibility; the communications media are there only to observe and record."

I think there is much to be said for this point of view, and that the basic problem will be greatly simplified if the legal profession, both individually, through the organized bar, and through the courts, more fully recognizes its basic responsibility in this area, and takes firm and clear steps to meet this responsibility. Accordingly, I am here going to try to analyze the underlying problem, focus on the responsibility of the legal profession with respect to that problem, and make recommendations designed to help the legal profession, in all its branches, to meet that responsibility.

If the legal profession does recognize and accept this responsibility, then the problem of the news media will be greatly simplified. As the columnist said, they "are there only to observe and record." If there is nothing available for them to observe and record, they will not be presented with problems of interfering with a fair trial. It is as simple as that. If the lawyers will simply put their own house in order, much of the problem can be eliminated.

In considering the problem of pre-trial and during trial publicity, there are two groups of persons who may be involved. One of these groups consists of the lawyers, including the District Attorney and his assistants, and members of his staff for whom he is responsible. The other group is made up of the sheriffs, constables, police chiefs, and police officers, who, presumably, are not lawyers, though they are public officials. Let us take these two groups up in the order indicated.

Lawyers, D.A.'s and Their Assistants

The lawyers are officers of the court, and members of a profession. They are subject to discipline by the court, and to the appropriate rules of the profession. In England, from which our legal system and our legal profession sprang, the control of the court and the discipline of the legal profession are very strong. As a consequence, actions by lawyers such as those we have witnessed here many times in recent years would be unthinkable in England. If they did appear, they would be promptly dealt with, both as contempt of court and through the disciplinary actions of the two branches of the legal profession there.

In this country, we have relaxed our professional standards far too much. District Attorneys are generally elected, and defense attorneys are likely to have political ambitions. In most states, judges are elected, and find it difficult to enforce high standards of professional conduct on the lawyers who appear before them. We have no centralized control of the bar, such as exists in England through the Inns of Court for the barristers, and the Law Society for the solicitors — bodies which would not tolerate for a moment conduct by lawyers which has become, alas, commonplace in many parts of the United States.

Our lawyers are not only members of the bar in their separate states, but discipline is often enforced through local Grievance Committees, which have their hands full in handling embezzlement and other cases of gross professional misconduct. Because of this diverse and loose control, standards have generally fallen far too low with respect to the conduct of lawyers in making public statements about pending cases and in releasing information to the press.

One of the difficulties arises from the fact that our formal Canons of Professional Ethics are wholly inadequate to deal with the current situation. They were formulated at a time when it was taken for granted that a lawyer would not participate in public programs dealing with a pending case. As a result, Canon 20 reads in rather lukewarm language. Here are its terms:

> "Newspaper publications by a lawyer as to pending or anticipated litigation may interfere with a fair trial in the Courts and otherwise prejudice the due administration of justice. Generally they are to be condemned. If the extreme circumstances of a particular case justify a statement to the public, it is unprofessional to make it anonymously. An ex parte reference to the facts should not go beyond quotation from the records and papers on file in the court; but even in extreme cases it is better to avoid any ex parte statement."

Obviously, this is not clear enough, and it does not go far enough. This was pointed out by Judges Phillips and McCoy nearly twelve years ago, at pages 159–187 of their thoughtful and thorough book on Conduct of Judges and Lawyers. It is time now that we acted on this matter. The Canons should be amended to include an absolute prohibition on the release by any lawyer, either for the prosecution or for the defense, of any material relating to the trial, either before the trial, or while the trial is going on. This should specifically preclude appearances of any sort on radio or television relating in any way to the forthcoming or pending trial. It should also specifically forbid the release of any statements to the effect that the defendant has or has not confessed, or that he has or does not have an alibi, or otherwise. It should also specifically preclude the release of evidence which would be inadmissible in court, or the release of evidence which has been offered in court and excluded by the trial judge.

I earnestly urge on the Standing Committee on Professional Ethics the formulation of such a Canon going much farther than the present Canon 20, and dealing specifically with the things which no lawyer should do in connection with any pending criminal case. If such a Canon were formulated and adopted, then District Attorneys and defense counsel would know clearly what they should not do, and courts and disciplinary bodies generally would have clear cases to deal with in the event of violations. If there had been such a new and specific Canon, many of the events which happened in November, 1963 would not have occurred; and if they had occurred, they could be forthrightly dealt with.

The Standing Committee on Professional Ethics has recommended an amendment to Canon 5 of the Canons of Professional Ethics, which would amend this Canon by adding the following new paragraph:

> "It is the duty of a lawyer engaged either in the prosecution or the defense of a person accused of a crime to refrain from any action which might interfere with the right of either the accused or the prosecuting governmental entity to a fair trial. To that end it is improper and professionally reprehensible for a lawyer so engaged to express to the public or in any manner extrajudicially any opinion or prediction as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, the weight of the evidence against him or the likelihood that he will be either convicted or acquitted."

As far as this goes, it is laudable. However, it seems to me that it does not go nearly far enough. The basic objection is not the expressing of opinions about the innocence or guilt of the accused, but is the making of any sort of statement whatever about any pending criminal case. I am glad to have this amendment to Canon 5; but, in my view, the American Bar Association should go much farther in clarifying the Canons. As I have indicated, it should make it wholly clear that lawyers, both for the prosecution and the defense, must completely refrain from any sort of appearance or statement with respect to pending criminal cases from the moment of the arrest until the ultimate completion of the trial. When the Canons have been adequately amended, lawyers will know clearly what they should not do.

Sheriffs, Constables, Policemen

Then the American Bar Association, and the state bar associations, and the local bar associations, and their Grievance Committees, and the courts, should enforce this requirement without fear or favor. If this is done, we will have taken a great step towards providing the atmosphere for a fair trial in the United States. Until we do take this step, we cannot really criticize the news media very severely if they publish the information which lawyers give them, or if they put on radio or television programs in which lawyers participate.

We come next to the part of the problem which relates to sheriffs, constables, police chiefs, police officers, and other employees and subordinates of law enforcement and police departments. Generally speaking, these persons are not members of the bar. Thus, they are not directly amenable to the Canons of Professional Ethics. In some cases, these persons may be subordinates of the District Attorney, and he may be responsible for their actions. However, disciplining the District Attorney in such cases may not be either very feasible or very fair.

We should work out a more direct control over these law enforcement officers, and subject them to the same requirements which I have suggested above should be made applicable to lawyers, both for the prosecution and for the defense.

The way to deal with this problem, I suggest, is through the rule-making and the contempt powers of the courts. The contempt power has rather fallen into disuse in recent years, because of the extreme views taken by the Supreme Court of the United States on the subject of free speech and free press. What I am saying now, however, has no relation to the activities of the press. I am not advocating use of the contempt power again the press. I am talking about the responsibility of police and other law enforcement officers to the courts.

Absolutely No Publicity

It should be made plain to them, and to all concerned, that police and other law enforcement officers act improperly if they release any sort of information about a person charged with crime, other than his identity, and the nature of the charge. They should not release any evidence, or make any statements about the evidence. Specifically, they should not release any information that the defendant has confessed, or that he has not confessed. They should not release any information to the effect that he has been charged with, or convicted of, any other crimes in the past. They should not characterize the defendant as "a notorious hoodlum," or anything else.

It should be made plain to them that they are officers of the law, and that it is their sworn and bounden duty to protect the defendant against outside pressures as well as to hold him in custody. It may be their duty to confine him; but they should clearly understand that that duty carries with it the responsibility to see that he is not forced to make statements to anyone, that he is not subjected to interviews which he does not wish to participate in, and that he need not have his picture taken if he does not want that done.

What we need in these areas is to have the ground rules clearly stated, and then systematically enforced. One way to attack the problem is through the rule-making powers of the courts. I suggest that the Section of Judicial Administration should set up a carefully chosen, high level committee for the purpose of formulating such rules, and recommending them to the courts throughout the country which have rule-making powers.

For example, it would be a great step forward if the Supreme Court of the United States would formulate and adopt such rules with respect to releases by lawyers and law enforcement officers in connection with persons charged with federal offenses. Such rules would be clearly authorized as a part of the Supreme Court's "supervisory power to formulate and apply proper standards for enforcement of the criminal law in the federal courts" (Marshall v. United States, 360 U.S. 310, 313 (1959)), or, as the Court has put it in another case under its "supervisory powers over federal law enforcement agencies." Rea v. United States, 350 U.S. 214, 217 (1956).

Similar rules should be adopted in the state courts. If the Section of Judicial Administration were to formulate such rules, there should be no serious difficulty in getting the courts to adopt them. If such rules were adopted, then police officers and others involved would have clear instructions about their duties. These are conscientious people, and they will comply with their duties, if those duties are clearly spelled out.

If, in some states, it should be felt that the courts do not have adequate rule-making power, then the substance of the rules I am suggesting should be put into statutory form, and enacted by the legislatures. Bar associations and the Uniform Law Commissioners should give consideration to this problem.

It may be thought, at first flush, that an absolute prohibition against any and all publicity in these matters goes too far. That would be a matter for such a committee to consider. But I suggest that an absolute prohibition, without exception, is called for and is desirable. It is the practice in England, where it works well, and is not questioned. It would be easy to administer. If exceptional circumstances are introduced, or if the word "generally" is used, there will always be wrangling about specific situations. Finally, I would recall to your attention that we are talking only about criminal cases. I suggest that there is no reason why counsel on either side, or law enforcement officers, should be making any sort of public statements about pending criminal cases from the moment of arrest until the completion of the trial.

With respect to rules in this area, we have a fine example in the so-called "Judges' Rules" in England. These rules, which have been long in force, were revised only last February. They prescribe in considerable detail the conditions under which the police may interrogate a person suspected or accused of crime. Among other things, they provide that

> As soon as a police officer has evidence which would afford reasonable grounds for suspecting a person has committed an offence he shall caution that person or cause him to be cautioned before putting to him any questions, or further questions, relating to that offence.
> The caution should be in the following terms: 'You are not obliged to say anything unless you wish to do so but what you say may be put into writing and put in evidence.'

This is an example which might well be adopted in this country. If it were adopted, then the police would know where they stand. They would have clear instructions, and could go about their duties in an effective way.

The Judges' Rules in England say nothing about public statements made by the police or by lawyers, because such statements would be unthinkable there. If we were to adopt the Judges' Rules in the United States, however, it would be well to include explicit provisions with respect to the release of information and the making of public statements by law enforcement officers and by lawyers, in connection with persons accused of crime.

Violations Punishable as Contempt

If such rules were made, then violations of the rules could be enforced as contempt of court. In the recent past, courts have been slow to use their contempt power because of the relation to freedom of speech and of the press. But the cases involving this question have mostly concerned publications in the press. What I am talking about has nothing to do with freedom of the press. It relates to the making of statements by public law enforcement officers, and by lawyers who are officers of the court, both of which groups have clear fiduciary duties to the courts and to the administration of justice.

In this connection, we may recall one of the great cases of an earlier day, United States v. Shipp, 203 U.S. 563 (1906), 214 U.S. 386 (1909), 215 U.S. 580 (1909). This case involved a state sheriff and some of his deputies, who held a prisoner under a sentence of a state court. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from the state decision. The execution of the sentence on the prisoner was stayed by order of the Supreme Court. The sheriff was notified of this stay, and wide publicity was given to it in the local newspapers. That evening, the prisoner was taken from the jail and lynched. There was evidence that the sheriff, and some of his deputies, made no particular effort to prevent this from happening, and indeed may have facilitated it. They were held to be in contempt of the Supreme Court, and were sentenced for that offense.

Let us, then, formulate the ground rules for lawyers and for law enforcement officers. Let us make it plain, both by appropriate amendments to the Canons of Ethics, and by rule of court—or by statute, where that is necessary—that public statements, and public appearances, and release of evidence, with respect to a pending criminal case, both before trial and during trial, are inappropriate. Having made this clear to lawyers and law enforcement officers, let us then enforce these requirements through disciplinary action and by the contempt powers of the courts. If the lawyers and courts will thus put their house in order, there will be far less basis for complaint about the news media.

If there is nothing to "observe or record" as far as lawyers and law enforcement officers are concerned, then the news media will know where they stand, and they can go about their highly important business without infringing on the "most basic" right to a fair trial. Of course, if the news media should obtain information by stealing it, or by bribing court officers to provide it, that would be another matter, and clearly subject to the contempt power. However, if we lawyers will clarify the ground rules, with respect to actions of lawyers and law enforcement officers, and will clearly publish these rules, as rules of court, or otherwise, most of the problems in the relations between the bar and the press would disappear—which is as it should be. And we would be well on the way to seeing that persons accused of crime in this country will assuredly have a fair trial.

Overlooked by the press and public as they concentrate on other more dramatic happenings at the State Capitol was the passage by the Georgia House of Representatives of one of the so-called "Freedom Amendments" now working their way through state legislatures over the country. If it should be passed by the Senate, Georgia would be added to the growing list of states (approximately 20) petitioning Congress for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution which would in effect withdraw federal protection from a specific area of political life.

One of three amendments proposed several years ago by the legislative conference of the Council of State Governments, this particular resolution has been given impetus by state reaction to the recent apporti onment rulings of the Supreme Court. In their dissatisfaction over the one man-one vote decisions, the state legislatures are resorting to proposals which could establish a series of dangerous precedents by suggesting that jurisdiction over apportionment cases be taken from Federal Courts. Obviously a next step could be to remove Federal jurisdiction from other areas whenever there might be disagreements with decisions on, for example, civil rights or church-state relations. Such a sequence could logically lead to the piecemeal destruction of our traditionally independent judiciary and of the equal protection guarantees of our Consitution.

Not only would this proposed amendment overturn the principles of the Fourteenth Amendment - it would, along with a somewhat similar resolution just passed by the House and Senate, permit the states carte blanche in determining the base of representation in their legislative bodies. This could lead to various forms of discrimination in establishing apportionment and could also actually weaken the Constitutional guarantees of a republican form of government. It is indeed disturbing that in their frustration over the ruling concerning their own reapportionment, Georgia's legislators have chosen to support proposals which could only undermine those processes which are so basic to our Constitutional system.

The Honorable Lyndon B. Johnson
The White House
Washington, D.C.

Dear President Johnson,

The events, as we understand them, taking place in Selma, and elsewhere in Alabama, have shown the use of flagrant police state methods to brutalize large groups of Negro citizens, and deprive them of their constitutional rights as Americans.

We deplore, and are ashamed, by these tactics, and beg you to use your high office in every possible legal manner to end the injustices which lie at the root of these problems.

As an immediate step we urge speedy legislation ending the infringement of the right to vote, as is practiced in many localities, including some in our own state of Georgia.

We urge you to vigorously seek out, and fully prosecute, any law officers, or office holders, guilty of brutality and other rights violations.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF GEORGIA

Dr. Edward T. Ladd, President
1236 Springdale Road, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30306

The Honorable Birch Bayh, Chairman
Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments
Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C.

Dear Senator Bayh,

As an organization whose members' voices in their government have for years been distorted by the malapportionment of both of their state legislative houses, as well as of their U. S. Congressional Districts, besides being subjected to the discrimination of the "County Unit" system, the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia is deeply concerned over recent proposals which would nullify the safeguards of fair representation.

During its recent 1965 session, the Georgia Legislature passed resolutions petitioning Congress for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution to establish the principle that one house of a state legislature may be based on "factors other than population". The Georgia House, at the time under a court order to reapportion itself, also proposed the extreme measure of withdrawing altogether the Federal Court jurisdiction over cases involving representation in state legislatures.

We believe it is imperative to point out that passage of these resolutions was carried out by a state House of Representatives so malapportioned as to be a classic example, one which in no way fairly represents the opinions of Georgia's urban residents, whose voices have so long been stifled.

The Georgia Senate, reapportioned two years ago, limited itself to passage of the first proposal, but only after amending it to modify the vague phrase "factors other than population", so as to rule out any possibility that race, creed or national origin be considered in determining the base of representation in a state legislature. We mention this Senate action because it points directly to the most alarming feature of Senator Dirksen's proposed constitutional amendment and similar resolutions. In their dissatisfaction over recent Federal Court rulings intended to protect the equality of citizens' votes, proponents of these measures seem to be willing to give the states carte blanche in their establishment of the representative base for one legislative chamber.

The A. C. L. U. of Georgia believes that the practical effect of such action might well be not only the introduction of various forms of discrimination in establishing apportionment, racial and economic as well as geographic, but also an ultimate weakening of Constitutional guarantees of a republican form of government within the states, as well as of the "equal protection" clause. The "one-man, one-vote" ruling had given many of Georgia's citizens new hope that their votes would at last have their fair value. Its reversal would at the very least permit the perpetuation of a system in which a legislative chamber based on some"factor other than population" could always stalemate or nullify the actions of a population-based Senate. In such manner can the individual citizen's share in government be destroyed.

For these reasons our organization wishes to go on record as being in strong opposition to the constitutional amendments proposed by Senators Dirksen, Church, and Javits.

Yours respectfully,

American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF GEORGIA

Application for a Grant from The National Development Council

In support of our request for financial aid from the National Development Council, we are setting forth an assessment of Georgia ACLU programs for the past four months, projected activities for the coming year, an analysis of membership and fund-raising possibilities in the State, and a suggested budget.

We have tried neither to inflate the possibilities nor to minimize the pitfalls of building a vigorous, effective affiliate in Georgia.

PROGRAM

Capital Punishment: Summer hearings of the Special Senate Committee on Capital Punishment provided an excellent program activity. Dr. David Broiles, chairman of the Capital Punishment Committee, recruited ten faculty members from the University of Georgia to produce a 47-page study, The Death Penalty in Georgia. We have distributed it to all the news media and circularized our own membership, asking them to appear at the four hearings still to come in September. We have also circularized the 1,600 members of the Georgia Council on Human Relations asking for witnesses. Through this, and by writing letters to everyone who might be remotely interested in abolishing the death penalty, we have lined up a good group of witnesses for the September hearings. We should attract wide notice.

The publicity for the two summer hearings in Rome and Athens, particularly the latter, was fine. We got Dr. Broiles on television to explain the study. We challenged Georgia's Attorney General to debate the subject. We issued a two-page summary of the study which was used in every good-sized city in the State except Atlanta. (The Atlanta papers assigned reporters to make their own summary and gave the study good space and two strong editorials.) We also made some radio tapes used by local stations.

After the September hearings are over, we will have enough copies of the study left to send one to every member of the General Assembly when it meets in January. At that time we can start a new campaign since death penalty legislation will be considered during the session.

We also sent a fund-raising letter to our membership asking for contributions to defray the cost of reproducing and distributing the study. It cost $157 to mimeograph 500 copies and 22¢ every time we mail one. As of this date, we have received $303 in contributions. So we will break even, more or less. It is gratifying that almost 25% of the members responded, but frustrating that most of the contributions were for less than $5.

In addition to legislative action, the Lawyers' Committee is also considering bringing a suit to end the death penalty. This is still in the formative stage of deciding what grounds would be most appropriate.

Loyalty Oath Suit: The Georgia ACLU filed suit in behalf of the Georgia AAUP against the Board of Regents on August 10th. The suit called for abolition of the 1935 oath, the 1949 oath and the 1953 Security Questionnaire. Since then, the story has been in the headlines almost daily, mainly because public officials, including Governor Sanders, Senator Talmadge, Chief Justice Duckworth, Lieutenant-Governor Geer, State Senator Wesberry and many others have made statements attacking the suit.

We have been given a lot of space, both in our original statement summarizing the issues and in rebutting the attacks in the press and on radio and television. Hugh Gibert made four very effective television appearances. The Atlanta papers have both given us good editorials and editorial cartoons.

Last week, both sides agreed to a modification of the most objectionable parts of the 1935 oath and the 1953 Security Questionnaire. So when the suit does come to trial, only the 1949 oath will be at issue. This weekend Mr. Gibert appeared on two television programs to explain the issues.

Prayer in the Schools: Don McEvoy of the National Conference of Christians and Jews and I have devised a questionnaire to be sent to every public school principal about religious practices in the classroom. Even in relatively sophisticated Atlanta, visiting evangelists are permitted to address school assemblies; the Gideon Society has distributed Bibles in the classroom, many teachers regularly check how many children attended church or Sunday school each week, etc.

Mr. McEvoy is getting together a well-known group of educators to distribute the questionnaire under the sponsorship of the State Education Department. Whether this project will really get off the ground -- whether the educators will ever agree on the questions, and whether the State Education Department will sponsor the study as they have promised -- is not yet certain.

Meanwhile, we have started on our own in Atlanta. Our Church-State Committee chairman wrote to the Atlanta School Superintendent asking for a new policy to conform to the Supreme Court decision.

Failing to get a satisfactory response, he convened a meeting of representatives of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Equality, the United Presbyterian Field Service, the Anti-Defamation League, the American Jewish Committee and the National Conference of Christians and Jews. The group decided to seek the assistance of the Georgia Methodist Convention and Archbishop Hallinan of the Catholic Diocese, as well as to discover some sympathetic Baptists (an unlikely prospect). Prayer in school will be placed on the agenda of the first School Board meeting on September 15th. If the School Board does not act to end the practice -- and this is very unlikely -- the enlarged religious group plan to meet with with the Superintendent to press more strongly for a new policy. If he still does not respond favorable, the plan is to seek wider support on the parish level.

Most of the participants at this meeting felt that the Atlanta school system would respond to this pressure and stop prayer in the schools, and that smaller systems throughout the state would follow suit. My own less hopeful estimate is that they will resist as long as possible. This is a highly explosive issue in our predominantly Baptist state, and this is a local election year with school board members, aldermen and Mayors all running hard. I believe it is going to take a court suit to gain compliance. If that is the case, most of the religious participants would not go along with it, feeling that a court case would "bring to the surface and exacerbate community tensions."

So simultaneously with the above-mentioned steps, the Church State Committee chairman is trying to line up plaintiffs for a case if the pressure does not work.

It should be kept in mind that threat of a court suit by Hugh Gibert, made the DeKalb County school system -- which adjoins Atlanta and which is the second biggest in the state -- abandon religious practices in the schools.

Tenure Law: Ed Ladd is working with a group of Emory professors to draft a model tenure law. This will be a major issue this year since Negro teachers are being fired in increasing numbers on the excuse of school integration. I have talked with several of our new, reapportioned legislators and they promise support for such a law.

Klan Meeting: The Klan has again been refused permission to meet, this time in Marietta. We have again written to the mayor urging him to rescind this decision. He replied by saying permission for the Town Square had been refused solely on grounds of traffic congestion and he would offer them equally advantageous space elsewhere. This was a reversal of his original refusal which was based on the Klan being "a disruptive element in the community". The newspapers covered his change of heart based on the ACLU request.

Censorship: We have just obtained the services of an excellent volunteer as chairman of our Censorship Committee. He has enlisted a committee which will begin by making representations to the Public Library system to stop its practice of not carrying books it considers salacious.

It will meet next to hammer out a policy on private vigilante groups (of which Georgia has a super-abundance) which takes into account the right of private groups to protest, but which exposes the extent to which these private groups decide on what Georgians can see, read and hear.

This group will also consider what role it can play in a court suit just filed by Hugh Gibert in an obscenity case in Columbus, Georgia.

Counsel for the Indigent: Just announced is the appointment of a Legislative Committee to consider counsel for indigent people charged with a felony. Theoretically, all indigents charged with crimes must be represented by counsel, but this rule is frequently violated. The Committee will hear testimony on adequate payment of private counsel and on the advisability of appointing a public defender.

This Legislative Committee will hold a series of public hearings all over the state, similar to the death penalty hearings.

We have written to the Committee's chairman asking for time to testify and volunteering to supply committee members with factual material about practices in other states and an analysis of the alternatives. We have been extremely fortunate in finding an outstanding attorney to take on this task.

Newsletter: We have gotten out three issues of the Newsletter. It is sent out regularly, is neatly typed and identifiable as ACLU material. This is an improvement. But lack of time means that it is hastily assembled and neither well-planned nor complete.

What We Are Not Doing: Since professional staff operates only one day a week, several areas which ought to be major concerns of the Georgia ACLU are receiving no attention at all. For example:

The excellent material sent out by National ACLU and by other affiliates should be carefully classified so that the Georgia affiliate could serve as an information center on civil liberties matters for the press, voluntary agencies and interested individuals. Presently, all there is time for is for it to be hastily scanned and placed on top of an ever-growing pile of material.

The only committees which are functioning at all are Capital Punishment, Church-State, Lawyers Committee, and just beginning now, Censorship. We ought to have a committee functioning in each area of concern.

As far as program is concerned, here are a few random examples which have come to our attention where lack of time has prevented action:

Police practices, particularly in Georgia's southwest counties, run the gamut of illegality: illegal searches, arrests, detainments, and police brutality. We should also be pressing harder for Civilian Review Boards.

The right of peaceful assembly is violated routinely by city officials and the police, whether the group is SNCC or the Klan. The case in Marietta cited above is the only one we have responded to.

Rules for applying for public housing in Atlanta permit social workers to pry into tenants' lives. A woman whose husband was convicted of a felony was told by the Housing Authority to divorce her husband so she could get an apartment.

We should be working more closely with other voluntary agencies in the field, which would help us keep current on civil liberties matters. For example, the Vine City Project, organized by residents of Atlanta's worst slum area as a self-help program to clean up their streets, fix up a community recreation house to get the children off the streets, force landlords to make repairs and abide by City Codes, get adequate city services such as paving, water and street lighting, etc., needs volunteer legal advice to deal with city, state and federal officialdom. It is unfortunate that because of lack of closer liaison with the voluntary agencies involved, the ACLU Lawyers Committee was not involved in this advisory role from the beginning. Now that we have learned about the need, belatedly and by accident, we are certain that this will make an excellent Lawyers Committee activity.

MEMBERSHIP

When Mr. Pemberton visited Georgia this June, he arranged for the ACLU to lend the Georgia affiliated $545 to finance a membership drive. We decided, however, to wait until September before sending it out.

This week the printer will deliver a Georgia ACLU pamphlet, much of it based on the first-rate material put out by National, the rest devoted to what we are doing and hope to do in Georgia. The accompanying letter is already mimeographed and the envelopes typed.

We are using the Georgia AAUP list (800 names), the Partners for Progress list (1,000 names of people who worked for open public accommodations when the Civil Rights Law was passed), and the Georgia Council on Human Relations list (1,600 names). When duplications are weeded out, we should have about 2,500 names. We will send out the appeal the week of September 13th, when most of the academic people we are writing to will be back in town and on campus.

I feel very strongly that the potential for membership in Georgia is infinitely greater than our present numbers indicate. We should have more than 3,000 members, not less than 300. With intensive effort, we could have 1,000 members in a year. Georgia also has a higher potential than South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana.

I base this estimate on experience with membership drives in other voluntary organizations in Georgia such as the Georgia Council, the Active Voters League and the NAACP. Membership in these groups has greatly increased in the past few years. In the Georgia Council, where I am directly responsible for producing membership material and mailings, our membership has gone from 300 to 1,600 in four years. And it is far more difficult to recruit for an organization whose sole aim is total integration than it is for ACLU with its more diversified program. Indeed, many Georgia ACLU members consider the Georgia Council on Human Relations too controversial to join.

If we don't get these new members, it will be because we are not giving it enough time, or going about it in the wrong way--not because the potential is not there.

Georgia's greater potential over other Southern States such as South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana is mostly a matter of simple geography. It has the urban population - not only in Atlanta, but Savannah, Macon, Augusta, Athens and Brunswick - which the others lack. Georgia should rank closely behind Virginia and Florida in membership potential.

Recruiting Negro Members: We do not have as many Negro members as we should, partly because potential Negro members are already deeply committed to organizations working solely on civil rights; partly because no special effort has been made to enlist them. Also, Negroes might be more attracted to the ACLU if some vigorous new names from Georgia could be added to the National Committee.

MEETINGS

There have been four general membership meetings since the ACLU of Georgia started three years ago. Both their quality and attendance have gone steadily downhill, and even the first one was nothing to write home about as far as attendance is concerned. The last open meeting in December, 1964 was attended by twenty-five members and was paralyzingly dull.

We badly need well-planned, well-publicized, well-attended meetings if our membership is to grow. I had originally hoped to have a big fund-raising meeting this Fall with a well-known speaker. I realize now, however, that we do not have the resources either in volunteers or money to stage such an ambitious program successfully. Also, our Board of Directors is not accustomed to thinking in these terms. It would be more realistic therefore to plan one meeting around the showing of Point of Order, and a second perhaps around a controversial subject like prayer in schools with a panel of religious leaders and educators. Then in the Spring, if chapter growth indicates it, we could have a two-day state-wide annual meeting which would culminate in a large fund-raising dinner.

I have also asked our Membership Secretary to plan with me a series of smaller membership luncheons in people's homes, with local speakers to explain ACLU programs. We can line up local journalists, legislators and educators for this. But I haven't had time to work on it personally or to find out how well she is doing on her own.

We also need to get away from the idea that the Georgia ACLU is a local Atlanta organization. We have had inquiries from Savannah and Athens from people who would like to hold their own meetings and initiate their own programs and who need help to get started. We haven't been able to give them assistance, partly from lack of time, partly from lack of travel funds, partly because the Georgia ACLU is too strongly Atlanta-oriented.

FUND-RAISING

I am somewhat less sanguine about the prospects for large-scale fund-raising in Georgia than I am about its membership potential. Obviously, since we have not tried any fund-raising at all, we should be able greatly to improve our financial position by tapping the resources just waiting to be asked. Fund-raising will be stimulated by more active programs and by interesting, well-planned meetings, large and small. But there are certain factors which may tend to inhibit large-scale individual contributions:

1. Generally speaking, it is an accepted fact that the level of giving in Georgia (and neighboring southern states) is much lower than in comparable cities of the North and West. And this is true not only for controversial organizations, but for such accepted causes as the United Appeal and the Red Cross. To quote one professional fund-raiser: "In Atlanta, if you give $100, you're a certified big-shot; $500, and you're a full-fledged philanthropist."

This is not because the individual big giver is less affluent than his Northern counterpart. Southerners are just not used to giving large sums of money. Somehow this pattern of the past must be broken and we are confidant this can be done. But as any Southern farmer will tell you, the field must be nourished, plowed and planted before it will yield cotton.

2. Organizations which deal at all with race relations -- Human Relations Councils, SRC, SNCC, SCLC -- have long recognized the impossibility of raising their total budgets in Southern communities largely hostile to their goals. So all of them raise money from individuals and foundations up North. As a result, those who should be big givers to liberal organizations have the comfortable feeling that if they don't give, the money will be raised somehow from Northerners. This, on top of the low level of giving to begin with, places a fearful psychological handicap on fund-raising efforts.

3. Paradoxically, while I believe that it will be easier to attract members to Georgia ACLU than to race relations organizations, it may be harder to raise large money. Those who believe in the total ACLU program tend to be middle-income people in the professions, the academic world, social workers, etc.

Large employers, the powerful Baptist leadership, and influential political leaders are slowly coming to recognize the political and economic benefits of better race relations. Some of them can be persuaded to give to non-activist race relations groups such as the Urban League. But while their racial position is being ameliorated through political and economic self-interest, their position on such things as loyalty oaths, prayer in the public schools and censorship remains unchanged.

But the above points -- speculative and based largely on intuition rather than hard facts -- are set down only to give the flavor in Georgia. They are not of immediate concern because, as noted, no fund-raising at all has been attempted.

So we must embark as soon as possible on fund-raising activities, using such tested techniques as personal calls, personal letters, fund-raising affairs such as luncheons, cocktail parties, meetings, special mail appeals, etc.

To get such a campaign off the ground, we must cultivate these attitudes among our members, and especially our Board members: (a) Fund-raising is inextricably bound up with program; just as program interest will stimulate giving, giving creates a commitment to program. (b) Increased personal giving by the leadership is important not only for the revenue itself, but for the example it sets for others. (c) Asking others for funds is neither undignified nor inappropriate.

BUDGET

In listing each budget item, we have attempted to give the reasoning which led us to come up with our suggested figure. Then, following this detailed itemization, the budget will be repeated, with only the item and the figure listed for easier reference.

Professional Staff: As noted previously, the Georgia ACLU currently employs an Executive Secretary for one day a week. If her time were, in fact, confined to one day a week, this would be sufficient only to get out the Newsletter, prepare the eight press releases sent out so far, answer the telephone and open the mail. For the affiliate to conduct an effective program, develop membership and stimulate fund-raising will take the intensive effort of a full-time professional. The Board has set the figure of $7,500 as salary.

Rent: The Georgia ACLU is presently housed with the Georgia Council on Human Relations, and pays the Council $40 per month for the space. It is a most satisfactory arrangement, since it gives us access to a typewriter, mimeograph machine, addressograph, postage meter, etc., free of charge. We can get out our material efficiently without having to rent equipment or send it out to be processed. Rent: $480.

Telephones: At present, we share the same telephone lines as the Georgia Council, paying only for long distance telephone calls. This means that Council secretaries can answer our phones and take our messages. On a full-time basis however, we would need to have our own line installed, since even on the present part-time basis, it is an unfair burden to place on the Council staff.

I am listing the basic cost of a business phone - $20 per month - plus an extra $200 per year for long distance calls. This last figure is pure speculation, since our long distance bill will depend almost entirely upon how much chapter organization we do in places like Athens, Savannah and Macon. This would bring our telephone bill to $440 per year.

Office Supplies and Postage: It is difficult to come up with a realistic figure for this category, because a great deal depends upon the rate of chapter growth. If we postulate 1,000 members by the end of the year, and thus take a median figure of 500 members to service during the year, postage for the Newsletter will run $300 for twelve issues. (I think it important initially for greater membership acceptance to send it out first class. Perhaps after six months, we can switch to bulk rate.) Postage for two possible special membership mailings would be an additional $50.

Board minutes, meeting and committee notices should be about $100. We have set membership retention at $150 and one more large-scale membership appeal this year at $600. (This will depend upon the success of the current appeal and on the lists available to us.) Press service should be $100. We should set aside an additional $500 for reprints, stationery, mimeograph paper, addressograph plates, clasp envelopes, stencils and the like. These categories total $1,800. But four months full-time operation at an accelerated pace should give us a much better idea of what this figure should be than the past four months experience of part-time minimal activity.

Travel: The amount spent on travel, like long distance telephones, depends in part upon how much emphasis will be placed on local chapter organization. It also depends upon what role the Southern Regional office will play in chapter organization. If it were possible for the Southern Regional office to add a full-time staff member who would organize local groups all over the South, this would be of tremendous assistance to affiliates like Georgia, and would of course significantly reduce travel expenses for the affiliate.

I do not know whether this is likely to come about; nor do I know how much time and personal service would be required to form a new local chapter; nor indeed how many such groups in the state it would be possible to start. Thus, hopefully invoking the doctrine of Invincible Ignorance, we will make a guess and tentatively budget travel at $1,000.

Part-Time Clerical Help: Mrs. Pauley, Director of the Georgia Council, is amenable to the idea of sharing a secretary, with each of us paying half her salary. This would free professional staff from such mechanical chores as envelope stuffing, running the addressograph machine, mailing out notices, etc., and permit time to be spent more productively on program, membership and fundraising.

Clerical help is especially important if we view the coming year as time to take a giant step forward toward the growth that will spell eventual self-support. Mrs. Pauley and I believe we could find a clerical person for something around $3,800. ACLU would therefore need $1,900 for its share.

Litigation: Will we bring a death penalty suit? How about a prayer in school case? Should the Lawyers Committee go in on the appeal of the obscenity suit mentioned above? None of these questions has been decided yet, so a budget for litigation will have to be reviewed after the experience of the coming months.

Based on the experience of his operation -- which admittedly is not comparable -- Mr. Morgan suggests 20% of the total Georgia budget be earmarked for litigation. Mr. Gibert suggests listing a two-year figure of $5,000. Both these suggestions work out to roughly the same amount -- Litigation: $2,500.

BUDGET LISTINGS

Professional Staff Salary.....	$ 7,500
Office Rent.....	480
Telephone.....	440
Office Supplies, Postage.....	1,800
Travel.....	1,000
Part-time Clerical Help.....	1,900
Litigation.....	2,500
TOTAL.....	$ 15,620

Membership: The majority of our present membership consists mainly of $6 and $10 contributors, with about 40 of $25 and over and a handful at $100. Their average contribution works out to $16 per member.

We have stated that concerted effort should raise our membership to 1,000 in a year. I do not know enough about extrapolation to understand whether such an expansion by itself would cause a change in the ratio of $6 and $10 memberships to larger contributors. Assuming that by itself it would not, and also assuming that we can upgrade contributions, particularly among Board members and active committee members, let us postulate an average contribution of $18 per member for 1,000 members, for a membership income of $18,000. The 40% of this made available to the Georgia affiliate would mean a membership income of $7,200. Out of this would have to come the $545 borrowed by the affiliate from National for the current membership appeal, leaving a total of $6,655.

If we can stage a successful fund-raising dinner in Spring, plus two smaller affairs during the year, plus an on-going schedule of personal calls, I think we can raise $3,000, of which $1,200 could be made available to the affiliate. Membership income plus special gifts would total $7,855. This would leave a balance of $7,765 of the budget still to be funded.

We therefore request a grant in the amount of $7,765. We look forward to the time when the Georgia affiliate will be strong enough to be entirely self-supporting, and beyond that, to the day when we can be not a recipient, but a contributor to the birth and growth of new ACLU affiliates.

Respectfully submitted,

Florence B. Robin
Executive Secretary

Dear Ken,

I had heard a rumor that you were back, and in Asheville, but I hadn't been able to pick up your address, and am glad to know where you and Agnes are.

True they gave us help, and isn't it nice, at long last, to have some prospect of getting a few things done? Scheme is to put a full-time person into each of 12 states, plus a clerk in each, and the services of five associates divided out among the 12 State outfits. I get to strengthen this office hardly at all; an associate director, and somebody to go out to field offices and keep them settled. Both will probably be Negroes. We've planned it so as to put the money in the State offices, but even at that it's barely enough to get them started, and they'll have to raise money, too.

I will carry your need around with me in my travelling, and maybe I can strike a spark somewhere. Fred Mott, who is the head doctor in John L. Lewis Welfare Fund operation, is my friend from Farm Security days - maybe something there?

Do you and Agnes and the family drive down and come to see us. I think we could put you all up at our house, and would welcome the chance to hear about what you both did, and help plan for the next enterprise.

Sincerely,

GSM

Dear George,

We're back in the country and looking for work. Since our New York grapevine indicates that the Fund for the Republic had the good sense to make a sizable grant to the SRC, I thought I would write to see if I could perhaps fit into your operation.

Will you let me know how things look? Perhaps we should run down and have a talk - it would be nice anyway and would give us an admirable excuse for a visit to Atlanta.

Please give our best to Alice.

Dear C. H.:

My brother, Broadus, in New Jersey is active in the American Civil Liberties Union. Recently Carl Braden appeared before that group at Newark, New Jersey. If you could give me some condensed report on what actually happened up there, I would be grateful. I know you and I have discussed the matter before.

I don't want any great long account, but If you could write me a paragraph that reflects your appraisal of the whole matter, I would be grateful.

Dear George,

I am finishing up the SCHW piece and should have the files returned at the end of the month; at any rate that's my schedule as of now. Life is just too busy. Congratulations on the new Fund for the Republic grant, I hope all this drive on them doesn't make them go too far in retreat, if at all, tho some, I expect, is bound to happen. Our best to you and Alice.

We went out driving with Mildred yesterday, looking at foliage and deciding it couldn't compare with Atlanta's.

Goldberg, B'nai B'rith Women's Supreme Council; Helen Mineta, Japanese American Citizens League; Margaret Butcher, National Council of Negro Women; Bernard Weitzer, Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A.; Julia Thompson, American Nurses Association; Dr. C. Emanuel Carlson, Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs; Annalee Stewart, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; Benjamin Margolin, American Ethical Union; Robert W. Frase, American Book Publishers Council; Eleanor M. Hadley, National Association of Social Workers; Sarah Hughes, National Farmers Union; Mary Frances Aldrich, Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice; June Pickett, AFL-CIO Legislative Department; William Zimmerman, Jr., Association on American Indian Affairs; John W. Edelman and Charlotte Friedman, Textile Workers Union-AFL-CIO; Edward Metzler and C.L. Roy Doty, Jr., National Service Board for Religious Objectors; Sue Mills, The Fund for the Republic (observer); Mary Alice Baldinger and Lucia Lhamon, for the office.

Next Meeting : Wednesday, February 15, from 2 to 4 p.m. at 1637 Mass. Ave., N.W.

1956 Conference on Civil Liberties : The chairman reported on plans to date for the eighth annual Conference on Civil Liberties, to be sponsored by the Clearing House at the Hotel 2400 on Thursday and Friday, March 22 and 23.

Civil rights problems will be discussed at the opening session of the conference, on the afternoon of March 22. A dinner meeting that evening will take up the question of proper safeguarding of constitutional freedoms.

The morning session of Friday, March 23, will consider the free communication of ideas. After a luncheon session, the conference will study organizational programs and problems in the Clearing House fields.

Dr. Leonard Aries of the National Conference of Christians and Jews and Miss Irma Piepho of the National Council of Catholic Women are co-chairmen of the Program Committee, which includes Dr. Adams, Julia Bennett, Kenneth Birkhead, Herman Edelsberg, Irving Ferman, John Gunther, Katherine Jansson, Clarence Mitchell and Paul Sifton. The committee will welcome suggestions from any interested organization.

Annual Report: The financial report of the Clearing House for 1955 was submitted by the treasurer, Herman Edelsberg, and was accepted on motion of Philip Schiff, seconded by Bernard Weitzer. (A copy is also included with these minutes.)

Acting Chairman: Dr. Adams will be in Germany from late January to the end of February. The meeting approved appointment of John J. Gunther as acting chairman during his absence.

Current Reports : Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was the afternoon's featured speaker, discussing personal and economic pressures and intimidation in the South from the background of his own investigations in Mississippi and other Southern states.

Also reported upon and discussed by the meeting were:

The outlook for civil rights -- John Gunther, Americans for Democratic Action.

The school situation in Virginia -- John Edelman, Textile Workers Union of America.

Prospects in the area of immigration -- Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Current status of the Bricker Resolution -- Katherine Jansson, American Association for the United Nations.

Current Materials : The office has on hand a few extra copies of the following materials which were distributed at the meeting, and will be glad to send them out on request:

1) The People Take the Lead -- the American Jewish Committee's annual record of progress in civil rights from 1948 to date.

2) School Segregation, the St. Louis Way, reprinted from Adult Leadership by the Adult Education Association.

3) The NEA's Defense Commission's Bulletin for December, 1955, which reprinted the Washington Post's series on the various questions rising in connection with Virginia's Gray Plan.

4) M is for Mississippi and Murder -- The NAACP's pamphlet on three murders in that state in the summer of 1955.

-- Dr. Earl F. Adams, Chairman.

Dear Friend:

Attached for your information, is the financial report of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House for 1955.

We think you will share our gratification in the fact that last year more organizations than ever before indicated their interest in the Clearing House by contributing to its support or by subscribing to its materials and services -- a total of 63.

We would like to express our whole-hearted thanks to all of those who have taken part in the Clearing House program of inter-organizational education and information-sharing in the fields of civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom, and human rights generally. We hope that we may look forward to your continued interest through 1956.

Sincerely yours,

E. F. Adams

Dear Ken:

I sent your incoming of February 13 on the Till matter to a trusted friend in Mississippi, in good position to sound out opinion among Mississippians anxious to retrieve the situation.

What I get back is that it wouldn't work and it wouldn't help.

I am told it would be impossible to disconnect Mrs. Bradley from her former sponsors; that no open-minded jury could be impanelled. Everyone has formed and whether those opinions are irrational is beside the point as to jury service.

Mrs. Bradley has continued to meet speaking engagements. This is a matter for her judgment and no one would propose to supersede her judgment. But the matter is not conducive to a "new setting" for her.

A return by Mrs. Bradley to Mississippi at this time, it is thought, could touch off an explosive situation in that State.

Lastly and only suggested: The Glendora filling station case has inter-connections with the Till case and it is possible that there will be favorable developments in the Glendora case.

I am satisfied that my correspondent in this matter would have consulted informed and reputable attorneys.

Sorry to send you a report so discouraging but the situation in Mississippi evidently has little in it that is encouraging.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

Dear Dr. Mitchell;

This is in reply to your letter regarding the possibility of bring Mrs. Bradley back to Mississippi to bring a civil suit in courts here.

I have contacted many people, informally and in connection with other matters and in connection with our problem here.

Without exception, the answer is no. First, it would be impossible to disconnect Mrs. Bradley from her former sponsors.

Second: You could not get an open minded jury to sit on the case. Every one has formed opinions, whether they are irrational is beside the point as to their jury service.

Third: Mrs. Bradley continues to speak wherever she can get a chance on the death of her son, which is certainly her privilege, but it would not be, and is not conducive to 'new setting' for her.

Fourth: There is every possibility that there may be some chance to re-open this case when the Glendora trial comes up this month. IF we can keep outsiders from throwing the switch again, there was a connection between the Glendora man and the Till defendants, and we are hoping much can be brought out and some things done which could not be done through Mrs. Bradley.

this is not documented - I gathered it from dropped comments here & there -

Fifth: Bringing Mrs. Bradley back at this time could be the the explosive situation which seems to be set off in other states with even less cause, doing irreparable harm for all concerned. Harm which would take years to undo.

I am not listing names of people I have contacted, I think it better not to do so. However, if I am in Atlanta again, I will be very glad to give a detailed account.

This is informal and unofficial. Sou. Reg. Council never mentioned -

Sincerely,

Cora R. Ratliff

RECEIVED FEB 15 1956

Dear George:

Several of us who have been interested in seeing if new approaches to the Emmet Till case could be made have been discussing the following:

1. One of the needs is to take the case out of a North-South framework, from onsponsored in activity by ACLU, NAACP or any other "northern" group. Thus, if a suit for civil damages should be brought in Mississippi courts, it should be brought in as near as possible in the same atmosphere that any mother might sue for the loss of the life of her son.

2. Therefore, if a civil suit were brought, it should be handled entirely by Mississippi attorneys and Mrs. Bradley must be prepared to place herself and all phases of the case completely in the hands of her Mississippi attornys.

3. The assumption is that if this framework could be brought into being, their might be one or more Mississippi lawyers who might risk the case. In our concept, this would have to be someone of the standing of a former president of the Mississippi Bar Association, some one who felt a degree of safeness from local retaliation.

4. It would have to be undertaken by an attorney as a public service, whether paid or not, who would see in it an opportunity to demonstrate, particularly after the Huie article in LOOK that justice still functions in some degree in the state. The theory runs that perhaps there might be Mississipians who would accept the chance of having the state purge itself of some of its guilt and guilt feeling.

We tried this out with Barry Bingham last week and he thought it worth a try. He is to advise with Mark Ethridge this weekend. He also suggested I write Hodding Carter.

The theory would be that some interested party would uncover a lawyer willing to talk with Mrs. Bradley in the framework above and that from there on out, it would be up to them to make their decisions. We have talked with Mrs. Bradley, who is willing as far as we can tell to see what can be done in this manner.

Could you give us your advise and views on this? Do you think the lawyer exists in Mississippi? How could he be found?

We are all well and busy. Give our best to Alice.

Yours sincerely, Ken Worth

Dear Mr. Monroe:

I have received your letter regarding my trip to the West Coast and the speaking engagements in Los Angeles, San Diego and San Bernardino. I will be pleased to fill these engagements and will reach Los Angeles not later than 4:00 the 23rd, as you suggest. I will send you later this week a mat of myself, some biographical information, and some material concerning the Southern Regional Council.

I think probably the best title for the talks I will give would be "Changing Patterns in the South" or, if you think it more exciting, "Desegregation comes to Dixie."

Best regards.

Dear Eason:

Many thanks for your check and I am pleased that you think the trip was worth the investment. From our point of view, the trip was most worthwhile, for it got across the story that we think must be understood by the rest of the nation. Personally, of course, the whole trip was delightful, and your friendship and kindness was one of the most pleasant aspects of the entire time.

I was pleased to hear of your more recent meeting in San Diego and that some of the people there remembered my presentation.

It was a real pleasure to get to know you and Bill Carpenter. I enjoyed my stay more than I can say and some day I, too, hope that it will be possible for us to meet and work together.

Best personal regards.

November 28, 1956

Mrs. Dorothy Tilly
1013 Highland View, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mrs. Tilly:

During the month of March I plan to be in the South meeting with the Union's affiliates in Kentucky, Florida and Louisiana. It strikes me that if you felt that some good might be accomplished, I would be glad to make myself available for other meetings, especially with groups not in the ACLU fold, or for talks with individuals.

As you know, the Union fully supports the Supreme Court decision but we do understand that the problem of compliance in the South is difficult and that many problems must be overcome. We also are not focussing attention solely on the South, as the issue of discrimination and segregation is a major problem in other sections of the country.

Because we feel that the churches in the South hold the key toward acceptance of the Supreme Court decision, we are anxious to talk to such groups, to church meetings as well as the leaders.

Needless to say, while the issue of racial equality is most pressing, there are other facets of civil liberties defense which I could share with people in the South. I realize how delicate the situation is and will certainly rely on your advice and guidance.

Sincerely yours,

Patrick Murphy Malin

Dear Mr. Malin:

Your letter of November 28 concerning your trip to the South has been delayed as I have tried to think through what we could do. If I knew your exact dates, I could make it possible for you to speak to a group of church women in Georgia and possibly Alabama, as I am to have workshops in March in both of these states. I suppose you know it's rather difficult just to get up a special meeting when the calendars are so full all the time. It would be most helpful to have you talk on civil liberties in general as we in our workshops spend our time seeking ways to ease the tensions and make it possible for the Supreme Court decision to meet with compliance.

On October 30-31st, I had a southwide meeting of Church women - Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish, and of both races. This type of thing I have been doing for a great many years, as issues would arise in the South. I am enclosing a copy of the gleanings from this workship.

I suppose you know we are having difficult times in the South with our Attorney Generals and our Governors. At the same time, there is a very strong group of people quietly working, and their work is becoming more and more effective.

With the best of season's greetings to you, I remain

Yours sincerely,

Mrs. M. E. Tilly

Dear Mrs. Tilly:

Thank you so much for your letter of December 14 concerning my trip to the South in March. As I can make my ACLU affiliate dates to fit your schedule, I suggest that you select the dates that you think best and I will tailor my schedule accordingly.

I am delighted to learn that you think appearances can be scheduled before groups of church women in Georgia and Alabama. Might I also suggest, if it is feasible and desired, that arrangements be made for appearances at general church meetings.

I have heard from Dr. Clement that he will be glad to work with you in setting up meetings and contacts, and he also advises that Mr. Harold Flemming, the new Director of the Southern Regional Council, might also be helpful. Perhaps his good offices could be used in terms of the general church meetings I refer to above.

I will be happy to talk on civil liberties in general as you suggest.

It would be repetitious for me to state again our heartfelt thanks for the yeoman service you are giving in the cause of improved race relations in the South, but I do want you to know that your kind of unpublicized but face-to-face contact work is extremely important; and the country is in your debt for your efforts to better the race relations picture.

As soon as I hear from you as to the March dates, I will be able to formulate final plans.

Again, thanks for your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,
Patrick Murphy Malin

Dear Mr. Malin:

I have just received your special appeal for funds for continuing the fight to increase the status of civil liberties in the United States with special emphasis on work in the South. As you probably know, our organization, the Southern Regional Council, is deeply engaged in the same work. I think it would be fair if in turn you donated to the work of the Council. This has been done by staff members of several national organizations to which I have sent contributions.

Best wishes in your work.

Dear Mr. Malin:

I do not blame you for being concerned because you did not have an answer to your letter of December 18th. Frankly, I was not here when it came and it was days old before I received it. Since the first of the year, I have not been in the office much as we have already been holding workshops of state groups.

I wish you might have been down here through January or February rathern than March. I do want you, if possible, to be with us on March 14 at the Workshop for Georgia Women to be held in the Wesley Memorial Church, 63 Auburn Avenue. The Alabama dates are pending. I hope to give you a definite date in the next day or so. I will be in Kentucky the week of the 25th and will also write you about this.

Life is very interesting here these days -- sometimes you are heartsick, then again comes some bright ray of hope, and you take courage and go on.

With the best of wishes to you.

Dear ~~Mr. Reitman~~ Alan:

My sincere apologies for this delay in answering your good letter of May 29th regarding the ACLU's statement on the jury trial amendment. I have been laid low with a virus for the last week, and in the confusion your letter didn't get dealt with.

The statement is a very sound clear analysis of the jury trial question, and we could use copies of it to good effect as an informational piece for people down here who are perplexed by this question. If it is not too late for us to take you up on your offer, we will appreciate whatever quantity you can let us have.

Best regards.

Mr. Harold Fleming, Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Harold:

I do not know if you have seen the enclosed text of our statement on the jury trial amendment to the civil rights legislation. I write because it has been inserted into the Congressional Record by Senators Clifford Case of New Jersey and Jacob Javitz of New York. We have a number of mimeographed copies on hand but we thought that the printed copy from the Record might be a useful educational tool. Do you think that you could use several hundred for your work in the South?

The statement is devoid of emotionally charged words, is non-political, and therefore might be better than other statements which naturally emphasize other interests.

Could you let me know as soon as possible as our Washington office is anxious to proceed on this?

Best wishes.

Cordially yours,

Alan Reitman

advertising business has been relatively trained in recent years in the number and acement of signboards, and although the public is unsympathetic, it is not indignant. Although some States would ban billboards along the Interstate System on their own, a majority would allow them.

The trend of State legislation, supported by court decisions, has been in favor of strict billboard regulation on high-speed limited-access roads. Outdoor advertising, although unchallenged in industrial areas, will find it difficult in the years ahead to stay on the new Interstate System.

As public esthetics develops as a factor in legislation, this heretofore permitted medium is coming into increasing conflict with local ordinances and zoning. No matter what decision Congress reaches, the battle of the billboards is likely to be fought out on the State and local level for the next generation.

STATEMENT BY AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION ON JURY TRIAL AMENDMENT TO CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of my colleagues to a statement which the American Civil Liberties Union has released today opposing the jury trial amendments to the civil rights bill.

As Senators know, the heart of the attack upon the right to vote bill (S. 83), now pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee, is the allegation by its opponents that persons cited for contempt of court under the bill's provisions would be denied the right to jury trial.

The bill in question would permit the Attorney General to bring a civil suit in the Federal district courts to enjoin State officials or others from depriving citizens of their right to vote. In the normal court case, of course, the party who is enjoined from a given course of action can be expected to comply with the court's order. Contempt cases arise only when the court's order is disobeyed.

It is in the latter kind of case that opponents of right to vote legislation now seek to impose a jury trial.

The injection of this issue into the discussion of S. 83 has engendered confusion not only in the press but in Congress as well. No supporter of constitutional rights likes to be charged with denying another's rights, particularly a right so fundamental as trial by jury. And much of the public does not understand that neither the Constitution nor prior legal precedent provides for a jury trial in contempt cases of the kind which might arise under S. 83.

It is, therefore, particularly gratifying to note the Civil Liberties Union's release today of a lucid and concise analysis of the jury trial amendment.

During its long career the Civil Liberties Union has steadfastly refused to temporize with any of our constitutional liberties. For this reason, its opposition to the jury trial amendment assumes particular significance at this time.

The jury trial is, of course, one of our most prized institutions of justice. While our Constitution does not guarantee jury trial in contempt cases, Congress has on occasion extended the right to jury trial to cases where the Constitution does not require it. I, for one, appreciate fully the jury's value as a check upon the arbitrary exercise of governmental power. But I am convinced that it has no place in so-called civil-rights legislation.

As the ACLU's memorandum points out:

> While there is always need to guard vigilantly against the misuse of Government power, including injunctions which are too broad and restrain constitutional activity (as we have recently argued is the case in the Clinton, Tenn., injunction), there is also need to prevent weakening of the power of our courts to uphold the law of the land. The right of equal treatment under law is fatally undermined when community sentiment blocks the enforcement of law.

Enforcement of the law has been undermined in some sections of the country where community sentiment has blocked effective enforcement of the right to vote. If court orders are to be respected in cases of this kind in which the Federal Government seeks to uphold public policy, the courts must be able to punish contemptuous acts. In conclusion, I quote once more from the ACLU's memorandum:

> To grant jury trials in the civil-rights legislation would protect officials who are failing to do their duty in protecting the constitutional rights of citizens. Jury trials in contempt cases growing out of such legislation would give a privileged position to State officials who might defy Federal judges upholding the law of the land.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement from the American Civil Liberties Union be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ACLU STATEMENT ON JURY TRIAL AMENDMENT TO CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

The American Civil Liberties Union believes that all Americans are entitled to all the civil liberties guaranteed in the Constitution, free speech and association, due process and equality before the law. To advance equality before the law for all Americans, particularly the Negro citizens of the South who have been denied equal treatment, the ACLU is supporting Federal legislation toward this objective—bipartisan legislation suggested by the administration and backed by influential leaders in the Democratic Party.

The key sections in this legislation authorize the Federal Government to seek by the civil remedy of injunction a more effective protection of the right to vote and other constitutional rights, against deprivation especially by State officials. This is proposed to insure more effective protection for Negroes against intimidation, coercion and physical assault which prevent their voting and enjoying other constitutional rights. The need for this civil relief was pointed up by the Attorney General, in his testimony of February 14, 1957, before the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights.

"Criminal prosecutions of course cannot be instituted until after the harm actually has been done, yet no amount of criminal punishment can rectify the harm which the national interest suffers when citizens are illegally kept from the polls. Furthermore, criminal prosecutions are often unduly harsh in this particular field where the violators may be respected local officials."

Civil rights legislation has been blocked for years by the filibuster and other devices. This year it is being opposed especially on the ground that persons who are charged with contempt of a Federal court injunction restraining interference with the right to vote will not receive a trial by jury. Opponents of the legislation correctly state that under present law, although a person charged with criminal contempt is generally entitled to a jury trial when the enjoined acts would be a violation of the criminal law, he is not entitled to it in a case where the United States has brought the action for injunction, as would happen under the proposed civil rights legislation.

The right of trial by jury is rooted deep in our constitutional guarantees, to prevent the power of Government being used as a weapon of oppression, among other purposes. The American Civil Liberties Union has been a vigorous defender of this right, even in some areas where it is not strictly required constitutionally, because of our strong belief that the abuse of governmental power can be limited by juries, which represent a cross-section of community sentiment rather than the views of a single judge. This concern for the citizen's liberty has made us apprehensive of broadening the power of Federal courts to prohibit criminal conduct under the threat of punishment for criminal contempt, as indicated in our February 27 statement on the Clinton, Tenn., case. That case concerned John Kasper and 16 other anti-integrationists who were arrested for contempt of the court order enjoining them from interfering with the Clinton school integration program.

The Constitution guarantees jury trial only in criminal cases, and in civil suits involving more than $20; there is no such guarantee in contempt cases. Until 1914, Congress made no provision at all for jury trials in contempt proceedings. Then, in the Clayton Act, it allowed jury trials in contempt cases where the acts were also violations of Federal or State criminal laws except, in order that the Federal Government might carry out its functions and enforce the laws of the land, in cases to which the United States is a party. Another exception was made in 1932, when the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act accorded labor unionists jury trials when they were charged with contempt of court injunctions in strike situations.

The absence of a jury trial in suits brought by the Government is not unusual. There are at least 28 other laws under which the United States is authorized to seek injunctions, without provision for jury trials; these include the antitrust laws, the Atomic Energy Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Securities and Exchange Act and acts affecting the Interstate Commerce Commission and Federal Trade Commission. Moreover, jury trials in contempt proceedings are not generally required under the constitutions or laws of the States, including the Southern States.

After full and careful study of the possible need for a jury trial amendment to the proposed civil rights legislation, we are convinced that the present jury trial argument is chiefly a contrived obstruction to defeat the desperately needed civil-rights legislation. So, we are vigorously opposed to any amendment requiring a jury trial.

What are the reasons for the ACLU's opposition to the jury amendment?

1. While there is always need to guard vigilantly against the misuse of Government power, including injunctions which are too broad and restrain constitutional activity (as we have recently argued is the case in the Clinton, Tenn., injunction), there is also need to prevent weakening the power of our courts to uphold the law of the land. The right of equal treatment under law is fatally undermined when community sentiment blocks the enforcement of law. The injunction is an effective legal technique to protect constitutional rights. As the Attorney General pointed out in his testimony, this method of protection would seek to prevent State officials from committing acts violative of a criminal statute. It is far better for all concerned—including those officials—to enjoin these acts before they are committed than to prosecute after the harm has been done. The main point to be kept in mind is that the proposed legislation aims simply at providing more effective enforcement of voting and other constitutional rights for all citizens.

2. Supporters of jury-trial amendments contend that to grant power to the courts to restrain criminal conduct would circumvent due process. However, before a person is enjoined he is entitled to all the guaranties of a fair hearing, with every opportunity to prove the invalidity of the application for the order. He also has a full right to appeal to higher courts, a check on arbitrary decisions. Even temporary restraining orders are issued only if the Government's affidavits show clearly that an immediate and irreparable loss will be suffered, so that no notice can be given and a hearing held. Then hearings on temporary restraining orders are quickly scheduled; the orders are of minimal duration; preliminary injunctions cannot be issued without notice and a hearing, which gives the defendants an opportunity to be heard. Then, at the trial for a permanent injunction, the Government has to present its case that there is a threat of irreparable injury; the defendants are represented by counsel, they may confront and cross-examine witnesses and present information to show that the injunction is unwarranted. Finally, if the order is disobeyed, it must be established beyond reasonable doubt that the disobedience was willful before a person can be punished for criminal contempt. The act of disobedience is an act of contempt of court, not an act violating a criminal statute, and it is penalized in order to maintain the court's traditional and indispensable authority to uphold the law—and the due process requirements provide a safeguard against the fear that Federal judges will not administer justice impartially, because of regarding violation of their injunctions as a personal affront or because of owing loyalty to the national administration under their appointment by the President.

3. A major argument advanced for the jury-trial amendment is the alleged discriminatory treatment of persons disobeying an injunction to guarantee civil rights, as compared with the treatment of labor unionists under the Norris-LaGuardia Act. But the very purpose of the Norris-LaGuardia Act was to support a congressional policy, that workers should be free to organize and bargain collectively; it was passed for the very reason that judges had been going beyond the law. As Senator PAUL DOUGLAS said, in a brief submitted to Congress on the jury-trial question on April 18:

"In the decades prior to the 1932 * * * courts would issue injunctions and use their contempt power indiscriminately, not to prevent violations of law but to prevent labor organization and freedom of collective bargaining. Decades of such demonstrated hostility by the courts to labor and its interests prompted Congress to implement the growing national policy in the labor field by specifically curtailing the Federal injunctive power in many areas of labor litigation and by providing that juries rather than judges determine whether contempt had been committed."

In short, the jury trials granted under the Norris-LaGuardia Act were included to protect people against oppressive government. To grant jury trials in the civil-rights legislation would protect officials who are failing to do their duty in protecting the constitutional rights of citizens. Moreover, Congress subsequently limited the Norris-LaGuardia Act jury trial provision by providing in the Taft-Hartley Act that such provision would not be applicable to injunctions sought by the United States under the new act.

The current congressional proposals to strengthen our civil-rights laws are the least dramatic and most cautious approach to the enforcement of basic constitutional rights. Their purpose is not to punish, but to prevent infringement of the right to vote. Jury trials in contempt cases growing out of such legislation would give a privileged position to State officials who might defy Federal judges upholding the law of the land.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to compliment my colleague, the Senator from New Jersey, for inviting the attention of the Senate to the document he has just offered, which refers to the key question on the proposed civil-rights legislation, the right to a trial by jury on a contempt citation brought by the United States Government.

I believe the procedure mentioned is nothing but begging the question. The procedure of citation for contempt is a time-honored method of procedure, and I am very glad to see that other organizations, in addition to those which are discussing the matter here, are coming to grips with it. I compliment the Senator from New Jersey for bringing this statement of the American Civil Liberties Union to the attention of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7221) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. KIRWAN, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. ROONEY, Mr. TABER, Mr. JENSEN, Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN, and Mr. CLEVENGER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVRESARY OF NORWEGIAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, this past weekend Norwegians and people of Norwegian descent celebrated "Syttende Mai," commemorating the 143d anniversary of Norwegian independence.

It is a great tribute to the great nation of Norway that this rugged land, washed along its cliffbound coasts by the Arctic Ocean, the North Sea, and the Atlantic Ocean, not only has withstood the forces of nature, but for a century and one-half has withstood attacks against its freedom and independence with equal courage, integrity, and perseverance.

One hundred and forty-three years ago, on May 17, 1814, a group of courageous and determined patriots met near Oslo to promulgate a liberal constitution, which has served as a guide for freedom-loving people the world over ever since.

This band of patriots showed the keen forethought that is a mark of Norwegian character.

The world was in conflict everywhe Britain and the United States were s entangled in the War of 1812; just a few days before the British had attacked and destroyed the forts at Oswego, N. Y. Mexico was in revolt against the Spanish Government. Napoleon was sent to Elba and the Bourbon dynasty was restored. All Europe, in a reaction to Napoleon's onslaught, seemed bent toward the "days of old."

But the people of Norway, though in a state of unrest, were looking ahead. They carefully studied the recently adopted constitutions of the United States, France, and Spain, and drafted a document of their own. They declared their independence with this constitution on May 17, 1814.

Charles XIII of Sweden, recognizing that the courageous Norwegians could not be intimidated, accepted the constitution before the year was out, declaring Norway a free, independent, indivisible and inalienable state, united in brotherhood to Sweden.

Through the years, many have learned that Norwegians cannot be intimidated.

Who will forget their dramatic role in World War II? Not only did they put up courageous battle against Nazi Germany against overwhelming odds, but later fought an unrelenting underground struggle that will forever stand in relief in the annals of history.

Norway, a nation like our own, born to democracy and dedicated to peace, today has refused again to be coerced by her gigantic neighbors, and has taken a forthright stand with the West in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and in the United Nations.

Sons and daughters of this sturdy Scandinavian country first came to the United States in 1825, bringing with them the love of hard work, a cast of individualism, a sense of craftsmanship and a devotion to the cause of democracy and freedom. More than a million Norwegians and Norwegian descendants are in the United States today, and more than one-fourth are located in my State of Minnesota. Through my mother, a native of Christiansand, Norway, I am happy to count myself among them. But all Americans, whatever their ancestry, rejoice today that Norway remains one of our greatest and most steadfast friends.

Mr. President, I desire now to advert to another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

THE RISING COST OF LIVING AND CORPORATION PROFITS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on March 8 I made a short statement in the Senate in which I took issue with administration charges and innuendoes that rising prices were largely due to the wage demands of American workers.

Much to my surprise I soon thereafter began receiving newspaper articles from all sections of the country attacking my speech, and by coincidence all the columns were markedly similar both in terms of reporting what I said and in the criticism thereof. It was evident that

Dear Harold:

Many thanks for your letter of June 5. I am having sent directly to you 500 copies of the ACLU statement on the jury trial amendment, which Senator Case inserted in the Congressional Record.

Cordially yours,

Alan Reitman

Alan Reitman
Assistant Director

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

Many thanks for your recent note. I am glad to have an opportunity to pass along to you ~~my~~ some ideas about the role of Northern-based agencies anent the South.

First of all, I do feel that there are things to be done by non-Southern groups. All of us have been dismayed at times by unwise antics on the part of well-meaning but misguided sympathizers from "outside." So I would share your misgivings unless the programs undertaken were carefully ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ planned and carried out, preferably in close collaboration with knowledgeable Southerners.

The groups that can help most are those which carry on truly specialized activity. ~~In~~ At a recent meeting of the CCD in Washington, for example, some of us from the South ~~proposed~~ advanced a program idea that we felt the ACLU or others might be willing to take on. In brief, the idea is to assign to the South a staff person ~~xxxxxxxxxxx~~ who would work exclusively with sympathetic lawyers ~~xxxxxxxxxxx~~ and organizations ~~xxx~~ ~~xxxxxxxx~~ with staffed human relations programs in the South. As you know, a formidable amount of repressive legislation has been passed by the Southern states. Southern organizations concerned with civil rights find themselves operating in ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ dangerous and uncharted legal waters. Most of them (like the SRC) do not ~~xxxxxx~~ have legal staff. They must depend instead on such voluntary counsel as friendly but busy local lawyers can give them. This is insufficient, especially since the field of ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ pro-segregation law and administration requires more specialization that a lawyer with a full-time practice can give it on a purely volunteer basis. At this point, a legally skilled agency could render valuable service — not the normal functions of counsel, but dealing with the special civil liberties problems raised by the new legislation.

I mention this only to illustrate the kind of thing that a Northern-based organization like ACLU might usefully do in the South.

The unions have a different kind of job to do -- namely, working with their own members and staffers in the South. Discrimination in union affairs, in hiring, and in upgrading are serious enough to require at least one full-time man working with the locals of each international operating in the South. Yet, as you know, almost none of the internationals have a staff member with this specific responsibility. As matters stand, Emory Via, serving on our staff through Ben Segal's program, is trying to fill as much of the gap as he can. At the very least, the unions can support and cooperate with this effort (as some of them are doing).

Not being a pacifist myself, I feel some reluctance to make a judgment activity of this kind. I do believe that the risk of unwittingly inflaming local sentiment is greatest in the case of highly principled individual action. I asked Emory Via, who is a pacifist, for his opinion, which follows: "Most likely to be effective are those whose pacifism is religiously based and who are willing to undertake the job of person-to-person contact with only partly persuaded religious leadership. That maturity, conviction, intelligence, and humility are required for this task is self-evident. Experienced northern pacifists might be useful as advisers to Southern colleagues on aims, methods, and alternative strategies."

I hope these random comments will be of some help. Perhaps the next time I am in New York, we can discuss this and other matters of mutual interest.

Warm regards.

Sincerely,

HCF

Possible uses of northern based agencies in South per Baldwin request.

ACLU: Utilized their lawyerly contacts in the South in three major ways:

1) public opinion as the law touches community problems; e.g. a constant hammering home by lawyers to support law and order, denounce civil strife, to support the court. This is an area which can be programmed but needs stimulation, ideas, and coordination.

2) advice to human relations agencies. This is not acting as their counsel, but to aid in problems that impinge upon civil liberties, their ramifications, what approaches can be utilized(through the law) this would almost be a "consultant" function by a lawyer.

3) legal research. There must be a dozen useful projects which could be undertaken immediately. Partly, we need summarizing what the law on given issues says for the various states, partly we need the kind of reporting of practice which lawyers are best equipped to give. e.g. the qualifications for jurors, the mechanics of selction, and any racial factors such as separate lists, actual use of Negroes,etc. And some of the background work for use in civil rts. com. type work. (Action projects such as the desegrgation of bar associations and the careful watching for discrimination in admission to the bar might be possibles.)

Unions: First, attention to their own immediate problems. Understand what their actual racial patterns and practices are in the South. Then can they put on at least one full time man to work with their own locals, pointing up problems which the locals and staff refuse to see, doing labor eduction work on civil rts. and Southern problems, aiding in getting union cooperation with human relations agencies and others in positve community action. Unions need to think through more forcefully and positively what their role is in merit employment and upgrading. The usual dodge that management hires is used by reps. of even the unions with the best reputations in this area. National level conferences with management, re-examination of upgrading policies and how to procure and process discrimination grievances are two things that can be done in this feild. A willingness to quietly aid agencies in this field to put the pressure on the union itself for employment practice changes is one possible strategy where the union feels it can not lead out on this task. Continued emphasis on the grounds for political cooperation and respectuful, cooperative approaches to Negro leadership with candor about what can be delivered and what not would an aid.

Pacifists: Perhaps the greatest use of pacifists would be of those whose pascifism is religiously based and who are willing to undertake the job of person to person contact, perhaps with not-sufficiently-convinced religious leadership, on moral and spiritual grounds seeking to stimulate ideas and impulses which can lead to attitude change. That maturity, conviciton, intelligence, and humility are required for this task is self-evident.

Experienced northern pacifists might be useful in collaboration with southern colleagues in non-violent positive action where plans have been conceived and what is needed is careful thinking and planning, and understanding of aims, methosd and alternatives.

Almost without exception, fly-by-night, or compulsive demonstrations are without value and can lead to real harm.
It seems to me that it would be of value to have some projects thought out in advance and let them be tested as ideas against ~~other~~ Southern religious leaders judgement and perhaps that of agency personnel as well. It would usually be a mistake to attempt to make these kinds of activities a part of agency program; but agencies have responsibility for recognizing that beneficial programs other than agency-type can be projected and perhaps should encourage their projection. In

In answereing Baldwin in general, it seems to me a mistake to accept his assumption that Northern based ~~ag~~ groups would only agitate the situation. It is equally a mistake to fail to produce handles which sincerely interested groups can grap to express thier interest. We should always be in the position of being able to put the monkey on their back, causing them to give helpful performance or admit that interest is not to be backed. I agree with Charlie Brown that we can use all the sympathy that we can get. I extend this to outright aid as well.

Enclosure - Semi-annual Report of SRC

I appreciate your thought of me, and would appreciate more your confidential opinion as to how useful any northern-based agency can be in the South now. I refer to the unions, the ACLU and the pacifists, all of whom yearn to get into it, with Southern sympathizers, of course. But I wonder if they won't inflame an already hot conflict. As I am asked for advice and help, I'd value your confidential view.

Warm regards,

Dear Miss Bloomer:

We have received your letter of September 24 requesting a list of our affiliated state organizations. I note that the letter was addressed to Dr. Mitchell. He has retired to Scotland and his successor is Harold C. Fleming.

I am enclosing a list of the state organizations so that you may mail to them the 37th Annual Report of the American Civil Liberties Union. These state organizations will become unaffiliated as of October 1st, but we shall continue a close working relationship with them.

My warm regards to Pat Malin.

Dear Harold:

Many thanks for your letter of September 23 and the enclosures. For our affiliate use I think the 1950 pamphlet, Race In The News, is a little bit dated. However the memorandum on press relations is excellent and timely and with a few special civil liberties points, I think can be effectively used. We do appreciate your making these documents available to us.

Let's hear from you if you think there is anything more that we can do on the general situation.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

Dear Alan:

Thanks for your letter expressing concern about Hazel Smith's plight. I'm glad you share our feeling that it is a case worthy of some effort.

One thing we didn't make clear, I'm afraid, was the reason for confidentiality. Mrs. Smith and sympathizers who know her situation (e.g., Will Campbell, Gene Cox) feel strongly that public championing of her cause by the liberals afar would be damaging, if not fatal. Thus we have no choice but to limit the use of the material to private communications. Certainly it would be helpful and appreciated if you should place the information in the hands of the influential people you mention. But any approaches involving publicity or the likelihood of publicity are closed to us.

This circumstance sorely restricts our efforts to muster assistance for Hazel Smith, and I only wish it were otherwise.

I hope to see you at the Mass Media Committee meeting in February.

Cordially,

Harold C. Fleming

Dear Harold:

I have read with fascination and dismay the letter and background material circulating with respect to Mrs. Hazel Brannon Smith of Lexington, Mississippi. It is a shocking case, and I certainly hope that financial help needed will be forthcoming.

I note that your letter is marked confidential, but I would like to place the information in the hands of some people who might be helpful; for example; Bob Brown of Editor & Publisher, and Jim Kerney of the Trenton, N. J. Times. We probably also could have some senator like Paul Douglas or Jack Javits comment on this situation on the Senate floor. I also would like to carry this story in our weekly bulletin service, which gets to about 1,000 public opinion people in the country. In other words, can the material be used publicly? Please let me know.

Best wishes.

Dear Fred:

Thank you for your note about the ABA meeting in Georgia. We share your feeling about this matter, but we don't believe a New York-based protest will have any real effect. I understand that this is a regional conference, not the national ABA meeting, and I imagine that even if the meeting had been transferred to some other southern state the same problem would exist - state opposition to the Supreme Court rulings. And as there are a good number of ABA lawyers who disagree with the high court's position, we think it would be wiser to continue educational efforts within the organization to bring it around to the court's way of thinking. Our comments are based on a discussion with our Board chairman, Ernest Angell, who is quite active in the ABA and alert to the problem you raised.

Cordially yours,

Pat Malin

Mr. Rowland Watts
American Civil Liberties Union
170 Fifth Avenue

Dear Mr. Watts:

This is to follow-up our telephone conversation of a couple of weeks ago. You will recall our understanding that either Mr. Angell or you would write to Douglas Arant of Birmingham urging that Mr. Vann of that firm be released to provide legal counsel for the Birmingham Council on Human Relations. Neither Bob Hughes or I have received a carbon of such a letter, so I am assuming that it has not been sent.

Since this is a matter of some urgency, I do hope you can let me know at once where the matter stands and what we may expect. The Birmingham Council has been re-organized and has decided to meet monthly from now on, let the chips fall where they may. Of course, the group is not looking for trouble; on the contrary, it is carrying on normal program in the hope that no further molestation by the police authorities will occur. But, knowing Birmingham, anyone would understand that the possibility of police interference is very real. Therefore, it is of great importance to have a local lawyer whose availability to the group is assured if the occasion arises.

I understand that Vann is favorably disposed and has discussed the matter informally with Arant, who also seems favorably disposed and is awaiting word from ACLU before making any decision on the matter.

It is a tribute to ACLU that its influence carries this weight, and I strongly hope that you will bring it to bear at once so that the matter of prospective legal counsel may be decided before an emergency situation is upon us.

There may be reasons why you feel this inadvisable. Or perhaps a letter has already gone forward to Arant that we know not of. If so, please let me know promptly and candidly. I shall be looking forward expectantly to a reply at your earliest convenience.

All good wishes.

Re: Alabama group associated with the Southern Regional Council

This is a little out of Illinois but I thought I ought to report to you that apparently ACLU is coming in for a good bit of disenchantment on the part of some of those who should be our best and most useful friends in the south because of the above situation.

As the story comes to me, it has to do with our failure just simply to respond to letters re working out legal aid for the Alabama group which may be up against a real fight over a state law forbidding inter-racial meetings even if private. Since we - an affiliate with whom the National office has no need to be polite or too punctual - have never had this trouble, it seems to me incredible. But there it is.

In addition to the immediate situation, there is the great danger - one version put it - that we get written off as a serious source of help in the south. The south is a great grapevine and rumors spread and multiply real damage can be done.

So there you are.

Dear Rowland:

This is belated thanks for your letter and memorandum concerning Interagency Cooperation on Legal Work in the South. The memorandum was presented at the last Southern Interagency Conference and it was agreed that we should explore further the ways of achieving the kind of coordination you describe. We also discussed the possibility of a short term project which would involve an intensive period of factfinding, consultation, and finally, the preparation of a guide for beleaguered individuals and groups. The thought was that a person with appropriate skills, probably a lawyer, might carry out such a temporary project under the sponsorship of one of the agencies concerned with legal aid.

Tartt Bell of the Southeastern Regional Office, American Friends Service Committee, is the chairman of the sub-committee charged with exploring these possibilities. I hope that he, as well as I, will have a chance soon to pursue these matters with you in more specific detail.

I was pleased to hear that Mr. Angell has discussed the Birmingham problem with Mr. Arant. I do hope that a favorable decision will result from this discussion and will look forward hopefully for further word from you.

Dear Harold:

I am sorry that neither Lou Joughin nor I will be able to attend the Southern Interagency Conference on May 27th and 28th. I ask that you consider the enclosed memorandum concerning the securing of legal assistance particularly in the legislative field. I had understood that the legal subcommittee would meet and give me an opportunity to present this proposal before the Interagency Conference meeting.

I have great hopes that the Birmingham situation will be resolved soon. Ernest Angell, our national director, has discussed the problem with Douglas Arant and he seems favorably disposed. Mr. Arant, however, has to take it up with his partners, and I will phone you if I get word in the next two days if the news is favorable.

Sincerely yours,

Rowland

Memorandum

May 26, 1958

To: Southern Interagency Conference

From: Rowland Watts, staff counsel - American Civil Liberties Union

Re: Interagency Cooperation on Legal Work in the South

1. Litigation

All litigation that is likely to develop into a constitutional test should receive clearance and coordination by the agencies concerned through their national legal staffs. This is necessary to conserve efforts and to avoid possibly conflicting actions. The ACLU has undertaken to do this particularly with the NAACP in a number of cases and strongly urges that there be a regularized procedure for exchange of legal discussion on a national level.

2. Local Legal Consultation

The ACLU, while recognizing its Southern cooperating attorney service needs to be greatly strengthened, believes that this approach to the problem is the only feasible one at this time. If a continuing procedure for agency referral is developed, the ACLU will query its Southern attorneys as to availability for interagency referral and seek permission to add the attorney's name to a central list. In the meantime we will continue to refer individual cases to local attorneys where available.

3. Legislative Reporting and Research

It is believed that this program should be entirely independent of the litigative and legal consultation services even though some of the same attorneys may be involved. In discussing this problem with local attorneys in several of the key Southern capitols, it became apparent that having staff counsel available in Atlanta or any other Southern point offered slight, if any, improvement over having staff counsel available in New York. If funds become available for this program, the ACLU proposes that it be implemented as follows:

a. Employ an attorney (or possibly a qualified non-professional*) in each state capitol on a retainer basis during the session of the legislature; to keep a daily check of all bills introduced and forward copies of any that are of possible interest to the office of a cooperating agency (probably in New York).

b. Attorneys for the cooperating agency will promptly review such bills and consult with attorneys for other agencies if deemed necessary.

c. A list of all bills received will periodically be distributed to all agencies.

d. A copy of the significant bills together with a preliminary analysis without recommendation for action shall be sent to to all agencies.

e. The local attorney (or other reporter) in each state shall be advised of each bill determined to be potentially significant by an ad hoc committee of attorneys of at least three agencies; he will then have the responsibility to report promptly the progress of the bill and any other pertinent information incidentally acquired. He specifically will have no authority to take any action or make any representations on behalf of any agency unless specially retained by it.

f. Each agency will determine for itself what action, if any, to take locally on any specific bill - or, for that matter on any law.

g. If any of the significant bills are enacted into law, all cooperating agencies will be invited to participate in a conference to consider legal action to support or challenge such law but participation in this conference will not be binding as to action on any agency not so committing itself.

*The ACLU has raised with several of the women't organizations the possibility of their supplying this local reporting service as part of their program. If this could be worked out with assurance that the assignment would be responsibly fulfilled, it would greatly minimize the expense involved. We hope to have positive information on this possibility within the next several weeks.

Dear Harold:

Many thanks for your letter of June 11 enclosing the UPI clipping from the Atlanta Journal charging that the Union has been cited as a Communist-front organization by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Technically there was such a citation by the forerunner of the House Committee, the old Fish Committee, way back in 1931. However, certainly no such designation has been made by a federal agency since such time. I intend to bring that correction to the UPI quite forcefully.

I enclose a copy of my letter to UPI as well as a letter of correction to the Atlanta Journal.

Sincerely yours,

Alan

Editor
Atlanta Journal
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Sir:

Our attention has been drawn to your UPI dispatch from Baton Rouge, Louisiana of June 10 concerning the investigation of Louisiana State University faculty members who signed a petition opposing various segregation bills before the State Legislature. In referring to Professor Waldo F. McNier, who organized the petition, the UPI story states that he is an "officer of the American Civil Liberties Union, which has been cited as a Communist-front organization by the U.S. House Committee on Un-American Activities."

This statement is wholly inaccurate. To the contrary, on October 23, 1939, the then chairman of the House Committee, Cong. Martin Dies, flatly stated that there was no evidence that the ACLU aided the Communist cause. This example of irresponsible reporting adds to the existing confusion which links Communism and racial integration. The fact is that the LSU faculty members and the American Civil Liberties Union opposed these bills because of our belief that the American principle of equality for all, as proclaimed by the Supreme Court, should be accepted. Our action has nothing whatsoever to do with Communism or sympathy for the Communist cause.

Sincerely yours,

Patrick Murphy Malin
Executive Director

Mr. Earl Johnson, General News Manager
The United Press
International News Service
220 East 42 Street
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Johnson:

Our attention has been drawn to the UPI story from Baton Rouge, Louisiana of June 10 concerning the investigation of the Louisiana State University faculty members who signed a petition opposing a package of segregation bills before the State Legislature. I enclose the text of the UPI story which appeared in the June 10 Atlanta Journal.

You will note that one section of the story concerns a statement by Waldo F. McNier, associate English professor at LSU. After identifying McNier as an official of the American Civil Liberties Union, the UPI, apparently on its own authority, states that the ACLU "has been cited as a Communist-front organization by the U.S. House Committee on Un-American Activities."

I know that you and other members of the UPI staff know the total inaccuracy of this statement. The only such charge by a Congressional body was made far back in 1931 by the Fish Committee of the House of Representatives, which we promptly denied and generally this accusation has been regarded as having no foundation in fact. As you know, the Union's work has been lauded by such eminent Americans as Presidents Eisenhower and Truman and General MacArthur. Since 1931 no Congressional body or executive department has made any such statement concerning the ACLU. In fact, the charge of Communist support was flatly denied on October 23, 1939 by the then chairman of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, Cong. Martin Dies. I enclose the text of Cong. Dies' statement.

Undoubtedly this kind of inaccurate reporting not only harms the name of the Union in the South, but unfortunately confuses the issue of racial integration and Communism. The canard that persons favoring integration must be Communists is frequently expressed by opponents of integration and already has done much harm to efforts to advance race relations.

I trust that you will promptly inform the Baton Rouge UPI bureau and the reporter responsible for this statement so that there will be no future occurances of this kind.

Sincerely yours,

Alan Reitman
Assistant Director

Dear Alan:

You have probably seen the United Press International story, enclosed as it ran in yesterday's Atlanta Journal. According to this version at least the UPI states flatly, apparently on its own authority, that the ACLU has been cited as subversive by the House Un-American Activities Committee. We thought this clipping might contribute to whatever action you might decide to take.

I hope I will see you at the Mass Media meeting next week.

Sincerely,

Dear Alan:

Thank you for posting me on the outcome of your correspondence with UPI. Earl Johnson's reply certainly speaks well for your relations with the Press.

In case you have not seen it, enclosed is a copy of your letter as published by the Atlanta Journal. It looks as though they edited it some, but not damagingly.

I am sorry I didn't see you at the Mass Media Committee meeting last week. We hatched some interesting plans which Harry Fleischman will no doubt pass on to you.

Dear Harold:

I thought you would like to have Earl Johnson's reply concerning the recent U.P.I. statement about the Union coming out of Baton Rouge and the LSU-segregation controversy. We certainly could not ask for better evidence of support from U.P.I., and I hope that the Baton Rouge correspondent will know better the next time around.

Many thanks again for bringing this matter to our attention.

Best wishes.

Dear Mr. Reitman,

Thank you for letting me know about the Baton Rouge story of June 10, which I had not seen previously. What a shame that you should have to send me assurances about the position of the ACLU! But obviously the facts need restating for our correspondent in Baton Rouge, and I am communicating at once with our Louisiana capital staff and with other U.P.I. bureaus in the area. You did not ask for a correction, but if we can find a way to make one that will get printed we shall do so. Needless to say, I am embarrassed by our error.

With best wishes,

Dear Jack:

I am following up on my telephone conversation of Tuesday concerning the suggested article about the efforts of clergymen in the South to create an atmosphere favorable to acceptance to the Supreme Court decision on desegregation. The enclosed statement came from Harold Fleming, executive director of the Southern Regional Council. The Council's headquarters are in Atlanta and I am sure they can provide further details if this is needed. If there is anything more that we can do to help, please let me know. Many thanks again for considering our suggestion.

SUMMARY OF ACTION TAKEN BY SOUTHERN CLERGYMEN

ON DESEGREGATION PROBLEM

1) In addition to the two "Ministers' Manifestoes" issued in Atlanta, similar statements have been made by the clergy in Richmond (Va.), Houston (Tex.), Gainesville (Ga.), and several other cities. The minister of Virginia forthrightly opposed "Massive resistance" at the outset.

2) A group of Protestant clergymen in Mobile publicly supported Negro ministers who asked for voluntary desegregation of buses.

3) Several ministers of Little Rock have courageously championed desegregation; several of them accompanied the Negro children to school in the first troubled days of Sept. 1957. The Rev. Colbert S. Cartwright, pastor, Pulaski Heights Christian Church, has been one of the most vocal of this group.

4) The Rev. Robert McNeil (Presbyterian) of Columbus, Ga., made a statement of conscience on the segregation issue in Look a year or two ago. He has been under attack since, but recently the Presbytery of S. W. Ga. upheld him and gave him power to administer the affairs of the church without dependence on the Session.

5) A number of ministers have lost their pulpits rather than be silent or hypocritical on racial questions. We can document some of these cases.

6) There is the well known case of the Rev. Mr. Turner, Baptist, of Clinton, Tenn., who escorted the Negro students to the high school and whose resulting beating turned the tide of public sentiment there.

7) Bishop Randolph Claiborne, Episcopal of Atlanta, has several times spoken out sharply against segregationist pressures and tactics. So have Episcopal bishops elsewhere.

8) There are comparable examples of forthright leadership by Catholic clergymen - Bishop Waters of N. C., Archbishop Rummel of New Orleans and others who have desegregated facilities under their control.

9) Ministers individually have given disproportionate leadership to liberal organized efforts. Most of the executives and many of the lay leaders of the state councils on human relations are ministers, most of them younger men. Ministers have also taken leadership in the new movements to preserve public schools, as in Norfolk. This is an old story in SRC.

Of course the picture is far from uniformly rosy. Many ministers have suffered retaliation for their words and deeds. Many, many more have been silent, inert, even reactionary. But, as a class, the clergymen have been a liberal force exceeding in numbers that of any other professional group. And the indications are that their leadership will steadily increase.

Dear Harry:

From the enclosed, it looks as if we have not hit pay dirt but at least we stirred up some interest on our story suggestion. It certainly cannot hurt to have our additional pressure and as I think I told you John Oakes, the editorial writer, also said he would mention to Catledge that the idea is a good one.

Dear Mr. Reitman:

This is to express our appreciation for the trouble you took to send me the suggestion in your letter of December 3 -- namely, a survey or series on the situation of students not attending school as a result of the desegregation ruling.

We will, of course, keep your suggestion in mind. In fact, it already had occurred to us, but we thought it was perhaps a little too early for such a round-up. We hope to get to it later and, in the meantime, will continue to follow the story on a spot-news basis.

Again, thanking you for your interest and suggestion, I am

Dear Mr. Reitman:

A copy of my letter of January 13 to Pat Malin is enclosed, as you requested.

In writing Pat of my reactions, I was of course writing on a purely personal level in the light of my long acquaintance with him, and I certainly had no desire to make a "cause celebre" of the matters on which I commented. If this were the case I would have referred them to our Chairman for his official comments. I simply felt that from my own personal viewpoint the situation was not quite as bad as it was reported to be, although as I said, it is distressing enough to cause a good deal of worry and concern in view of my own deep and abiding desire to find solutions to some very difficult problems.

Should you be in Washington in the near future, it would be a privilege to have an opportunity to talk with you about the problem as I see it. On the other hand, I occasionally get to New York on business; perhaps we could meet on one of these occasions.

Very sincerely yours,

Dear Pat,

I have read with interest the copy of your 38th Annual Report which was so kindly sent to me. I find in it much to give encouragement in the eternal struggle with which we are concerned. It is a valuable and helpful piece of information, and I thank you for it.

I was interested, of course, in the assessment of the work of this Committee on page 64. It is firm in its criticism, which is always helpful. My only comment is that I wish there had not been so much reliance on the criticisms by the NAACP for this assessment; I simply do not think this organization is entirely correct in its evaluation of our problem.

The initial gains in Negro Federal employment were made during the war years, and much of this was in the temporary war agencies. Despite fears that this employment would drop after the war, it apparently did not, but instead increased. For example, Negro employment in the Washington agencies was about 19% in 1944. A 1956 survey showed it to be about 24%. I would not regard this as "Progress virtually ended," as the NAACP states.

I do not quarrel with the basic criticism that the picture in the South is dismaying. It is not good. But I do disagree with the position that Negroes are not employed above the menial job classifications in that area. While for a number of reasons the South is behind the rest of the nation in white-collar Negro employment in the government, it is not at all difficult to point to a large number of Federal installations in the deep South, other than the post offices, where Negroes are not only employed in non-menial jobs but are also supervising white employees.

As far as our own work is concerned, I think we are doing more than the Report indicates. Under the terms of the Executive Order by which we operate, we do not have "police" authority; this belongs to the agencies. Our job is to supplement this authority in as many ways as possible, and I think we have made satisfactory progress on this. As almost all professionals will agree, employment discrimination is not ended by administrative fiat, albeit that without it discrimination cannot be ended. The basic problem for us is the development of those techniques which will eliminate the "road blocks" of the fears, uncertainties and stereotypes which prevent an unwavering adherence to the policy when appointing officers exercise the freedom of choice which civil service regulations afford them.

I write all of this from the point of view of my deep respect for integrity of the ACLU and my long admiration and regard for its Director. It seems impossible that twenty years have passed since you clarified the complexities of foreign exchange for a very green college freshman, but counting on my fingers tells me this is so.

With all good wishes for continued success in your work,

Cordially yours,

Ross Clinchy
Executive Director

RE: Ross Clinchy comment on Annual Report

Clinchy has criticised, albeit gently, the section of the annual report concerning the Committees on Government Contracts and Government Employment Policy. His letter is attached; the original was lost in the office, hence his second copy and letter to me.

As we have made no independent study of the two committees and the one group that did is the NAACP, I relied on the NAACP's labor secretary, Herbert Hill, as the major source for comment on the committees. In checking with Hill this morning, he affirmed my view that Clinchy's statement about the increase of Negro employment in Washington deals with a special situation and does not reflect the national picture we were discussing. With respect to the employment of Negroes in other than menial jobs, Hill says this statement was based on an exhaustive study of the problem he and the Southern Regional Council representative made. He suggests that we challenge Clinchy for specific information as to places where Negroes are supervising white employees. As for Clinchy's third point, this is a matter of interpretation as to how far the Presidential Committee can go. It is difficult to track down examples of non-vigorous action, but Hill and the NAACP feel that a more liberal interpretation of the Committee's power would mean more employment of Negroes by government agencies. Note that we did not make any statement in the report about the problem of "interpretati of powers," confining ourselves to comment that the Committee is making no real progress in Southern communities.

I would be glad to talk with Clinchy about this, but as you will be in Washington this week and you are his "old teacher," I thought you might want to talk with him personally.

February 6, 1959

Mr. Ross Olinsky
Executive Director
The President's Committee on Government Employment Policy
Washington 25, D.C.

Dear Mr. Olinsky:

Thank you for your letter of January 27 and the second copy of your January 13 letter to Pat Malin. He has read your comment and asked me to express his appreciation for your remarks.

After re-reading your January 13 letter it seems to me that three separate questions are raised about our comment in the Annual Report:

1. The gains made in Negro federal employment. You cite the increase in the Washington agencies as evidence to disprove the statement we made, but I wonder whether the Washington scene reflects the national picture. We very much would like to have specific information from you on this point.

2. The question of whether Negroes are employed above the menial job classification by government agencies in the South. I understand that the NAACP report on the subject was made after an exhaustive study conducted not only by the NAACP, but the Southern Regional Council. Here too we would very much like to have specific information on the statement you made.

3. The authority of the Committee under the Executive Order raises the usual question of interpretation of assigned power. While we did not discuss this particular idea in the report, I think it is true that more vigorous application of the powers given to the Committee would advance Negro employment.

I trust that our remarks will not be regarded as a defense against your comment, which we are very glad to receive, but as an effort to further elucidate an admittedly complicated problem. As the editor of the Report I am particularly aware of the need of accurate information, and for this reason I hope that you will reply to the specific requests made above.

I appreciate your invitation to talk with you in person about this when I am next in Washington and I certainly will call you.

Sincerely yours,

Alan Reitman

Mr. Alan Reitman
Assistant Director

Dear Mr. Reitman:

I hope you will pardon my delay in replying to your letter of February 6, requesting further information on the comments I had made previously. Our Committee came in for its monthly meeting shortly afterward, and I needed to dig into our files to pull together the information requested by you.

I sincerely appreciated your comment that your own remarks should not be regarded as a defense against my comments, but rather as an attempt to throw more light on a complicated problem. I would have it no other way; certainly what I said was not intended as an "attack" on your report, for I have too much respect for Pat Malin, the report and the ACLU to take such an approach, and as I said I have no quarrel with the basic statement that the Southern situation is dismaying.

I would like to cover the points you outlined by taking them one by one:

1. With regard to the gains made in Negro federal employment. Facts on this question are few and far between, but I can give you those on which I based my judgment.

In 1945, the First Report of the old Fair Employment Practices Commission stated that as of March 1944, Negro employment in the Washington agencies was 19.2% of the total, and Negro employment in the field service was 12%.

In 1956, we had a survey made of Negro federal employment in five cities--Washington, Chicago, Los Angeles, St. Louis, and Mobile, Alabama. Washington came up with a Negro employment figure of about 24% the other four cities ranged from Mobile with about 16% to Chicago with about 28%. While those four cities do not by any means represent the total field service, they do involve four strategic centers, and all were above the 12% of 1944. I would be very much surprised if other urban areas not surveyed would bring the overall average down to 12%. If some other organization has made a nation-wide survey which shows this to be true, then I am wrong.

2. My second statement to the effect that there are a number of Federal establishments in the South with white-collar Negro employees was made on the basis of the impression I have gained from reviewing the investigations of complaints made under our policy since 1956. I went back to these files, and listed the situations where such investigations indicated such employment. Here are some of the examples we know of:

Virginia - In Norfolk and Portsmouth, the Navy has Negro typists, clerks, and engineers. At Langley Air Force Base the Air Force has Negro clerks, and had a Negro supervisor of stock records as early as 1956. The Norfolk Naval Air Station has calculating machine operators and clerks; the Naval Supply Center has Negro storekeepers supervising whites. The Army at Fort Lee, Fort Eustis, and Fort Monroe has dental assistants, typists, and training aide specialists. The Veterans Administration in Richmond has doctors, nurses, and clerks.

North Carolina - The Internal Revenue has high-grade revenue agents in Greensboro, Durham, and Winston-Salem. The Farmers Home Administration has Negro assistant county supervisors.

South Carolina - The Navy in Charleston has Negro machinists.

Georgia - The Agricultural Marketing Service in Augusta had a Negro clerk, and in Savannah has Negro biological aides. The Internal Revenue has a supervisory supply clerk in Atlanta. Robins Air Force Base at Macon has Negro typists and Negro mechanics supervising whites. The Veterans Administration Hospital at Atlanta has white-collar employees. The Army at Fort Gordon has a Negro training officer and clerks. Fort McPherson in Atlanta has some Negro typists.

Florida - The Jacksonville Naval Air Station has typists, clerks, and skilled wage-board workers. (These I have seen for myself). The Naval Air Station at Pensacola employs skilled sheetmetal workers.

Louisiana - In New Orleans, the Navy employs clerks and typists; the Army's Gulf Transportation Command has clerks. The Air Force in Shreveport has card-punch operators.

Mississippi - The Naval Construction Battalion Center at Gulfport has Negro mechanics.

Alabama - Brookley Field at Mobile has a wide range of white-collar Negro workers. Maxwell Field at Montgomery has white-collar Negroes. The Army's Fort Rucker has Negro flight instructors.

Tennessee - The Memphis Air Force Depot has Negro clerks, as does the Naval Air Station at Memphis. Mallory Air Force Base in Memphis had 31 Negro supervisors in 1956, as well as clerks. TVA at Knoxville has Negroes in a wide range of white-collar jobs, from professionals to clerks.

I have several comments on this information. First, it is based only on situations where complaints have been made; some of this information goes back to 1956, and it is quite possible that there have been some changes either for better or for worse. My main point is, however, that there are probably a good many other such situations where progress has been made, but on which we have no knowledge because no investigations have been made.

Secondly, I am well aware of the fact that these situations, no matter how many, still represent somewhat of a token employment of Negroes in terms of the total number of agencies. I certainly do not cite this information to prove that all is well in the South. I cite it only to indicate that some break-throughs have been made.

My own estimate of the situation is this--that in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Veterans Administration and Post Office in the South, considerable progress is being made. These agencies combined cover at least two-thirds of the total civilian employment in the South. What remains are a large number of smaller offices usually located in downtown office buildings. It is in these smaller offices that our problem is most acute, and where breaking the white-collar line has been most difficult. Our objective in the South, therefore, would seem to be two-fold: first, to maintain and expand the initial break-throughs in the big employers mentioned above, and secondly, to obtain break-throughs in the smaller offices.

3. I don't think there is much point in going into a detailed discussion on the interpretation of assigned power. Much of this depends upon such factors as budget, personalities, and an overall judgment of the realities of the situation. But I would certainly concede that we must continue to search for ways and means to expand our influence and authority. To remain static and to refuse to try new ideas because of a rigid interpretation of our authority would be a fatal position to adopt. If we ever get together, this is one topic I'd like to explore with you.

This has been an uncommonly long letter, and I appreciate your patience. I doubt if I've proven much, except to explain why we believe there is some reason for feeling more optimistic about the Southern problem than your Report indicates. At the same time, we are well aware of the tremendous job that remains to be done. We intend to do the best we can to improve the situation.

Sincerely yours,

Ross Clinchy

Dear Herb:

Remember our discussion a few weeks ago concerning the answer from Ross Clinchy of The President's Committee on Government Employment Policy regarding our statement in the annual report on the failure of his group to make sufficient progress eliminating discrimination against Negroes. As we worked out our reply, I wrote him asking that he substantiate the contentions he made. I enclose a copy of his reply, which is most interesting reading. Note on Pages 2 and 3 that he includes among white-collar workers Negro mechanics and sheet metal workers.

I would like to have your reaction to this letter, particularly on the factual accuracy point. I would appreciate your keeping the information between the two of us for the time being. Thank you again for all your help.

Dear Alan:

Your exchange of letters with Ross Clinchy is most interesting.

The material to which Herb Hill evidently has referred was collected last summer by a knowledgeable person in each of several Southern cities firsthand. SRC didn't actually do any fact-finding, and we lay no claim to authority on this subject. Our role was to line up people in places like Atlanta and Charlotte who were closely familiar with the government employment picture. We did this for Bill Peters, who was preparing an article for LOOK on the subject. The LOOK piece never ran, but Bill has summarized the information rather fully in his just-published book, The Southern Temper.

I suggest that you get hold of the book and cite it to Mr. Clinchy as authority for the discriminatory practices which ACLU, properly, has deplored.

I'll be interested in any further developments you may have a chance to share.

Dear Harold:

The comment in our last annual report concerning the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy has stirred slightly Ross Clinchy, the executive director of the agency. As we did not make any independent study of the President's Committee, I relied chiefly for information on its work on Herb Hill, the NAACP labor secretary. Herb told me that the NAACP material was collected in collaboration with the Council.

There are a number of factual points in the correspondence between Clinchy and myself, on which I don't have up-to-date data. As Herb has left the country for several months on a U. N. mission, I wonder if you or one of your associates who worked with him on this could comment on the points raised by Clinchy. I would appreciate whatever help you could give us on this.

Best wishes.

OF PART I

OF THE REPORT OF THE

JOINT LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE L.S.U.

Presented at the Annual Meeting of the

Louisiana Civil Liberties Union

May 28, 1959

Louisiana Civil Liberties Union
Baton Rouge

1. BACKGROUND OF THE REPORT

This pamphlet is in answer to Part I of a report issued July 2, 1958 by the Special Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate Louisiana State University, under the chairmanship of Senator William Rainach. The report is highly critical of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), of which the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union (LCLU) is an affiliate. Our purpose in making this analytical reply is to show, in detail and in sum, that the committee's charges against the ACLU are wholly without foundation or substance.

We had hoped to base this comment on the complete report of the committee, because Part I states: "The next portion of this report will complete the study of the A.C.L.U." (page 7). To the best of our knowledge, the announced second part has not been issued. Nor, in fact, did we receive a copy of Part I from the committee, but rather from one of our "spies" in the state capitol. The failure to make its accusations available to the accused organization was quite in line, however, with the committee's failure to request or secure any information whatever from the accused organization while preparing its attack on the ACLU.

To see the report in proper perspective, it is necessary to review the events leading up to the creation of the Special Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate LSU. What follows in this section, therefore, is a chronological summary of the civil liberties controversy which rocked Louisiana and drew nation-wide attention in the summer of 1958.

In the spring of 1958, when it became apparent that a number of bills were going to be introduced in the Louisiana legislature providing for the closing of any public school ordered by a court to admit a Negro pupil, the board of the LCLU voted to circulate to members and non-members alike a statement protesting the closing of public schools and the stopping of public education as a last-ditch measure to avoid desegregation. The statement pointed out that the proposed laws would wreck the public school system, cause irreparable damage to the children -- white children -- of the state, have disastrous economic consequences, and be ineffective in maintaining segregated schools. Signatures were solicited. The statement was circulated for a limited time on a limited scale, and the response to the request for signatures -- about 600 citizens signed -- was surprisingly large in proportion to the small number of petitions circulated.

On June 1, 1958 the petition was presented to Senator William Rainach, chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation. On June 9, at the public hearing before the House Committee on Education on the eight bills authorizing the closing of any public school ordered to desegregate, a number of people spoke against the plan, including George A. Dreyfous, president, and Waldo F. McNeir, vice-president of the LCLU. Mr. Dreyfous is a prominent New Orleans attorney, senior member of the firm of Dreyfous and Kalinski. Dr. McNeir is Professor of English at LSU. Both are Southerners. The LCLU had made no attempt to organize the opposition. Also appearing to speak against the bills, although not a member of the ACLU, was Charles A. Reynard, Professor of Law at LSU.

Reaction to this opposition was violent. Committee members implied that opponents of the bills had connections with the Communist Party. The committee was dismayed to learn that according to their count 59 members of the LSU faculty had signed the LCLU petition, a figure later corrected for them and raised to 66. Immediately following the hearing, the House of Representatives unanimously passed a resolution summoning President Troy H. Middleton of LSU and all the LSU college deans to appear before a special session of the House on June 11 to answer charges that some faculty members were dispensing anti-segregationist views in their classes. "Rep. John Garrett, House segregation leader, said the petition was prepared and submitted by the Louisiana branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, which he said 'spends most of its time defending Communists in various trials and the rest working for integration in Louisiana and the South.' He said 1957 hearings conducted by the segregationist committee 'proved that Communism and integration are inseparable and that integration is the Southern expression of the Communist movement. We have been talking about the situation at our University for two years,' he said, 'but it couldn't be brought to light until these gentlemen (LSU professors) appeared at the committee this afternoon'." (Baton Rouge Morning Advocate, June 10, 1958)

The LSU Alumni Council quickly issued a statement calling on "district presidents, alumni and friends of the University to appear at the open hearing called ... by the House of Representatives to investigate LSU and its faculty, in order that the good name of LSU and its reputation for independent expression of its faculty members might be defended, notwithstanding the official view of the University, its Board of Supervisors and Administrators."

Vice-chairman of the Alumni Council Theo Cangelosi, who has since become chairman of the Board of Supervisors of LSU, warned that the House action presented a serious threat to the University, and called attention to the University's record in regard to segregation. "He pointed out that LSU has been in federal court opposing integration for many years. 'But,' he added, 'this is a matter of academic freedom and the right of self expression. No matter how I disagree with the faculty members, and I do disagree with them, they have the right in this democracy to express their own opinion'." (Baton Rouge State-Times, June 10, 1958)

On June 10 the legislators scaled down the investigation of the University, naming a new ten-member Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate LSU. This was the way, as the aftermath of an impulse toward massive retaliation, that the committee with which we are concerned came into being. At the same time, Rep. Lester Vetter said he would demand a similar investigation of "un-American activities" or staff associations with Communist-front organizations at the nine state colleges. W. M. Shaw, counsel of the new committee as well as of the Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, was quoted as saying the committee "has known for several years about the situation at LSU, but did not want to break it for fear that the people of Louisiana had not been sufficiently educated to the danger. It was broken for us when two faculty members appeared before the House committee. We know that the LSU administration has attempted to clean up much of this situation, but have found their hands are tied because of the cry of academic freedom raised by the radical professors whenever one of their number was exposed. Now that the Legislature has made public ... just how bad this situation is, we can be assured the Legislature will now be met with cries of 'White Chauvinism,' 'destroyers of academic freedom' and 'enemies of the people.' That is a song familiar to anyone who has studied the Aesopian language of Communism." (Baton Rouge Morning Advocate, June 11, 1958)

At the special committee hearing held in a packed House chamber on June 11, President Middleton declared "LSU's faculty does not include instructors with communistic tendencies preaching integration to their classes." He reviewed the University's policy of opposing the admission of Negro students until all legal means of doing so have been exhausted, and pointed out that while Negroes are enrolled in the Graduate School, efforts to block their enrollment in the undergraduate divisions have been successful. Concerning the 66 faculty members who signed the LCLU petition and the two professors who appeared before the House committee, "Middleton said LSU is pledged to the principle of academic freedom which also includes the right of a faculty member to exercise his rights as a citizen in speaking and writing." (Baton Rouge Morning Advocate, June 12, 1958) He added, "I am informed that five or six faculty members who signed the petition are members of the American Civil Liberties Union. I caused an investigation because I was told it was a Communist-front organization, and the information I received was that neither the attorney general nor the un-American Activities Committee listed it as such." (Baton Rouge State-Times, June 12, 1958) Several times his testimony was interrupted by outbursts of applause from the spectators, causing visible pain to committee counsel Shaw, who questioned President Middleton closely as to the University's hiring and firing policies.

After five deans had followed President Middleton, agreeing to distribute the committee's questionnaire to the 66 faculty members and return them to the investigating body, committee counsel Shaw took the microphone to say "the thing that enraged members of the House was not that faculty members appeared but the manner in which the opposition was directed by the president of the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union." He said the investigation would continue and predicted it would "expose the group or clique which is not only affecting our children but has been causing the state a lot of trouble for a long time." He went on to say "the American Civil Liberties Union was originally founded by American Germans to keep the United States out of World War I. One of its first purposes, he said, was 'to defend draft dodgers and anarchists.' The Louisiana branch, he said, was formed on the same date the Senate Internal Security Committee held hearings in New Orleans two years ago." (Baton Rouge Morning Advocate, June 12, 1958)

This falsification concerning the origins of the ACLU was repeated in the committee report, and will be dealt with later.

The day after the appearance of the LSU officials, the LCLU issued the following statement to the New Orleans and Baton Rouge newspapers:

> The American Civil Liberties Union has a long and distinguished history of acting as an effective force in helping to preserve our fundamental rights.
> Any group that has the courage to stand up for the simple basic freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and the Constitution has learned to expect the sort of attack now raging in Baton Rouge against the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union.
> These attacks, however, should shock every thinking citizen into a reappraisal of the meaning of democracy and bring awareness of how far we have progressed along the road to intolerance.
> By preparing and helping to circulate a petition, the LCLU was simply exercising the inalienable right to express an opinion. Attempts to suppress the exercise of this right are clearly contrary to the spirit of America.
> Let no one be fooled by the reckless charge of communism and subversion.
> Anyone so inclined can discover, as did President Middleton of LSU, that the ACLU is not on the attorney general's list of subversive organizations, but on the contrary is composed of indivuduals with a deep concern for our American heritage, and with the courage to stand up for their convictions.

On June 14 Ernest Angell, chairman of the board of the ACLU, and Patrick Murphy Malin, executive director, sent the following telegram to Senator Rainach:

> We have just received text of statement made concerning American Civil Liberties Union during questioning of President Middleton of LSU by your committee. Respectfully request opportunity to appear personally before your committee next Wednesday, Thursday or Friday in order to make reply and answer questions.

They received no answer to their request. Senator Rainach announced to the press that his committee was busy evaluating replies to the questionnaire sent to the 66 LSU faculty members inquiring into their views on segregation and their membership in the LCLU, the ACLU, the Communist Party, and the NAACP. "As far as I am concerned," he said, "the record of the ACLU is very clear," and he doubted that any useful purpose would be served by receiving testimony from the two ACLU officials. (Baton Rouge State-Times, June 14, 1958)

Amid alarums and excursions, in an atmosphere charged with tension and apprehension, the faculty members who had dared to express their opposition to closing the public schools awaited the next move in the investigation. The committee was said to be preparing to summon all signers of the petition, and some of those without tenure naturally became jittery. President Middleton's firm support of continued segregation had been widely reported in the nation's press, but out-of-state newspapers generally failed to emphasize, or did not even mention, his admirable and unflinching stand for academic freedom, which was unfortunate; see, for example, the New York Times, "Louisiana State U. President Firm for Segregation," June 12, 1958. His statement that no member of the LSU faculty was "teaching integration" was mistakenly interpreted in some quarters to mean the opposite of academic freedom, and this was made the basis of a sharp attack on the University and its president in an editorial in the June 15, 1958 issue of the Boston Sunday Herald. Robert Wagner, staff correspondent for the New Orleans Times-Picayune, expressed the thought of many people on the immediate scene in a dispatch headlined "Probe of LSU Delicate Chore." He wrote:

> The segregation committee to date has been markedly restrained in questioning those who have appeared before them. They are attempting to conduct the probe in a respectable manner.
> The fact remains it is an investigation, and--in view of accusations made--they are under pressure to produce something substantial, which would have validity even to the disinterested observer.

> Somehow they must show, if it is possible, that the integrationist views of some professors are linked to a subversive movement. Innuendo alone will have a hollow ring. It is common knowledge that not every integrationist is a Communist.

So that no one would be in doubt as to where they stood, the Citizens Council of Greater Baton Rouge asserted in an advertisement in the Baton Rouge Morning Advocate headed "Why Should We Employ Them?" that no teachers should be tolerated at LSU who did not "reflect, in their beliefs and in their actions, the desires of the majority of the citizens of Louisiana." The same philosophy was emphasized in a more inflammatory advertisement in the same newspaper, "Things We're Sick And Tired Of!" which said: "We're tired of having many of our so-called educators use the term 'academic freedom' as a sanctuary from which they can spew forth doctrines antagonistic to our American heritage and to our Southern traditions. We do not believe a man can teach Americanism in the daytime and Socialism at night."

Yet it is pleasant to record that during this trying period the "guilty" faculty members, including those who belong to the ACLU, received only one or two threatening telephone calls and anonymous "get-out-of-Louisiana" letters — modern equivalent of the old "why-don't-you-go-back-to-Russia?" gag — and no crosses were burned in their front yards. They felt that the right people were on their side. Few of them had any real fear that the University authorities could be bullied. Prof. McNeir received nearly a hundred commendatory telephone calls, letters, and telegrams from all parts of the country. Moreover, it was encouraging that a panel of eight Baton Rouge attorneys volunteered to represent the faculty members if their services were needed.

Signs were not lacking that responsible elements in the state were reacting unfavorably to the intimidating tactics of the segregationists. On June 18, Rev. D. W. Poole, Baton Rouge district supervisor of the Methodist Church, made known a resolution unanimously adopted by the annual conference composed of 300 ministers and 300 laymen representing 115,000 members of the Methodist Church in Louisiana. The resolution said "this Annual Conference is opposed to any measure or measures which would tend to weaken or destroy our free, democratic public educational system." Rev. Poole in an accompanying statement defended the LSU faculty, saying: "What a shame it is that it seems when one really believes in our great heritage of freedom and really believes in the highest that has come to us from our judeo-Christian background, he seems to be a target of humiliation rather than regarded as a citizen of the very highest order to whom we owe so very much." He called on the legislature to "show us some sane steps forward in the new day in which we live rather than fighting for that which is doomed for utter failure." (Baton Rouge Morning Advocate, June 18, 1958)

The Baton Rouge newspapers editorialized that care and discretion must be exercised by the legislature in its investigation of the state university. The editorial appearing in the Morning Advocate on June 18, called "The Education-Integration Uproar," was well reasoned and rather courageous:

> In order to keep the current integration-education uproar in proper perspective, all of us need to keep these points in mind:
> 1. The petition signed by 66 members of the Louisiana State University faculty--and, incidentally, by a number of other persons in higher education in Louisiana--did not oppose segregation. It opposed the particular pieces of legislation being advanced by segregation leaders. Even if it should be admitted that there is no room for differences of opinion on the subject of segregation, which itself would be a grave decision in a free country, surely there still would be room for differences of opinion on the means by which segregation best can be maintained.
> 2. The fact that a number of educators have signed a petition opposing specific pieces of legislation designed to maintain segregation does not mean that integration is being "preached" at LSU or at any other school.
> 3. The United States Attorney General and the House Un-American Activities Committee do not list the American Civil Liberties Union as a communist or communist-front organization. Others may think differently, as is their privilege, but those two are the most authoritative sources on such things and little has missed their notice.

4. To get right down to brass tacks, it is one thing to believe in integration and another to preach it or teach it. As already has been pointed out by the Shreveport Times, which is hardly an integrationist sheet, a university should have the right to tell a good physics professor, for example, to believe what he will personally, but in the classroom to stick to his specialty.

5. The American way is the way of discussion without rancor, of debate without intimidation, of differences without hatred, of disagreement without intolerance, and we are sure that everyone involved in the current controversy shares our hope that it always will remain so.

6. Because it is the Louisiana State University, LSU has been a center of attention in the integration controversy. That has been the case in every state where the problem exists. The University administration has cooperated 100 per cent with the state laws and with law enforcement officials, sometimes when others did not exhibit equal interest.

If evidence can be produced--real evidence, not just allegations or personal opinions--that any faculty member in any Louisiana university, college or high school is a communist, is teaching communism, or is preaching integration, then he or she will have to go. The college or school administrators will be the first to say so. But until that is found to be the case, tolerance and discretion must prevail.

The same day on which this editorial appeared the Senate Committee on Education held a dramatic, three-hour hearing on the school-closing bills. Favoring the bills, which they helped to draft, were representatives of the Louisiana Teachers Association, Louisiana Classroom Teachers Association, and United School Committee. Opposing the bills was an impressive procession of two Jewish rabbis, a professor of philosophy at the New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, a Negro attorney, a Baptist minister, two Methodist ministers, and two Church of Christ ministers. George A. Dreyfous, president of the LCLU -- he did not "direct the opposition," at either this or the earlier hearing -- and Dr. William L. Kolb, secretary of the LCLU and Professor of Sociology at Tulane University, also opposed the bills. The LCLU speakers found some good features in the proposed pupil assignment law, although one section was called "manifestly unconstitutional." This opposition was shrugged aside as the Senate committee "quickly okayed plans to shut down Louisiana's public schools to avoid racial integration." (Baton Rouge Morning Advocate, June 19, 1958)

On June 26 an excellent signed article by Martha Wilson was published in the Baton Rouge State-Times, reviewing the history of the ACLU and its non-partisan defense of civil liberties. That night ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin arrived and made the first address of his three-day visit to the firing line in Louisiana. As reported in the ACLU's Feature Press Service:

> The Women's Clubhouse, first site of the Baton Rouge meeting, withdrew its facilities and local ACLU officials turned down the local hotel hall because the hotel would not allow Negroes to use the regular elevator facilities. The meeting was finally held in the local hall of the American Friends Service Committee. Similar trouble arose in New Orleans when Loyola University of the South backed down on its auditorium with the frank statement that the subject matter and the ACLU were "just too controversial." Malin's address was shifted to the Tulane University campus where Dixon Hall was rented on a regular commercial basis. The Tulane faculty had come to the aid of the LSU faculty with a strong statement upholding academic freedom and the right of freedom of opinion.
> Press reaction was excellent to the Malin talks, in which he explained the ACLU's single-standard defense of civil liberties and denied the specific charges leveled at the organization. He vigorously described the ACLU's support of integration. (Weekly Bulletin #1957, July 14, 1958, pp. 1-2)

As this report points out, the reaction of press, radio, and television to Malin's talks in Louisiana was excellent, as was that of the general public, but not so the reaction of the Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate LSU.

After several weeks of nervous tension for all concerned, during which time, so far as we know, no member of the faculty was called before the Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate LSU, the committee on July 2 issued Part I of its report. To our mingled relief and consternation, it consisted entirely of a renewed attack on the ACLU. Thus the great majority of the faculty members who had signed the petition were apparently spared. What happened to the threats that petition signers would be grilled? What use was made of the questionnaires they had filled out for the investigating committee? What about all the "volunteer" evidence Senator Rainach reported from time to time his committee was gathering -- from unspecified sources -- and "carefully checking"? No explanation has yet been offered as to why the committee report took the form in which it appeared. Indeed, no sensible explanation seems possible.

The LCLU, however, is not willing to let this malicious attack on the highly respected organization with which it is affiliated pass unchallenged and unrefuted. We shall therefore analyze and comment on each section of the report. The section headings are those that occur in the report itself, as indicated by the quotation marks.

2. "INTRODUCTION"

On page 1 the committee describes its mandate from the legislature as directing it "to conduct an investigation into the educational and social activities at Louisiana State University."

We will simply call attention to the fact that nowhere in the report is there any evidence that such an investigation was made.

The report then says the legislature "had become alarmed over the possibility that the University was being used as a base of operations by individuals and organizations whose purposes and aims were hostile to the official policies of the State of Louisiana and inimical to the welfare of the United States" because (1) two members of the LSU faculty, one of them vice-president of the LCLU, spoke before the House Committee on Education in opposition to the school-closing bills; and (2) a petition sponsored by the LCLU and presented to the legislature contained the names of 66 LSU faculty members "in addition to the names of numerous individuals associated with racial and subversive organizations operating in this State."

On the basis of this statement, it is clear that the "alarm" was out of proportion to its cause. What that "alarm" led to before the issuance of the present report has been sketched in the first section of this memorandum. Nowhere in the report, as we shall show, is any evidence presented that LSU is "being used as a base of operations" by anybody or any organization for any purpose whatever, whether "hostile" to Louisiana or "inimical" to the United States or not. The phrase "base of operations," with its military connotation, is a symptom of alarmism in itself. The language of the Introduction, we note, is high-sounding but empty.

Mention is made above in the same passage of "numerous individuals." They are never particularized. And what "racial and subversive organizations" they may be associated with is not brought out in the body of the report, for it deals only with the ACLU.

"This was the first time," the Introduction goes on to say in the same style, "that it had been brought forcibly to the attention of the Legislature that an organization with an unsavory and notorious reputation in the field of subversion, was operating freely and, apparently, effectively on the campus of the State's highest educational institution." Whether the report succeeds in fitting this description to the ACLU can be left to the judgment of fair-minded readers of the analysis which follows. Meanwhile, to appease our Tulane friends, perhaps "tax supported" should be inserted after the word "highest" in the above characterization of LSU.

"The task assigned to this Committee was to study the influence of this, and similar organizations, on the students, faculty, and officials of the University...." We can flatly say that no such study of the influence of the ACLU was made preliminary to the issuing of the present report.

Still on page 1, the committee refers to itself as "a fact-finding body." Let us turn now to an examination of the facts which the committee found, where it found them, and how it interpreted them.

3. "ORIGINS OF THE ACLU"

On pages 2-3 the report dredges into the derivation of the AELU forty years ago from two predecessor organizations, both of which are alleged to have been sinister. Should a man's ancestors count more than his own character and accomplishments? Not that the ancestry of the ACLU is other than honorable, but such concentration on its earlier history -- distorted and misinterpreted -- seems to reverse the commonsense approach to appraising its present nature and its work.

The most authoritative source of information on the forerunners of the ACLU is the historical analysis completed in 1955 by Prof. Barton Bean, of Lake Erie College, entitled "Pressure for Freedom--the American Civil Liberties Union," a doctoral dissertation done at Cornell University. The committee did not consult this exhaustive and scholarly work. Prof. Bean shows the ACLU as Cromwell insisted on being painted, "warts and all!" But he describes its beginnings, we submit, in an historical context that refutes the allegations contained in the committee report. The facts are as follows.

The first parent of the ACLU was the American Union Against Militarism, the last of several names borne by an organization founded in the fall of 1914 by a group of social workers and liberals that included, among others, Jane Addams, of Hull House fame; Paul Kellog, editor of The Survey; and Lillian Wald, pioneer in public health and founder of the Henry Street Settlement. The directing committee included such distinguished citizens as David Starr Jordan, president of Stanford University; Norman Thomas, later to be "the" Socialist candidate for President; and Oswald Garrison Villard, the great dissenter of American journalism. Some consider the American Union Against Militarism the most effective of the militant peace organizations of that period. Its members must have helped re-elect Woodrow Wilson in 1916, when he campaigned on the slogan "He Kept Us Out of War."

The formation of a National Civil Liberties Bureau as an offshoot of the AUAM occurred in the fall of 1917. Guiding force behind this split was Roger N. Baldwin, who realized that the numerous violations of free speech, assembly, press, and conscience immediately after America's entry into the war could best be handled by an independent agency. Under Mr. Baldwin's direction, in a period of unparalleled war hysteria, the Bureau achieved some success in improving the lot of individual conscientious objectors by applying pressure for recognition of the constitutional rights of unpopular minorities. As stated at the time, its aims were "to help maintain the rights of free speech and free press, and the Anglo-Saxon tradition of liberty of conscience, through liberal provisions for conscientious objectors. This work has been backed both by pro-war liberals and so-called pacifists. It is not anti-war in any sense." To put it mildly, the climate of opinion made these principles unpropitious. With the hasty passage of the espionage and sedition laws of 1917 and 1918, all opposition of this kind, and especially to the draft act, began to be suppressed.

In September, 1918 the Department of Justice, suspecting that the Bureau was obstructing the war by encouraging conscientious objectors, seized its files and papers under a search warrant, even though the organization was willing to deliver them without one. They were studied and returned, and no charge was ever pressed. There is therefore no foundation for the statement in the committee report that the Bureau "devoted the greater portion of its energies to encouraging draft-dodgers and to assisting radical movements in obstructing the war effort" (page 3). The Bureau was not further molested and continued its activities.

It was expected that the work of the Bureau would end after the war. Instead, continued violations of civil rights following incidents of the great strikes of 1919 and the repression of labor caused by the success of the Russian Revolution made evident the need for continuation. The Bureau was expanded in 1920 into a national organization with committee members drawn from all over the country. Mr. Baldwin assumed the direction of the newly expanded organization, which was renamed the American Civil Liberties Union.

Such, in brief, are our antecedents. Apparently ignorant of this "round unvarnished tale" recounted in Prof. Bean's "Pressure for Freedom—the American Civil Liberties Union" (pages 1-6), the committee had recourse to and relied on what it calls "the extensive investigation of a New York State Legislative Committee, under the direction of the Hon. Clayton Lusk, of the New York State Legislature" (page 3). Let us take a look at this committee and its credibility.

The Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate Seditious Activities (the Lusk Committee) was appointed in March, 1919 and produced a report, published in four volumes in 1920, entitled "Revolutionary Radicalism, its History, Purpose and Tactics, with an exposition and discussion of the steps being taken and requiredto curb it." This forty-year-old report still serves as a gold mine of gospel for those who subscribe to the view that history is static rather than dynamic. Its editor was Archibald E. Stevenson, a New York attorney and counsel to the committee, who specialized in construing freedom of speech when applied to radicals as "subversive," and in uncovering revolutionary conspiracies based upon the theory of interlocking directorates.

The "Hon." Clayton Lusk, Republican leader in the New York Senate and chairman of the committee which took his name, was discredited in 1921 when he was unable to explain satisfactorily his connection with the $27,000 slush fund raised by the New York detectives to push through the legislature a bill he sponsored to give them increased pay and permanent tenure. Senator Lusk was denounced by the press. The New Republic said: "No reader of the New York press can fail to note the universal satisfaction at the dramatic conclusion of Senator Lusk's career, owing to his misguided acceptance of presents from the detectives whose services he so amply employed" — in gathering evidence used in the Lusk Report.

The New York World in an editorial titled "Presents for Senator Lusk" (July 20, 1921) commented :

> Nobody will believe that Senator Lusk's interest in the bill providing permanent tenure in office and increased salary for the detectives can be accounted for by two boxes of cigars, a basket of flowers, a leather billfold, a set of silverware presented to his wife, and a trip to Coney Island for his daughter.... The same man who sees Bolshevism in every utterance of free opinion, who has sponsored a report describing the state as honeycombed with revolutionary tendencies ... might be expected to lend his support to bomb squads and detectives, no matter what they are asking for.

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. John A. Ryan, director of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, in a letter to the Nation (July 27, 1921) characterized the Lusk Report as dishonest:

> The excellent review of the Lusk-Stevenson Report in the Nation for July 13th stresses two important features of that amazing production. The first is misrepresentation of persons whose views are displeasing to the authors of the report; the second is the device of stigmatizing as "socialistic" or at least revolutionary, every worthwhile proposal for industrial reform.

Msgr. Ryan then went on to call attention to the fact that the report committed both of these faults in its treatment of the attitude of the Catholic Church.

When Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York campaigned for re-election in 1922, he promised repeal of two of the laws championed by the Lusk Committee. They were repealed. In signing the repeal bills (May 23, 1923), he said:

> I am affixing my signature to the two acts which have for their purpose the repeal of the so-called Lusk laws. I am satisfied that they should not remain upon the statute books of this state, because they are repugnant to the fundamentals of American democracy.
> Under the laws repealed, teachers, in order to exercise their honorable calling, were in effect compelled to hold opinions as to governmental matters deemed by a state officer consistent with loyalty; and, further, no private school could be maintained in this state unless its teachings were similarly satisfactory to certain officials of the state. Freedom of opinion and freedom of speech were by these laws unduly shackled, and an unjust discrimination was made against the members of a great profession.
> In signing these bills, I firmly believe that I am vindicating the principle that, within the limits of the penal law, every citizen may speak and teach what he believes.

Governor Smith had previously vetoed one of the bills sponsored by the Lusk Committee setting up a system of "spies and secret police," saying:

> The safety of this government and its institutions rests upon the reasoned and devoted loyalty of its people. It does not need for its defense a system of intellectual tyranny which in the endeavor to choke error by force, must of necessity crush truth as well.

The merits of the Lusk Committee's findings on the ACLU are no higher, in our opinion, than the integrity of the source. Concerning the ACLU, the Lusk Report said:

> The action of these Federal and State officials has been loudly condemned by organized groups of liberals who, by reason of their access to the public prints, have created a widespread sentiment in favor of free speech, so-called. At the present time these advocates of free speech have consolidated their energies in an organization known as the American Civil Liberties Union....
> The American Civil Liberties Union, in the last analysis, is a supporter of all subversive movements, and its propaganda is detrimental to the interests of the State. It attempts not only to protect crime but to encourage attacks upon our institutions in every form. Many of the members of its committee are undoubtedly sincere in their convictions, but the consequences of their activity are injurious to the public interest.

(Part I, Vol. II, pages 1979-1982)

This statement has been repeated more than once down through the years, usually without any evaluation of its source, by those who have attempted to discredit the ACLU. The first two sentences of the second paragraph — the most damaging ones if taken out of context, be it noted — are quoted in the report of the Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate LSU.

What the Lusk Report reveals is the honest confusion in the minds of many people at that time in viewing the work of the ACLU as a civil liberties organization, a confusion which resulted from mistakenly equating its defense of an individual's right with support of the opinion he expresses. There is no longer any excuse for that confusion. The ACLU, at its founding and ever since, has consistently and impartially defended civil liberties for everybody, not only those with whose opinions it agrees but also those with whose opinions it disagrees. To say a murderer is entitled to a fair trial does not show approval of murder. To say the advocacy of overthrow of the government should be tolerated does not mean approval of any act intended to overthrow the government. This is a basic distinction which must be insisted on, because it concerns the very existence of the civil liberties guaranteed in the Bill of Rights. If civil liberties are to be secure for anybody they must be allowed for everybody. Associating the ACLU with the beliefs, associations, and character of the persons or organizations whose civil liberties it defends is to display a lack of understanding of the nature of freedom and its indivisibility. This was the central error of the Lusk Report, an error perpetuated in the committee report under discussion here.

It bears repeating that while the ACLU certainly does not repudiate the actions of its predecessors or the policies formulated by the founders of those organizations, it has existed independently now for forty years as a significant part of the national scene, and it has a history of its own. Research into the pre-ACLU past, especially when motivated by a desire to discredit the ACLU, serves no more useful purpose than would "accusing" the present-day Unitarian Church of being derived from the doctrines of Arius.

4. "SOME INFLUENTIAL PERSONALITIES IN THE A.C.L.U."

On pages 3-5 the report, still citing as its only authority the Lusk Report, that ancient and ignominious weapon of modern witch-hunters, tries to show that some of the people associated with the ACLU at the outset were subversive. It begins by saying (page 3):

> The claim of the descendants of the NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES BUREAU to be American patriots is sharply at variance with its record of official activity. The first literature ever to be distributed by the NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES BUREAU was "a reprint of the detailed peace terms recently proposed by the Russian Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates." (Lusk Comm. Rpt. Vol. I, p. 1084). Thus, the NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES BUREAU, in announcing its establishment, on November 1, 1917, celebrated the occasion by distributing the propaganda of Lenin's Bolshevik followers.

Prof. Bean in his "Pressure for Freedom--the American Civil Liberties Union" (page 6) interprets this event somewhat more judiciously. He explains that given the background of World War I, it is understandable, although it undoubtedly reflected too narrow a view, that the group which formed the NCLB should see their aim to protect freedom almost entirely in terms of service to labor's rights. He adds concerning the formation of the ACLU a short time later:

> The formal reorganization [of the NCLB] took place at the end of December, 1919, and while largely following Roger Baldwin's proposals [with emphasis on defense of labor's rights] shifted the emphasis more toward the later neutralism. Of the 64 people making up the combined National and Executive Committees of the 1920 ACLU, only 12 were active labor leaders; 15 could be called partisans of labor; and 37 fall into the group of "conservatives" and "liberals."

It is necessary to remember that this was long before labor began its advance to its present position of strength. Many liberals of that period were actively interested in the cause of international labor, including the rights of the Russian workers who were even then being freed, as it seemed, from Czarist tyranny. Many thoughtful people did not foresee the betrayal of the Russian workers by the very movement which promised to liberate them. Most of those who now condemn the liberals of the period of the Russian Revolution, who made an honest mistake about the shape of things to come, are able to do so only by taking full advantage of historical hindsight, which is disingenuous to say the least. Anyone at all familiar with the course of modern history knows that world attitudes toward the Soviet Union throughout its existence have fluctuated widely, not only in the period when the Soviet state was being founded, but also in the more recent period during and since World War II.

The report next hits Roger Baldwin below the belt, calling him a draft dodger: "Baldwin, himself, the founder of the NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES BUREAU, is an ex-convict, having been sentenced to prison for violating the Selective Service Act while his country was at war" (page 4). The facts are misrepresented. Mr. Baldwin refused military service in World War I because of conscientious objection, which is far different from evading the draft. It is true that he went to jail because of his principles, but that was more than forty years ago and he has long since redeemed himself, as any man should be given a chance to do. While he still maintains his objection to the use of violence, he did not oppose World War II, recognizing that in that conflict the United States was directly attacked. The position of the ACLU in World War II was certainly not anti-war; its reports during that period repeatedly state that infringements of civil liberties stemming from the war were not great — there were no mass jailings and sweeping prosecutions, as in World War I — chiefly because the last great war had the country's full support. This is not to say, of course, that the Union was not aware of and did not oppose repressive action against persons of Japanese ancestry in a number of western states.

The report also accuses Mr. Baldwin of having had many years ago a "high regard for the atheistic Soviet state" (page 4). It does not say that he was ever a Communist, for such a falsehood would be too easily refuted. In a statement dated December 21, 1951, after his retirement as director of the ACLU, Mr. Baldwin gave a direct and honest account of his political views and associations in relation to civil liberties. Because it has historical value and is at the same time a moving human document, we give the full text of this statement:

1. Throughout my life I have had two major concerns—the attack on poverty and the expansion of liberty. Sometimes the answers to poverty ran into conflict with the expansion of liberty, and I have at those points, as with the application of pacifist principles, accepted what appeared to be at the time the lesser evil. That resulted in the appearance of compromise and contradiction; but consistency does not appear possible either in theory or practice in dealing with such vast problems. I never claimed more than a relative consistency.

2. In relation to Russia and Communism, I held up to the Nazi-Soviet pact of 1939 a dual position; I opposed repression and supported what I believed were economic institutions calculated to mitigate poverty. Thus I published in 1924 a book, Letters from Russian Prisoners, attacking repression; and in 1929 a book, Liberty under the Soviets, also attacking repression but giving it a place secondary to the hope of progress through economic reconstruction which would not only minimize poverty but create the basis for ultimately free democratic institutions. It was this somewhat romantic belief (as hindsight shows) which was expressed in an article in 1934 in Soviet Russia Today, and in one or two other statements.

The purges of 1936 shook my beliefs, and though still nursing hopes I expressed no views favorable to the Soviet Union thereafter.

During this entire period, from 1924 to 1939, I was chairman of an American organization known as the International Committee for Political Prisoners, which had no Communists or fellow-travelers in its membership, and which attacked repression in Russia equally with other countries. That represented my "other side" and my consistent adherence to civil liberties regardless of my attitude to the economic systems involved. Eugene Lyons' book on The Red Decade (1930 to 1940) names all the well-known Communists and fellow-travelers, but he does not place me among them. He refers to me only as "not easily classified." His is presumably the authoritative book on that period.

3. When the Nazi-Soviet pact was announced in 1939, I was shocked into a complete reversal of every hope and belief I had about

Russia and the Communists. I had taken part in many united fronts in the 1920's and 1930's, along with hundreds of other liberals, believing the Communists to be genuine supporters of progressive movements, whatever apologies they offered for the Russian dictatorship. I resigned at once from the leading united front, the League for Peace and Democracy--the only one with which I was then connected--and did so publicly. My previous connections with united fronts had not been happy; I was expelled from the League Against Imperialism in 1932 for supporting Gandhi in India, whom the Communists were opposing, and I was one of the leaders in the North American Committee for Spanish Democracy who in 1938 forced the Communists out when they attempted to control the organization. They then formed the Joint Anti-Fascict Refugee Committee.

4. In September 1939 when the war against Finland by Russia started, I presided at the first mass meeting called to protest the Russian invasion and to aid the Finns. This was held in Manhattan Center, and received wide publicity. After Russia was invaded [by Germany in 1941] and so many movements were organized with official blessings to aid the ally, I took no part, and neither then nor since the war have regarded Russia as anything but another nationalistic dictatorship opposed to freedom and without any claim to the economic progress of her early promise.

5. When the betrayal of all democracy by the Communists became apparent after the Pact, I organized the movement in the Civil Liberties Union which resulted in the adoption of the resolution of 1940 against the participation of any totalitarians in the Union's councils, and in the well-publicized expulsion of the only Communist Party member of the Board (she had joined the Party long after being a member) and in the forced withdrawal of several fellow-travelers.

6. The Communists then formed their own civil liberties agency and attacked the Union and me personally. I have been anathema ever since in the Communist press and circles. My anti-Communist position has been well-known ever since and evidenced in:

a. Public speeches and radio appearances on Town Hall.

b. Numerous articles (see contribution to volume entitled Whose Revolution? published in 1941 by Howell Soskin & Co., edited by C. Dewitt Talmadge; New Republic article, "Liberty in Russia," 1943; This Week article, 1948; and others).

c. Membership in well-known anti-Communist agencies such as the Union for Democratic Action (later the A.D.A.), the International Rescue Committee, the American Committee for Cultural Freedom (which invited me to Berlin in 1950 to take part in an anti-Soviet congress).

7. When I was invited by General MacArthur's command to visit Japan in 1947 and again by General Clay to visit Germany in 1948, and again by the State Department to Germany in 1950, it can be assumed that the intelligence agencies of the government cleared me. No invitations to such critical areas were extended without clearance.

8. One does not need to repudiate errors of judgment by specific disavowals. Judgments change with circumstances, and the evidence of their change is to be found in one's activities, connections, and affirmations. It is quite evident that I miscalculated the character and tendencies of both Russia and Communism, but equally evident that my opposition to them, as to all other forms of dictatorship, has been expressed all along from the 1920's with qualifications, and since 1939 without qualifications.

Not to feel the sincerity of this man is to condemn oneself; not to admire his frankness is impossible. His statement reveals him to be an idealist with high principles, great integrity of character, a probing intelligence, moral courage, and independent judgment. A non-conformist, yes one of a kind the democratic institutions of this country have occasionally been able to produce to its everlasting credit. Nothing in Mr. Baldwin's career suggests even remotely that, as the committee report alleges, he is "seeking to destroy the country which affords him protection," that his is an "alien philosophy," or that he has "cloaked himself in Constitutional immunity so that he can work, unhampered, toward the destruction of that Constitution by perverting it to the point of uselessness and meaninglessness" (page 4). The viciousness of these charges is exceeded only by their absurdity.

Moreover, the views which Mr. Baldwin personally held in the mid-1930's were not held even then by more than a few of his ACLU colleagues. They are not held now, in any class-struggle "orientation," by any member of any ACLU governing body or staff, including the officers and directors of the LCLU. If they were so held, by however small or weak a minority, the national Board of Directors and the National Committee would not be able to list in their membership, for example, Republican corporation lawyers, authors, newspaper editors, scholars and educators, clergymen, members of all religious faiths, presidents of both a Negro university and a prominent woman's college, scientists, a Catholic magazine editor, business executives, and leading members of the editorial staffs of Fortune, Redbook, Scientific American, Life, and Reader's Digest; nor would the chairman of the National Committee be E. B. MacNaughton, Chairman of the Board of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon.

Mr. Baldwin's devotion to the American concept of democratic liberties has been demonstrated by deeds both at home and abroad. His world-wide recognition as "Mr. Civil Liberties" was acknowledged by invitations extended by General Douglas MacArthur and General Lucius Clay to advise on civil liberties problems in Japan and Germany after World War II. His modest reference to this in paragraph 7 of his statement does not point out that his reports and counsel were highly praised by both Generals. General MacArthur said on December 30, 1949:

> Roger Baldwin's crusade for civil liberties has had a profound and beneficial influence upon the course of American progress. With countless individuals finding protection in the nobility of the cause he has long espoused, he stands out as one of the architects of our cherished American way of life.

General Clay said on November 27, 1949:

> At my request he visited Germany to investigate our progress in this field and to give us his recommendations as to further steps we might take. His objectivity, sincerity of purpose, and ability to separate the wheat from the chaff, made his visit of exceptional value to both Military Government and to the Germans. I am sure that within a short time he did much to instill his faith and beliefs in German minds.
> While doing so, he helped all of us who had associated with him, just as through the years he has helped our country to a better understanding of tolerance and the dignity of man. We shall miss his constructive influence.

The committee report has this to say, finally, concerning Mr. Baldwin's connection with the ACLU (page 4):

> The present-day AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION is nothing more than the old NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES BUREAU under a different name. Roger N. Baldwin is still very much a part of the current set-up, and enjoys membership not only on the National Committee of the AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, but is also a member of its National Executive Staff. Indeed, his is the most honored name in this devious organization — the "Roger N. Baldwin Foundation," the "A.C.L.U.-Roger N. Baldwin Escrow Account," Roger N. Baldwin Awards and other such encomiums are witness to this fact. (See "37th Annual Report of the American Civil Liberties Union July 1, 1956 to June 30, 1957.")

Since his retirment as director of the ACLU in 1950, Mr. Baldwin has devoted all of his time to work in international civil liberties, and as an adviser in this field he holds a part-time position on the national executive staff. He is also a consultant at the United Nations. As reported in "The Past is Prologue," 38th Annual Report of the ACLU, July 1, 1957 to June 30, 1958 (page 99): "In view of the 1958 anniversary celebration of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Roger Baldwin, as a consultant at the United Nations in that field, was elected chairman of the Conference of Non-Governmental Organizations, comprising some 400 international and national agencies accredited by the UN Department of Public Information." Indeed, his is an honored name, not only in the ACLU. The "Roger N. Baldwin Foundation" mentioned in the committee report is a fabrication. The funds of the Roger N. Baldwin-ACLU Escrow Account, which was established in 1956, come from the Maxine Hilson Estate, a bequest received by the ACLU in 1946, and are used to pay Mr. Baldwin's part-time salary of $3600 a year. The account, with net worth of approximately $37,000, is administered by the Fiduciary Trust Company, of 1 Wall Street. The activity of the account is regularly reported in the ACLU's annual reports.

In what way, then, is the ACLU a "devious organization," as the committee report claims? All its actions have always been above-board. The members, and all others who are interested, have the fullest opportunity to know exactly what the governing bodies and staffs are doing. The ACLU issues a detailed annual report of operations which includes full information as to its income and an audited financial statement, a monthly bulletin for its members, a weekly Feature Press Service, frequent specific releases for editors and reporters, briefs and other statements for courts and legislative and executive agencies, as well as topical publications for anyone who may want them. In addition, it also deposits all its working files, after they are three years old, with the New York Public Library (for microfilming) and with the Princeton University Library (for permanent holding of the material itself), where they are open to inspection, as are its current working files in its own office at 170 Fifth Avenue. It is proper that such an organization should be required to satisfy the stern obligation of sincerity every hour of its existence. The ACLU tries to do so, and is open for the people to see and judge. Their growing approval is reflected in the fact that the ACLU's membership has more than quadrupled in the last eight or nine years.

The committee report makes further reference to Communist influence in the ACLU, saying (page 4):

> The first National Committee [in 1920] of the AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION had in its composition numerous persons who have been identified with the growth of radicalism and socialism in this country, and even more who have supported the spread of Communism in the United States by their affiliations with Communist-Front movements. At least three of the original National Committeemen of the AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION rose to prominence in the United States.

The "numerous persons" are not named, nor are the "even more" numerous persons hinted at. Such loose language defeats itself. But there is something concrete in the "three ... original National Committeemen" who "rose to prominence in the United States." They are named (pages 4-5) as William Z. Foster, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, and Louis Budenz. Aside from any question of the fame or ill-fame of these three persons, we can show that their respective connections with the ACLU ended 29, 19, and 25 years ago.

1. William Z. Foster joined the ACLU before he became a Communist. He resigned from the National Committee in 1930 in protest because the Union denounced the bail-jumping of the defendants in the Gastonia, N. C. murder trial, and declined to authorize further bail for members of the Communist Party. He announced his resignation in a lengthy and vituperative letter published in the November 1, 1930 issue of the Daily Worker, in which he said, in part (a very small part), that the ACLU had "become a tool in the hands of Norman Thomas and his party of apologizers for Capitalism." Obviously, it was high time for the mixed-up Mr. Foster to end his association with such uncongenial companions. No tears were shed at his departure.

2. Elizabeth Gurley Flynn was removed from the Board of Directors in 1940, following a resolution which held it "inappropriate for any person to serve on the governing committees of the Union or on its staff, who is a member of any political organization which supports totalitarian dictatorship in any country, or who by his public declarations indicates his support of such a principle." She had been a member of the ACLU for a long time before she joined the Communist Party, and she was at the time of her expulsion the only Communist member of the board; see paragraph 5 of Mr. Baldwin's statement quoted above. The resolution which led to her ousting met with strongly worded approval of newspapers in editorial comment throughout the country, with the only dissenting voices those of the Daily Worker and the New Masses. Since then the ACLU has been heartily damned by the Communist press at every opportunity.

3. The statement that Louis Budenz was an original member of the ACLU National Committee is incorrect. He never held such a position. He was, however, a paid staff member some time during the early 1920's. Old-timers in the Union can remember no more about him; it is certain that he never had any important or continuing influence in the national councils.

We have shown that the "influential personalities in the ACLU" mentioned in the committee report, with the implication that a multitidinous and heinous crew will be paraded in review, boil down to four. One of these is a great American liberal, now advanced in years, honored in his own country and abroad, whom the Union is proud to acknowledge. The other three are persons whose association with the Union ended many years ago. The most influential personalities in the Union today are the highly respected men and women from every walk of life who make up its national staff, Board of Directors, and National Committee.

5. "RESULTS OF OTHER INVESTIGATIONS OF THE A.C.L.U."

The committee evidently sets great store by this section of its report. We will therefore analyze it with special care.

1. On page 5 the report quotes from a series of articles prepared by the United Mine Workers of America 35 years ago. No special incidents are related in the quotation, which made the startling accusation that the ACLU was active among the "intellectuals" of the country — "egghead" as a term of reproach was to come later. But times change, and the UMW attitude has changed since 1924. In the 1930's when the CIO was organizing industrial workers, the sins of the Union did not prevent John L. Lewis from accepting its aid in fighting unfair injunctions which impeded labor's right to organize. Nor did he offer any objection to ACLU's assistance in 1953 when it asked the Department of Justice to investigate complaints that UMW organizers in Kentucky were beaten up by police. In recent years ACLU officials have been in frequent contact with AFL and CIO officials on matters of common interest, and several of the labor bodies make financial contributions to the ACLU. This fact, however, has not prevented the Union from pressing for what it considers needed reforms in the American trade union movement, such as democratic elections and, in a few unions, an end to racketeering and gangsterism.

2. Untiring in the repetition of old charges misrepresenting the ACLU's attitude and record, the report quotes (page 5) from the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Communist Activities in the United States, popularly known as the Fish Committee, made on January 17, 1931:

> The American Civil Liberties Union is closely affiliated with the Communist movement in the United States and fully 90 percent of its efforts are on behalf of Communists who have come into conflict with the law.

We consider this statement wholly false and biased. It was the view of one witness, a Lt. Col. Leroy F. Smith, editor of the bi-weekly bulletin of something called the Better America Federation, of Los Angeles, California. The unreliability of the Fish Committee's report was pointed out by leading American newspapers at the time it was issued.

The Union's statistics show that even in recent years, despite the national emphasis on security and loyalty matters, only about one-third — not 90 per cent — of the ACLU's cases have concerned civil liberties problems in that area, and by no means all of those cases have involved proven Communists. Any suggestion that the Union is a partisan of the left and that its work is largely confined to a defense of radicals is not in accord with the facts. History and the temper of the times determine those whose civil liberties are under attack; the ACLU's sole function is to defend the civil liberties guaranteed under the Bill of Rights — and state constitutions such as that of Louisiana — whenever those rights are violated. The Union's work is created for it by those who violate the civil rights of one minority or another. Forty years ago it was the IWW whom the defenders of civil liberties were called upon mainly to protect; a little later it was the Communists. In the 1930's it was the civil liberties of labor unions around which the central issues revolved, and the Union actively defended their rights. In the 1940's and since, many labor unions have abused the rights of individual workers, and the Union's focus in labor affairs has properly shifted to defending individual labor union members against abuses of liberty. In the 1950's the McCarthy-like tactics of some Congressional investigating committees have occasionally ignored the principle and the spirit of fair trial, and the Union has been vigilant to protest. More recently, the civil rights of American Negroes in many parts of the country, and particularly in connection with the segregation-desegregation controversy in the South, have had the Union's full support -- and will continue to have it. At various times in its history the ACLU has applied its single standard of civil liberties to public defense, under varying circumstances, of the Ku Klux Klan, the Liberty League, the Hearst press, the Jones and Laughlin Steel Corporation, Henry Ford, the German-American Nazis, and even the Hon. Hamilton Fish -- may he rest in peace -- whose committee's report is being rebutted here.

In answering the Fish Committee's charge, the Union has repeatedly referred to the report of the House Un-American Activities Committee, published in 1939, in which the chairman, Rep. Martin Dies, flatly said the ACLU was not a Communist organization. This was after a thorough investigation of all the evidence concerning the ACLU's history up to that time. In addition, the House Un-American Activities Committee "Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications," published on March 3, 1951, makes no reference to the ACLU. And, of course, the Union is not on the Attorney General's comprehensive list of hundreds of subversive organizations. Why, then, does this threadbare charge keep coming up? Perhaps, as Disraeli said, "We all of us live too much in a circle." And it may be, as he also said, "Little things affect little minds."

3. In reply to the 25-year-old characterization of the ACLU by Naval Intelligence authorities, which appears on pages 5-6 of the report, we wish to say that Acting Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates, Jr. informed the ACLU in a letter dated December 15, 1955 that any question of an individual's loyalty based on membership in the Union does not represent the official view of the Navy Department. A similar view, that "the Department of the Army does not consider the American Civil Liberties Union to be 'Communist-dominated'," was expressed in a letter dated May 23, 1955 by Brigadier General Henry O. Paxson, Deputy Chief of Staff of Army Intelligence. A letter of November 3, 1953 from H. Chapman Rose, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, called the ACLU "a bona fide patriotic organization."

The Union has received commendations from President Dwight D. Eisenhower for "working so effectively for justice and equality"; from Ex-President Harry S. Truman for its effort to see that "inherent constitutional privileges be granted to every person, citizen or alien, with no thought of race, color, or creed"; from Thomas E. Dewey for its "enviable record" and for being "an essential part of American life." Leading newspapers have frequently praised the ACLU for its work and what it stands for, among many others, the New York Times, Washington Post, New Orleans Item, Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, San Francisco Chronicle, Atlanta Constitution, Chicago Tribune, Christian Science Monitor, Denver Post, Des Moines Register, Durham Morning Herald, Minneapolis Tribune, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Louisville Times, and Toledo Blade. The Union's annual reports have become the subject of favorable editorial comment in newspapers and magazines across the country. A typical statement which we appreciate, especially the second paragraph, is this editorial which appeared in the April 21, 1956 issue of the San Francisco Examiner:

> The American Civil Liberties Union exists to uphold constitutional rights. Whenever it believes they are being violated or whittled away, it seeks to intervene and test the matter in court. At all times, it is concerned with the rights of the individual, not the individual himself.
> You may sometimes disagree, as we do, with the ACLU's choice of cases or its interpretations of the Bill of Rights and other constitutional guarantees. But this is an area where disagreement and dissent have gone on throughout the life of our Nation; if agreement were universal, no ACLU would be needed.
> The ACLU is worthy of the support of all freedom loving citizens in its ... defense of American liberties.

4. Appearing next on page 6 of the report is a characterization of the ACLU in 1938 by a Special Commission of the Massachusetts Legislature as a "Communist-controlled" organization linked to the International Labor Defense and the Garland Fund (American Fund for Public Service). This commission, while in existence, was criticized for employing one-sided procedures by the Boston Herald and by liberals like President Marsh of Boston University, President Compton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Professor Mather of Harvard University. The Massachusetts Civil Liberties Union, in its Civil Liberties Bulletin dated January, 1938, said:

> Had the Commission shown any inclination to investigate movements which are hostile to traditional Americanism, it would deserve support. But it has not. And the completion of the Commission, and the ignorance displayed by its members during the hearings, offer no hope that the Commission is interested in activities, both domestic and foreign-inspired, which are actually subversive to American liberties.

The best refutation of a supposititious link between the ACLU and the International Labor Defense comes from a source which we dislike to use: the Fish Committee swims into view again. In his testimony before that committee Louis Engdahl, general secretary of the ILD, an organization later listed by the Attorney General, positively denied any similarity of aim between his group and the Union. (Special Committee to Investigate Communist Activities, 1930 Report, Part III, Vol. 4, pp. 223-226) With respect to the Garland Fund -- a bail fund established about 1928 by the American Fund for Public Service -- the Union did accept funds for specific court cases in which it was an interested party, but, as a matter of policy, never asked for or received any funds for its operating expenses.

5. Next on page 6 of the report appears a quotation of a quotation of a quotation. "The Fourth Report of the (California) Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities in California in 1948 had the following to say about this organization:

> 'In its 1943 Report to the Legislature, the Legislative Committee investigating un-American activities in California reported the following findings:
> > "The American Civil Liberties Union may definitely be classed as a Communist front or 'transmission belt' organization. At least 90 per cent of its efforts are expended on Communists who come into conflict with the law."
> 'The Senate Committee Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities reiterates the findings of the former legislative committees concerning the Communist character of the American Civil Liberties Union'."

"Findings," a word frequently used by those without any, is used too glibly here, for properly it is restricted in law to the result of a judicial examination or inquiry. There were no "findings" by any of these California committees, any more than by the Committee to Investigate LSU. All simply parrot earlier statements on the ACLU, blithely pumping the treadmill of defamation. Does the canard about the Union devoting "at least 90 per cent of its efforts" to defending Communists sound familiar? As we have pointed out above, this extravagant story set afloat to delude the public originated with the old Fish Committee Report in 1930.

The assertion in the quotation used in the report that the ACLU is a "transmission belt" organization for the Communist Party echoes erroneously the testimony of Earl Browder before the House Un-American Activities Committee on September 6, 1939. In an exchange of telegrams between the Union and the erstwhile Communist leader on this point, dated September 7 and 8, 1939, Browder said: "I did not mention name of American Civil Liberties Union in my testimony before Dies Committee.... I assure you that I am in no way responsible for the distortion of the hearings in the public press and am extremely sorry if this distortion causes your organization any difficulty or embarrassment." But even if Browder had said twenty years ago that the ACLU was a "transmission belt," that would not be proof that it was, much less that it is. The Union categorically denies that it acted in any such manner. It has never been concerned with transmitting Communist propaganda; its sole function is and has always been the defense of civil liberties. We have previously referred to the statement of Rep. Martin Dies, who was chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee at the time Browder appeared before it, a statement made in October, 1939 clearing the ACLU of any Communist taint.

The most authoritative work on the California Un-American Activities Committee, Prof. Edward L. Barrett, Jr.'s The Tenney Committee (Cornell University Press, 1951), offers an 11-page analysis of the Tenney Committee statements about the Union. We should like to present some pertinent facts here. Under its original chairman, Senator Jack Tenney, the California Un-American Activities Committee devoted itself almost entirely to condemning those who opposed a state loyalty oath law imposed on all state employees, the California Levering Act. This committee was notorious for its refusal to grant hearings to individuals and groups being investigated, which can only lead fair-minded persons to question the validity of its "findings." The loyalty oath law was opposed by the ACLU and also by some Communist-front organizations; therefore, the committee reasoned, the ACLU is a Communist-front. But the Union's opposition to the law was totally different from that of the Communists. The Union did not object to the affirmative section of the law, but attacked on constitutional grounds the section proscribing membership in certain organizations. Opposing the law for substantially the same reason were the California State Democratic Party, the California State Federation of Labor, the California CIO, the American Friends Service Committee, the League of Women Voters, and California's Republican Governor Earl Warren. By the committee's line of reasoning, these could also have been branded as Communist. This brings to mind Stuart Chase's syllogism to point up the procedure of guilt by association in such cases: "The Communists are for public housing. Senator Taft is for public housing. Senator Taft must be a Communist."

The following facts, we believe, seriously challenge the report of the California Un-American Activities Committee:

(a) Both in 1943 and 1948, when the Tenney Committee cited the ACLU as a Communist-front organization, the Union's Northern and Southern California branches repeatedly requested a hearing to deny the charges and present contrary evidence. These requests were denied.

(b) The Northern California Branch of the ACLU, in 1948, challenged Senator Tenney to repeat his statement off the floor of the state senate, where he was protected by immunity, so that the Union could institute a libel suit against him. This challenge was not accepted by Senator Tenney.

(c) All the bills suggested by the Tenney Committee were never adopted by the state legislature, mainly because of opposition to Senator Tenney's outrageous attacks on individuals and organizations; because of his rejection by the public, he was forced to resign as chairman of the committee.

(d) In informed circles, the findings of the Tenney Committee are regarded as almost worthless because of the failure to grant hearings and because of the loose and dragnet nature of the listings. The committee's disregard for fair procedure was so outrageous that it was severely reprimanded by such leading California newspapers as the San Francisco Chronicle, San Francisco News, and Los Angeles News.

(e) The most convincing evidence of the inaccuracy of the Tenney Committee citation of the ACLU comes from the House Un-American Activities Committee itself. In its 1951 "Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications," which states in a preface that the Tenney Committee was one of the sources on which the report is based, the House Committee does not include the Tenney Committee's reference to the Union. Evidently the House Committee agreed with the California press and public that the Tenney Committee reference was not true.

6. On pages 6-7 the report makes several misleading and false statements about the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union. It begins by saying the LCLU "has not heretofore received much public notice." Passing over the accuracy of this remark, we will say we intend to remain in the public notice in the future precisely to whatever extent violations of civil rights in Louisiana may require.

The report praises the Anti-Subversive Committee of the Young Men's Business Club of New Orleans for its unjustified attack on the LCLU in April, 1956, citing "an outline of the circumstances surrounding the formation of the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union" contained in the Anti-Subversive Committee's report to the YMBC. No such outline appears in that report, which is almost entirely devoted to a rehash of various criticisms of the ACLU, among them the old "90 percent" nonsense of the Fish Committee Report. It would seem the sheer monotony of their own words might bore the plagiarists of this particular falsehood. Another choice bit from the tabular listing of items in the Anti-Subversive Committee's report is this:

> 3. The Christian Century, January 19, 1955, pg. 71.
> American Civil Liberties Union objects to 'the invasion of the public school by sectarian influence and practice and the allocation of public funds to the support of sectarian schools.
> (This is especially noted by the YMBC committee since the Communists are atheists and are opposed to any type of religion.)

True, as the Christian Century noted, the ACLU supports without shame the separation of church and state envisaged in the First Amendment and inherent in American democracy. The resounding non sequitur of the parenthetical note is best passed over without further comment.

The character of the report of the Anti-Subversive Committee of the YMBC may be gauged by the following excerpt:

> 11. Times Picayune-New Orleans States, April 8, 1956, pg. 22.
> A special committee of the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union announced that it:
> 1. Objected to a recent seizure of Communist documents and a Communist library by New Orleans Police because the police had not obtained a search warrant.

2. Objected to abuse in the local hearings [of the Senate Internal Security Sub-Committee] and to the investigatory powers of Congress and to the general conduct of the hearings.

3. Objected to the hearings of this type, stating "other means can and should be found" to accomplish its purpose.

Concerning point No. 1, the LCLU believes the regulation of the right of search and seizure by the Fourth Amendment -- and also by the Louisiana State Constitution -- did not and do not deprive anybody of the protection they explicitly set forth. Point No. 2 contains a truth, an untruth, and a truth -- in that order. It is untrue that the LCLU "objected ... to the investigatory powers of Congress." The ACLU and its affiliates have never done so, but we have many times objected to abuse of the investigatory powers of Congress, abuse such as was exemplified at the 1956 New Orleans hearings of the Internal Security Sub-Committee by the abusive, discourteous, and antagonistic behavior of the sub-committee members toward witnesses and lawyers. And the LCLU did object at the time, as was accurately reported in the state press, to the general atmosphere in which the hearings were conducted, which we pointed out "resembled the atmosphere of a public spectacle rather than a quasi-judicial proceeding." As to Point No. 3, we have just explained what we meant by "hearings of this type." There is no excuse for them.

But to return to the report of the Committee to Investigate L. S. U. A great point is made of the following "facts": (a) On March 29, 1956, the New Orleans police found a lot of Communist material in the quarters of Hunter Pitts O'Dell, a Negro identified as the underground organizer for the Communist Party in Louisiana; (b) "within a week" the formation of the LCLU was announced in the press, and the date of its formation "coincided exactly with the opening of hearings conducted by the Internal Security Sub-Committee of the United States Senate." Then the triumphant conclusion: "Such was [sic] the inauspicious and sinister beginnings of the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union." An interesting example of post hoc, ergo propter hoc.

Contrary to the implication concerning the formation of the LCLU, there was nothing "sinister" about it, as the correct dates alone will show. The idea of forming a Louisiana affiliate of the ACLU originated in the fall of 1955. On January 20, 1956 Patrick Murphy Malin, executive director of the ACLU, addressed an organizational meeting in New Orleans. On February 20, 1956 the Union's Board of Directors voted unanimously to recognize the newly-organized LCLU. Obviously, all this preceded and was completely unrelated to the O'Dell affair and the hearings of the Internal Security Sub-Committee. When the New Orleans police seized without a search warrant the Communist documents in the possession of O'Dell, the LCLU had its first occasion for public action in the interest of civil liberties; when the Senators behaved as they did in New Orleans, we had another.

Thus the "Results of Other Investigations of the ACLU," if looked at with an open mind, add more credit than discredit to the organization all along the line. The committee has used "other" in the heading of this section of its report as if its own investigation was independently conducted. But all it really did was pick out of the files the most damaging assortment it could find of old and recent charges, each one resting on and repeating the preceding ones, and hastily cobble them together into what it fancied would be a strong indictment. The only group which could possibly be indicted by such a method of presenting a rehash of mutually dependent accusations in lieu of evidence is the group so impoverished as to use it.

6. CONCLUSION

This analysis has run several times longer than the report which it refutes. But an extensive treatment of the charges against the ACLU was necessary in order to show their real nature. It was also necessary to show just how the Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate LSU proceeded with their investigation.

The report of this committee was denounced by officials of the LCLU when it appeared. We will conclude by reproducing their statements to the press. First is the statement of Waldo F. McNeir which appeared in the Baton Rouge Morning Advocate on July 4, 1958.

> Renewed attacks on the ACLU have been made by Sen. William Rainach behind the closed doors of a committee hearing called to investigate "integration influences" at LSU.
> No official of the ACLU or its Louisiana affiliate has been provided with a copy of the committee's ... report, and Patrick Malin, executive director of the ACLU, has been refused an opportunity to testify before the committee to answer irresponsible charges against an organization which has received national and international acclaim for its championship of civil liberties for everyone everywhere.
> When Patrick Malin spoke in Baton Rouge on June 26 and in New Orleans on June 27, he refuted every shred of so-called "evidence" that the ACLU is a Communist, Communist-front, or subversive organization.
> It is fantastic that Sen. Rainach is still trying to smear the ACLU, which is in fact a loyal, respected, thoroughly American, democracy-loving agency dedicated to the authority of law and the dignity of the individual. In so doing he puts himself in the position of a man saying, "My mind is made up; don't confuse me with the facts."
> The technique being used in an attempt to discredit the ACLU is unhappily familiar to those who have watched the operations of authoritarian government in Stalin's Russia, Hitler's Germany, Peron's Argentina, and Mao's China.
> Everywhere the technique is the same--shut off all opposition, scare people out of joining the opposition, smear the opposition with big lies. The thing dictators and would-be dictators fear most is an articulate opposition.

As Gov. Long pointed out so accurately last week, plenty of people don't agree with Sen. Rainach on the segregation issue, but they're scared not to. The ACLU and its members don't agree with Sen. Rainach, and they are not afraid to say so. For that reason he is desperately trying to injure the ACLU and the LSU faculty members who belong to it.

Nobody who has any respect for the truth or believes in the right of all Americans to their own opinion on vital questions will be impressed by this threadbare, futile effort to silence the opposition.

The second statement, by George A. Dreyfous, appeared in the New Orleans States on July 8, 1958.

The press reports that the joint "investigatory" committee of the Louisiana Legislature has again attacked the American Civil Liberties Union. This attack is based upon unproved charges and upon other like attacks having been made in the past. When the ACLU hereafter objects to repressive measures being adopted, it will then be charged with having been cited by this legislative committee.

This smear technique is the transparent refuge of people who cannot sustain their position on the merits. It has been used twice against the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union.

Two years ago the Eastland committee indulged in indefensible procedures. When the LCLU voiced objections, the ACLU was attacked by the Young Men's Business Club on the basis of earlier attacks having been made by others. Now, when the LCLU has helped to expose the nature of the bills providing for the closing of the public schools, its parent organization, the ACLU, is again attacked on the basis of the old charges and the citing of these charges by the YMBC. Thus accusations are received in lieu of evidence.

Assuming that an "investigatory" committee would hear evidence, Ernest Angell, chairman of the board, and Patrick M. Malin, executive director of the ACLU, sought to testify before this "investigatory" committee. Not wishing to influenced by facts which do not conform with the conclusions reached in advance of this "investigation," Sen. W. M. Rainach refused to permit the introduction of such evidence into the record.

When the privilege of refuting these irresponsible charges was withheld from the ACLU, Mr. Malin came to Louisiana and related the history of the ACLU before audiences in Baton Rouge and in New Orleans. The public was invited to hear these addresses and Mr. Malin's statements were published in the newspapers.

The sole purpose of the ACLU is the maintenance of the rights and privileges set forth in the Bill of Rights of the federal and state constitutions.

The character of the ACLU is vouched for by the men who lead it. E. B. MacNaughton, chairman of the national committee, is chairman of the board of the First National Bank of Oregon, one of the most successful financial institutions in the United States. Ernest Angell, chairman of the board of directors, is a prominent Wall Street lawyer and was formerly a member of a regional loyalty and security appeal board. Mr. Malin, executive director, was a professor at Swathmore until he became the director of the ACLU. He served for several years on the International Committee for Refugees as a nominee of the United States.

The ACLU publishes the names of the members of its national committee and of its board of directors. Anyone desiring to know the facts can readily discover who these men are and what they stand for. The ACLU also publishes reports of its activities. All of these activities relate to the rule of law under which we must live if we desire to remain free.

On the data presented in this analysis, by no means all that could have been supplied, we rest our defense of the American Civil Liberties Union against the charges made by the Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate Louisiana State University.

SUBJECT: Tax-Deductibility for Contributions to ACLU?

In the Federal Register for June 26, pages 5217 to 5220, there were published amendments to the Income Tax Regulations which we ought to think about. While they still appear not to make contributions to the ACLU or its affiliates -- as now organized and operated -- deductible for federal tax purposes, they seem (by broadening the meaning of "charitable organization") to make so deductible contributions to the three foundations in which some National Committeemen and members of affiliate boards have (in non-ACLU capacity) been interested: (1) the Civil Liberties Educational Foundation, New York City*; (2) the Civil Liberties Education Foundation, Chicago; and (3) the Los Angeles Civil Liberties Foundation. Also, they seem to make so deductible contributions to the two foundations in which some national Board and Academic Freedom Committee members have (similarly in non-ACLU capacity) been interested: (4) the Roger N. Baldwin Foundation, established in 1950; and (5) the Fund for Research and Education, established in 1956. Finally, they seem to make so deductible contributions to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, Washington, D.C. (which as late as September 1958 was ruled non-deductible as outside the "educational organization" definition); and to make unambiguous the tax-deductible status of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

The amended Income Tax Regulations [§1.501(c)(4)-1] make no change in the tax-exempt status of the Union and its affiliates with regard to their organizational taxes -- for the years when any of us might show "net earnings"! But it is an organization's tax-exempt status under §1.501(c)(3) which governs the deductibility of contributions to it, and the relevant words now read [§1.501(c)(3) - (d)(2) Charitable defined]: "Such term includes: ... (ii) to eliminate prejudice and discrimination; (iii) to defend human and civil rights secured by law ... The fact that an organization, in carrying out its primary purpose, advocates social or civic changes or presents opinion on controversial issues with the intention of molding public opinion or creating public acceptance of its views does not preclude such organization from qualifying under section 501(c)(3) so long as it is not an 'action' organization of any one of the types described in paragraph (c)(3) of this section."

* July 27 - We have learned just today that this expectation has been fulfilled so far as the New York CLEF is concerned.

It is one sub-paragraph of that paragraph which makes contributions to the ACLU or its affiliates -- as now organized and operated -- still not deductible: "(ii) An organization is an 'action' organization if a substantial part of its activities is attempting to influence legislation by propaganda or otherwise. For this purpose, an organization will be regarded as attempting to influence legislation if the organization: (a) contacts, or urges the public to contact, members of a legislative body for the purpose of proposing, supporting, or opposing legislation; or (b) advocates the adoption or rejection of legislation. The term 'legislation,' as used in this subdivision, includes action by the Congress, by any State legislature, by any local council or similar governing body, or by the public in a referendum, initiative, constitutional amendment, or similar procedure."

Note that this covers not only lobbying in the strict sense, but also comprehensively-defined advocacy of adoption or rejection of legislation. Also, that by any likely interpretation of "substantial part," the national ACLU and many of its affiliates are already devoting such a proportion of their "activities" (the time of our paid and unpaid workers so devoted is the important thing, not our relatively small money outlay on the Washington office etc.) to influencing legislation; moreover, that proportion is generally increasing.

Therefore, the question for us is whether we should re-constitute the national ACLU and each of its affiliates into two (genuinely) separate organization apiece: (1) one to influence legislation, and (2) the second to do the other three kinds of work which we now do -- in the courts, in the executive branch of governments, and in popular education. My own tentative judgment is as follows (the history-minded among you might like to refer to the third part of my memorandum of August 1953: "The ACLU -- Evolution of Methods," page 8, middle paragraph): (a) The national ACLU may now have reached what I there called a "scale of operations ... extensive enough to justify, administratively, the establishment of two completely separate organizations in place of the present ACLU -- one to handle tax-exempt functions, and the other non-tax-exempt functions"; but none of our affiliates is yet large enough, and that rules it out for the national under the integrated membership-and-income arrangement which has proved so successful. (b) Even if that administrative problem were somehow solved, "there would still be [as I continued in 1953] more gain than loss for civil liberties by having one organization represent the full nature of the nation's civil liberties duty"; we should continue, as one organization functioning comprehensively, to help educate the public by symbolizing the need for employing all sorts of methods, and we should continue to attract contributions for legislative work by keeping it linked with other activities. (If contributions for legislative work had to be made on a non-deductible basis to a separate organization, their decrease would be too heavy a price to pay for the increase of tax-deductible contributions to the other separate organization working in the courts, in the executive branch of governments, and in popular education. The success of both the NAACP itself and the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund does not give me sufficient encouragement for our different situation: we have no "natural" clientele, and we need to cover the waterfront of all sorts of problems which arise within each of the areas of free speech, due process and equal protection.)

So, I am worried about even the expansion of the now-to-be tax-deductible foundations listed in the first paragraph of this memorandum. I incline instead to recommend the expansion of the now-probably-tax-deductible National Civil Liberties Clearing House (for description of it, see my report supplementing the Board minutes 1/6/58, pp. 4-6), and the expansion of the ACLU as presently organized and operated. But, what do you think?

Dear Alan:

It was very thoughtful of you to send me copies of the ACLU's recent exchange with Seawell. This material couldn't be more timely. I would appreciate a dozen more copies, if you have them to spare.

I hope to see you at the March meeting of the Mass Media Committee. Meanwhile, best regards.

Dear Harold:

I am sorry that we could not get together the other day at the Mass Media Committee meeting. Harry Fleischman told me how you were being badgered by press people on the significance of the "sit-in" protest of the Negro college students, and it struck me that you might be helped by the full text of our recent exchange with North Carolina's attorney general on this subject. I am enclosing 3 copies of our release and I can provide more if needed.

APRIL 16 PARLEY

Law Institute To Probe Radio-TV

The impact of radio and television on a democratic society—and the barriers that prevent maximum freedom of expression—will be examined in depth by local and national authorities Saturday, April 16, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Schoenberg Hall on the UCLA campus.

The all-day institute on "Freedom and Control of Radio and Television in a Democratic Society" is sponsored by the UCLA and USC Schools of Law and the Lawyers' Division of the Southern California ACLU.

Some 400 lawyers, educators, students and mass communication experts are expected to measure the effectiveness of radio and television as it functions in a society dependent upon enlightenment for its existence.

PROF. CHARLES A. SIEPMANN

Atty. Clore Warne, ACLU board member and former chairman of the Legal Action Committee, will preside at the opening proceedings.

Telford Taylor, prominent New York attorney and former general counsel for the Federal Communications Commission, will address the morning session on "Freedom, Availability and Control of Access to the Media." Taylor is also counsel for the Joint Council on Educational Television and is a visiting lecturer in law at Columbia and Yale Universities.

A panel discussion will follow his address. Panelists will include Addison Mueller, professor of law, UCLA, moderator; Atty. Richard W. Jencks, president, Alliance of Television Film Producers; Atty. Robert W. Kenney, former California Attorney General, and Bill Stout, CBS news commentator.

ATTY. TELFORD TAYLOR

Luncheon speaker will be Frank K. Kelly, vice president of the Fund for the Republic and staff administrator of a study of mass media being conducted at the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions at Santa Barbara.

Prof. Richard C. Maxwell, dean of the UCLA School of Law, will preside at the luncheon session.

"Freedom and Control of Program Content" will be the subject of the institute's afternoon discussion, with Prof. Charles A. Siepmann, chairman of the communications in education department, New York University,

6-3 Decision Upholds Right to Anonymity

A Los Angeles ordinance barring the distribution of anonymous literature was struck down by the U.S. Supreme Court last month in a 6-3 decision upholding the "important role" of anonymity in "the progress of mankind."

The high court followed the course set down in two recent racial segregation cases which held that "there are times and circumstances when States may not compel members of groups engaged in the dissemination of ideas to be publicly identified.

"Identification and fear of reprisal might deter perfectly peaceful discussions of public matters of importance. This broad Los Angeles ordinance is subject to the same infirmity," Justice Black said in the majority opinion.

The appeal was brought to the Supreme Court by the Southern California ACLU on behalf of Manuel D. Talley, director of the National Consumers Mobilization, a civil rights organization.

Talley was convicted and fined $10 for violation of the city ordinance which prohibits distribution of pamphlets, leaflets and other handbills which do not identify the author and distributor.

The leaflets Talley distributed urged a boycott of merchants and businessmen who carried products of manufacturers who deny equal employment opportunities to Negroes, Mexicans and Orientals.

The court held that the identification requirement would tend to restrict freedom to distribute information and thereby freedom of expression.

Historic Role

"Persecuted groups and sects from time to time throughout history have been able to criticize oppressive practices and laws either anonymously or not at all," the court said.

"The old seditious libel cases in England show the lengths to which government had to go to find out who was responsible for books that were obnoxious to the rulers . . . Before the Revolutionary War, colonial patriots frequently had to conceal their authorship or distribution of literature that easily could have brought down on them prosecutions by English controlled courts.

"Even the Federalist Papers, written in favor of the adoption of our Constitution, were published under fictitious names. It is plain that anonymity has sometimes been assumed for the most constructive purposes."

All-Embracing

Justice Harlan, in a concurring opinion, took issue with the city's view that the ordinance is aimed at the prevention of "fraud, deceit, false advertising,

High Court To Hear Konigsberg Case

A six-year legal battle to certify an applicant for the California State Bar who refuses to disclose his political affiliations will be reviewed for the second time by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The high court last month granted a petition for a new hearing to Raphael Konigsberg, former Los Angeles social worker, who qualified for the Bar in 1953 but has been denied admission solely for refusing to answer questions inquiring into past or present Communist Party membership.

Atty. Edward Mosk, who has represented Konigsberg through two appeals to the high court, charged in the petition for a writ of certiorari that it is "arbitrary and capricious" to refuse to certify the applicant because of his silence on his personal political affiliations.

Konigsberg successfully met all requirements for admission, including education, proof of good moral character, and firm denials that he ever advocated violent or forceful overthrow of the government, the petition said.

In its first review of the case, the U.S. Supreme Court held in 1957 that Konigsberg had successfully sustained the burden of proving good moral character and non-advocacy of violent overthrow of the government.

The case was then remanded to the State Supreme Court "for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion." The State court referred the matter back to the Committee of Bar Examiners.

At a second hearing before the Committee, Konigsberg was warned that his refusal to answer material questions would obstruct the investigation of his qualifications.

Job Dismissal Suit Scheduled for Trial

A suit for reinstatement of Leland Watterman, discharged by the Southern California Gas Co. for refusing to testify before the California Senate Un-American Activities Committee, is set for trial in Superior Court on April 27.

Watterman testified freely about his own political associations but refused to divulge information about other persons at a hearing before the Committee in 1957.

Attys. A. L. Wirin, Abraham Gorenfeld and Alan Carson will present the arguments in the Southern California ACLU-supported case.

Hearing Granted in HUAC Contempt Case

The U.S. Supreme Court last week opened the door for a new look at the powers of the House Un-American Activities Committee when it agreed to review the contempt of Congress conviction of Frank Wilkinson, former Los Angeles Housing Authority official.

The high court granted a petition for a writ of certiorari which stressed that the right of the people to seek redress of grievances is threatened by Wilkinson's conviction.

The appeal, which is supported by the national ACLU, challenges a U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decision affirming Wilkinson's conviction for refusing to answer questions concerning Communist Party membership before the HUAC in Atlanta two years ago.

Lobbyist

Wilkinson was summoned before the Committee after he arrived in Atlanta to organize "hostile sentiment" to the investigation and to bring pressure upon Congress to abolish the HUAC.

The questions asked Wilkinson were not pertinent to the Committee's ostensible purpose of investigating Communist infiltration of the textile industry in the South, the petition said.

Activities directed toward the petitioning of the government for redress of grievances cannot be presumed to come within the pervasive authority granted the Committee, as Congress cannot invade a constitutional danger zone so clearly marked, the ACLU said.

The petition also stressed that the lower court erred in applying the Barenblatt decision by failing to consider that there must be a connection between the witness and the subject of investigation in order to establish pertinency.

Direct Relation

In the Barenblatt case, the high court upheld the Committee's power to ask the witness whether he was a member of the Communist Party, but the court also established that there was a specific subject under inquiry to which the witness was related.

"If Congress authorized the Committee to investigate propaganda activities against itself, such authorization would be void as a violation of the First Amendment," the ACLU said.

The petition to the high court was prepared by ACLU Attys. Rowland Watts and Nanette Dembitz of New York.

Gov. Brown Can Act!

Capital punishment, viewed in the light of contemporary standards of human knowledge and conscience, is cruel and unusual punishment: a violation of the Eighth Amendment .

We are confident that the California State Legislature, now very narrowly divided, will soon adopt this general view and abolish the death penalty in our state, probably in 1961.

Six men are scheduled to die in San Quentin's gas chamber between April 22 and May 20, including Caryl Chessman on May 2. The execution of any of these men is senseless, brutal—and a breach of fundamental principle.

The Governor can act!

Article VII, Section 1, of the State Constitution gives the Governor clear "power to grant reprieves . . . and commutations of sentence . . . upon such conditions . . . as he may think proper . . . " The only limitation upon this power is the requirement of concurrence by four justices of the State Supreme Court in the case of two previous convictions. We know of no instance in which the Supreme Court has refused to concur, when the Governor has initiated the action for clemency or commutation.

We urge Governor Brown, therefore, to declare a moratorium upon all executions in the State of California (including Caryl Chessman), at least until the close of the 1961 session of the Legislature, when capital punishment can be abolished for good.

Please, write to Governor Edmund Brown, State Capitol, Sacramento, urging him to act promptly in this forthright manner.

Chapter Sets Talk by CORE Official

The role of Negro youth in revitalizing the fight for equality throughout the country will be discussed by Henry Hodge, national vice-president of the Committee on Racial Equality (CORE) at a meeting of the Hollywood Chapter of the ACLU scheduled for 8 p.m. Monday, April 25.

The meeting will be held at the home of Atty. and Mrs. Marshall Ross, 2471 Glendower Place.

Hodge will give an on-the-scene account of the impact of current "sit-in" demonstrations initiated by Negro students against merchants who refuse to serve Negroes at public lunch counters.

Petition Campaign Seeks Moratorium on Death Penalty

A state-wide petition campaign urging Gov. Brown to declare a moratorium on capital punishment until the 1961 Legislature has fully considered a ban on the death penalty was launched last week by Californians Against Capital Punishment.

The petition states the Committee's opposition to capital punishment "as a matter of fundamental principle," and calls upon the Governor to postpone all further executions until the close of the Legislative session next year.

Prof. Robert C. Kingsley, dean of the USC School of Law, is chairman of the state drive.

Copies of the petition will be made available to Southern California ACLU members for circulation.

ACLU members and guests are invited to attend.

SAN FERNANDO VALLEY

ACLU Counsel A. L. Wirin will analyze the constitutional issues at stake in the Caryl Chessman case at a public meeting Thursday, April 14, at 8:15 p.m. at the Valley Cities Jewish Community Center, 13164 Burbank Blvd., Van Nuys.

ATTY. COLE BLEASE

Blease Named to New ACLU Legislative Job

The appointment of Atty. Cole Blease, 30, as legislative representative of the Southern California ACLU, was announced this week by Dr. Eason Monroe, executive director.

A graduate of the University of California School of Law and for the past three years legislative advocate of the Friends Committee on Legislation, Blease will direct the ACLU's legislative program at the grass roots level and in the state capital.

He also will represent the Southern California ACLU at legislative hearings in Sacramento, will testify before state committees on pending civil liberties measures, and will coordinate legislative activities conducted by ACLU chapters.

Ground Work

At present he is preparing for sessions before interim committees of the Assembly and Senate and is developing background material for use when the Legislature reconvenes in regular session next January.

Blease described legislative action as a catalytic agent which spurs the public to think and act.

"By developing public issues which are widely debated, public knowledge is broadened which in turn influences legislative decisions," Blease said.

Union Leaders Chart Course at Chicago Meet

Atty. Lloyd Smith, Southern California ACLU president, and Dr. Eason Monroe, executive director, will attend the Union's biennial conference in Chicago from April 21 to 24. The national parley will be devoted to discussion of substantive civil liberties problems the Union will face in the next two years.

The rights of racial minorities in voting, education, housing and employment will form a major area of national ACLU attention.

Police authority and civil liberties also will be analyzed in relation to illegal detention and civilian complaint boards.

In the field of free speech and association, delegates will consider censorship and sex morality; church and state, with special attention to problems arising from federal aid to education.

Dr. Monroe is chairman of the conference planning committee. At a meeting of the committee on Feb. 1 in New York the committee approved a recommendation to the national board providing for the appointment of a National Planning Committee.

The committee would be composed of one member from the national board, two from the national committee, and four from the affiliates.

Letters: Judge Gives Views on Chessman Case

Dear Sirs:

I have just been reading with considerable interest your articles on the Chessman case in your latest issue.

What every one referred to as the "cruel and unusual" punishment phase of the matter is the fallacy that the State has kept Chessman in the death row for eleven years. The State has been perfectly willing to release him (via the death penalty) at any time during that whole period. What has kept Chessman in the death row is Chessman himself. He has taken advantage of every loophole in our procedure which makes our criminal code, by reason of interminable delay, far less effective than that of our parent country England. To be worthy of the name criminal laws must not only be enforced strictly, but quickly.

Which argument on my part does not mean I favor the death penalty, to which I have been a life long opponent. However I feel we should base our opposition not on a fallacy but on the truth.

My own opposition to such penalty is (1) because it fails entirely in its purpose, and (2) because we have no right to require one human being (the officer) to take in cold blood the life of another human being.

But if we abolish it, then the change should be by constitutional provision, not by a law which can be changed at the pleasure of any legislative session. The man with a life sentence should be as completely civily dead as he would be if he were physically so. There should be no possibility of parole or pardon by some soft headed or publicity seeking governor; unless and until newly discovered evidence is presented to some proper tribunal showing error of fact which influenced the original trial.

Rehabilitation, while a by-product most desirable, is after all a by-product and not the main purpose of prosecution. The only real concern of government should be prevention of crime and protection of the public, hoping for rehabilitation, vain though it mostly is, and never, never for revenge.

Race Bias Seen in New Gambling Case

A law that is fair and impartial on its face but is enforced with "an evil eye and an unequal hand" breaches the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment, Southern California ACLU counsel charged last week in defense of eleven Negroes charged with violation of Pasadena gambling laws.

The same legal force and effect given to laws which discriminate because of race should be applied to discriminatory enforcement of the law based on race, ACLU Attys. A. L. Wirin, Fred Okrand and Rhoda Gordon said in an amici curiae brief filed in the Appellate Department of Superior Court.

The brief also challenged the refusal of the Municipal Court to accept the defendants' offer of proof that gambling laws are enforced in an arbitrary and intentional manner against Negro residents of Pasadena.

Statistics

The evidence consisted of Pasadena court records from 1957-59 showing that four and a half percent of persons arrested were white, and 94½ percent were colored. Last year, 100 percent of those arrested were colored, according to Atty. Don H. Terry, counsel for the defendants.

Only 12 percent of the population of Pasadena is colored; approximaely 83 percent is white, with the remaining five percent distributed among other minority races, Terry said.

Pasadena police are aware that gambling by white citizens is being conducted in three different clubs, the defense charged. In one instance, Terry said, where white persons, including police officers, were found gambling, no arrests were made.

Immunity

The ACLU brief stressed that the California Constitution makes no distinction between the written law and the law as applied in the area of equal rights.

"If the police intentionally do not make arrests among one class of citizens, who are known violators of gambling laws, this is a grant of immunity on an unequal basis; those unequally affected by reason of their race have been denied fundamental rights."

It is as much the duty of the courts to see that the law is not evaded as that it is not directly violated, the ACLU said.

A similar suit supported by the Southern California ACLU last year resulted in the dismissal of gambling charges against Negroes in Los Angeles.

Arguments Slated in School Oath Appeal

The District Court of Appeals has scheduled arguments for 2 p.m., Thursday, April 14, in the State Bldg. on the validity of non-disloyalty affidavits required for the use of public school auditoriums.

Southern California ACLU members who have never observed the ACLU legal battery in action are urged to attend the hearing. Attys. A.L. Wirin and Abraham Gorenfeld will present the arguments requesting the court to invalidate the oath requirement.

The Los Angeles and San Diego offices of the ACLU joined in the appeal after the Boards of Education of both cities refused to abide by Superior Judge Philbrick McCoy's ruling last June holding the oath unconstitutional.

Prior Victory

Applications by chapter leaders in Whittier and Anaheim also were rejected by school authorities after the loyalty disclaimer was returned unsigned.

The appeal seeks reinforcement of a State Supreme Court decision in 1946 which supported the ACLU's refusal to execute a similar test oath for the use of school auditoriums in San Diego.

The court then held that meetings that would be "harmless" elsewhere do not take on a "sinister quality" when held in school buildings.

Classic View

Unless the views expressed present a clear and present danger to the community, the state must permit a "generous tolerance" of the convictions and affiliations of its citizens, the court held.

The present Statement of Information required under the State Education Code provides that applicants state that they do not advocate violent overthrow of the government and are not Communist-action or Communist-front organizations.

The ACLU's petition to the appellate court, prepared by Wirin, Gorenfeld and Atty. Irwin Gostin of San Diego, claimed that the test oath places the burden of proof upon the applicant, thereby denying freedom of speech without the safeguards of due process of law.

Actors Join in Tribute to Sahl

Humour as an important weapon in the arsenal of free speech will be given public recognition May 15 when the Southern California ACLU honors Comedian Mort Sahl for his outspoken satire of political and social issues.

The first ACLU fund-raising event of the year, the program will be held from 5 to 9 p.m. at the Ambassador Hotel. Admission is $5 per person.

Also appearing on the program will be James Whitmore, motion picture and television actor, noted for his roles in "Kiss Me Kate," "Battleground," "The Asphalt Jungle," among other picture credits, and Actress Phyllis Kirk, currently appearing in "The Thin Man" television series.

Fears, Opposition Fade as FEP Law Marks First Year

Exactly one year ago Gov. Brown signed into law a bill creating a Fair Employment Practices Commission to prevent and eliminate racial and religious discrimination in employment. The bill went into effect amid dire warnings from opponents of the measure that "you can't legislate brotherhood."

As most supporters of the FEP law knew all along, the opposition was wrong.

Most of the FEP's first year has been absorbed with administrative details, the selection of personnel and the opening of branch offices. But early in January the Commission began to move forward toward its assigned goal.

Acceptance

The results so far have been "gratifying acceptance of the principle of non-discrimination," according to John Anson Ford, Commission chairman who retired from the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors after 24 years of service to take the FEP post.

Ford, in an interview last week, said the Commission so far has received 123 complaints of discrimination, divided almost equally between northern and southern California.

Of these complaints, 15 were dismissed after investigation for lack of jurisdiction or probable cause; one dismissal was found justified on grounds of incompetence. Nearly 100 cases are still pending. Seven were settled amicably either by reinstatement of the aggrieved employee or by assurances of employers that minority groups would be given fair and equal treatment in future hiring.

Cross-Section

Most of the complaints, Ford said, originate among industrial workers, but there are also charges of discrimination directed against some labor unions, the professions and even municipal civil service commissions.

None of the employers charged with discrimination has yet refused settlement nor has any been brought before the Commission for a public hearing. Under the law, an employer who refuses to abide by the Commission's findings is subject to a maximum penalty of a $500 fine and a one-year jail sentence.

Ford cited as the major obstacles to equal employment the fear that employees will object to working with members of minority groups, and the fear of public disapproval of being served by minorities.

Experience has shown that neither fear is valid, Ford said. "When it is pointed out that non-discrimination helps business, and that the public is not offended if the person is qualified for the job, the employer's fears usually dissolve."

At present the Los Angeles office of the Commission, located in the Broadway Arcade Bldg., at 542 S. Broadway, consists of an assistant chief of staff, three consultants, and four stenographers.

Eventually when the Commission is functioning at full steam, half of the work of the new agency will be educational, Ford predicted.

In addition to demonstrating to employers the moral and social value of practicing non-discrimination, it is imperative that minority groups be trained and prepared for advancement in new fields that are constantly opening for qualified workers — whatever their race or creed.

It is then, Ford said, that "the opportunity to seek, obtain and hold employment without discrimination because of race, religious creed, national origin or ancestry" will become a reality in fact as well as in law.

ANONYMITY UPHELD

negligent use of words, obscenity and libel."

"It will not do for the State simply to say that the circulation of all anonymous handbills must be suppressed in order to identify the distributors of those that may be of an obnoxious character," Justice Harlan said.

"In the absence of a more substantial showing as to Los Angeles' actual experience with the distribution of obnoxious handbills, such a generality is for me too remote to furnish a constitutionally acceptable justification for the deterrent effect on free speech which this all-embracing ordinance is likely to have."

ACLU attorneys who participated in the case included A.L. Wirin and Hugh R. Manes, who argued before the high court, and Fred Okrand, Herbert W. Simmons, Jr., and Mandle Rottman, who participated in the brief.

Case History of a $10 Fine

The U.S. Supreme Court last month reached an important freedom of press decision that will go down in the law books as Talley v. California (28 LW 4186).

Behind that citation is a story which provides a classic example of how a legal case suported by the ACLU begins, moves through the judicial hierarchy, and, in this instance, ends happily on a note of triumph.

The case began in April, 1958 as a routine prosecution for a violation of an obscure city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of anonymous handbills, pamphlets and leaflets.

FINE IMPOSED

The defendant was arrested and tried before a Los Angeles Municipal Court judge who imposed a fine of $10. Ordinarily the nominal fine would have been paid and the matter would have ended there.

However, the handbill at issue urged a boycott of a market which sold goods produced by firms which discriminate against race in employment.

Talley, a Negro, was represented at the trial by Atty. Herbert W. Simmons, Jr., prominent civil rights lawyer who is vice president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Los Angeles, and a member of the Southern California ACLU legal committee.

Simmons filed an appeal in the Appellate Department of Superior Court, challenging the constitutionality of the ordinance. At this point he requested the ACLU to take over the appeal.

VOLUNTEER AID

ACLU's chief counsel A. L. Wirin solicited the aid of volunteer Atty. Mandle Rottman, who wrote the brief; Wirin argued the case before the appellate court.

In November, 1958, the court upheld the ordinance by a vote of 2 to 1 on grounds that the ordinance does not restrict free speech but provides a means for determining responsibility for what is printed. Judge Edward T. Bishop, in a vigorous dissent, said the ordinance abridged freedom of press.

The first round of appeals was lost; the second was put into motion when Wirin requested Atty. Fred Okrand, ACLU board member and co-counsel, to prepare a petition for a writ of certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The petition was granted "in forma pauperis"—the government acknowledging that the appellant had no funds to finance the appeal; the subsequent court record and brief were printed at government expense.

FINAL ROUND

Atty. Hugh R. Manes, member of the ACLU volunteer legal corps, was asked to prepare additional briefs submitted to the high court. Wirin and Manes argued the case before the Supreme Court early this year. The American Jewish Congress filed a brief as a friend of the court.

If the case had proceeded at private expense, without the aid of volunteer counsel, the litigation would have cost from $5-10,000, including attorneys' fees, court costs and printing expenses.

On March 7, 1960, the highest court in the land ruled 6 to 3 that the Los Angeles handbill ordinance was unconstitutional.

The case that began with a $10 fine ended in a sweeping victory for the right of anonymity in political discussion.

TENNEY OATH AT ISSUE IN CITY JOB REFUSAL

The State Supreme Court heard arguments this week on the appeal of Mrs. Virginia Wilson who was barred from city employment for refusing to sign a now defunct county test oath 12 years ago.

ACLU Counsel A.L. Wirin contended that the ruling under which the Civil Service Comission based its disqualification was not intended to keep from city employment "every person ever discharged for any reason by any employer."

The appeal, supported by the Southern California ACLU, challenges the Commission's action as a violation of the due process clause and freedom of religion and thought protections of the First and 14th Amendments.

Mrs. Wilson qualified for two civil service posts in both written and oral examinations. She was disqualified, however, for her past refusal, on grounds of principle, to subscribe to the checklist of organizations known as the Tenney loyalty oath.

The checklist has never been required of city employees and is no longer a condition for county employment.

Mrs. Wilson also indicated her willingness to subcribe to the Levering oath currently required of all public employees.

Court Rejects New Felon Law Hearing

The State Supreme Court stood firm by its decision last month which invalidated the Los Angeles felon registration ordinance and denied a petition for a rehearing supported by the major law enforcement agencies of the State.

Joining in the appeal for a new hearing were the State Attorney General and the municipal governments of twelve California cities. The petition claimed that the court's decision jeopardized the power of a municipality to enact ordinances in support of any law which the State may have legislated.

The State court unanimously ruled that ordinances requiring the registration of ex-felons are invalid on grounds that the State has pre-empted the field by requiring registration only of certain sex offenders.

State Authority

If the Legislature intended to require the registration of all ex-convicts it has had many opportunities to broaden the law, but has declined to do so, the court held.

The amici curiae brief seeking a new hearing contended that criminal registration ordinances are "a vital and useful tool in the hands of the guardians of the security of our society."

The petition claimed that the court's decision "inevitably will result in additional criminal activity that might have been prevented."

Valuable Aid

The registration statute is "more than a pretext for the arrest of ex-convicts, or a device for their harassment; it has genuine, legitimate, law enforcement value," the petition claimed.

The court's decision was handed down in a test case supported by the Southern California ACLU on behalf of John Abbott, a conscientious objector who was required to register under the law following a 1943 conviction for failure to remain in a civilian public service camp.

The denial of a new hearing blocks further avenues of appeal by the city and state law enforcement authorities.

Union Opposes Release of FBI Lynch Report

The national ACLU last month asked Atty. Gen. Wiliam P. Rogers not to yield to requests that he publicly release the FBI's report of the recent Mack Parker lynch case in Mississippi.

Public disclosure of the FBI file would be directly contrary to the constitutional principle that accusations against people are to be handled through the judicial process, the Union said.

Patrick Murphy Malin, national ACLU executive director, emphasized that the lynching was a "terrible crime expressing the ultimate explosion of racial prejudice and deserves the condemnation of every civilized person.

"The essence of the 5th and 6th Amendments would be destroyed if prosecutors, in support of their accusations, disclosed specific investigative evidence concerning individuals elsewhere than in court or befor administrative agencies."

Educator Raps Conformity in History Books

High school history textbooks are being drained of daring analysis of controversial issues, a prominent New York educator charged last month.

Dr. Albert Alexander, textbook analyst for the New York City Board of Education, assailed the "gray flannel cover" on the modern history textbook in an article in Social Education, the official journal of the National Council for Social Studies, published jointly with the American Historical Association.

History textbooks are beautiful to look at and meet all the official standards of pedagogy and loyalty, Dr. Alexander said, but they are "strangely dull, lifeless and bear striking resemblances to each other" in the uniformity of treatment of American history.

Misleading

Dr. Alexander specifically objected to the absence of historical opinion or interpretation by the author and over-emphasis on contemporary details which results in "misleading and often false equating of values, personages and events."

History texts have become critical of neither the past nor the present, and issues are artificially balanced in order to please partisans in every side of each controversy, Dr. Alexander stated.

"Solid factual roadblocks to critical interpretation are erected, and in extreme cases like the controversial issues surrounding the Civil War, publications are prepared which are aceptable to all markets."

Ideas Limited

A check of four books used in New York City schools showed that none of them refers to the "Civil War," but prefers the South-approved "War between the States."

Dr. Henry Steele Commager, Columbia University historian, strongly supported Dr. Alexander's views. "The whole purpose seems to be to take out any ideas to which anybody might object and to balance all sections and interests. If you mention Detroit, you must also mention Birmingham," Prof. Commager said.

Dr. Austin J. McCaffrey, executive secretary of the American Textbook Publishers Institute, dissented. The textbook publisher, he said, assumes responsibility for releasing books which are "free of bias, prejudice or the points of view of particular individuals or groups."

The textbook, he added, must never become a "vehicle of social change" and must not set out "to persuade" lest it become an instrument of propaganda.

giving the major address.

Siepmann, who is president of the New York Civil Liberties Union, is a former vice president of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Prof. Victor S. Netterville, USC School of Law, will moderate a panel discussion on program content. Participants will include Atty. Melville B. Nimmer, counsel for the Writers Guild of America, and Syd Cassyd, consultant on educational television to the UCLA Extension Division.

Arrangements for the institute were completed by a planning committee headed by Prof. Francis E. Jones, Jr., USC; Atty. Marshall Ross, ACLU Lawyers' Division chairman, and Prof. Murray L. Schwartz, UCLA.

Among the issues to be considered under the subject of access to radio and television will be: ownership of radio and television facilities, legal and governmental regulations, equal time provisions, station regulations governing controversy, and possible legislative amendment of existing statutes.

The discussion of program content will explore the mechanics of program control, news treatment, fears of sponsor withdrawal and adverse public reaction, and the possibilities of government subsidies for "public service programs."

Registration fee for the institute is $7 per person, including luncheon.

Appeal Planned in Duncan Murder Case

The Southern California ACLU will participate as a friend of the court in an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court of the convictions of Mrs. Elizabeth Duncan and two accomplices found guilty of murder in Ventura.

A petition to the U.S. Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari will be supported by the ACLU but limited to the constitutional issues involved in the appeal.

The ACLU has challenged the fairness of the trials and charged that the defendants were denied due process of law because of "prejudicial and "inflammatory" statements issued by the District Attorney

Arcadia 'Smear' Campaign Scored

An attack upon Dr. Linus Pauling, launched by American Legion Post 247 in Arcadia, was dubbed an "utterly irresponsible McCarthy-type smear" by Dr. Eason Monroe, Southern California ACLU executive director, last week.

The Legion named Dr. Pauling, Nobel Prize winner in chemistry and professor of Chemistry at Caltech, as the first target in a campaign to "bring America back to Americans."

The Arcadia Tribune, in its lead story on March 24, said the Legion in coming weeks will "spotlight activities of others lending aid to the doctrines of communism, including some residents of Arcadia."

Familiar Tack

The newspaper quoted the "documented record" provided by the Legion citing a long list of Dr. Pauling's associations and activities all of which, the Legion said, "are listed by the United States Attorney General as Communist Front Organizations."

Among the citations were several appearances by the renowned scientist at Southern California ACLU public events.

Dr. Monroe, in a letter to the Tribune on March 31, said the Legion leaders may wish to indulge in such "slanderous activities," but the Tribune has "the higher public standards of good journalism to meet."

Motives Questioned

Pointing out the "obvious error' in its story linking the ACLU with organizations cited by the Attorney General, Dr. Monroe said, "The fact that this statement is untrue could easily have been ascertained both by you and by the Legion officials.

"If this printed untruth is deliberate, it is quite clearly libelous and suggests motives comparable to those of the late Senator McCarthy, adopted by individuals who do not have the same protection of Congressional immunity to expound deliberate falsehoods," Dr. Monroe said.

If the statement represented only "an inadvertent error," then the competence of the total Legion report and of the Tribune is open to question, he added.

Monroe told the Tribune editor that the ACLU expects to find "a prominently displayed correction to the effect that the American Civil Liberties Union has never been cited as a communist front (or in any other way) by the U.S. Attorney General or any other agency of the Federal Government."

Konigsberg Case . . .

ship in the Communist Party were deemed material. Konigsberg again refused to answer, stating that "I could hardly be expected at this point for expediency to give up principles that have been upheld by the highest court of our country."

A friend of the court brief supporting the petition for a new hearing was filed by the Southern California ACLU. The brief contended that "The First Amendment would be an innocuous document indeed if speech could be made the hostage of licensing bodies whenever it suited their whim or convenience."

The ACLU petition was prepared by Attys. A. L. Wirin and Hugh R. Manes.

Dear Alan:

We are complimented by your request for our mimeographed materials as possible background for your annual report, though I'm not sure you realize what you are letting yourself in for.

My last round-up report on the South and SRC activities was done last October, but the brief analysis may still be of some relevance. (As an extra precaution against publicity, this report is marked confidential; in fact, you may disregard this classification except with respect to names of persons and agencies with whom we have interaction.) Of course, our reports on the sit-in protest have tried to interpret the meaning of recent developments for race relations. The last of our mimeographed publications are relatively brief releases on specific aspects of the Southern situation, but I am sending them along pro forma. As to general description of Southern race relations currently, I am enclosing a coupla of short speeches of recent vintage that may be suggestive.

On another subject, I have discretely poked into the New York Times situation. I can confirm what you already know -- that there is considerable concern about the libel business in New York. But there is no indication that any stories are not being handled, or are being handled differently because of this. It is a fact that the Times seems to have ceased, at least for the moment, to send any of its "outside" reporters into the South for special stories. My own feeling is that anything which would give the Times a public boost of moral support would be worth doing. As you may know, the Birmingham newspapers are pounding away mercilessly at the Times.

Dear Harold:

We are now drawing together materials for the preparation of our annual report and in this connection I note how valuable the Southern Regional Council annual reports have been in the past. Could you have your information office send me a separate set of all the mimeographed materials published since last August, and, particularly, if you have any round-up statement on the general situation in the South? Thank you very much for your helpful cooperation.

Best wishes.

Dear Toby:

Thanks for your letter and the check. (It was right to the penny, indicating the accuracy of your research and depriving me of the privilege of refunding a surplus.)

I found the whole experience interesting, and enjoyed meeting the high command of the FCLU. I only hope the proffered testimony will ultimately do some good.

Your cryptic remark about the nasty spotlight refers, I suppose, to smear of SRC. My friend John Griffin wrote me that some of this was attempted by Hawes after I left. We've dealt with a lot of this sort of thing over the years, and have plenty of rebuttal ammunition ready at hand. Please let me know if it gets serious enough to warrant a counter-attack, and do keep me posted on major developments in the case.

All the best.

"BY THE PEOPLE"–1920, 1960, 2000

BY PATRICK MURPHY MALIN

Democracy, the dictionaries say, is "government by the people; direct or representative." But something more than a democratic government is needed for a free society; the people must have a large measure of freedom even from their own democratic government. They must have rights as citizens—civil liberties. "Personal liberty," said Charles Morgan in his Zaharoff Lecture at Oxford in 1948, "cannot survive without constitutional liberty. . . . In countries with a written constitution the removal of checks upon power is blessedly difficult. The people of the United States have wisely denied themselves the opportunity to sweep away their institutions and plunge themselves into slavery by the impulse of one vote. . . . Montesquieu puts [the] question in concrete form: will democracy preserve the Balance of Powers? Unchecked power is no less tyranny because someone has voted for it."

The American Civil Liberties Union has for forty years been enthusiastically grateful for this nation's democratic government and free society; neither the democracy nor the freedom is complete, but both are wide and deep. The task of the Union has been, and still is, simply to preserve and improve both democracy and freedom by defending the central constitutional safeguards which keep power in check. Those central safeguards—the rights of the people as citizens, their civil liberties—are set forth in the Bill of Rights (the first ten amendments to the federal constitution) and other cognate provisions of the federal and state constitutions. They are: freedom of inquiry and communication, fair procedures, equal protection of the laws, and the "retained" and "reserved" rights of the people (emphasized in the Ninth and Tenth Amendments).

It has never been easy for even the American people to preserve and improve both democracy and freedom by defending those central safeguards. It became downright hard with the country's "coming of age," internationally and industrially, at the time of World War I. Hence, there was nothing accidental or astonishing about the American Civil Liberties Union's coming into existence in 1920, as an agency—typically American in being at once organized and private—for the more effective defense—by the people—of those central safeguards, against mounting threats.

International and industrial factors have all along been the chief scene-setters for the Union's work. So it took no special insight, late in December 1949—when the then newly-appointed second executive director of the Union was asked at his pre-induction press conference what would be the main sources of difficulty for civil liberties in the next few decades—for him to answer: "War and machines."

War had to be stressed because, even if there were to be no all-out war, terrible events were already occurring throughout the world; and this country was, for the first time, entering what would probably be a long period of unremitting international danger. The resultant intense pre-occupation of our people with national security, normal and admirably patriotic, would incidentally cause morbid pressure of many sorts on civil liberties. (Less than two months afterward, the late Senator Joseph McCarthy launched his attack on the State Department's personnel; and, four months after that, the Korean conflict added strong impetus to an indiscriminate assault on civil liberties.)

Machines had to be stressed because the ever-swifter growth of machine technology, with the attendant increase in social complexity, would bring in its wake other problems for civil liberties far more intractable than those of the simple economy of 1787-91, when the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were framed—more intractable than those of "the good years" of 1900-14, even than those of the 1920's and 1930's and 1940's. (The 1950's were marked by a worsening of the problem of wiretapping: how can our people, through the police, curb crime in the automobile-airplane-telephone age, without letting themselves become the prey of ravening invasions of their privacy?)

Nineteen-sixty has deepened concern on the war front. Even before the U-2 was shot down and the summit conference was destroyed, the world had entered the most sombre period since the end of World War II. Now, in mid-October, the United Nations Assembly is struggling to recover from Khrushchev's desk-pounding attempt to have his own way on the Congo and disarmament, and so keep the Chinese Communists in leash; a Japanese party leader is assassinated, the French people are tearing themselves asunder over Algeria, and the Castro-American conflict rages just short of war.

We can thank our lucky stars that the defection of two communications intelligence experts of the National Security Agency in the Department of Defense came after Congress had finally adjourned for the presidential campaign, and—more important—that comment in governmental circles and outside has shown maturing recognition that such real dangers to national security cannot really be countered by slap-dash methods which threaten civil liberties. Linus Pauling's stand against the Senate Internal Security Sub-committee has not yet brought a contempt citation. Vice-President Nixon and Senator Kennedy have been sober in talking about how to deal with Communist subversion.

But, as long as the international temperature is feverish, there will remain at least latent trouble for civil liberties. Even during this year of relatively good sense, Willard Uphaus is in a New Hampshire jail because of a 5-4 United States Supreme Court decision on his refusal to give a list of names. And the House Un-American Activities Committee has proved anew that it should be abolished, by once again staging a meaningless side-show in its almost sole remaining happy-hunting-ground of California. That serpent in our demi-paradise of a democratic government and a free society can be scotched only by the people, through their Representatives.

Nineteen-sixty has deepened concern on the social-complexity front, also. The fathers of this Republic, desiring both religious freedom and national unity, aimed to keep their new federal government out of religion altogether, whether for or against; and they did a magnificent job of pointing the way. But they did not have to cope, as we must, with the multiplying complications growing out of the success of our machine civilization—which has attracted the most heterogeneous population on earth (heterogeneous—among other ways—in its religion, non-religion and anti-religion), and has made our educational institutions both a prime necessity for national strength and a rich prize for anyone who can control them. The schools—most of all in finance and in curriculum—are the chief stake in the church-state contest.

That controversy, despite frantic efforts of one sort or another. will not disappear from the current presidential campaign. But the problem is much bigger than what would, or would not, result from the election of a particular President. The comprehensive problem is this: Will all our governmental executives and legislators and judges (federal, state and municipal) and all our people—Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish; Quaker, Moslem and atheist—adhere scrupulously to the constitutional principle that there should be neither any governmental restraint on, nor any governmental support of, religion or non-religion or anti-religion?

Not merely governmental officials, but most of all the people themselves. Because, not only could the people remove that principle from the Constitution by amendment, but also—with more immediate significance—they can, and often do, nullify it by the pressures they bring to bear on their officials. In the last analysis, and day by day in a host of specific decisions (most especially in regard to education), it is by the people that it will be decided whether promotion of, or opposition to, any form of religion or non-religion or anti-religion, is to be entirely a private matter—with no resort to governmental action even for what they privately want in regard to religion. If they want a free society too, it will have to be maintained—by the people.

Nineteen-sixty has also been a year of Negro "sit-ins," additional handwriting on the wall for those who have not yet learned that machine civilization spells the doom of racial discrimination (in northern housing as in southern voting and schooling)—though not without dust and heat even for those who believe that doom to be as right as it is sure. Modern industry means big factories and supermarkets instead of small farms and shack stores, skilled workers and college students instead of share-croppers and handymen. Modern industry needs a large body of well-disposed workers and customers at home, as well as enthusiastic friends in Asia and Africa; and "Jim Crow, he's real tired."

The party platforms show that such handwriting on the wall has been more widely read than ever before, as does the Civil Rights Act of 1960: but we still cannot realistically expect further federal legislation at more than a snail's pace. The immediate practical question, with regard to governmental efforts to end discrimination, is still this two-fold one: Will the White House and the Department of Justice and the other federal agencies energetically and courageously use their already-existing powers, in southern voting and education and in northern housing; and will northern states and municipalities act to solve the multiplying problems of their own bailiwicks? Here again, what governments do will be determined by the people—who indeed could privately do a lot more than they are now doing, without waiting for governmental action.

Finally, nineteen-sixty marks the 40th Anniversary of the founding of the American Civil Liberties Union. Our now 52,000 members should re-read the brief historical summary of what the Union has done with its time (and their money!) printed as the January 1960 issue of the monthly bulletin; and may also wish to order (for themselves and others) two more recent publications: "What is the American Civil Liberties Union?," and Osmond K. Fraenkel's "The Supreme Court and Civil Liberties."

The present 40th Annual Report, covering the period July 1, 1959-June 30, 1960, is more compressed than last year's—because, in using the funds for which we are grateful to our increasing and increasingly generous membership, we must allocate as much as possible to the almost immeasurably increased demand for the work in courts and legislatures and executive departments of government for which we are trustees of that income. But the present report is still detailed enough to indicate the tremendous amount of the Union's work, which—by its contrast with our small employed staff—is always astonishing to those who do not know the secret of our hundreds of unpaid volunteers, especially the cooperating attorneys.

The ACLU is like a healthy free society and democratic government. It gets its work done by the people. It now looks forward to 2000, after forty more years of work by the people.

This report, like those of immediately preceding years, was written by Mitchell Levitas, a New York newspaperman, and supervised and edited by Alan Reitman, our associate director, with the help of other members of the national staff, as well as our affiliates' staffs and officers. The twentieth anniversary of the Battle of Britain should remind us of how much the many owe to the few!

FREEDOM OF BELIEF, EXPRESSION AND ASSOCIATION

THE GENERAL CENSORSHIP SCENE

1. Books and Magazines

THE COURTS. A new constitutional interpretation by the U.S. Supreme Court struck down a Los Angeles anti-obscenity law which had held booksellers criminally liable for the possession of "obscene" literature, whether or not the seller was aware of its contents. The ruling breaks new ground along the path marked earlier by the Supreme Court in the Roth, Alberts, Kingsley and Butler decisions in limiting restrictions upon freedom of speech and press made in the name of combatting "smut," and by last year's U.S. Court of Appeals verdict upsetting a U.S. Post Office ban on Lady Chatterley's Lover. (See 1956-1957 Annual Report, pp. 37-39 and 1958-1959 Annual Report, p. 11.) Acting unanimously, the high court reversed a California Superior Court verdict convicting Eleazer Smith for violating the law because he offered for sale, Sweeter Than Life, a novel about a ruthless lesbian business woman. Smith argued that he had not read the book and had no reason to believe it obscene. While this was not an adequate defense under the Los Angeles law, the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court regarded it as the crux of the matter. "By dispensing with the requirement of knowledge," said the opinion, "(the law) tends to impose a severe limitation on the public's access to constitutionally protected materials." The opinion declared that since there was a limit to the number of books a dealer could personally read and since "his timidity in the face of his absolute criminal liability" would induce him to restrict sales to books he had read, "the state will have imposed a restriction upon the distribution of constitutionally protected as well as obscene literature. . . . The door barring federal and state intrusion into the fundamental freedoms of speech and press cannot be left ajar. It must be kept closed, and opened only the slightest crack necessary to prevent encroachment upon more important interests."

The U.S. Supreme Court decision was quickly applied in several localities where prosecutions were pending. In Indianapolis Criminal Court Judge Richard Salb declared unconstitutional a state law under which 17 booksellers had been arrested for the possession of "obscene" books and magazines. "(I) am firmly opposed to government censorship of adult reading material and adult speech," the jurist declared.

The Attorney General of Vermont dropped the prosecution of a local magazine distributor because of the Smith decision. The official said he would ask the legislature to adopt a law tailored to meet the court's new requirements, however. The Rhode Island legislature has already done so, and the new law has been upheld as constitutional by the state Supreme Court. The Rhode Island Affiliate, ACLU, in a brief supporting bookseller Harry B. Settle of Newport, said the statute was written vaguely and so broadly that it permitted punishment for acts or words protected by the federal constitution. The state high court ordered a new trial for Settle to determine whether the novel he is accused of selling to a minor, Peyton Place, is obscene. A jury did find the book to be indecent, but the case is being appealed. The Smith decision also found echoes in Spokane, Wash. where a state court voided a state law barring the sale of "obscene" literature whether or not the purveyor knew the contents of what he offered for sale. In Cincinnati, Cleveland, Miami Beach, Newport News, Va. and New York City obscenity convictions and prosecutions were reversed or dropped because of the Supreme Court's Smith ruling.

Sections of state laws in Maryland and West Virginia which sought to protect minors from gaining access to allegedly harmful reading matter have been declared unconstitutional on the grounds that they are too vague and are also discriminatory against adults. Baltimore Superior Court Judge Reuben Oppenheimer said the provisions barring sale of material do not meet due process requirements "in that they do not give fair notice of what acts will be punished, and permit within the scope of their language the punishment of acts protected by the principles of freedom of the press." In addition, he pointed out that "adults are not allowed to see the books which it is their right to buy and read. The right of young persons to read what they will," Judge Oppenheimer continued, "within the limits of permissible federal or state action, is vital not only to them but to all our citizenry. The exclusion of obscenity from protected utterances does not carry with it the right to obscure from young or old facts or events, however unpleasant, disturbing or violent. It is through realization, in formative years, of the meaning of the ordered liberties protected by the Constitution that an adult citizenry is most apt to have the feelings and thoughts and to take the actions which are 'the real protection against attempts to strait-jacket the human mind.' " The opinion was upheld by the state's highest court. The West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals used similar reasoning in ruling unconstitutional that part of the state statute against obscenity aimed at protecting the morals of youth.

The Post Office Department finally gave up attempts to ban Lady Chatterley's Lover following the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals in New York that D. H. Lawrence's classic is not obscene. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 11.) The appeals court was unanimous in deciding that the book is mailable, but divided 2-1 on its literary and moral values. Though the jurists were divided on esthetic grounds, they were agreed that Postmaster General Summerfield was "extreme" in banning the book from the mails.

The Illinois Division, ACLU won a Federal District Court suit in Chicago on behalf of the first issue of Big Table, a literary magazine banned by postal authorities on the grounds that two short stories were "obscene, lewd, lascivious and filthy." The affiliate said that the magazine was a serious literary effort. In addition, the complaint attacked the Post Office procedure under which allegedly objectionable material is impounded without any prior notice or hearing. The judge agreed with the Illinois affiliate that Big Table represented conscientious literature but did not pass upon the constitutionality of the administrative practice. The government plans no appeal.

The ACLU and the New York Civil Liberties Union also successfully countered the machinery of the Post Office Department when they won an end to the use of post office property to publicize the views of a magazine editor who opposed the circulation of the unexpurgated Lady Chatterley's Lover. The incident arose when it was noticed that post offices in New York's Nassau County had posted reprints of an editorial by the Rev. Daniel Poling, editor of The Christian Herald, attacking the book. In a joint letter, the ACLU and the NYCLU expressed dismay that taxpayers' money was being used to publicize the views of a private individual, especially since the action "seemed to flout" a Federal District Court ruling upsetting the Postmaster General's administrative action. The response to the civil liberties protest was an order removing the Poling reprint as "not in accord with postal regulations" and the pledge that "henceforth (officials) should not post statements by private individuals."

A Federal District Court ruled that Iowa's Attorney General had a legal right under the state's anti-obscenity statute to warn wholesale magazine distributors that he had asked county attorneys to remove 42 "girlie" magazines from the newsstands and to prosecute local dealers who offered them for sale. The magazines' publishers, backed by the Iowa Civil Liberties Union, had charged that the official's threat, in place of regular criminal procedures, "amounts to practical pre-censorship of reading matter without the safeguards inherent in a trial by jury and without due process of law." The court's opinion, however, said that no issue of pre-censorship is involved as no attempt was made to ban future issues of the magazine.

U.S. POST OFFICE CENSORSHIP. The latest in a series of court tests over the past decade seeks once again to prevent the Customs Bureau and the Post Office Department from banning entrance and delivery of material they regard as "foreign propaganda." The most recent actions were brought in the Federal District Court in Washington, D.C., on behalf of two Chicago plaintiffs, the Modern Book Store and Mrs. Helen MacGill Hughes, a sociologist. The Washington suits were filed by attorneys for the Illinois Division, ACLU to back up similar suits brought in Chicago. The Chicago suits appear mooted because the postal and customs units which had been screening foreign political propaganda mail in Chicago were closed down and transferred to post offices in New York and San Francisco. The Modern Book Store had sought an injunction enjoining the Chicago postmaster and customs collector from withholding delivery of six shipments of books and magazines from two Canadian publishers; the book store claimed the Post Office acted without statutory authority in violation of the First and Fifth Amendments of the federal constitution. Mrs. Hughes, managing editor of the American Journal of Sociology, had tested the Post Office's authority to bar delivery of two Czechoslovak publications (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 14-15.) The Washington, D.C. suits, brought against Postmaster General Summerfield, Treasury Secretary Anderson and Customs Commissioner Kelly, were filed in the nation's capital, the Illinois Division said, to bring before the courts the officials ultimately responsible for the "foreign political propaganda program." Noting that in previous cases the government avoided any court test of its censorship authority by delivering the detained mail to persons who challenged the program, the ACLU affiliate said the program was "hit-and-run government in which officials continue a censorship program of questionable legality and at the same time seek to prevent citizens from having the courts rule on the legality of their conduct."

It was against this background that the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights began an investigation of the Post Office practice of intercepting mail from abroad that it considers subversive—about 15,000,000 pieces of mail annually. Although the practice is no longer carried out in secret and libraries and universities now get the material as a rule, firm opposition remains to the regulation demanding that the addressee sign a card saying that he requested the literature being withheld by the Post Office before it is delivered.

PROTECTION OF JUVENILES. Most legislative action directed against "obscene" books, magazines and other material is intended to protect young children and teen-agers against what many believe to be the harmful effects of such reading matter, such as the inducement to commit acts of juvenile delinquency. The ACLU has long questioned whether there actually is such a causal relationship between reading and the commission of a crime. On several occasions during the 86th Congress Union spokesmen again emphasized that in view of expert disagreement over whether, in fact, such a causal relationship exists, efforts to protect youth against "smut" through legislative proposals to curb the flow of obscene matter cannot violate constitutional safeguards against censorship. The Union therefore regarded as a qualified victory a new law which limits the power of the Postmaster General to impound mail allegedly connected with the sending of obscene materials by forcing him first to seek authority from a Federal District Court. Although the Union is opposed to pre-censorship in any form, the measure at least thwarted attempts by the Postmaster General to increase his vast and often abused powers and deprived him of his previous power to impound mail by his own fiat.

Such moderate legislation was in contrast to two proposed constitutional amendments against which ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin testified. Appearing before the Senate Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency and Constitutional Amendments, Malin opposed one measure which would allow each state to decide "on the basis of its own public policy, questions of decency and morality" and would bar any abridgement of the right of states to enact legislation in this field. The other suggested amendment would suspend free speech and free press guarantees from application to materials found obscene according to the definition laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court in the 1957 Roth case. The former amendment was introduced by Sen. Eastland, the latter by Sen. Kefauver. The Eastland bill, said the ACLU, could nullify all the safeguards in the Bill of Rights because the words "morality" and "decency" are so vague as to "defy precise definition" and invade constitutional protections. The Kefauver bill was "extremely bad social policy" because it sought to "petrify by constitutional amendment so amorphous and slippery a concept as 'obscenity'." The Union added that while it differed with the high court definition made in the Roth case, the time may come when the Court may change its definition of obscenity "based on new evidence discovered by social scientists."

Malin said it was "natural that in the common desire" to combat juvenile delinquency "there should be sought a simple cause and a quick solution. The emotions of pity and indignation," he said, "lead to the plausible conclusion that if we can give some public official broad power to stop the flow of "smut" we shall then have gone a long way to insulate our children from pernicious influences which, unrestrained, lead them into degradation and crime. Nonetheless, we must bear constantly in mind that with respect to juvenile delinquency no less than with respect to any other area of anti-social or criminal behavior, minimum standards of constitutionality must not be circumvented in the search for a cure. . . . We wish to make it clear," Malin added, "that we do not profess to be experts on the issue of whether there is a causal relationship between the reading or viewing of books and films and the commission of an illegal act, but we know there is a great difference of expert judgement on the matter."

The ACLU favored a House bill to create a commission to study the effect of allegedly obscene material on juvenile delinquency, but this idea died in the lower chamber. A Senate bill to establish a Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters, based on the assumption that the causal relationship exists, was opposed as establishing, in effect, a national censorship board. A special commission appointed by the state of Massachusetts to investigate the ties between juvenile delinquency and the distribution and sale of offensive publications reported that it had discovered no proof that such publications have even a contributory effect towards anti-social behavior.

STATE LEGISLATION. The Virginia legislature has passed a new law to replace one declared unconstitutional by the state Supreme Court of Appeals because it limited the choice of adults' reading material to those which did not "manifestly tend to corrupt the morals of youth." The new measure follows the language of the U.S. Supreme Court in defining obscenity as works which have as their dominant theme or purpose an appeal to prurient interest. A Rhode Island Superior Court heard a constitutional challenge of the state law establishing a Commission to Encourage Morality in Youth. The suit charged that the law violates free press protections of the First Amendment and due process provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. As part of its "educational" work the Commission has been circulating lists of volumes it believes to be in violation of the law to wholesalers and retail store owners. Fearing prosecution, the dealers have often stopped ordering the books. Four publishers who brought the suit declared that the Commission actually was halting the sale of books without a prior judicial finding that they violated the law. The activities of the Commission have drawn the criticism of segments of the press as well as of the ACLU's Rhode Island affiliate. The affiliate condemned police officials in a number of cities who had asked local drugstore owners and other dealers to remove from their shelves books criticized by the Commission.

The Governors of Illinois and Ohio vetoed bills which limited the distribution of magazines and films by unconstitutional means. Gov. William G. Stratton of Illinois vetoed a measure giving Cook County the power to prohibit "obscene" theatricals and exhibitions, stating that it invaded "the constitutional rights of citizens" by failing to include an adequate definition of "obscenity." Gov. Michael V. DiSalle vetoed a bill, backed by the County Prosecutors Association and the Ohio Citizens for Decent Literature, to cancel the exemption of magazines and newspapers mailed under second-class postal permits from prosecution under Ohio nuisance and obscenity laws. Gov. DiSalle called the measure unnecessary because the Post Office already checks on the contents of publications having second-class mailing privileges. He also said it "threatens the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press and endangers the dissemination of news, which, by some, could be considered lewd or indecent. . . . We must not overlook the harm done to our basic democratic structure should we eliminate such freedom for all because of the abuse of a few," Gov. DiSalle commented in his veto message. A test of the Ohio obscenity law which bars mere possession of obscene literature, backed by the Ohio Civil Liberties Union, is now before the U.S. Supreme Court. The affiliate believes that mere possession by an adult of such material cannot be banned, because it violates the right of privacy and the right to read as well as the Fourteenth Amendment's equal protection clause.

THE LOCAL SCENE. San Francisco and many nearby communities were put in a turmoil over police censorship actions sparked by local Citizens for Decent Literature groups. (See below for more activities by this group.) The ACLU of Northern California, which has been in the forefront of the opposition, made it clear that while it is not opposed to any private group expressing its views, when such groups put pressure on newsdealers and distributors to censor books and magazines through the threat of economic boycott or the circulation of lists of objectionable literature, then "the constitutional rights of citizens are in grave danger." A group of San Franciscans inspired a drive to enact a local anti-obscenity ordinance that reached such a pitch that six large bookstores received threats that their stores would be bombed if they did not stop selling books and magazines proscribed by the Vigilante Committee for Decent Literature. The San Francisco postmaster, armed with a San Mateo CDL list, removed 100 publications from the newsstand in the federal building. Said the official: "As far as I'm personally concerned, the test to what is good literature is whether or not I would want my teenage daughter to read it."

Members of the San Mateo City Council and the ACLU of Northern California objected vehemently when the local chief of police, aroused to anger by a picture in Playboy magazine, promptly had the issue removed from the stands, and announced that his judgement would be enough for future moves against other "girlie" magazines. The Union affiliate said that it was the police chief's duty to make an arrest if he believed a law was broken, but not to "substitute his own judgement for that of the court's." Playboy was barred by the police chiefs of four other area cities, although it remained on sale in San Francisco, Redwood City and Marin County. The publication was also removed from newsstands in Connecticut, a move which drew the criticism of the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union in a letter to the Commissioner of the State Police, the official who initiated the ban. The CCLU warned that when the Commissioner says a publication is "objectionable" or "actionable" and encourages its elimination from newsstands, he is virtually exercising prior restraint over printed matter, which is protected by the First Amendment's guarantee of a free press.

Following lengthy hearings a Municipal Court judge in Portland, Ore. set aside an anti-obscenity ordinance, the second time within a year that such a measure has been declared unconstitutional. The ACLU of Oregon was the only civic group to oppose the local law before it was voided by the Portland court. A statement submitted to the City Council before the ordinance was passed summarized the affiliate's objections, emphasizing its procedural failings. Among these were the fact that after a summary judgement that a publication was obscene a retailer could not argue in a subsequent prosecution that the publication was not obscene. A state statute prohibiting the sale of books "tending to incite to lustful thoughts" is before the Oregon Supreme Court. The ACLU state correspondent in Alaska lodged a protest with police officials in Anchorage after police ordered the removal of two nude paintings in a local nightclub. Members of the City Council, calling the nudes "works of art," overruled the police.

The situation was different in Milwaukee and Oklahoma City, however, where local review boards were established. The sole voice of protest in Oklahoma City was raised by the ACLU state correspondent, who said the ordinance gives a "small group of persons . . . the power to determine what the citizens shall and shall not be allowed to read." The Minnesota Civil Liberties Union is keeping a watchful eye on a situation that developed after a police raid on a bookstore failed to disclose what the police were sure they would find—"obscene" literature. A grand jury immediately wanted to know if the raid had been tipped-off to the store.

Chicago was the scene of two unusual incidents. The Chicago Transit Authority, a public agency, barred a number of publications from sale on newsstands and defended itself from criticism by the Illinois Division, ACLU by declaring: "This is not censorship, but rather the exercise of our right to say what can be sold on CTA properties." The Union affiliate said that the agency acted capriciously and by administrative fiat, without the use of a standard or definition of what is objectionable material. The agency finally rescinded its order. On the other occasion, a Municipal Court judge directed a verdict of guilty, holding that obscenity is a question of law which a judge can decide without a jury's help. Subsequently, however, the judge granted the defendant a new trial after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in the Smith case that a bookseller had to know that a publication was obscene before he could be prosecuted. Since then the ordinance has been revised to meet the Court's requirement of knowledge.

A Harvard University professor has become enmeshed with the Massachusetts law on obscenity. Dr. John P. Speigel, a psychiatrist, has the backing of the university in pleading not guilty to an indictment charging that he imported obscene photographs from London for purposes of exhibition. Prof. Spiegel said he was using the photographs for professional purposes in a study of "the causes of emotional disturbance." The court contest resembles the seven-year successful battle of the Kinsey Institute against the Customs Bureau seizure of concededly pornographic objects from abroad.

PRIVATE PRESSURE GROUPS. Undoubtedly the most active private pressure group in the nation is the Citizens for Decent Literature, a network which was born in Cincinnati in 1958 and which now has inspired more than 100 similar groups in all 50 states. The organization claims 17 units in Ohio, 14 in California, and eight each in Indiana and Illinois. Prominent citizens, churchmen and political figures are often listed as local sponsors of CDL cadres, as in Portland, where the group is called the Mayor's Committee for Decent Literature. The CDL, which makes no secret of its dissatisfaction with the trend of court verdicts on obscenity prosecutions, is planning a national crusade to "enlighten the public" by forming local branches in every community in the country. The immediate target of the CDL are newsstands and drug stores which sell allegedly obscene magazines and paperbacks. The CDL's method is to "demand action from police, the courts and juries;" it also is campaigning for tougher federal anti-obscenity laws.

The CDL denies that it practices censorship or attempts economic boycotts. "It is merely the exercise of every citizen's right to stand up and be counted, to state his belief in what should be allowed and prohibited in society." Despite the organization's disclaimers, local CDL committees have often resorted to the use of lists of "objectionable" publications which police then use in clean-up campaigns—a technique first developed by the long-established National Office of Decent Literature. A more original method has been the encouragement by the CDL of its members to attend public trials of obscenity prosecutions—a step which forced judicial rebukes by judges in Cincinnati and Indianapolis who were on the receiving end of CDL letter writers. The Indianapolis judge warned that such correspondents could be held in contempt of court. The paths of CDL committees and ACLU affiliates crossed in many localities, among them: Evanston, Ill., where the North Shore Committee of the Illinois Division, ACLU viewed with dismay the CDL campaign, including distribution of placards to stores which have agreed to abide by the CDL's "code of decency;" Youngstown, Ohio, where the Civil Liberties Committee warned against a CDL petition endorsing "any positive action" against the "menace" of obscene literature; Minneapolis, Minn. where the CDL pressed for an ordinance shifting the burden of presumption to the defendant—the display of any "obscene" publications would become prima facie evidence that it was intended for sale. The Union affiliate is investigating the proposal. The York County, Pa. ACLU put on notice a local PTA campaign aimed at removing certain books from newsstands with the statement that "the responsibility of private groups and citizens extends only to the right to refer such problems to law enforcement officers." The Buffalo Youth Board's Salacious Publications Committee has been reinforced by the addition of a pair of policemen who reportedly "suggested" to retailers that they remove offending magazines and books to avoid "running into trouble" such as being arrested or served with a summons. The Niagara Frontier (Buffalo) Branch, ACLU is watching developments.

CENSORSHIP IN SCHOOLS, LIBRARIES. The National Education Association reported an increase in the number of attempts to censor students' reading lists and textbooks. The NEA sampling was confirmed by a University of California social psychologist who estimated that 29 per cent of California's school librarians normally avoid purchasing so-called controversial books. The usual excuse of the librarians, who say they believe in the principle of "freedom to read," is that the books are "trash" or are on "too advanced a reading level." In 26 California communities studied for the report, libraries removed 56 per cent of books challenged by outside pressure groups and 85 per cent of the books about which library personnel had doubts. In addition, because of the attacks by vigilante groups, many school and public libraries established written rules, albeit vaguely worded, for book purchases. The results of the study closely corresponded with a previous study in New Jersey and librarians in 10 other states who read the report agreed that their communities had endured similar censorship drives. Fiction by John Steinbeck and James Joyce and non-fiction by Karl Marx and Alfred Kinsey are often among the target of such campaigns. Sometimes librarians hid books or placed them "on reserve," at least one burned books. An attempt at legislative interference with the subject matter of textbooks was rejected by the California Supreme Court when it decided that the legislature could not refuse to pay for the printing of two illustrated science texts ordered by the Board of Education. The legislature disapproved the format of the books.

The Florida Civil Liberties Union protested the removal of two modern classics from the required reading lists of Miami high school students in a dispute that made national headlines in almost an anticlimax. This came when U.S. Commissioner of Education Lawrence Derthick said he had never heard of George Orwell's 1984 or Aldous Huxley's Brave New World. "I've never heard of those books and I don't think it would be prudent of me to discuss them," the U.S. Commissioner of Education said. The controversy began with an anonymous phone call to the principal of North Miami High School complaining that the books contained "immoral material." The principal was backed by two superiors in the county educational system when he removed the books from the reading lists although neither he nor his superiors were familiar with both books. In a public statement and in an appearance before the school board, the Florida Civil Liberties Union said that the incident had raised serious issues of censorship and academic freedom. "The action . . . also reflects serious inroads on the right of the teacher to teach as he sees. . . . The precedent thus established leaves the school system dedicated to a new standard—the standard of mediocrity. . . . It turns over the school system to those critics who are obsessed with obscenity."

The newly-formed ACLU of New Jersey opened its ledger with an inscription to the credit of civil liberties. The affiliate praised the Clifton Library Board for standing up to community pressure and keeping open a shelf on which such "controversial" novels as Lolita, Lady Chatterley's Lover, and Peyton Place had previously been guarded behind a locked glass door. "Who are we to censor books?" asked Board chairman George Qulick. The New Jersey affiliate said: "Censorship in any form has no place in our free society and our libraries as custodians of human thought have a particular responsibility to maintain the open market of ideas." A faculty committee of a Levittown, L.I. public school decided to retain two articles used in a sixth grade "reading kit" after a study prompted by criticism of the articles which appeared in The National Review, a conservative publication. The articles were "Alexander Hamilton," reprinted from the American Stream of History and another by Norman Cousins in the Saturday Review of Literature. The kit was temporarily withdrawn from circulation while the study was in progress. The committee reported that the issue raised by the criticism and the counter-criticism of censorship made when the kit was withdrawn had raised a basic question for local citizens: "Do they really want their children to be taught by the fearful, the unimaginative, the conforming, the dull? It is our heritage to respect and cherish variety in points of view. Insistence upon uniformity of thought is not our way."

HANDBILLS. The U.S. Supreme Court declared unconstitutional a 28-year-old Los Angeles ordinance requiring all handbills distributed in the city to carry the name of their author and distributor. Although the city tried to justify the ordinance as a protection against fraud and libel, the high court majority said it would discourage pamphlet writers and thereby restrict freedom of speech and expression. The decision appears to mark a new frontier of the Constitution's protection of anonymity of expression. The landmark ruling was supported by the ACLU of Southern California, which sponsored the appeal of Manuel D. Talley. Talley was fined $10 in 1958 when he distributed handbills which urged consumers to boycott a local market because it sold products of manufacturers "who will not offer equal employment opportunities to Negroes, Mexicans and Orientals." The majority opinion declared that there was no doubt that the requirement of the law identifying handbill authors would intimidate them. "Anonymous pamphlets, leaflets, and even books have played an important part in the progress of mankind," the opinion declared. "Persecuted groups and sects from time to time throughout history have been able to criticize oppressive practices and laws either anonymously or not at all." The majority opinion relied in part on recent high court decisions holding that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People could not be required to disclose its membership lists because they might be subject to reprisals. The dissenters said there was no claim or proof that Talley would suffer any injury by signing the handbills. "The Constitution says nothing about freedom of anonymous speech," said the minority. The decision did not concern the federal law requiring the identification of political campaign literature.

Court action was only threatened in Sacramento but it was enough for the city to end a year-long ban on the self-service newsstands of the Socialist Labor Party newspaper, Weekly People. The City Attorney had argued with the ACLU of Northern California, which was pressing the issue, that the newspaper primarily supported certain political and economic views and was not generally sold or delivered throughout the city. Therefore, he maintained, the newspaper was not entitled to sidewalk space for its stands. The ACLU affiliate replied that the tests were abritrary and unreasonable and violated freedom of expression.

2. Motion Pictures

THE COURTS. The U.S. Supreme Court has under consideration an appeal from two lower federal courts challenging the constitutionality of pre-censorship of films. The ACLU and its Illinois Division filed a friend-of-the-court brief arguing against pre-censorship. The test case, based on the refusal of the Times Film Corp. to submit the movie Don Juan to prescreening under the Chicago ordinance, may decide whether the film medium is entitled to the same constitutional guarantees against prior restraint of communication that other media enjoy. Previous high court decisions in movie censorship cases touched on the question of whether pre-censorship is constitutional, but the verdicts were decided on more limited grounds of whether the film was, in fact, obscene, or whether definitions of sacrilege and immorality were unconstitutionally vague. Meanwhile, Don Juan cannot be shown in Chicago and city officials have shelved a new ordinance curbing juveniles' attendance at certain films pending the outcome of the case.

Chicago is also the scene of another legal dispute over movie censorship, involving the French film, The Lovers. But unlike the distributors of Don Juan, which refused to submit the film for municipal screening, the distributors of The Lovers took the case to the Federal District Court after the police review board, composed of six widows of minor Chicago politicians, refused to license the film. The court refused to upset the ordinance on the grounds that it failed to interfere with movie production. The decision is being appealed. The Lovers was judged obscene by three Common Pleas Court judges in Cleveland who said they had scrupulously applied the standard for judging obscenity set down by the U.S. Supreme Court in the Roth case. The verdict also resulted in a felony conviction for the theatre manager who showed the film, thus jeopardizing his bid to become a naturalized citizen. Counsel for the manager, who is being assisted by the Cleveland chapter of the Ohio Civil Liberties Union, has pledged to carry the case to the U.S. Supreme Court. The trio of Common Pleas Court judges said that "in evaluating this motion picture the court has been ever mindful of the film taken as a whole and its appeal to the average person and has applied contemporary community standards"—the language of the Roth verdict. The Lovers, which appeared to be the trouble-making movie of the year, also made censorship news in Portland. The ACLU of Oregon planned to file a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of a theatre manager who is appealing a Municipal Court conviction for showing the film without a license. The police had ordered two portions of the movie deleted, the theatre refused, and prosecution followed. The affiliate brief seeks to test the constitutionality of the ordinance which contains vague language and sets no standards.

Also on its way to the higher courts is a "model" Pennsylvania film censorship law establishing a three-member Motion Picture Control Board that was declared unconstitutional in a unanimous decision by the Commonwealth Court in Dauphin County. The state immediately said it would appeal the decision. The opinion said that the new law was "so vague and indefinite as to be inoperable" and that it violated freedom of expression and due process safeguards of the state and federal constitutions. The opinion found that the obscenity standards went far beyond the standards set down by the U.S. Supreme Court and made this additional point: "There is no rational basis for the act's distinction between what may be shown to persons over and under the age of 17." The ACLU of Pennsylvania criticized the law when it was passed in 1959 as "dangerous and unconstitutional" because, among other things, it had the effect of imposing prior restraints by becoming effective after a film was shown. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 22.)

STATE AND LOCAL ACTIONS. An informal and extra-legal attempt at film censorship, using the device of classification, has aroused trade interest in Memphis, Tenn. There, film exhibitors who had been harassed by the city's board of censors, agreed to publish the movie ratings of the Green Sheet in exchange for an end to attempts by the censors to win a formal film classification ordinance. Green Sheet ratings, approved by the Motion Picture Association of America, are a monthly roundup of opinion of 11 organizations. The agreement put the MPAA in an awkward situation, since it has traditionally opposed all forms of film censorship or classification, and did not visualize that the Green Sheet could be put to that very use. Among the films banned by the Memphis board was Island in the Sun, which was labelled "obscene because of its white-Negro romance." Meanwhile, the Texas Council of Motion Picture Organizations took matters directly into its own hands by adopting the report of a committee representing major church denominations as the basis for its own classification system. The service is similar to the Green Sheet, except that the Texas ratings include movie reviews to explain the categories into which films are pigeon-holed. A film classification law passed one house of the New York state legislature but not the other. The result was not viewed as a complete victory for anti-censorship forces, however, since it was considered certain that a similar measure will be introduced next year.

The Milwaukee chapter of the Wisconsin Civil Liberties Union condemned the role of the city's motion picture commission in refusing to allow a showing of The Lovers. The affiliate called the action prior restraint in violation of the First Amendment. The attack brought an angry denial from Milwaukee's Mayor, who argued that the commission "is not a censorship body. Somebody's got to scrutinize films before they are shown to the public," he added. The Massachusetts Civil Liberties Union tried to bury the phrase "banned in Boston" but failed, although the attempt won favorable press comment. The issue was touched off by the newly-appointed city censor, who deleted some dialogue and gestures from Lock Up Your Daughters, a London hit which folded in Boston. A protest by the Union affiliate brought a ruling from the city law department that the censor could continue to examine the content of films, plays and night club acts for obscenity. Not far from Boston is Taunton, Mass. where the Mayor has proudly saved his community $3,500 a year by acting as the city's film censor himself. Mayor Cleary said he doesn't see any of the films he condemns, but is guided by the listings of the National Legion of Decency.

BLACKLISTING. The Hollywood blacklist—the first formidable political checklist in the mass media—is easing. Two major independent producers, Stanley Kramer and Otto Preminger, publicly announced that they were hiring writers who had tangled in the past with the House Un-American Activities Committee. In addition, two major studios followed suit by announcing that they would give screen credit to writers previously blacklisted. The studios, Paramount and Universal-International, had previously followed the common Hollywood practice of buying scripts from blacklisted writers who submitted them under an assumed name. An exception to the trend was Frank Sinatra, who first announced he had hired Albert Maltz, one of the original "Hollywood Ten," to do a screenplay and then said he had fired Maltz in deference to "the majority of American opinion." Kramer's decision to hire Nedrick Young was immediately assailed by the American Legion. But unlike past occasions when Hollywood bowed to the Legion pressure, Kramer declared that the Legion itself was "Un-American" when it seeks to "inflict their viewpoint on others." The producer's counter-attack was praised by the ACLU, which said that "by vigorously asserting the principle that an individual should be judged on the basis of his competence and not his political belief, you have affirmed a basic concept of American democracy which the American Legion has long forgotten." The Legion, subsequently, said that it does not attempt to censor films nor to regulate the film industry's employment, but merely tries to "ventilate the record" and supply information to the public. The screenwriter hired by Preminger was Dalton Trumbo, convicted for contempt of the House Un-American Activities Committee, who also will get screen credit from Universal-International for another movie. During Trumbo's days in the underground of the blacklisted he wrote more than 30 films, one of which won an Academy Award.

PRESSURE GROUPS. The Legion of Decency, the Roman Catholic Church's active watchdog of movies' content, is continuing a public discussion of its principles and practices intended to clarify its role to Catholics and non-Catholics. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 23.) At the same time, the Legion instituted a new category for films: "adult and not intended for teen-age audiences." The Legion defines its view of film censorship as accepting the "principles of liberty and a minimal amount of legal restraint . . . The area of difference between the Legion and the (Motion Picture) Code is not in the area of theme because the Code can keep a picture moral; the difference is in treatment and this is an area of decency." One Catholic spokesman, John E. Fitzgerald, amusement editor of a Catholic weekly, said that the esthetic judgement of film critics "makes the most sensible classifier of good and bad motion pictures." He defended the right of private groups to classify films, but added that such classification can be binding only on specific groups—parents for their children, a church for its followers, etc. Another Catholic spokesman, J. D. Nicola, a lay member of the Legion's board of consultants, said that the issues raised by "adult" films are "too complex to believe that legal censorship, mass boycotts or Legion condemnations will provide the overnight answer." Such tactics, he said, "may create more problems than they solve." Despite the publication of such enlightened views, however, some local Catholic groups continue to follow practices other fellow religionists deplore. In Lawrence, Mass., for example, the Mayor and local exhibitors agreed that no movie house would show a film condemned by the Legion and in Delaware County, Pa., the local chapter of the ACLU of Pennsylvania strongly protested the cancellation of The Lovers after a local Catholic group threatened an indefinite boycott of the movie house. Protestant denominations are taking a closer look at the content of movies and television programs, but principally from the point of view of pressing the movie industry for stronger self-regulation. Rev. Dr. S. Franklin Mack, executive director of the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the National Council of Churches, defined the church's role as "not so much to get in and regulate, but to strengthen the hands of those . . . in the industry who are . . . aware of the need for integrity."

3. Radio and TV

EQUAL TIME. The 1960 Presidential campaign marked the first time in the nation's history that the candidates of both major parties met face-to-face in a series of "live" TV debates. While applauding the innovation as an effort to encourage more public discussion of national issues, the ACLU urged that stations be required to give minority parties reasonable and equitably-distributed opportunity to be heard. This altered the traditional ACLU position which had been that all political parties—major and minor—must be treated the same under the "equal time" Section 315 of the federal communications law.

The TV debates between the candidates were made possible by Congress' suspension of Section 315 for the 1960 campaign and only with respect to the Presidential and Vice-Presidential nominees. While the ACLU recognized the networks' argument that the large number of small parties who would claim equal time if the major party candidates were presented, has made it impractical in former campaigns to air the latter candidates, the ACLU opposed the suspension for a variety of reasons: under it the minor political parties are likely to get no time at all on the publicly-franchised air-waves and they will lack the legal recourse which they now have under Section 315; the suspension will, in effect, give the Democratic and Republican Parties a monopoly of the communications medium which reaches the greatest number of people and so deprive the public of its right under the First Amendment to hear a wide range of political views; the suspension of the equal time provision for one campaign may open the door for the all-time repeal of the safeguard in its present form, thus legislating a two-party monopoly of the air and endangering the democratic processes.

In its new policy statement proposing a revision, rather than a cancelling out of Section 315, the ACLU recommended that stations be required, as an affirmative obligation under their license to operate in the public interest, to make time available, on either a free or paid-for basis, to all legally-qualified candidates, and also that the networks be required to grant some free time to all legally-qualified presidential candidates. In the past, under Section 315, broadcasters have been under no obligation to afford time to any political candidate, but have been required to allow equal time to opposing candidates if any single candidate was accorded air time. The ACLU would have the law changed so as to require each station "to afford reasonable opportunity for the use of its broadcasting facilities during the campaign for any public office of local, state or national importance," such opportunity to be afforded "equitably" to the candidates of the various parties, major and minor. The Union would continue the no-censorship clause governing political campaign material.

The Federal Communications Commission, for the first time, implemented the so-called "fair play" amendment to Section 315 exempting newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries and on-the-spot news events from the equal time clause. (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 24-25.) The FCC demanded to know why three Little Rock, Ark. television stations carried speeches by local Democratic candidates while the Republican National Convention was going on in Chicago. Station officials replied that they considered the local news more important.

DIVERSITY OF PROGRAMMING. The ACLU supported a measure that would give the FCC broader powers to promote balanced programming without imposing censorship of the airwaves. The law passed by the Congress gave the agency the discretion to grant licenses for a term less than three years. The new law also requires FCC approval before an applicant can withdraw because he has received a financial settlement from a competing applicant, and authorizes a system of fines as an alternative to the revocation of station licenses. The Union praised in particular a fourth provision of the statute which requires an applicant or a person filing for renewal of a license to give notice of his intention in the area to be served by the station. The new procedure should facilitate local hearings by the FCC to determine community sentiment. This change in the law coincided with a new FCC policy requiring applicants for new licenses or renewals to consult with community leaders on programming. "Pre-programming consultation . . .," the Union said, "will . . . make for the better-balanced, more widely-diversified programming to which the ACLU holds the people are entitled under the First Amendment" and the communication law.

In a year marked by prolonged investigation by Congress and the FCC of radio-TV problems, brought on by the TV quiz shows and payola scandals, the ACLU made clear the double-barrelled civil liberties issue: government agencies should not have the power to censor by adding or subtracting program content, but the FCC should "energetically exercise" its power to require the industry to provide the maximum possible range and balance in subject matter and treatment. In this connection, the Union congratulated the FCC on the establishment of a monitoring bureau to determine whether stations fulfill their pledge to operate in the "public interest, convenience and necessity."

A policy statement by the ACLU Board of Directors was aimed directly at the technical problems limiting the number of TV channels now available to the public which thereby also limit diversity in programming. The statement proposed a gradual shift of the nation's television system to the 70 channels that would be available under an Ultra High Frequency transmission. Only 13 channels are now available to the public under the present Very High Frequency broadcasting system. In a letter to the FCC, the Union praised the initiation of an experimental research program to be carried on in New York City aimed at the improvement of UHF transmission and expressed confidence that the technical difficulties involved in the UHF change-over would be solved if the switch were made mandatory over a five-to-ten-year period, with the VHF system to be retained in the interim. The 70 UHF channels, said the ACLU, should be made available to all types of broadcasters—pay TV, commercial, educational and municipally-owned stations and others operated by non-profit corporations.

4. Access to Government News and Public Records

THE FEDERAL SCENE. The seesaw battle continued between newspapers and the Administration over how much government information the public has a right to know. There were gains and losses on both sides. A five-year study of government secrecy by a House subcommittee concluded that secrecy had grown despite a law passed in 1958 designed to increase the flow of information about official agencies. The tendency, said the report, is evident "from the White House down." The President gave the power to classify information to eight new executive agencies and removed the power from about 30 others. It was still impossible, however, for newsmen to obtain the complete list of which agencies had the power and which did not. The pressure of public opinion was demonstrated by the decision of the Senate to open its payroll accounts (as the House had done previously) after a Federal District Court had rejected a reporter's demand to see the records. The House declined, however, to reveal all the expense accounts of its members despite a newspaper series which documented extravagant charges to the taxpayers.

The ACLU backed an amendment to the Administrative Procedures Act to increase the amount of government news available to the public by making clear that the public information section of the Act does not provide statutory authority for withholding or restraining government information. The Union opposed, on due process grounds, a Senate bill which would permit inspection of all papers on file in federal courts, even those which have not been heard in pre-trial motions. The latter measure was prompted by a ruling of the Federal District Court in Detroit barring newspapers of that city from inspecting filings in civil suits when either party asks for it. The Union said that since the rule provides that the suppression automatically would be lifted when "some phase (of the action) shall be heard in open court, . . . the public's access to information about court proceedings is guaranteed." The ACLU said that on some occasions, such as divorce actions or commitment of the mentally ill, ". . . the subject matter of the pleadings present the danger of exposing individuals to public obloquy or scorn without a fair opportunity to meet the bare allegations. . . ."

IN THE STATES. Twenty of the 50 states have laws guaranteeing open meetings of government bodies and open records. Seven states have open meeting protections only and 12 have only open records guarantees. Thirteen states make no promises on either score.

Maine newspapers lost in their first test of the state's "right-to-know" law when the state Attorney General ruled that the Parole and Probation Board had a right to keep confidential the fact that a prisoner had rejoined society. The official made his decision on technfical grounds, but the Board had argued that disclosure of a release could do great harm to the individual and little good to the community. The Chicago City Council reversed a long-standing rule and permitted radio and television coverage of its sessions. The Illinois affiliate of the ACLU supported the electronic coverage as a matter of press freedom—a right that has already been won in seven other cities. A precedent-making suit may be underway in the Chicago Federal District Court. A reporter and a photographer of the Chicago Tribune are suing three policemen and a city commissioner of nearby Aurora after newsmen and cameramen tried to cover a meeting of the city council. A melee ensued.

ACADEMIC FREEDOM

1. Federal, State and Local Issues

THE NATIONAL SCENE. Following mounting objections by leading universities to the provision of the National Defense Education Act which requires students receiving government financial aid to sign an affidavit forswearing membership in any organization advocating violent overthrow of the government, (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 29-30.), the Senate suddenly passed and sent to the House a "compromise" measure which eliminated the disclaimer affidavit. The ACLU Board of Directors, which vigorously supported repeal of the affidavit requirement, opposed the compromise amendment because it too, in effect, subjected loan applicants to a political test. Left unchanged was the law's requirement that any student seeking to qualify for a loan must take an oath of allegiance. This, the Union said, was "unnecessary and discriminatory," though less invidious than the disclaimer affidavit. The latter, the ACLU declared, is in violation of the First Amendment in that it runs counter to provisions for freedom of thought, speech and association, "and the general belief of our citizens that the national government shall not interfere in the management of schools and the right of teachers and students to seek the truth." The amendment approved by the Senate, but not passed upon by the House before adjournment, also provided that no person may apply for or get a loan while he is a member of the Communist Party or any other organization having for one of its purposes the seizure of the government through force and violence; that no person who has been a member of such an organization within five years shall seek or receive aid unless he files a sworn statement of the facts concerning his membership; and that anyone who violates either of these provisions shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. At the time the Senate acted, 22 institutions, including Harvard, Yale and Princeton, had withdrawn from the NDEA program in protest against the disclaimer affidavit, while an additional 83 had publicized their disapproval of it. Despite this opposition, the disclaimer affidavit is still in the law. Dr. H. Bentley Glass, professor of biology at Johns Hopkins University and former president of the American Association of University Professors, condemned all loyalty oaths in refusing to serve on the newly-created Radiation Control Advisory Board of Maryland. A second attack on loyalty oaths was delivered by Jack E. Holman, Jr., director of the American Freedoms Council, a new group formed to encourage interest in civil liberties among Roman Catholics. In a letter to the American Legion Magazine, Holman disputed the Legion's approval of student loyalty oaths and said "The practice is futile and unwarranted. It is obviously a contradiction to seek to safeguard freedom by lessening freedom."

A report of the ACLU's Academic Freedom Committee on the effects of multi-billion dollar government and private grants for research projects has stirred wide interest in the scholarly community. "Is it in the interest of society to permit the universities to lose a large measure of their authority in shaping the development of their own affairs?" asked the report. The answer, the study said, could best be found through an "objective review of the situation on a nation-wide scale." The Committee's exhaustive comment raised an issue that had been perturbing the campuses for some time. Harvard's dean of admissions and financial aid warned that increasing federal grants carry with them the danger that they will "limit freedom of inquiry and expression." He said "The potential for evil as well as good is enormous." Five months later Harvard initiated a special research project to determine the effect increasing use of federal funds has had on its programs.

The ACLU estimated that two-thirds of the money for all research and development carried out in schools and universities is contributed by the government and that the figure for the physical sciences adds up to 90 per cent, including private foundation and industry allotments. Acknowledging that sponsored research has made "tremendous contributions to American scholarship," the Union statement cautioned that "the dangers of control through subsidy are imminent. . . . We should face squarely the question as to whether we are prepared to break with the long-established tradition which entrusts to universities a large measure of autonomy in their proper functions of education and research—whether we are prepared to replace a significant fraction of this autonomy by a patchwork control exerted by a variety of bureaus with widely differing aims and interests." Among the specific problems involving academic freedom resulting from heavy subsidization, the ACLU listed the following: The necessity of obtaining security clearances for faculty members; the neglect of the humanities and the social sciences in favor of the physical sciences; the burgeoning of so-called programmatic team research at the expense of the highly individualistic investigator; the magnetic influence over even greater funds exerted by well-established institutions, creating even greater difficulties for less-developed schools with younger and less-famous faculty members. Not long after the Union's Academic Freedom Committee reported its findings and conclusions, the government announced an experimental plan to change a 20-year-old system of alloting funds for science research. The National Science Foundation, which allots more than $58,000,000 to 230 institutions, said it would give universities five per cent of their previous year's grant to use as they see fit on a non-strings-attached basis.

LOYALTY AND SECURITY. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court ordered the reinstatement of four Philadelphia school teachers dismissed by the Board of Public Education in 1954 for declining to answer questions posed by the House Un-American Activities Committee in the fall of 1953 concerning alleged Communist activities. Three of the teachers had relied on the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination—the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU had filed a brief with the court on behalf of the trio—and a fourth teacher based her refusal on First Amendment protections. The majority opinion of the court agreed with the contention of the Union affiliate that "a discharge based solely upon the exercise of the privilege against self-incrimination . . . is either an effort to penalize the use of the privilege . . . or it is an effort to punish the guilt which the discharging authorities have inferred from its use. Neither of these motivations from the standpoint of substantive due process is constitutionally permissible." The court declared: ". . . appellants' dismissals . . . because they refused to answer certain questions of the congressional committee . . . deprived them of liberty and property without due process of law and, at the same time, worked abridgement by State action of the same constitutional privilege, all in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment." The court said further that the Fifth Amendment plea "is not relevant as evidence of incompetency"—the technical charge on which the teachers were dismissed.

A similar ruling by the New Jersey Supreme Court reversed the firing, for the second time, of Robert Lowenstein, a Newark school teacher who was ousted on charges of conduct unbecoming a teacher for refusing in 1955 to answer questions of the HUAC. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 32.) The unanimous verdict said that the Board of Education must determine whether Lowenstein is fit to teach on the basis of his current beliefs about Communist ideals and democratic principles. Only if information about his past conduct suggests that his answers are less than truthful can his past associations be studied, the court said. By a 5-4 vote the Board refused to reemploy Lowenstein, but another appeal will be taken.

In a move that could eventually decide the validity of Washington state's loyalty oaths for public employees, the U.S. Supreme Court sent back to the state courts the appeal of Howard L. Nostrand and Max Savelle. The two University of Washington professors have been aided throughout their five-year case by the ACLU of Washington. (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 86-87.) The court explained its refusal to act on the case by pointing out that the state Supreme Court had not passed on whether an employee who refused to take the oath would get a hearing before dismissal to defend or explain his act.

New York, like Pennsylvania, New Jersey, California and other states, has also conducted loyalty investigations of teachers on the public payroll. In New York City, an impartial referee has recommended to the Board of Education the dismissal of seven teachers accused of lying about their past Communist Party membership in applications for licenses and promotions. The recommendation, however, is subject to modification by the Board, for whom the cases represented the last phase of an investigation launched in 1955. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 32.) The original charges against the teachers were dropped by the Board after the state's highest court had upheld the State Commissioner of Education's decision that teachers could not be compelled to disclose the names of former Communist colleagues. The current set of charges was then drawn up. Students also figured in politically-sensitive developments in New York City. There five students refused to take the oath of allegiance required of all academic high school graduates. At the insistence of the NYCLU the rule was waived in their cases. The Board of Education is considering, as a substitute, an Ephebic pledge of devotion to the city.

The ACLU's opposition to political tests for teacher employment, whether the test seeks to eliminate Fascists or Communists from the schools, was again voiced in an unusual case involving an American-born college teacher who renounced his citizenship on the eve of World War II and went to work in a Nazi radio station. The professor, Edward V. Sittler, resigned from Long Island University's C.W. Post College after publication of his past political record stirred a major controversy. At no time in the dispute, however, was criticism made of Sittler's classroom behavior. The New York Civil Liberties Union and the ACLU's Academic Freedom Committee issued a joint statement on the case re-emphasizing the Union's basic philosophy: "In the absence of substantial evidence of perversion of the academic process, the ACLU opposes the prohibition in educational employment of any person based even in part on his views or associations, such as Communist or Fascist. . . . The central issue in considering a teacher's fitness is his own performance in his subject and his relationship to his students."

A Colorado school teacher, Robert Lehrer, also refused to answer questions of the HUAC and was temporarily taken off his teaching assignment. When Lehrer later signed the state loyalty oath required of teachers he was permitted to return to his fourth and fifth grade pupils. The Florida Civil Liberties Union has intervened in a court test of the state loyalty oath prompted by the refusal of a high school teacher with nine years' tenure to sign the oath. The Illinois Division, ACLU took pleasure in the decision of the Chicago school board no longer to ask applicants to list their "un-American activities."

NON-POLITICAL ISSUES. The ACLU of Northern California is supporting the appeal of a social studies teacher in a junior college who was fired after writing five letters-to-the-editor in the local newspaper that were pungently critical of public education in Lassen County and also assailed bureaucracy in the California Teachers Association.

The right to express an opinion on free love was at issue in the case of assistant professor Leo Koch of the University of Illinois, who was dismissed for publicly advocating pre-marital sexual relations for college students "sufficiently mature to engage in them without social consequences and without violating their moral codes." Koch's views were published in the college newspaper as part of a discussion on sexual ethics. The Illinois Division, ACLU, which is supporting the teacher's appeal of his dismissal, charged that the university committed "a serious breach of academic freedom" by violating a faculty member's right to engage in public discussion on any topic. Koch's views, the affiliate declared, were expressed without "vulgarity or sensationalism" and were a serious contribution on a matter of "genuine concern."

Two young instructors at Kentucky State College were ousted for helping students plan strategy in demonstrating against student rules. The Kentucky Civil Liberties Union said the firings violated due process protections because the teachers were not given 10 days' notice in writing and a hearing by the college governing board, as provided by state law. The university president claimed that the two were only temporary employees and so were not covered by the statute.

STUDENT RIGHTS. The Administration and student body of the University of California continued to remain at odds over a number of free speech issues. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 33.) The Administration finally permitted student groups and publications to take public stands on off-campus issues, but refused the student government organization the right to do so on the ground that membership in the school-wide group was compulsory. The ACLU of Northern California objected to this restriction as well as to others limiting the rights of students to be heard on controversial subjects.

2. Pressures Arising from the Integration Conflict

Repercussions from the wave of lunch counter sit-in demonstrations throughout the South were felt immediately on the campus—even in colleges north of the Mason-Dixon line. The movement was born among Negro college students and it was against them and their allies among the faculty that state authorities and college officials took punitive action which violated academic freedom. The ACLU strongly supported the peaceful protests against lunch counter discrimination and condemned expulsions of students and dismissal of faculty members who joined with them in one of the most remarkable and effective mass protests in recent years. (For a full report of ACLU action on the sit-ins, see p. 47.) In Alabama, for example, one reaction of Gov. John Patterson to the sit-ins was to fire Dr. Lawrence D. Reddick, chairman of the history department of Alabama State College, a Negro school. Previously, the State Board of Education publicly called for the firing of 11 faculty members who had supported nine students expelled for their role in the demonstrations. In two telegrams to Patterson, the ACLU first called on the Governor to assure the faculty members that they would be retained "despite the bitter feeling about the race segregation issue," and later protested his firing of Reddick on the charge that the latter had Communist associations. Since no charge was brought that Dr. Reddick had misused his academic position and no hearing was held, the Union said to the governor, "We fear that you and the state Board of Education have fallen into the error of equating Communism with the indigenous Southern movement to attain racial equality by non-violent means. A loose charge of this nature can only further excite public feeling and impede rational consideration of the ways and means by which a minority group can achieve constitutional rights."

A University of Mississippi law professor who taught that the U.S. Supreme Court decision on desegregation was the law of the land was a target of a state representative who also cited the professor's membership in the ACLU as reason why he should be ousted. The teacher, William P. Murphy, struck back hard, declaring that, "I do not intend to give up my membership in the ACLU because of attempted political intimidation. I do not intend to tailor my teaching to satisfy any cult of crackpots, fanatics and willful ignoramuses." A bitter dispute rocked the faculty of the Vanderbilt University Divinity School over the expulsion, for his role in sit-in demonstrations, of the Rev. James M. Lawson, a graduate student. The dean of the Divinity School resigned, as did eleven of the school's faculty members; of these, nine withdrew their resignations when the university offered to allow Lawson, who had entered Boston University, to return to Vanderbilt to take examinations in order to earn a Vanderbilt degree. An Arkansas law requiring public school teachers to list all organizations to which they belonged or contributed during the last five years has been accepted for review by the U.S. Supreme Court. A federal court has already struck down another Arkansas law which barred employment to any teacher who was a member of the NAACP.

A Tennessee Circuit Court judge has refused a new trial to the Highlander Folk School, thus clearing the way for an appeal to the state Supreme Court of a ruling that integration in private schools in the state is unlawful. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 35.)

RELIGION

1. Church and State: Education

RELEASED TIME. The state Supreme Courts of Washington and Oregon upheld the validity of released time programs for religious education. The Washington court, dealing with the constitutional issues raised by a group of Spokane parents, said that while several aspects of the program were improper, it did not invade federal and state guarantees for the separation of church and state. The court did object, however, to the school distribution of consent cards for parents' signatures as well as to announcements by teachers or representatives of religious groups. This, the opinion said, makes of the children "a 'captive audience' to participate in a religious program" contrary to state constitutional protections barring public schools from sectarian influence. A friend-of-the-court brief, submitted by the ACLU of Washington State, had dwelt on the fact that since the released time program is conducted by the Spokane Council of Churches and thus, in effect, is restricted to Protestant children, it has segregated non-Protestant children in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. The court rejected this argument. The Oregon Supreme Court verdict, which reversed a lower court ruling, was restricted to the technical issue of whether the statute was sufficiently clear in naming the authority responsible for releasing the children or to provide who would be punished for violations. The state high court found the statute sufficiently clear on these points.

BIBLE READING AND RELIGIOUS TEACHING. A special three-judge federal court has refused to set aside its order banning Bible reading in the public schools of Pennsylvania despite a change in the state law allowing children to be excused from the Bible reading on the written request of a parent. The Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU supported the original test case, the first in the federal courts. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 38.) This case, which was brought by Mr. and Mrs. Edward Schempp, was appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court which sent it back for further hearing.

One of the most closely watched court cases in recent years was brought by the Florida Civil Liberties Union in attacking a wide range of religious practices which have long been a fixture in the state's public schools. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 37.) These include Bible reading, use of school buildings for religious instruction after hours, and religious pageants. The FCLU is backing Harlow Chamberlain, an agnostic, in his suit, which has been joined by three Jewish parents (backed by the American Jewish Congress) and one Unitarian. Although the Dade (Miami) County school board passed a resolution making participation in religious practices voluntary, the parents contend that social pressures compel their children to attend. The Greater Philadelphia Branch of the Union requested the State Superintendent of Public Instruction to instruct all local officials not to permit baccalaureate services in public schools.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL AID. The recurrent debate over state aid for transportation of private and parochial school students has been renewed in several states. The Connecticut Supreme Court upheld the state law giving towns the local option of whether to pay for non-profit private school bus transportation entirely out of local taxes. The majority opinion said the law "comes up to but does not reach the 'wall of separation' between church and state" and primarily serves "the public health, safety and welfare. It aids the parents in sending their children to a school of their choice, as is their right," the opinion added. A new law passed by the New York state legislature may eventually lead to the U.S. Supreme Court. The law guarantees private and parochial school pupils the same free transportation provided for public school children. The New York Civil Liberties Union is already backing an appeal in the state Supreme Court from the State Education Commissioner's ruling that voters of a school district can authorize travel for students no matter what the distance is. In the current suit a Long Island taxpayer is contesting the results of a voters' referendum which subsidized travel expenses for private and parochial school pupils who in some cases have chosen to go to schools 35 miles away. The affiliate said that the Constitution "requires that a limit be put on the transportation to parochial schools" and that in the current case, the distance infringes the separation of church and state demanded in the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The Maine legislature killed a bill providing for local option on the same issue a year after the state Supreme Court ruled that existing law did not allow public funds to be spent on transportation of parochial school pupils. A Minnesota state legislator sought to win such aid for such students but the move was vigorously opposed by Protestants, Jews, non-church affiliated people and the ACLU's Minnesota affiliate. The question of bus transportation for students in sectarian schools has been a lively state issue and probably will remain so since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1947 in the Everson case that no federal constitutional issue was raised by the free travel arrangements. The high court left open, however, issues of legality under state constitutions and matters of administrative regulation.

The Everson case was one of two U.S. Supreme Court precedents cited by an Oregon Circuit Court judge in upholding the constitutionality of a state law requiring local school boards to furnish free textbooks at public expense to parochial school children attending qualified institutions. The decision was unusual in that the judge added his personal comment that he "emphatically . . . dissents from a decision I am required to make as a result of the majority opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court." The case will be carried to the high court, however, by the ACLU of Oregon, which supported the suit of three Oregon City taxpayers. Answering the affiliate's contention that the Everson case was not binding on the textbook test, Judge Homan pointed out that "transportation to a parochial school is a direct aid to the religion that is taught there, while the most that can be said of secular textbooks is that they are an indirect aid to religion in that they help the operation of the educational process which is used for religious purposes. If direct aid is permissible, an indirect one must be. In principle, I cannot distinguish the decision in the Everson case from the present one."

In other cases involving public aid to parochial schools, the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU endorsed the use of public money to supply health services on the grounds that inferior health services would constitute discrimination because of religion, thereby inhibiting religious liberty; the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts opposed on First Amendment grounds an unsuccessful bill proposing state payment of tuition to parents whose children attend non-public schools.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION. Strict religious observance by the children of Amish parents and members of other religious sects continued to cause friction with state school officials over the issue of compulsory education. The ACLU recognizes the state's right to impose minimum educational standards but believes that every effort should be made to safeguard religious liberty of dissenters. The mediatory role of Union affiliates in York and Lancaster counties in Pennsylvania, for example, helped to settle a heated controversy between Amish parents and state officials. The state had threatened to prosecute Amish parents who refused to admit their children to the "worldly" atmosphere of a new $2,000,000 school, but the threat was dropped when the Amish agreed to send their children to another public school or to open a parochial school that meets the state's standards. The Indiana Civil Liberties Union offered help to the parents of Amish children in Decatur who were declared "juvenile delinquents" by a court and whom the state threatened to place in foster homes for failure to attend public school. The sect's own school failed to meet state requirements.

2. Church and State: The General Public

"BLUE LAWS." The U.S. Supreme Court considered Sunday "blue laws" for the first time since the turn of the century, taking up federal court suits in Maryland, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. Approximately 35 states now have laws curtailing work and business on Sunday. A conflict between Federal District Courts in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania may have encouraged the high court, after 59 years, to review the problem even though it refused last year to hear the appeal from an Ohio "blue law" conviction. (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 41-42.)

Seven months after a special three-judge federal court ruled that the Massachusetts Lord's Day Act, dating back to colonial times, violated constitutional rights by favoring one religion over another (See last year's Annual Report, p. 42.), another three-judge federal court in Philadelphia upheld Pennsylvania's Sunday closing law in denying an injunction sought by Two Guys From Harrison, Inc., a highway discount house with a branch also in Glen Burnie, Md. The store owners claimed that since other retail firms were permitted to sell goods on Sunday, they suffered discrimination. The state was upheld in its argument that since it could properly prescribe one day of rest each week for each citizen, it could choose the day favored by the majority—Sunday. In a brief filed with the U.S. Supreme Court, the ACLU declared: "The automobile age, the distance of shopping centers from concentrated areas of population, the demands of minorities to observe their own days of rest for purposes of religious worship, the need of the public for manifold forms of recreation and entertainment on their day of rest: all these call upon the judicial arm of our government to protect the right of all men to choose their form of rest and worship and also the time of rest and worship so long as it does not interfere with the right of others to enjoy their days of rest and worship. . . ." New Jersey, another state in which arrests for "blue law" violations have spurred public debate, was upheld on the constitutionality of its statute by the state Supreme Court.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD. The U.S. Supreme Court heard a challenge of Connecticut's 80-year-old anti-birth control law which makes it illegal to prescribe and use contraceptive devices. The ACLU and the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union filed a friend-of-the-court brief supporting the test of the state law. Previously, the CCLU had filed a brief with the state Supreme Court of Errors which upheld the constitutionality of the law while noting that "the claims of infringement of constitutional rights are presented more dramatically than they have ever been before." Still, the court added, "(we) cannot abrogate a clear expression of legislative intent, particularly when the legislature has consistently refused to rewrite the existing legislation." (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 42-43.) The ACLU opposes state laws prohibiting the sale and use of contraceptive devices as a violation of the due process guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment and the "right reserved to the people by the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to live.

enjoy liberty and pursue happiness free of unnecessary government restraint." In Arizona the Planned Parenthood Committee of Phoenix and the Arizona Civil Liberties Union have asked a County Superior Court to rule on the constitutionality of a state law prohibiting the dissemination of birth control information. The ACLU affiliate's suit contends that the ban violates free speech and due process protections.

OTHER ISSUES. The Maryland Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, has refused to license a notary public because he refused to take an oath that he believes in God. The ACLU backed the appeal of avowed atheist Roy R. Torcaso to the U.S. Supreme Court on the grounds that a state does not have the power to inquire into a man's religious views and that a man has the right to disbelieve without suffering discrimination. The Maryland court declared that ". . . under our Constitution disbelief in a Supreme Being, and the denial of any moral accountability for conduct, not only renders a person incompetent to hold public office, but to give testimony, or to serve as a juror. The historical record makes it clear that religious toleration . . . was never thought to encompass the ungodly."

3. Problems of Conscience and Religious Freedom

MILITARY SERVICE AND ROTC. The Universities of Maryland and Illinois reversed long-standing rules and permitted conscientious objectors to be exempt from ROTC programs. The switch left the University of California as the only college which denies exemptions to C.O.'s. The Universities of Rutgers, Utah State and Wisconsin have voluntary ROTC programs. While the old policy prevailed at the University of Maryland one student was suspended for refusing to continue military training on grounds of conscience and two others who served their civilian draft duty as C.O.'s were denied exemptions from ROTC and brought suit against the school. The pair, Kenneth Hanauer and Jack Crabhill, took their case to the U.S. Supreme Court but were denied review.

CITIZENSHIP. An English citizen who became a resident alien in the United States in 1949 and served in the Army has been denied his naturalization petition on the grounds that his conscientious objection claim was based on "internationalist" rather than religious beliefs. The government said he was unable to take the oath of allegiance and that he had failed to establish that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution. The petitioner, 31-year-old Eric Victor Levy, appealed the finding of the naturalization examiner to the Federal District Court in Los Angeles. A Quaker C.O. who received a "loss of nationality" certificate in 1954 was able to return to this country after a review board found that he had not voluntarily expatriated himself by failing to register for the draft.

OTHER CASES. ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin urged the reinstatement of William R. Martin, an aide to the Senate Republican Minority, who was fired because he urged Washington high school students to register as conscientious objectors when they are called to the draft. In a letter to Mark Trice, Secretary for the Minority, Malin said that Martin's expression of opinion "was hardly relevant to (his) administrative duties and it would seem that he was punished for speaking out on a controversial subject." Although Martin's dismissal does not violate any law, the ACLU official added, "we believe it does infringe on the spirit of the First Amendment . . . and we are particularly distressed that an important arm of the Senate has penalized an individual for exercising his right of free speech." Martin, a political science student at George Washington University, was a member of the Friends Meeting of Washington and chairman of the Washington Young Friends. The ACLU of Northern California and San Francisco school officials have agreed that students who have conscientious objections will be exempted from saluting the flag or reciting the pledge of allegiance. Previously, city school regulations exempted only students who claimed a "conscientious religious objection." The ACLU affiliate pointed out that the word "religious" has been dropped, in conformity with a 1943 U.S. Supreme Court decision which held that no citizen could be required to affirm any belief for any reason whatsoever. The Iowa Senate voted to allow C.O.'s to hold civil service positions, revoking a state law that had been on the books since 1917.

GENERAL FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND ASSOCIATION

1. Right of Movement

PASSPORTS. Ever since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in June, 1958 that Congress had not authorized the State Department to withhold passports on grounds of suspected Communist affiliation or to ask applicants questions about their political beliefs (See 1957-1958 Annual Report, pp. 35-36.), each congressional session has been the scene of attempts to override the high court decision despite the fact that there has been no demonstrable need for broader government powers. The 86th Congress was no exception. After the House adopted a less stringent measure, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved an omnibus security bill which featured a restrictive passport section but the full Senate did not act on it. The bill would have forbid issuance of passports to persons who had been members of the Communist Party or supporters of the international Communist movement since Jan. 1, 1951; permitted the Secretary of State to place geographical limitations on travel; required an oath to give the State Department "a full and accurate report concerning the places visited;" allowed the denial of passports on the basis of confidential information; and granted exclusive passport review power to the State Department.

The ACLU opposed this proposed legislation, asserting that a citizen has the right to travel as part of his personal freedom and can be denied a passport only if he is involved in a court action that imposes a legal obligation to remain in this country. The Union also protested the power of the Secretary of State to deny passports to Communists or others simply because he feels that their presence abroad would be harmful to the security of the United States. If a person has committed a crime, the Union believes, he should be arrested and charged, not deprived of his liberty by administrative fiat. Moreover, where there has been a delay or refusal by authorities to issue a passport, the applicant is entitled to a prompt due process hearing including full disclosure of the facts—through confrontation and cross-examination—on which the administrative action was based.

WORTHY CASE. The U.S. Supreme Court refused to review the appeal of newsman William Worthy, whose case had been supported by the ACLU for four years, in a direct challenge of the constitutionality of the government's right to limit the peace-time travel of its citizens. In commenting on the high court's refusal to hear the appeal from the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C., ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin said that the Worthy case had "particular significance because of the effect such a ban has on the right to receive information from foreign correspondents." Malin added that the refusal to review left undisturbed the lower court's finding that the Secretary of State is authorized, under the President's power to regulate foreign affairs, to restrict travel to areas he considers harmful to United States interests. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 48.)

2. The Vote: Minority Parties and the Right to Franchise

REAPPORTIONMENT. The U.S. Supreme Court accepted for review a citizen's suit to force reapportionment of the Tennessee legislature, encouraging hopes that the high court will act on a growing number of such cases that have been thrown out of lower federal courts on the basis of the high court's 1946 decision that reapportionment is a "political" matter and therefore not subject to judicial review. A three-judge federal court in Tennessee, for example, dismissed the suit saying that it had no right to intervene while at the same time acknowledging that a "clear violation" of the federal constitution was involved. The ACLU and several of its affiliates, especially in Minnesota and Michigan, are taking an active role in pressing for equitable representation of voting rights.

The Tennessee suit was based on the fact that although the state constitution calls for reapportioning the voting districts after each federal census, no such action has been taken by the legislature since 1901. Basing its claim on the grounds that the present "inequitable" distribution of seats deprives them of equal protection of the law under the Fourteenth Amendment, the citizens' group started federal court action to force reapportionment. The group called for election of the next legislature at-large by voters generally rather than by districts, or by temporarily apportioned districts set by the Federal District Court. The court, however, held that to grant the petition would result "in a destruction of the state government itself, since the de facto doctrine would not be applicable to maintain the present members of the legislature in office and there would be no prior valid apportionment act to fall back upon."

A similar suit in Minnesota, supported by the Minnesota Branch of the ACLU, finally brought some improvement in state re-districting in 1959, but the affiliate is strongly opposing a constitutional amendment which would take effect after the 1970 census. The Minnesota Branch said that while the principle of equality is observed in allocating House seats, it is completely abandoned in the Senate.

The Metropolitan Detroit Branch of the ACLU also actively took part in an attempt to win a change in determining state Senate districts. In a brief before the state Supreme Court on behalf of August Scholle, president of the state AFL-CIO, the Union affiliate anticipated reliance on the U.S. Supreme Court decision of 1946 by declaring: "We believe . . . that any court . . . may properly and should exercise its jurisdiction to protect important constitutional rights even though they arise in a 'political' context. In a democratic society," continued the brief, "every citizen should have a right to vote and the votes of all citizens should be of equal value. The Michigan senatorial districts . . . arbitrarily give citizens in some districts votes of one-twelfth the value of those of citizens in other districts. . . . Disfranchisement by dilution has resulted in the vote being weighted so heavily in favor of the rural areas that in effect there exist in Michigan two classes of voters—first and second. We have an 'Alice in Wonderland' situation where the minority of the voters has been accorded first class citizenship and the majority has been accorded second class citizenship. . . ." The Michigan Supreme Court, by a 5-3 vote, disagreed with the Detroit affiliate's position. The high court ruled, in line with the U.S. Supreme Court's reasoning, that the malapportionment issue is "political" and not within its purview. An appeal is now before the U.S. Supreme Court.

The highest court of another state, New Jersey, squarely met the issue raised by the inaction of the state legislature in facing changing population distribution. "If by reason of time and changing conditions," said the state Supreme Court in a unanimous verdict, "the reapportionment statute no longer serves its original purpose of securing to the voter the full constitutional value of his franchise, and the legislative branch fails to take appropriate restorative action, the doors of the courts must be open to him. The lawmaking body cannot by inaction alter the constitutional system under which it has its own existence." The court said the legislature must act by the 1961 primaries.

Home rule advocates in Washington, D.C. scored their first victory when Congress passed a bill amending the Constitution to allow residents of the nation's capital to vote in Presidential elections. The amendment must be approved by two-thirds of the states.

MINORITY PARTIES. The apparently unintentional omission of a petition section from Minnesota's recodified election laws has not infringed on the right of minority parties to nominate candidates for public office, according to the state Attorney General. The missing section, which had been included in past state election laws, required minority parties to submit a petition signed by 2,000 persons to insure the right of a party to appear on the ballot. The danger that the omission might be used to block the inclusion of minority parties on the ballot had been brought to the attention of the Minnesota Branch of the ACLU by the Socialist Labor Party. The Maryland Branch of the ACLU lost an appeal in the Baltimore City Criminal Court on behalf of a substitute school teacher who was given the choice of resigning or being fired after he was arrested by police on a disorderly conduct charge. The incident arose when the teacher was attacked and heckled by a crowd of high school students for selling a Socialist Party newspaper on the sidewalk.

3. Right of Assembly in Public Facilities

ROCKWELL CASE. . . . "No danger flowing from speech can be deemed clear and present, unless the incidents of the evil apprehended is so imminent that it may befall before there is opportunity for full discussion. . . ." Thus wrote U.S. Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis in 1927 and the words have remained as guideposts for the ACLU in defending the right of free speech for spokesmen of unpopular and even despicable causes. The Union's position has been stated many times on behalf of many controversial speakers—Communists and Fascists, integrationists and segregationists—but in recent years few incidents have created a public and emotional furor to match the case of George Lincoln Rockwell, self-styled leader of a band of 30 men who call themselves the American Nazi Party.

The ACLU and the New York Civil Liberties Union, although expressing strong opposition to Rockwell's anti-Semitic, anti-Negro views, is supporting his right to be heard in a public park in New York City. A Parks Department permit for the meeting, scheduled for July 4, was refused by Mayor Wagner. The Mayor's refusal to grant the permit was based on the assertion that to do so would be "an invitation to riot and disorder from a half-penny Hitler," although the Police Department had previously declared that it could furnish the necessary protection. Criticizing the Mayor and several organizations which had sought to bar the domestic Nazi from speaking, the NYCLU declared: "While recognizing the strong emotional feelings on the part of many New Yorkers towards Rockwell's views, the NYCLU does not believe that a city official should precensor any speaker. In the Union's view, speech can be limited only when a speaker urges immediate violent action and there is a real danger that his followers will act then and there on his incitement. This 'clear and present danger' limitation applies only to violence urged by the speaker. It does not apply to threats of violence by his opponents, (or even actual attempts to carry out such threats), although, of course, opponents of the speaker have every right . . . to peacefully express their views."

The NYCLU pointed out that unless the right of "provocative" speech is upheld, even for white supremacists, "it cannot be defended for other persons who advocate policies with which the democratic-minded members of the community agree—for example the freedom of speech of the NAACP and the 'sit-in' students." The NYCLU highlighted the comparison by underscoring the fact that both Mayor Wagner and Governor Faubus acted under the mere "threat" of mob action. "In both cases," the NYCLU said, "although the local police force said it could handle the situation, the pressure of the mob won out." The affiliate's forthright stand in the Rockwell case was supported overwhelmingly by the local press and by most newspapers who commented on the affair throughout the country. "Rockwell is not going to shake the foundations of this Republic," noted The New York Times. "If he were left quietly to speak his piece, however revolting and abominable it is, he would create no impact. It is only when he or his henchmen are throttled, or physically attacked as one of them finally was in Washington, that they achieve the attention they crave, and we begin to chip away at the structure of the free and liberal society in which all of us believe—all but the Rockwells, the extremists of Right and Left." In the first round of court action, a New York state Supreme Court judge ruled that "self-confessed advocates of violence" are not entitled to free speech protections of the Bill of Rights. The decision will be appealed.

Before the legal battle opened in New York, the ACLU was involved in a previous defense of Rockwell in Washington, D.C. on disorderly conduct charges sparked by a scuffle when an irate bystander tried to grab a pile of Rockwell's handbills. The literature advocated the forced resettlement of Negroes in Africa and urged the liquidation of Jews. In a memorandum explaining its intervention, the Union said that it regarded the views contained in the pamphlet abhorrent and that it understood the feelings of those who tried to put an end to its distribution. But, added the Union, "to condone such action would leave free speech completely at the mercy of individuals to whom the ideas expressed are repugnant." The charges against a Rockwell cohort and the bystander were dismissed.

The Rockwell case arose while memories were still fresh with an outbreak of anti-Semitism in this country and abroad that expressed itself chiefly in the defacement of synagogues by painting swastikas on the walls. The daubings of synagogues were not defensible, the ACLU said. "Such action steps over a line . . . the line between speech and direct action," said ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin. "And the law (against attacking persons or property) can be applied when such action is taken—whether by boys defacing a Jewish synagogue in New Haven or men bombing a Negro leader's home in Alabama."

PUBLIC MEETINGS: The protests of the ACLU of Northern California were sustained when the City Attorney of San Francisco ruled that regulations limiting the use of Union Square park "to projects of significant civic or national importance" were unconstitutional. The regulations also sought to bar the use of the park "for political or sectarian religious purposes." The affiliate said the rules were discriminatory and violated freedom of speech. At the request of the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU, the Police Department issued a supplemental directive which made clear the right of every citizen "to make a speech on any lawful subject he chooses to a public gathering" without a permit. The request was made after police interfered with a pacifist demonstration.

USE OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS. The California Supreme Court granted an appeal by the ACLU of Southern California in two test cases that may decide the constitutionality of requiring a "non-disloyalty" oath from groups seeking to use public high schools. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 51.) After winning an early legal round, the affiliate was set back in the District Court of Appeals which upheld the oath requirement. "The restriction is slight," said the court, "and the danger is great. . . . If the state cannot go at least this far in protecting its own interest, it is powerless to act in any effective manner." The cities involved in the suit are Los Angeles and San Diego. In the latter city folk singer Pete Seeger performed in a public high school without having to sign a loyalty oath. The performance took place less than 10 hours after Seeger appeared before a Superior Court judge with attorneys of the affiliate. The judge ruled that school authorities had no power to impose the oath since Seeger's business manager has already signed the oath and other contractual agreements must be met.

OTHER CASES. A Federal District Court judge agreed with the New York Civil Liberties Union that a restaurant in Central Park and the city's Parks Commissioner must stand trial for refusing the facilities to the Committee to Secure Justice for Morton Sobell. He said that while a private business was not affected by the anti-discrimination provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment, the restaurant in the park, operating under a lease from the city, "is far from an ordinary private business enterprise." The ACLU, in New York, Iowa, Pittsburgh and Washington, D.C., supported peaceful picketing by refugee groups and others of the visit of Soviet Premier Khrushchev to this country. The Pittsburgh branch protested that city police had taken signs from the pickets on the request of Russian secret police. In Iowa, where members of Jehovah's Witnesses frequently run into conflict with veterans and civic groups, the members of the Marshalltown Memorial Coliseum Commission rejected the demand of five veterans organizations and voted to allow the sect to use the Coliseum for a meeting.

4. State and Local Controls

RIGHT TO LICENSE. The ACLU of Southern California will take an appeal to the state's District Court of Appeals of a test of a loyalty oath required of state officials, including applicants for a notary public commission. The suit was brought by A. L. Wirin, counsel to the affiliate, who attempted to draw a distinction before a Superior Court judge between a general state-wide oath and a relevant inquiry into political beliefs. Wirin told the court that he was opposed to such oaths on grounds of principle, religious beliefs and conscience, but stated in response to questions that he was not and never had been a member of the Communist Party and did not believe or advocate the violent overthrow of the government. The suit claimed that the oath put the burden of proof on the citizen, in violation of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in the California tax oath cases (See 1957-1958 Annual Report, p. 31.), and that it also invaded the right to privacy and opinion. The lower court held, however, that Wirin's willingness to answer specific questions indicated that his objections were not based on religious grounds.

The Southern California affiliate may be nearing the end of the legal road to win a license for Raphael Konigsberg, a lawyer whose appeal will be heard for the second time by the U.S. Supreme Court since the struggle first began six years ago. (See 1957-1958 Annual Report, p. 39 and last year's Report, p. 54.) Consistently refusing to answer questions regarding his membership in the Communist Party, Konigsberg has twice been disqualified by the California State Bar although he has met all the requirements for admission, including firm denials that he ever advocated violent or forceful overthrow of the government.

The New York Court of Appeals, the state's highest tribunal, has upheld the disbarment of a lawyer after 37 years of practice on the grounds that he pleaded his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination in a judicial inquiry of illegal and unethical conduct. The NYCLU filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the case, maintaining that the disbarment violated due process guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment by destroying a reliance on a constitutional refusal to testify against one's self.

OTHER CASES. An employee of the Federal Aviation Agency who was restored to his job on the orders of a Federal District Court again faces dismissal. The charge this time relies on "the efficiency of the service." The old accusation rejected by the court was "disgraceful personal conduct" committed six years before the employee was ever hired. The Colorado Branch, ACLU, which defended the employee on the first go-round, is defending him again. The argument is based on a U.S. Supreme Court decision that pre-governmental activities cannot be used against an individual now in government service. Upon the request of the Illinois Division, ACLU the Due Process Committee of the ACLU considered whether it was an invasion of privacy for a state to release normally confidential Social Security information to other state agencies in order to help locate parents who deserted their families. The Committee concluded that in this very special case, the claim to privacy was outweighed by the right to locate an absconding parent. The Niagara Frontier (Buffalo) Branch of the Union also considered the ends and the means of an issue when it objected to the New York State Crime Commission over the distribution of a questionnaire to Buffalo policemen in the course of an investigation into police corruption. The Branch said the public regarded the questionnaire, unfairly, as an assumption of guilt by the entire police force. "This is manifestly unfair," said the Branch, and suggested that the Commission find "other and proper methods" to obtain the information.

AMERICAN LEGION. The California Department of the Legion wound up its annual convention by demanding that the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee investigate the ACLU. The ACLU of Northern California said it has nothing to hide and would welcome an investigation of its activities by the Legion itself. The day before the resolution was passed, hundreds of Legionnaires roughed-up four college student pickets who were parading in front of the meeting auditorium. The conventioneers destroyed their signs, searched their automobiles and tore up a reporter's notes of the incident. The following day San Francisco police protected from Legion harassment 150 pickets who showed up and the ACLU affiliate praised the police for its commendable, though belated, action. The state of Washington Department of the Legion, in contrast to its California colleagues, took a civil liberties step forward when it voted to support repeal of a state law restricting aliens from owning land.

5. Congressional Action

THE COURTS. Two Los Angeles social workers who pleaded the First and Fifth Amendments in refusing to answer questions of the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1956 lost their appeal before a closely-divided U.S. Supreme Court. The ACLU and its Southern California affiliate took the case to the high court, charging that the dismissals of Arthur Globe and Thomas W. Nelson were arbitrary and unconstitutional. The firings were based on a California law which requires that any public employee subpoened by a congressional committee must testify about his participation in or knowledge of groups advocating the violent overthrow of the government. "Any employee who fails to appear or to answer such questions on any grounds whatsoever shall be guilty of insubordination and be dismissed from his employment," the statute declares. The majority opinion in the Globe case, backed by a 5-3 vote, held that Globe's dismissal resulted directly from his insubordination and violation of the law, and not because he invoked his constitutional privilege, as the ACLU had argued.

WILKINSON CASE. A new attempt to rein the headlong galloping of the House Un-American Activities Committee has been brought before the U.S. Supreme Court by the ACLU. The Union appealed the contempt conviction of Frank Wilkinson, affirmed by the U.S. Court of Appeals in Atlanta, for refusing to testify before the HUAC in Atlanta in 1958. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 56.) The ACLU brief on behalf of Wilkinson maintained that the Committee subpoened him unlawfully merely to harass him for organizing public opposition to its hearings. This action, said the Union, "was nothing more than a citizen petitioning for the redress of grievances, a clear constitutional right" under the First and Ninth Amendments. The brief rejected the opinion of the Court of Appeals that the HUAC was within its rights in requiring a disclosure of motive on the part of citizens who seek such redress. Such a theory, said the Union, "would defeat the very purpose of the First Amendment by foreclosing the political process through which legislative excesses may be curbed."

After hanging fire for several years while the U.S. Supreme Court considered the Barenblatt case, the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington issued verdicts in the cases of nine persons who had balked at answering questions of House and Senate investigating committees. All had relied on the First Amendment, guaranteeing freedom of speech, religion and assembly. The court dismissed indictments against two women, Mrs. Mary Knowles, a librarian whose support by her Quaker employers in Plymouth Meeting, Pa. drew widespread attention in 1955; and Mrs. Goldie Watson, a former Philadelphia schoolteacher. In both cases, the court held that neither the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, which questioned Mrs. Knowles, or the HUAC which questioned Mrs. Watson, had made the objective of the inquiry clear to the witness. The convictions of seven men all are expected to be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court. Those whose contempt citations were upheld were Alden Whitman, Robert Shelton and William A. Price, New York City newspapermen; Herman Liveright, former New Orleans TV station manager; John T. Gojack, an official of the independent United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers; Norton Anthony Russell, an Ohio engineer; and Bernard Deutch, a Pennsylvania physicist. The complete scorecard on 36 First Amendment defendants includes three who have served prison terms, one still in prison, two acquittals, and 30 others whose trials are pending or whose convictions are in various stages of appeal.

HOUSE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE. The path of the HUAC continued to leave a wide swath across the nation, affecting individuals and institutions, provoking some counterattacks, including one full-fledged riot. The ACLU Board of Directors approved a Biennial Conference resolution making elimination of the Committee "a prime order of business." In testimony before the Democratic and Republican Platform Committees, the Union said the Committee had sapped the strength of the First Amendment by engaging in trial-by-publicity in a circus atmosphere, rather than allowing security questions to be raised where they belong—in court rooms where in a full trial a judicial judgement could prevail. Congressman James Roosevelt also continued his attack upon the HUAC, renewing his proposal in Congress to abolish the panel as "a discredit to the country." One investigation criticized by Roosevelt was the inquiry into Communist influence in the California school system, as a result of which approximately half a dozen teachers—out of a total of 111,500—were dismissed or forced to resign. Both the Northern and Southern California affiliates of the Union defended a number of the teachers in local school board proceedings begun as a result of a self-styled HUAC "experiment" whereby the Committee turned over more than 90 dossiers to local boards in lieu of holding its own hearings. The ACLU of Southern California opposed this move in the Federal District Court and lost, and when the HUAC did arrive on the scene to conduct a new set of hearings in San Francisco, its appearance touched-off a riot by students, witnesses and others. Police used fire hoses, fists and clubs to quell the melee, in which 12 persons were injured and 68 were arrested on charges of participating in a riot, disturbing the peace and resisting an officer. The ACLU of Northern California, in a subsequent statement on the fracas, scolded both the demonstrators and the police for their behavior. The affiliate said that although it was opposed to the existence of the Committee, "it is also opposed to disorderly methods of expressing such opposition. At the same time, it is also clear that the whole matter was badly handled by the police. If the police had acted with firmness at the outset and ejected or arrested persons who were disturbing the peace in the corridors of City Hall, the situation would not have gotten out of hand. . . ." The police came under heavy fire for physical attacks against the protesters, including dragging of people off the steps of the City Hall and the use of fire hoses. The ACLU of Northern California commented: ". . . the police used excessive force in dealing with the situation. And we think those officers who were guilty of misconduct should be properly and immediately dealt with by the Police Department or the Police Commissioner." At a later hearing, a Municipal Court judge dismissed the charges against 67 students, remanding the case of one defendant for trial.

The ACLU protested the Committee's investigation of Communist activities among youth, which reportedly stemmed from a meeting of the Communist-controlled World Youth Festival in Europe. The Union said the investigation was "an invasion of the free speech and association guarantees of the First Amendment." Another HUAC investigation condemned by the Union was the public hearings in New York and San Juan, P.R. into alleged Communist influence among Puerto Ricans. Pointing out that such activity has never been an issue in the island Commonwealth, the ACLU said the inquiry would be "offensive" to Americans who know that Puerto Rico is quite capable of handling elements subversive to democracy. . . ." The San Juan hearing particularly was scored because the HUAC's jurisdiction over the affairs of the autonomous Commonwealth of Puerto Rico was at the least "questionable." Because of this the ACLU asked the Department of Justice to drop contempt indictments returned against 13 Puerto Ricans.

LINUS PAULING CASE. Dr. Linus C. Pauling, Nobel Prize-winning biochemist of the California Institute of Technology, sought in the federal courts to postpone the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee from forcing him to disclose the names of persons who had assisted him in obtaining signatures to a petition urging an end to nuclear tests. The 11,000 signatures were turned over to the United Nations in 1958. Pauling said in his suit that he was willing to disclose the names of all persons who have signed the petition—they were already public—but that the subcommittee acted illegally in demanding the names of those who had aided him in the petition campaign. Pauling refused to answer the subcommittee's questions because, he contended, this might lead to "reprisals against those believers in the democratic process." Dr. Pauling also said that submitting the names would make it impossible for him to secure the distribution of a further petition. He argued that his First Amendment right of conscience, speech and press had been violated as well as his Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable search and seizure. In a public statement and legal brief the ACLU gave "strong support" to Dr. Pauling's case, both his First Amendment challenge of the subcommittee's questioning and the legal technique he pursued, to determine in advance, the scope of the subcommittee's authority. Calling the right of petition a "prized element" of civil liberties, the ACLU said the First Amendment "squarely forbids government interference with the individual's voicing of political opinion, no matter what form such expression of opinion takes."

SMITH ACT. The U.S. Supreme Court for the third time heard argument on the constitutionality of the membership clause of the Smith Act. The clause makes it a crime knowingly to be a member of a party that advocates the forcible overthrow of the government. Twice before, the court has heard argument on the constitutionality of the provision in connection with the conviction of Junius Irving Scales, former Carolinas chairman of the Communist Party. It also had scheduled argument on the clause in the case of John Francis Noto, ex-secretary of the Party in New York. (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 58-59.) A third conviction of former Illinois Communist leader, Claude Lightfoot, also rests on the final outcome of the latest court action.

Meanwhile, with the Justice Department decision to drop retrial of six Ohio residents convicted under the Smith Act in 1956, the case of six Colorado Communist Party members remains the only such prosecution still active in the courts. Their conviction has been appealed to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver with the Colorado Branch, ACLU planning to file a friend-of-the-court brief.

In another security area, the U.S. Supreme Court was asked for the second time to decide on the constitutionality of the 1950 Internal Security Act's provision requiring public registration of Communist-action organizations. The Communist Party was ordered to register in 1953 after a finding by the Subversive Activities Control Board, but the case has dragged on for years because of lengthy hearings and challenges of perjured testimony before the Board. So far the Communist Party has not actually registered. The ACLU, in a friend-of-the-court brief to the high court, said it opposed the 1950 law. It said the statute impeded open presentation of non-revolutionary opinions on social and political topics, expression that "is far removed from incitement to violence or any other danger that Congress has the power to prevent." Regardless of what may be the Communist Party's ultimate objectives, the ACLU said, the Party expresses opinion on a variety of social issues, such as labor relations, race discrimination, and control of atomic weapons.

LABOR

POLITICAL ACTION. A policy statement by the ACLU Board of Directors upheld the use of union dues for political purposes "as an exercise of the right to free expression protected by the First Amendment." The Union declaration, which was coupled with a call for the protection of dissenting union members to voice their opposition inside and outside the union, was made as the U.S. Supreme Court agreed to review an appeal by the International Association of Machinists from a ruling by the Georgia Supreme Court. The state court had struck down as unconstitutional the National Railway Labor Act which permits union shop agreements, on the ground that such contracts interfered with the freedom of opinion of workers who disagreed with the union's political stand.

The ACLU, however, said that while the rights of a dissenting minority within a union should be recognized, they cannot thwart the will of the majority to have their dues used for political purposes. ". . . So long as such (minority) members have an effective right to participate in the decision-making process within the union, including the right to vote for union officials of their choice, they are not deprived of their civil liberties," the statement said. "The remedy," added the Union, "lies not in the stifling of group opinion, but in democratic participation in the political life of their union so that a majority of the union members may, in time, be persuaded of their wisdom." In commenting on the IAM appeal, the ACLU also reaffirmed its position taken in 1943 and 1948 that special union assessments for political purposes—apart from union dues receipts—should be made "only by a vote of the union's membership, with the right of any member opposing such action to be free of assessment."

WORKERS RIGHTS. Several ACLU affiliates have intervened on behalf of union members who have been denied their rights through violation or lack of internal democratic processes. Such a case, supported by the ACLU of Southern California, involves two IAM members who were expelled for publicly campaigning in favor of a state "right-to-work" law—a measure bitterly and actively opposed by the union. An IAM trial board found the men guilty of disloyalty and it was the contention of the union in court that it had the "inherent" right to expel on this ground. A Superior Court judge agreed, ruling that the union may properly regard "right-to-work" laws as a threat to its existence and may consider union members who support them as disloyal. In discussing the issues raised by the case, the Labor Committee of the national ACLU supported the idea that a union member may, as a citizen, take part in a public debate. However, it added, this "does not mean that steps leading directly to the union's detriment may be taken with impunity." The Committee said that where "the relationship between advocacy of an idea and the union's well-being is itself highly debatable, disciplinary proceedings should be closely limited." The panel added that "if discipline is to be imposed because of open advocacy of contrary opinion in a forum of the member's choice, the burden of establishing the gravity of the offense should rest on the union." In a case affecting job rights of union members, the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU is trying to solve the dilemma of workers in Chester, Pa., who have had great difficulty in finding employment because neither the Philadelphia nor the Wilmington, Del., locals of the International Association of Heat and Frost, Insulations and Asbestos Workers, will allow them membership. Each says it is the responsibility of the other. In a third ACLU case, the Northern California affiliate filed an appeal to federal courts from a U.S. Civil Service Commission review board ruling upholding the dismissal of a San Francisco postal worker who led a union picket line in front of the Post Office during his off hours.

LOYALTY AND SECURITY. Merchant seamen who had not been able to find work on American flag ships for as long as ten years because their loyalty had been questioned by the Coast Guard finally won that right on the eve of a court trial. Twenty-one seamen had sued the National Maritime Union and the employers for flaunting a 1956 Federal District Court ruling that the seamen's suspensions were unconstitutional because the Port Security program violated due process by denying the right to confront and cross-examine their accusers. The agreement, reached by the seamen, the NMU and the employers, applies to all men who on their appeal to the industry-union Joint Appeal Board had been denied access to the hiring hall as security risks. Such seamen are now again eligible to register at NMU hiring halls. The U.S. Supreme Court refused to review an appeal, supported by the Maryland ACLU, by four Bethlehem Steel Co. employees who were fired in 1957 for refusing to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee. The United Steelworkers of America refused to bring the firings before an arbitrator on the claim that the employees' silence before union officials on the question of possible Communist Party membership made it impossible to evaluate their grievance.

BIAS. The AFL-CIO continued to move against discrimination against Negroes among its affiliated unions, but the speed of the campaign continued to cause dissatisfaction among many Negro unionists and such organizations as the NAACP. This was the principal factor behind the creation of a National Negro Labor Council, composed of Negro unionists affiliated with the merged federation, which will try to pressure the AFL-CIO to step up its anti-bias drive.

PICKETING. In Congress, the ACLU objected to a bill that would make it a federal crime to "hinder, obstruct or delay" any message carried by a commercial communications company or to interfere with the operation of such a network. The Union declared that the proposal, intended to protect military and civilian defense facilities, could easily be interpreted to prohibit a strike or picketing of such a system and therefore threatens First Amendment rights of free association by workers in unions of their own choosing. The Senate killed the bill.

OTHER ACTIONS. A divided U.S. Supreme Court upheld a New York state law prohibiting convicted felons from holding office in waterfront unions. The majority opinion rejected the constitutional argument put forward by the NYCLU in a friend-of-the-court brief that the law deprived an individual of his due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment through the arbitrary use of a past felony conviction and by failing to provide for a hearing. The opinion said that while such a law was severe, the high court could not substitute its judgement for that of the legislature.

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW

THE FEDERAL SCENE

CONGRESS. The President signed the Civil Rights Act of 1960, a measure denounced by critics as weak and complicated, but which President Eisenhower hailed as "a historic step forward." Whatever view one took, it was generally agreed that the effect of the law in winning voting rights for Negroes was a long way off. The heart of the bill creates a new and intricate system of judicially-appointed "voting referees" to overcome the denial of the ballot box to qualified Negroes in the South. While the ACLU testified in favor of a simpler procedure recommended by the Civil Rights Commission whereby the temporary federal registrars would be appointed in any area where the right to vote was illegally denied, the Union also supported the Administration plan for court-appointed referees. The Union's hope, however, that the referee plan would not involve such prolonged appeals as to moot the right to vote, through repeated delays, appeared to be headed for disappointment. For before the referee machinery can be started, the Justice Department must bring specific cases under the 1957 Civil Rights Act and prove that qualified citizens of the community had been denied the right to vote because of race or color. After this case is proved, the Attorney General could ask a Federal District Court judge to find a "pattern or practice" of discrimination, thus paving the way for the appointment of referees to register Negro applicants. First, however, Negro applicants must try to register with local officials before seeking relief with the referee. And even after being registered by the referee, their qualifications are subject to further court challenge.

On two occasions during the debate that preceded final passage of the Civil Rights Act, the ACLU spoke out on specific aspects of the pending legislation. In testimony before the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, the Union called for prompt passage of a bill authorizing the appointment of temporary federal registrars. The right to vote "stands at the top of the list of fundamental rights enjoyed by United States citizens, and its abrogation—anytime, anywhere, raises a civil liberties problem of major proportion. . . . To reduce such citizen participation by denying the franchise saps the strength of democratic government itself. (It also) is seized eagerly by totalitarian forces in strategic foreign areas to strike at our position," the ACLU said. In a second public statement, the Union declared that whether registrars are appointed by the executive branch or by the courts, the legislation contains adequate safeguards for fair hearings for state officials charged with refusing to qualify eligible citizens to vote. The issue arose because at the first stage of the proceedings the bills did not provide for accused registrars to be notified of the charges against them or for the right to confront and cross-examine their accusers at hearings of the Civil Rights Commission. The ACLU said that such a procedure ought to be followed at a subsequent stage of the case, but that initial anonymity of the complainant was necessary to prevent "political, economic or physical reprisal." The constitutional protections of procedural due process, the ACLU said, "have never been held to extend to an assurance of the full right of confrontation in administrative hearings which are merely investigative." By contrast, said the Union, adjucative proceedings should include notification and confrontation to remove any doubt as to their constitutionality.

THE COURTS. Two decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way for active federal intervention on behalf of citizens who were denied the right of franchise. The high court said it was constitutional to allow the Justice Department to sue on behalf of Negro voting rights, and also held that the Civil Rights Commission did not have to tell local registrars the names of Negroes who filed complaints of voting discrimination. The CRC had suspended hearings awaiting the high court verdict. (See below) The opinion compared the Commission's activities to an investigatory congressional committee and declared that, historically, witnesses in such actions never had the right to confront their accusers because they were not being judged. Such rights, said the court, paralleling the ACLU view, apply only in adjudicative proceedings where an individual was being actually judged. The dissenting opinion said that the local registrars were, in effect, being "tried" by public opinion and that their due process protections were being invaded if they did not know the names of their accusers.

CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION. The Commission resumed hearings in Louisiana, actively sought by the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union for more than a year. The Commission's action followed the U.S. Supreme Court's verdict upholding the constitutionality of the Commission's procedures. The affiliate charged that a state legislative committee was encouraging registrars to challenge and discourage Negro voters and to purge voter lists of Negro registrants. The LCLU had reported that 1,377 Negroes were erased from the rolls in a single parish (county).

The ACLU Board of Directors voted to approve all the recommendations made by the Commission in its first report except one and took no action on another. The Board opposed a recommendation that the Bureau of the Census be empowered to compile registration and voting statistics by race, color and national origin on the ground that there should be no compulsion to answer such questions. The Board took no position on a suggestion that the Bureau of the Census and the U.S. Office of Education conduct an annual school census to show the number and race of public school and college students, recorded by school districts and institutions of higher learning. The Board supported a recommendation of three Commission members for a constitutional amendment establishing universal suffrage and eliminating any other requirements from voting except age, residence, and non-confinement in prison or a mental institution. Such voting tests, particularly literacy tests, are being abused in order to deprive persons of the right to vote, the Board declared. Among the other proposals endorsed by the Union were recommendations furthering voting rights, such as preservation of registration and voting records, ending housing discrimination and a suggestion by three Commissioners that federal funds be withheld from all schools and colleges which refuse, on racial grounds, to admit otherwise qualified students.

OTHER FEDERAL ISSUES. The Union objected to a question on the 1960 census form which asked the individual to indicate his "specific color or race." The basis of the Union's stand was that the vaguely-worded query will not result in reliable information while it "raises in the minds of many of our people the specter of some threatened discrimination. . . ." The ACLU asked the Bureau of the Census to eliminate the question or at least not to penalize anyone who refuses to answer it. In reply, the Bureau said it would not prosecute persons who decline to answer the "color or race" question. While the Union supported the government's right to compile "a vast and varied array" of information, it urged new safeguards to prevent disclosure of data concerning individual persons or establishments and the elimination of mandatory answers to a group of more detailed questions put to members of every fourth household.

The perennial issue of amending the federal constitution to guarantee "equal rights" for women once again occupied the Union's attention. The ACLU has opposed the amendment because it would not safeguard differential social legislation for women that has been established over the years. The Board of Directors voted to "renew cooperation with other organizations in opposing the so-called equal rights amendment and simultaneously cooperate with them in pushing a three-point program of action in the legislatures (both state and Federal), in the courts, and in the field of education," to eliminate remaining improper discrimination against women.

STATE AND LOCAL ACTION

SIT-INS. Young, educated Negroes, dissatisfied with the snail's pace of desegregation through the courts, moved dramatically and spontaneously in the late winter of 1960 to win wider citizenship rights. Their choice of a battlefront, lunch counters in Southern variety and chain stores, was only a minor sector in the over-all struggle—but the overwhelming success of their strategy of passive resistance signalled a new phase of the Negroes' determination to put an end to racial discrimination on all fronts.

From February 1, when the first "sit-in" took place in Greensboro, North Carolina, the ACLU was deeply involved in the protest movement. Through direct legal defense of arrested students, through advice and counsel to groups involved in the campaign, and through numerous public statements, the Union stressed the constitutional right of peaceful protest through picketing and the right of Negroes to be served at eating places open to the general public. The Union said that in addition to having the free speech protections of the First Amendment, Negro students were entitled under the Constitution to eat wherever they chose.

"Although the 'sit-ins' have taken place on private property," said the Union, "there is a firm legal basis for the position that once a person has been invited into a place of business—as Negroes are in the South—the storeowner cannot pick and choose what wares he will sell to customers; his place of business becomes at the very least a quasi-public facility and he must sell to all people who want to buy."

The Union opposed the arrest of 41 Negro students in Raleigh,

North Carolina on charges of trespassing on a sidewalk in front of the F. W. Woolworth store and criticized the state Attorney General for encouraging—even indirectly—the prosecution of citizens for peaceful protest. This was a violation of constitutional guarantees of equal treatment and free expression, the Union said. The official responded with a militant reply that was to set the tone for authorities throughout the South. If the ACLU did not like the law in North Carolina, said Attorney General Malcolm B. Seawell, it could "lump it." The Union's position was upheld by the North Carolina Supreme Court which reversed the conviction of the Raleigh students. The high court took the position that the ACLU view of the constitutionality of the "sit-ins" was correct, at least so far as sidewalks of shopping centers go.

The Florida Civil Liberties Union was busy in three "sit-in" cases. The affiliate supplied legal support for 11 Negro students whose arrest was demanded after they "sat-in" in a Tallahassee Woolworth store. Six white students who were arrested in Tallahassee for demonstrating in sympathy with the arrested Negroes were also defended by Florida CLU attorneys. The students' convictions for unlawful assembly and breaking the peace are being appealed. In Miami 18 members of the Congress of Racial Equality were convicted of violating a state law allowing a business proprietor to eject a customer as an "undesirable patron." The 18 were given a year's probation and an appeal is being taken in this first test of the state law. Elsewhere, the ACLU was active in Louisiana, where 16 students were expelled from Louisiana Southern University after they were arrested and jailed for "disturbing the peace" for staging a sit-in demonstration; and in Montgomery, Alabama where a touring group of white students from Illinois, their dean and his wife were arrested for eating in the private diningroom of a Negro restaurant. The Union obtained counsel for the latter group. Only the dean was convicted, for breaking a new city ordinance—designed to meet the sit-in threat—which defines disorderly conduct as behavior "calculated to cause a breach of the peace." The ACLU is backing the appeal.

Issues raised by the waves of "sit-ins" were not confined to the South, however. In the North, where college authorities and local police attempted to block student sympathy picketing, the ACLU also entered the scene. "Such action," said the Union, "raises a fundamental threat to freedom of speech and academic freedom," especially a threat of disciplinary reprisal or expulsions. In three cases the ACLU was particularly active. The Metropolitan Detroit Branch named a committee to meet with the Wayne University administration to support the students' right of protest, as well as students' rights in general; and letters endorsing the right to picket were sent to the presidents of Skidmore and Elmira State College and were publicized.

NAACP HARASSMENT. The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the right of two Arkansas NAACP officials to refuse to disclose the names of its members in Little Rock. The court said that disclosure could cause intimidation and harassment of NAACP members as well as discouraging future membership and endangering freedom of association. Louisiana, meanwhile, has appealed to the high court to reverse a Federal District Court verdict that the NAACP did not have to comply with a state law requiring the organization to file membership lists. The federal court said the statute violated the free speech and free assembly protections of the First Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of due process.

On the state court level, Virginia's highest court nullified one restriction against the NAACP and upheld two others when it said that the group could advise persons to file civil rights suits but could not solicit legal business for NAACP lawyers or other lawyers. The third opinion upheld a lower court in refusing to block a legislative committee which sought the NAACP's membership rolls.

The ACLU affiliate in Florida provided counsel to a former president of the Miami branch of the NAACP and a member of the Florida CLU who has been ordered by a state Circuit Court judge to testify before a state legislative committee. The witness, Rev. Edward T. Graham, was subpoened along with Rev. Theodore R. Gibson, current head of the Miami NAACP branch, in an alleged investigation into so-called Communist infiltration into the organization. The investigation, which has been going on for three years (See last year's Annual Report, p. 68 and 1957-1958 Annual Report, p. 53.), demanded that both men reveal whether they are members of the NAACP. The Florida CLU assailed the legislative committee for trying to "harass organizations which seek to implement the U.S. Supreme Court's decision on school desegregation." Rev. Graham was convicted of contempt but the six-month sentence was stayed until the Florida CLU could challenge the entire issue before the state Supreme Court.

The ACLU has also come in for its share of attack from Southern politicians. In addition to attacks upon the Union made in the case of University of Mississippi professor William Murphy (See p. 27.), the Attorney General of Alabama accused the Union of having delivered "a large amount of money" to a Negro group in Birmingham, Alabama in order to promote racial agitation. Executive director Patrick Murphy Malin immediately labelled the statement "absolutely false" and pointed out that the Union has never promoted racial agitation nor has it donated any sums of money to anyone in Birmingham. Pointing out that Negro defendants have a difficult time in obtaining legal defense in the Birmingham area because of over-worked Negro attorneys and the fear of white lawyers to take on controversial cases, Malin said ACLU has, however, supported in court persons seeking equal status, and will continue to do so.

VOTING RIGHTS. The U.S. Supreme Court took under review a potentially significant challenge by Tuskegee Negroes who charge that a 1957 change in the city's boundaries constituted unconstitutional racial discrimination. The change made the boundaries of Tuskegee look like a "sea dragon" of 28 sides, instead of the simple square it used to be. The new boundaries did not eliminate any white residents or white voters from the city limits, but it excluded 3,000 Negro residents and all but five of Tuskegee's Negro voters. The ACLU filed a friend-of-the-court brief supporting the Tuskegee Negroes.

OTHER ACTIONS. U.S. Attorney General Rogers said that the refusal of federal and state grand juries to return indictments in the lynching of Mack Charles Parker was "a travesty of justice." Parker, 23, was dragged from his Poplarville, Miss, cell in April, 1959 two days before he was to go on trial on charges of raping a white woman. His body was discovered by FBI agents in a nearby river.

The ACLU urged the Attorney General not to make public the FBI's report on the Mack Charles Parker lynching despite the fact that two grand juries did not return indictments. "To do so," said the Union, "would mean that the federal government is adopting the philosophy of the ends justifying the means. Public disclosure . . . would be directly contrary to the constitutional principle that accusations against people are to be handled through the judicial process," added the letter, even though the lynching was a "terrible crime expressing the ultimate explosion of racial prejudice and deserves the condemnation of every civilized person."

UP NORTH. In a series of actions by ACLU affiliates, the Arizona CLU was upheld by a Superior Court judge who ruled that the state's law prohibiting intermarriage with a Caucasian was a violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments; the Massachusetts CLU voted to oppose the designation of color and race on birth, marriage and death certificates; the Montana CLU state correspondent challenged a finding of the federal Civil Rights Commission's state advisory committee that there were no civil liberties problems in Montana, by pointing to discrimination in hotels and restaurants and police mistreatment of minority groups; and the ACLU of Oregon told the state Attorney General that discrimination by fraternities on state college campuses constituted state action in violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution.

GENERAL DEVELOPMENTS

EDUCATION. Time is running out for procrastinating and defiant school boards throughout the South. Although it may be years before such states as Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina finally face a U.S. Supreme Court order from which there is no appeal, the mounting legal pressure is forcing a number of communities to face, and publicly discuss, the alternative between token integration and no public schools at all.

New Orleans was the scene of a major struggle where a willing school board said it could "work out some kind of plan" to begin integration in the first grade in compliance with a Federal District Court order, but an unyielding Governor in defiance of the court invoked a state law giving him the power to take over the schools and close them completely. The federal court, however, struck down the school closings laws as unconstitutional. As a showdown in the eight-year-old legal battle approached, less than 100 Negro children are expected to apply for admission to previously all-white schools.

If the atmosphere of New Orleans is anxious and agitated, the climate of Houston was calm as first-grade integration began. Houston, like New Orleans, had been rebuffed by the U.S. Supreme Court in a last-ditch appeal to delay the Federal District Court order. Houston voters had previously voted 2-1 against integration and the federal court had rejected as a "palpable shame and subterfuge" a school board plan that would have designated one public school, one high school and one junior high for the entire city for students who "wanted" to attend integrated classes. While Houston residents appeared passive towards the prospect of integration, the Texas legislature may not be. A state law could result in the cutting off of state aid and fines for local officials who desegregate schools without an affirmative vote.

Dollarway School District #2—just outside Pine Bluff, Ark.,—has already been the scene of mob violence. Fears—fortunately not realized—that the same thing may happen again were prompted by the admission of a six-year-old Negro girl to the first grade and by a finding of the U.S. Court of Appeals that the school district had not made a "reasonable start" towards the desegregation of its schools. In an attempt to head off just such verdicts, Governor Orval Faubus placed before the voters a constitutional amendment permitting residents of a school district to close the schools by majority vote and split up school funds among the eligible students in the district. The Dollarway situation is also significant in the possibly wide application of the U.S. Court of Appeals ruling which set aside the school board's operation of the state's pupil placement law. The court said that the effect of the law cannot leave "the existing racial situation existing, just as before." In other court decisions affecting pupil placement laws—the chief device whereby integration has been held to a trickle—the Fourth and Fifth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals ruled that under such statutes Negro students cannot be given tests different from white students before they are admitted. The rule that the federal courts appear to be applying is a practical one: is the law fair in its operations. Thus, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review Nashville's grade-a-year desegregation, but the Third Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals struck down Delaware's grade-a-year program, which would have resulted in full integration by 1972, and ordered full integration by the fall of 1961. The U.S. Supreme Court refused to modify the lower court's order. Meanwhile, in Little Rock itself, although the eight Negro students attending the city's two high schools continue to be ostracized by their fellow students, the tide of extremism seemed to have waned. Thirteen Negroes enrolled in the schools in the third year since the riots. As the 1960-61 school year started in the South, this was the scorecard: token compliance with court rulings on desegregation began in 17 school districts for the first time—a total of 768 out of 6,676 in which some racial mixing has occurred. Six percent of the total number of Negro school children are now attending previously segregated schools.

ACTION IN THE NORTH. The New York City Board of Education reversed a long-established policy and announced a system of "open enrollments" whereby Negroes and others will be able to attend schools they prefer, rather than attending neighborhood schools exclusively. Segregated housing had resulted in de facto school segregation under the old system and Negro parents had threatened to repeat a mass "sit-out" by their children if the system was not changed. The parents charged that all-Negro schools were educationally inferior. In the colleges, the New York Civil Liberties Union opposed a recommendation by the city's Commission on Intergroup Relations that would impose specific punitive measures upon campus publications printing anti-religious or anti-racial articles. The NYCLU said the recommendation would restrict freedom of speech and press of students. The Minnesota Branch of the Union investigated the case of two university students who were evicted by their landlady after they were visited by a Negro and a Chinese.

HOUSING. Laws prohibiting discrimination in housing were upheld by two state courts, while three states took their first action under recently passed legislation. Generally, the NAACP found "unmistakeable signs of progress" in ending bias on the federal and state levels. Ironically, a more aggressive attitude by federal officials has resulted in a reluctance by many communities to begin public housing projects because of the requirement that they be racially integrated, the U.S. Commissioner of Public Housing reported. Among the steps taken by federal authorities was an FHA directive barring the sale or rental of foreclosed properties with regard to race, color or creed. The National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, of which the ACLU is a member, repeated its plea for a Presidential executive order making clear a policy of non-discrimination for all federal housing.

New York City's pioneer law prohibiting discrimination in private housing was sustained by a state Supreme Court justice who said that "the individual must yield to what the legislative authority deems is for the common good." It was the first test of the law. Another first was recorded in New Jersey where the state Supreme Court ruled that a law barring discrimination in publicly-assisted housing was constitutional. Even before the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal from the verdict, William J. Levitt, the challenger, announced he would "voluntarily" sell two of his 16,000 houses in a New Jersey development to Negroes. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 75.) Levitt also hired a group of specialists in race relations to smooth the way. The first test of the Washington state law prohibiting discrimination in publicly-assisted housing was argued in the state Supreme Court. The ACLU and 12 other national organizations, through the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, filed a friend-of-the-court brief backing the law.

State commissions in Colorado and Massachusetts issued their first orders to comply with new laws banning bias in private housing while California took its first steps under a recent statute barring discrimination in publicly-aided construction. Massachusetts also strengthened its year-old law by extending coverage to anyone granting mortgage loans, and a ruling by the California Attorney General put real estate brokers under the new statute. Real estate brokers and salesmen in Michigan and Massachusetts were also prohibited by state agencies from discriminating on grounds of race, creed and color in the sale or rental of real estate. Unsuccessful attempts to pass fair-housing laws applicable to private housing were made on the state level in New York and Rhode Island and on the local level in Cleveland and St. Paul.

The Metropolitan Detroit Branch of the ACLU condemned discriminatory housing practices in a case which received widespread attention involving real estate brokers in the exclusive Grosse Point area. Realtors there had secretly adopted a complex system of rating prospective homeowners according to their nationality, accent, way of living, dress and whether they were "typically American." The system even went so far as to blackball brokers who defied it. Disclosure of the rating plan proved to be its undoing. The Michigan State Corporation and Securities Commission issued a new state ruling barring discrimination in real estate activities—a goal which the legislature has tried, but, failed to accomplish. Elsewhere on the state and local scene, investigations by private and public agencies have found much greater bias than meets the eye in housing throughout New York State, where a legislative committee said the discrimination is "vast"; in San Francisco, where real estate brokers themselves admitted that discrimination was still the practice; and in Chicago, where the search by a law firm for new quarters showed that 17 buildings in the Loop would not rent quarters for racial reasons. The Iowa Civil Liberties Union reports that the technique is still very much alive in Des Moines, where some brokers are attempting to destroy an integrated area by warning whites to move and then showing vacant homes only to Negroes. State officials met with real estate boards in New York City in order to work out a professional code barring such practices.

A growing number of colleges and universities are insisting that off-campus housing must be non-discriminatory in order to be approved for listing with school officials. Cornell and the Universities of Washington and Colorado are among the most recent institutions with such requirements. Ohio State University said that any licensed off-campus rooming house against which a discrimination charge had been proved will be dropped from the approved listing service. The general question of housing barriers faced by minority students is being studied by the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, which is investigating the housing practices of 173 state colleges and universities.

EMPLOYMENT. Delaware became the 17th state to pass enforceable legislation barring discrimination in employment because of race, creed, or color. Indiana and Kansas may investigate job bias complaints but cannot enforce their findings. (The new Delaware bill also bars discrimination because of age.)

A key test of Colorado's FEP law is before the state Supreme Court after a state District Court nullified the power of the state Anti-Discrimination Commission to act against Continental Air Lines, Inc. for not hiring Marion D. Green, a Negro pilot. The first year of California's FEP Commission saw the receipt of 123 complaints, of which nearly 100 are still pending. Seven were settled amicably. The New York State Commission Against Discrimination reported getting a record number of 753 complaints during the first nine months of 1959. And in Wisconsin, the Governor has signed a bill prohibiting firms under state contract to discriminate among their employees.

The President's Committee on Government Contracts has been stalled in an attempt to win the right for Negro electricians to work on government jobs in the nation's capital. A public row over the situation was touched off by AFL-CIO president George Meany, who accused the Committee of dragging its feet in not compelling contractors to hire qualified Negroes. Meany also threatened to bring in non-union Negro electricians from other areas to do the work. The contractors counter-charged that the local of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers does not permit Negroes to join the union. Five Negroes then applied directly for jobs with the builders but were turned down as not qualified. The Committee reported more progress, however, outside the District of Columbia. It reported that as a result of personal appeals to business executives, Negroes have been hired for the first time by firms in Texas, South Carolina and Delaware and have received wider job opportunities elsewhere. Also on the federal level, the Civil Rights Commission has begun an investigation into job discrimination created by federal grants, such as the work of state agencies receiving government aid. The controversy over Negro job opportunities in Washington, D.C. was underscored by the NAACP in a detailed report charging that federal, state and local agencies were not using their available power to end racial discrimination in apprenticeship programs. The NAACP charge was supported by an official Philadelphia commission which found that Negroes received less training, less pay and fewer promotions than whites and by a report of New York state's anti-discrimination commission that only two per cent of the state's 15,000 registered apprentices were Negroes.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS. Economic competition and moral suasion have combined to make it easier to arrange racially mixed conventions in a number of Southern cities. After years of starring Negro performers in hotels and plush gambling joints, Las Vegas finally lifted a tacit ban that has existed among most establishments against Negro guests. Who will profit more by the change remains to be seen. Many years ago Negroes won their first series of desegregation decisions in the area of interstate travel, and now the U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to hear the latest of such appeals in a case involving a law student who was arrested for trespassing when he refused to leave a segregated lunchroom while traveling on an interstate bus. The bus was on its way from Washington, D.C. to Salem, Ala. The arrest took place in Richmond, Va. Beatniks continue to rub many people, including easily irritated police, the wrong way and the ACLU of Northern California continues to defend them. The affiliate, for example, intervened and persuaded the management of a pastry shop to serve a black-stockinged model and her husband. Also, in Seattle, a Negro woman won a damage suit against the local Slenderella salon, which had refused to serve her.

Many of the problems of discrimination against Negroes in the use of recreational facilities are by no means exclusive to the South. In the North, for example, the Greater Phiadelphia Branch of the Union and the Lancaster Chapter of the ACLU of Pennsylvania are keeping tabs on a number of suburban swimming pools which have been converted to "private clubs" after receiving injunctions prohibiting bias. New Jersey reported that one third of the inland swimming facilities in the state practice some form of discrimination. The Washington State Board of Discrimination ruled that four golf clubs which used public courses discriminated against Negroes in tournaments. The same issue arose in New York, where the state obtained an agreement to bar future tournaments on public courses in which Negroes are barred from participating. In two cases involving amusement parks, the Maryland Branch, ACLU wrote a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of pickets who were arrested while demonstrating against alleged bias at Gwynn Oak; and the Indiana Civil Liberties Union investigated conditions at Riverside. The ICLU also investigated discrimination in Indianapolis restaurants. After many years of study, the New York SCAD concluded that the phrase "churches nearby" in advertising resorts is not a case of encouraging religious discrimination. And after many years of friction, the American Legion cut all ties with its 40 & 8 Society over the fun-making society's racial membership restrictions.

AMERICAN INDIANS

The principal work of the Union's Indian Civil Rights Committee was its continuing efforts to persuade the government to reconsider its decision to proceed with the construction of the Kinzua Dam which would result in the inundation of the reservation of the Seneca Indians.

Subsequent to the passage, over President Eisenhower's veto, of the omnibus public works bill which contained a fund appropriation for the start of construction of the Kinzua Dam (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 79-80.), another ACLU appeal was sent to the White House requesting administrative re-appraisal of the dam project. The heart of the letter consisted of a detailed report prepared by Dr. Burt Aginsky, chairman of the Committee, setting forth detailed findings in support of the conclusion that the construction of the dam at the Kinzua site would "bring to an end the religious and cultural customs which give meaning to the life of [the Seneca] people." The White House replied that "alternate plans have been carefully studied by the Corps of Engineers . . . but [it was] found that the Allegheny Reservoir, as presently planned would be the most economical solutions to the problems involved." The ACLU letter was circulated to all members of the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate, and although efforts are still being made to forestall construction of the dam, neither Congress nor the White House appeared to be persuaded.

The Committee was also concerned over a law-suit instituted by members of the Native American Church of America, composed to a large extent of Navajos, against the Navajo Tribal Council. The suit sought to enjoin enforcement of a tribal ordinance prohibiting possession or use on tribal property of peyote, a substance which is used as an integral part of the Church's religious ritual. The Church contended that the ordinance invaded its members' freedom of religion. After a decision by the U.S. Court of Appeals in Denver which held that the Bill of Rights does not apply to the acts of Indian tribal governments, the ACLU was formally requested to support an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. The Board of Directors agreed, in principle, that the acts of Indian tribal governments should be governed by the Bill of Rights, and that the Union should present this position in friend-of-the-court briefs on a case-by-case basis. It also helped the Church to obtain an attorney to handle this particular case.

DUE PROCESS UNDER LAW

FEDERAL EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

1. Citizenship, Naturalization, Deportation

CITIZENSHIP. The U.S. Supreme Court, for the second time, returned to a lower court for clarification a case questioning the power of Congress to take away the citizenship of a draft-dodger. In a friend-of-the-court brief supporting Francisco Mendoza-Martinez, the ACLU argued that the law is unconstitutional for several reasons: it permits cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment; it infringes on procedural due process by making it difficult for an expatriate to challenge the statute in a United States court; it is not within the power of Congress' jurisdiction in foreign affairs to exile draft delinquents; and it is not a proper exercise of sovereignty or war powers by the government. Mendoza-Martinez, a dual citizen, was born in the U.S. of Mexican parents and went to Mexico in 1942 to avoid the draft. He returned here in 1946 and served a prison term for evading the Selective Service Act. In 1953 he was ordered deported as an alien.

The ACLU also supported the case of Angelika Schneider, a naturalized American whose citizenship was revoked by the State Department. The action was taken under a 1952 law which states that naturalized citizens who live continuously for more than three years in the country of their birth shall solely for this reason lose their American citizenship. Mrs. Schneider had lived here since she was five (from 1939 to 1956) and in 1956 moved to Germany to marry. ACLU attorneys maintained in their brief that the law violates the Eighth Amendment by imposing cruel and unusual punishment by discriminating between native born and naturalized citizens and that it also constitutes deprivation of liberty and property without due process of law in contradiction to the Fifth Amendment. The Federal District Court in Washington, D.C., ruled there was "no substantial issue of constitutionality" on this point, but upheld an additional ACLU contention that Mrs. Schneider had the right to pursue her case further in American courts without seeking temporary entry as an alien. As an alien due process rights are limited.

DEPORTATION. Two aliens whose right to remain in this country were challenged on grounds of alleged past Communist Party membership lost their fight in close decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court. The high court upheld a deportation order against William Niukkanen, a 50-year-old Portland, Ore. house painter who was brought to America as an infant and who was a Communist Party member from 1937 to 1939. The court also held that while an alien had the right to plead the Fifth Amendment in response to a hearing officer's question on Communist Party membership, this still did not relieve him of the obligation of proving that he was a person of good moral character and not affiliated with the Communist Party. The ACLU of Northern California was instrumental in making it possible for a Greek seaman to retain his status as a parolee receiving medical treatment in the face of Immigration Service attempts to deport him. In another affiliate action, the Colorado Branch finally won a five-year defense of three aged Mexican-born Denver residents when the Justice Department abruptly announced it was dropping deportation proceedings against them. The trio had been charged with membership in the Mexican branch of the Communist Party.

ALIEN RIGHTS. The U.S. Supreme Court decided, by a 5-4 vote, that the government was justified in cutting-off Social Security payments to an alien deported because of past Communist Party membership. The ruling came in the case of Ephram Nestor, a Party member from 1933 to 1939 who was deported to Bulgaria in 1956. His monthly old-age payments of $55.60 were based on earnings from 1936 to 1955, when he reached retirement age. The high court, in reversing a U.S. District Court, held that social security benefits were not an accrued property right and that a "rational" justification exists for the exclusion of various categories of deportees. The dissenters argued that the denial of benefits abrogated such basic constitutional rights as the right to a judicial trial and protection against ex post facto laws and bills of attainder.

The U.S. Court of Appeals in New York rejected an ACLU request that it grant Justina Soto, a Peruvian citizen seeking permanent residence here, the same due process rights that an American citizen would have. The Union said Miss Soto had not been able to cross-examine Public Health Service physicians who diagnosed her as tubercular, and therefore non-admissable, nor had she been permitted to introduce expert testimony on her own behalf. The actual decision to exclude Miss Soto, said the Union, was made by a Special Inquiry Officer, who did not consider additional evidence.

POLITICAL ASYLUM. The ACLU, continuing its efforts to obtain fair hearings for alien seamen seeking political asylum (See last year's Annual Report, p. 81.), filed a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of 42-year-old Julius Szlajmer, a Polish seaman whom the Immigration Service said is not entitled to ask for entry on political grounds. The government's ruling was made on the basis of the fact that Szlajmer had not disclosed his intention upon landing, but went to the FBI to ask asylum three days later. Declaring that the Immigration Service was wrongfully regarding Szaljmer as a common ship-jumper, the Union said that "any crewman from an Iron Curtain country who risks the inevitable penalty attached to jumping ship of his nationality, should be considered prima facie a refugee from communism. . . . He should be given an opportunity to establish that he is such a refugee and should not be compelled to reship without having been given a hearing on his status. The Federal District Court agreed.

2. Confinement of Mentally Ill

The ACLU intervened in a macabre case in Virginia in which a 34-year-old innocent trash collector was picked up by police on a murder charge and committed to a mental institution all because a telepathist received "emanations" while hovering over a year-old grave. The FBI later arrested another man for the crime after more conventional police work. The bizarre chain of events began when a local government hospital psychiatrist offered police the services of a Dutch mental telepathist to help clear up the unsolved murders of Mr. and Mrs. Carroll V. Jackson and their two young daughters early in 1959. Accompanied by state troopers, the savant went to the Virginia grave where the bodies had been found and advised police to search for a man whose business was "either junk or garbage". Police then arrested a trash collector, John Tarmon, and interrogated him extensively. Unable to obtain any evidence linking him with the crime, they induced his wife to sign a commitment petition, resulting in a hurried lunacy hearing being conducted at 3 a.m. with the psychiatrist sitting as one of the three members of the lunacy commission. As a result, Tarmon was found insane and whisked two hundred miles away to a mental institution for the criminally insane. He was released after a lawyer provided by the ACLU filed a habeas corpus petition which prompted the hospital to concede that he was not insane.

The Union in two cases also challenged a District of Columbia law requiring the automatic commitment to St. Elizabeth's Hospital of defendants who have been acquitted because of insanity. The ACLU acted on behalf of Donald Ragsdale, who ran away from the mental institution and worked without incident at a job for 10 months before he was found by police and returned to St. Elizabeth's. His plea for a conditional release was rejected after psychiatrists said that Ragsdale still had a sociopathic personality disturbance. In attacking the law as unconstitutional, the ACLU said that the statute was unfairly based on a "presumption of continuing insanity" in the period between the time the original crime was committed and the jury's verdict. A friend-of-the-court brief filed in the U.S. Court of Appeals said that Ragsdale could have recovered by the time of the trial and should not have been automatically committed. The Union also said that another judicial ruling on his mental condition should have been made before he was sent to the hospital. In the second District of Columbia case, the ACLU was accorded a rare nine-judge hearing before the entire U.S. Court of Appeals. The defendant in this case, Frederick Lynch, had attempted to plead guilty to a bad check charge, with a reasonable expectation of probation. Instead, the plea was refused and the judge found him not guilty by reason of insanity. The automatic committment law forced Lynch's removal to St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

An investigation was started by the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittee into the observance of constitutional guarantees for the mentally ill and those judged mentally ill. "The entire field under which the law has the right to deprive a mentally ill person of his liberty has been the most neglected in the chronicles of American law," the late Senator Thomas J. Hennings said. He announced that two particular areas of inquiry would be the fairness of commitment procedures and the possible modification of the ancient McNaghten Rule under which an accused person claiming insanity as his defense is held responsible for his act if he can distinguish right from wrong. A 1954 decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C.

held that a person is not criminally responsible "if his unlawful act was the product of mental disease or mental defect."

The practice of detaining for long periods of time persons accused of federal crimes but found incapable of standing trial caused a federal judge to remark that the medical center in Springfield, Mo. was not to be used as a detention pen for such people. Such a practice, he said, deprives an individual to his right to a speedy trial, to bail, and to confer with counsel in the preparation of his defense. The suit was supported by the center's medical director.

3. Loyalty and Security

FEDERAL ISSUES. A Defense Department directive establishing new procedures in the nation's industrial security program following the U.S. Supreme Court decision in the Greene case (See last year's Annual Report, p. 84-85.) was criticized by the ACLU for not providing sufficient protections for the rights of confrontation and cross-examination. The order, said the Union, "appears to be a panoply of self-defeating assertions of due process rights repudiating not only the heart of the Court's Greene decision, but the implications of that decision—that Fifth and First Amendment rights must be protected." In a congressional aftermath of the same high court opinion, the ACLU opposed a bill passed by the House which sought to nullify the verdict by authorizing an industrial security program giving the Secretary of Defense discretion to decide what information, if any, may be disclosed in a security risk hearing. The bill failed in the Senate. The Union said that the proposal did not meet the basic questions of confrontation, which the Court said was a clearly marked "constitutional danger zone"—such as whether confrontation was constitutionally mandatory in all cases, whether the accusers are idle gossips or professional government undercover agents. The Union also objected to a provision of the proposed legislation extending the security program to all employees of any person or establishment having a contract with a federal military department. This could apply, for example, to every faculty member of any university working on a military project.

By and large, public debate over internal security practices has steadily decreased in the years since Senator Joseph R. McCarthy held sway in the capitol. In two major incidents, however, the issue again became a source of controversy. The most recent example was the defection of two code experts to the Soviet Union, prompting two congressional inquiries into clearance procedures and a statement by President Eisenhower that the entire internal security system bears re-examination. The other incident which provoked national headlines was the disclosure that an Air Force reserve training manual entitled "Communism in Religion" attacked the National Council of Churches as having been successfully infiltrated by Communists. Following a barrage of protest, the manual was withdrawn by Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates. This move was hailed by the ACLU which coupled its action with a request that the Defense Department prepare a directive for all military services explaining the fundamentals of civil liberties in view of the attack on constitutional rights contained in the manual. The most glaring error in the manual, said the Union, is its direct attack on the First Amendment's guarantees of free speech and association through the vaguely defined use of such words as "subversive," "Communist" and "Communist-front". The ACLU also condemned the pamphlet's attack on freedom of religion and freedom of expression for religious groups in making charges against individuals and groups without granting "even the pretense" of due process rights such as cross-examination and confrontation.

STATE AND LOCAL ACTIONS. The ACLU petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court in a friend-of-the-court brief to rehear the case of Willard Uphaus (See last year's Annual Report, pp. 85-86.), but the court refused to reconsider its verdict. Uphaus subsequently lost a new appeal to the New Hampshire Supreme Court which claimed that a revision of the state law deprived the Attorney General of the power to require answers to questions concerning persons who attended Uphaus' summer camp. The Union said that the contempt conviction and imprisonment of the elderly director of a pacifist-oriented adult camp raised the issue of an individual's right, in accordance with the protections of the First Amendment, "not to be forced to reveal his political associations to a state investigating committee." Another New Hampshire resident, Hugo De Gregory, was released on bail pending an appeal to the state Supreme Court raising essentially the same question as in the Uphaus case. The ruling in De Gregory's case had no bearing on the imprisonment of Uphaus.

A nine-year effort by the New York Civil Liberties Union finally resulted in the peaceful death of the state's controversial security risk law. The legislature allowed the law to expire after the affiliate showed that it had been unnecessarily expensive to operate. The NYCLU had previously successfully defended three city employees who were dismissed under the law but who were reinstated when courts ruled that their jobs were not sensitive positions. The NYCLU's objections to the law were based on the fact that it did not permit confrontation and cross-examination of witnesses by accused persons, a right which is incorporated under a section of the Civil Service Law which permits the dismissal of any employee who advocates or belongs to any group advocating the violent overthrow of the government.

The ACLU of Southern California won the first favorable loyalty oath ruling in a decade from the state Supreme Court when the tribunal ruled in favor of Mrs. Virginia Wilson, who had been barred from a Los Angeles civil service job because she had refused, 12 years earlier, to sign a now-defunct state loyalty oath. Mrs. Wilson said she was willing to sign an oath requirement in a current law. The court said that "we cannot assume that one who might have been disqualified for reasons of prior associations reflecting on loyalty will forever after remain disqualified for that reason." Such "unreasonable and capricious" judgments, said the opinion, violate freedoms protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE. New York state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, upheld one set of arguments raised by the NYCLU in ruling that the state must pay unemployment insurance benefits to a former employee of the Communist Party, William Albertson. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 87 for this and other similar cases.) The court declared, however, contrary to the affiliate's contention, that under the 1954 federal Communist Control Act, the state had the constitutional right to exclude the Communist Party from its unemployment insurance program and refuse to accept taxes from it, as the state has refused to do since 1957. Albertson had been employed by the Party in 1956. Similar verdicts were returned by other state courts in which ACLU affiliates supported appeals. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court reversed a lower court in ruling that employees discharged as security risks because they invoked Fifth Amendment privileges against self-incrimination are nevertheless entitled to unemployment compensation. The verdict applied to Evelyn Darin and Paul E. Ault. And in California, the state Supreme Court found that Marion R. Syrek was entitled to unemployment benefits even though he turned down a job referral to a state job because, on ground of conscience, he refused to take a loyalty oath.

4. Military Justice

COURTS-MARTIAL FOR CIVILIANS. The U.S. Supreme Court handed down verdicts in four cases which, in effect, ended the application of military justice to all civilians with the armed forces overseas who commit any crime. Civilians, as well as dependents of military personnel, are entitled to rights which a court-martial does not provide, the Court said, such as the right to indictment, jury trial and bail protected by the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. The high court had, in 1957, reversed its own previous ruling and said that the wives of two soldiers who committed murder overseas were unconstitutionally convicted by a military court. In its latest decisions, the Court extended this right to all civilians and to non-capital cases as well.

RIGHT OF ASSOCIATION. The ACLU and the Workers Defense League continued their joint efforts to end harassment of prospective draftees and inducted soldiers because of their political beliefs. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 88.) The latest protest concerned Pvt. Melvin Stack of New York City who had been drafted after being fully interrogated on his membership in the Socialist Party-Social Democratic Federation. Although Stack had not been found to be a security risk, he has been discriminated against by being moved to four different bases in a little more than a year, preventing his opportunity to serve continuously in any job for which he may be qualified. In addition, said the protest, Stack has been harassed through questioning by the Counter-Intelligence Corps on the political views and associations of a civilian who attended a series of discussion groups which Stack also attended; the series was held in but not sponsored by the Unitarian Church of San Antonio. Persons such as Stack, said the Union and the WDL, "have not sought out the Army. The Army should not seek out a way to degrade them by not permitting them to serve normally." After the protest was made, Pvt. Stack was promoted.

WIRETAPPING

COURT DECISIONS. The U.S. Supreme Court agreed to review a U.S. Court of Appeals decision affirming the right of state officials to use wiretap evidence in state trials. The appelate court verdict lifted a temporary injunction that had been issued on the grounds that under the Federal Communications Act it is illegal to use wiretap evidence and that prosecutors who introduce such evidence in a state court could be guilty of a federal crime. The disclosure of wiretap information is already barred in federal courts. Hinging their decision on the separation of state and federal powers, the majority of the Court of Appeals stated that federal courts should not "interfere with the prosecution of a state criminal proceeding in order to provide an additional means of vindicating any private rights created by the Federal Communications Act." A separate concurring opinion, however, dismissed this line of reasoning. The jurist explained that he voted with the majority only because "I am not willing to assume that a New York State trial judge will permit such evidence to be admitted over the objection of defense counsel. After all," he added, "New York State judges, as we, were bound when they took office, to support the Constitution." The New York Civil Liberties Union filed a friend-of-the-court brief opposing the disclosure of wiretap evidence in the state trial, which involved the prosecution of Burton N. Pugach, a Bronx lawyer, who was charged with conspiracy to maim his fiancee. Before the state trial Pugach had asked the Federal District Court to enjoin the local District Attorney from using wiretap evidence. Before the Court of Appeals acted a New York City judge said he would no longer approve wiretapping applications submitted by the District Attorney's office. Under New York state law, police officials seeking to place a tap must receive permission from a judge. Such court orders are widely disregarded, however, according to a study for the Pennsylvania Bar Association financed by a grant from the Fund for the Republic. In New York City alone, the survey estimated that 13,000 to 21,000 illegal taps are placed annually by detectives and other officials. The estimate was challenged by district attorneys.

CONGRESS. The Pugach ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals prompted the introduction of companion bills in the Senate and House which would permit wiretapping under state laws if the tap was authorized by a court order and if there were reasonable grounds for believing the interception might disclose the evidence of a crime. Five states; Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, Nevada and Oregon, now permit court-approved wiretapping by law enforcement officials. The ACLU opposed the bills on the grounds that wiretapping, with or without court orders, "is a serious invasion of the right of privacy." The Union added that the proposed laws also violate the Fourth Amendment's guarantees against unreasonable search and seizure. No action was taken by the Congress on these bills.

ILLEGAL POLICE PRACTICES

VAGRANCY AND DISORDERLY CONDUCT. The U.S. Supreme Court, for the first time in its history, set aside a loitering and disorderly conduct conviction for lack of evidence. The unusual verdict came in the case of Sam Thompson, who was supported by the Kentucky Civil Liberties Union in his claim that the convictions were an unconstitutional violation of due process. Thompson claimed he was arrested because he had secured counsel to defend him against an earlier vagrancy charge. The case was appealed directly to the high court because under Kentucky law two $10 fines were too small to be reviewed by any state court. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 92.) In two actions by the Arizona Civil Liberties Union, the affiliate defended a disabled veteran who was arrested for vagrancy after police harrassed him for being unable to lift his hands over his head or pick up a wallet from the sidewalk, and is challenging a Tucson loitering ordinance under which a student and a part-time gardener were arrested although both were self-supporting. Similar arrests in California were opposed by the ACLU of Northern California, which successfully defended two physicians who were out for an early morning stroll, two North Beach residents whose presence irritated a local policeman, and a butcher who was singled out as one of two white patrons in a bar patronized by Negroes. The California state Supreme Court struck down a section of the vagrancy law that defined a "common drunk" as a vagrant. Consequently, persons who were serving sentences as common drunks were released. A South Salt Lake City Justice of the Peace gave six gypsies suspended jail sentences for public drunkenness on condition that an entire gypsy community of 200 be removed across county lines, which they were. The ACLU of Utah called the procedure "a flagrant violation of due process."

ILLEGAL SEARCH AND SEIZURE. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that suspicion alone is insufficient grounds on which the FBI can make an arrest. The high court set aside the conviction of John Patrick Henry on the charge of unlawfully possessing several cartons of radios because the radios were not discovered until after the arrest.

The ACLU of Southern California is vigorously combatting a tide of false arrests by Los Angeles police, which frequently are accompanied by police brutality. The Illinois Division, ACLU is gathering specific data on complaints that police are searching an increasing number of cars driven by Negroes and Puerto Ricans following minor traffic violations. The Colorado Branch of the ACLU protested the arrest of a newspaperman from Ghana who was taking pictures of Denver policemen subduing and arresting a drunk. The Branch also urged a revision of a police manual which permits police suppression of news pictures "if he deems such action necessary." The Arizona Civil Liberties Union filed a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of a man convicted of operating an illegal gambling establishment after police broke in without a search warrant.

REGISTRATION AND ROUNDUPS. The California Supreme

Court voided felony registration ordinances in all cities of the state on the ground that state legislation had pre-empted the field of criminal legislation. The ACLU of Southern California supported the test case challenging a Los Angeles ordinance and was also opposing similar ordinances in two other cities. The opinion of the court, while not dealing with the basic constitutional questions, agreed with the affiliate's brief that such laws interfere with the rehabilitation of offenders. A registration law was shelved by the Tucson City Council after representatives of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union and other groups testified the proposal was both a violation of civil liberties and unnecessary. The New York Civil Liberties Union criticized police attempts to fight juvenile crime by means of general roundups and unnecessary force. "By-passing due process of law," said the NYCLU, "will not cure the situation or increase respect for law and order." Protests by the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU have ended police raids on a number of coffee houses in which dozens of patrons were arrested "en masse," without warrants.

BRUTALITY. A damage suit against the city of Chicago and 13 policemen under the federal Civil Rights Act will be heard by the U.S. Supreme Court. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 90.) The family of James Monroe contends that their rights to due process and equal protection of the law were violated when police burst into their apartment, beat them and questioned Monroe on a murder charge. The high court also agreed to hear an Illinois Division, ACLU plea for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of Emil Reck, whose murder conviction, the affiliate argues, was based solely on a confession beaten out of him. In a rare instance of cooperation, the Illinois State's Attorney has promised the affiliate he will open a grand jury investigation into the fatal shooting of Joseph August by a policeman. The policeman claimed he shot to halt a fleeing rapist, but medical examination showed that the victim was beaten before he was killed by bullet wounds. The ACLU of Northern California provided counsel to three San Quentin inmates who sought writs of habeus corpus on the grounds that their confessions to armed robbery were coerced by third-degree methods and that their detention was unconstitutional and unlawful. Meanwhile, a federal grand jury in Florida indicted 13 state prison officials for abusing prisoners in violation of the section to the U.S. Criminal Code prohibiting a conspiracy to deny constitutional rights; the men were subsequently acquitted.

ILLEGAL DETENTIONS. A bill, backed by the ACLU's Rhode Island affiliate, to strengthen the rights of detained persons by specifying a six-hour time limit for charging a suspect and guaranteeing quick arraignment and the right to speak to his attorney, passed the state Senate but failed in the House. Only three states now have formal time limits for charging suspects after arrest and in one of them, Missouri, the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee is investigating the apparently common practice of holding prisoners almost up to the 20-hour limit, releasing them, and then putting them under new arrest. Five states require "forthwith" arraignments; 24 require it "without unreasonable delay;" and 15 states impose no statutory time limit for arraignments. The Iowa Civil Liberties Union received an apology from Davenport police who said they were not aware of the existence of a law giving prisoners the right to contact their family or lawyer immediately. The police held two youths incommunicado for several hours. The Minnesota Branch of the ACLU is appealing a Duluth police regulation barring drunks who are arrested from using the telephone for six hours after their arrest or after 6 p.m. The Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU protested police detention of a murder suspect for almost 80 hours before he was formally declared a suspect and brought before a judge; and sought to obtain preliminary hearings for disorderly streetwalkers so that they would not be held in jail without hearings for as long as two weeks. The York County chapter of the ACLU of Pennsylvania condemned the jail detention for 71 days without a hearing, of a Puerto Rican migrant farm worker, who was then released for lack of evidence.

SHOPLIFTING. The Illinois Division, ACLU plans to intervene in a suit that will be brought by Michael Caine, a real estate appraiser, against a Chicago department store. Caine's shoplifting conviction—the crime was theft of a 10-cent shopping bag—under a recently passed state law was reversed by a state appellate court. The suit, in which the affiliate will file a friend-of-the-court brief, would test the constitutionality of the statute, which permits merchants to detain suspects on a "probable" suspicion of theft. A new Washington state law permits police to arrest a person without a warrant if the merchant has "reasonable cause" to believe shoplifting was attempted. The ACLU believes such laws violate guarantees of personal security.

POLICE REVIEW BOARD. Following the pioneer efforts of the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU, Union affiliates in Cincinnati, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Seattle, Los Angeles and Chicago are pressing for the creation of local citizens' review boards to hear civilian complaints against policemen. Minneapolis and York, Pa. recently established such independent boards. After a slow start, the Philadelphia board now has municipal funds, and a permanent staff. Since its creation in 1958 it has heard 107 complaints, 30 of which were forwarded by the affiliate. The campaign by Union affiliates to create such boards, either by statutory authority or through municipal appointment, was one of the most significant due process developments on the local civil liberties scene. The drive was condemned by the National Conference of Police Associations and by the California Department of the American Legion, which labelled the Los Angeles campaign "subversive." One answer to criticism that review boards have a harmful effect on police morale, was the Philadelphia police chief's welcome of the review board.

COURT PROCEEDINGS

ILLEGALLY OBTAINED EVIDENCE. A landmark verdict in criminal law was handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court when it ruled that evidence seized by state officials in violation of the federal constitution cannot be introduced in a federal trial. In overturning the so-called "silver platter" doctrine, the high court upheld the claim of the ACLU that admission of such evidence would violate the right of privacy guaranteed by the Fourth Amendment. The majority opinion, which extended the heart of the Fourth Amendment to state officers, said that to let federal courts use illegally obtained state evidence was "to encourage subterfuge by federal law enforcement officials." The historic decision was made in two cases, one of which was supported in a friend-of-the-court brief by the ACLU. This proceeding involved the conviction of Jose Torrones Rios for the illegal possession of narcotics in a federal court after a state court ordered a directed verdict of acquittal because the narcotics were illegally seized by Los Angeles police. The other appeal concerned two Oregon men convicted of wiretapping. The wiretap evidence was thrown out of a state court because it was discovered during a search for obscene pictures.

The principles laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court in the Rios decision were previously cited, on the state level, by the New York Civil Liberties Union, which appealed to the state's highest court to discard an ancient rule that certain evidence seized illegally may be introduced at a criminal trial to help convict a defendant. In another New York state case, the ACLU asked the U.S. Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus for Samuel Tito Williams, now serving a life sentence for murder. The Union petition said that Williams was convicted solely on the basis of an extorted confession obtained during an unlawful detention prior to arraignment, thus violating his due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. The ACLU move is the latest in a 12-year-long case. Another attempt by the Union to set aside a murder confession—this time on the ground that the defendant was about to plunge into a spasm of delirium tremens—was lost in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C. on the technicality that the argument was raised too late for consideration. A third U.S. Supreme Court decision set aside an Alabama robbery conviction because it was based on a confession made when the defendant was apparently insane.

On the state level, the ACLU of Oregon testified before a legislative committee in favor of a law making confessions obtained before arraignment inadmissable but the bill did not pass; the Kentucky Civil Liberties Union completed an exhaustive analysis of the state's century-old Criminal Code and recommended a number of reforms.

CHESSMAN CASE. Caryl Chessman's 12-year battle for a new trial stirred support around the world, inspiring heated controversy over the legality of Chessman's conviction on kidnapping and sex-offender charges and provoking equally fervent debate over the entire question of capital punishment. The ACLU of Southern California, which played a key role in Chessman's many appeals, maintained that Chessman's right to appeal was wrongfully denied because the original trial transcript filed with the appellate court was inaccurate and incomplete, thus denying the author-prisoner his constitutional due process rights. The final execution of Chessman in May, 1960 led to the start of a campaign by the ACLU affiliate to outlaw capital punishment as cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment.

RIGHT TO A FAIR HEARING. A precedent-setting ruling by an Oregon Federal District Court judge supported a brief filed by the ACLU's Oregon affiliate on behalf of state penitentiary inmates who were trying to draw up appeal briefs on their own. The judge said officials cannot prevent prisoners from consulting attorneys, studying law in their cells, or buying law books. The Oregon verdict was cited by the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU in recommending similar rights to state prisoners. The whole question of determining the circumstances under which convicted indigent defendants may or may not appeal was put before the U.S. Supreme Court by the ACLU in the McGloin case which asked the tribunal to end the current multiplicity of standards applied by federal Circuit Court judges and set a single legal standard by which such appeals may be judged. In a 1958 ruling, the U.S. Supreme Court said that the "only statutory requirement for the allowance of an indigent's appeal is the applicant's good faith." Many judges, however, have placed the added factor of the financial strain on the bench and bar by the indigent's appeal above his right to a fair hearing. The Supreme Court denied McGloin a hearing, so the question is still unsettled.

The ACLU of Southern California won two cases in the state courts when a new trial was ordered for 11 Pasadena Negroes convicted of gambling despite evidence that the municipal statute was invoked in a discriminatory manner, and when a Los Angeles municipal court judge upheld the refusal of eight men to testify before a state rackets investigation on the ground that they rightfully feared federal prosecution if they answered the committee's questions.

In other actions by ACLU affiliates, the newly-chartered Eastern Delaware County (Pa.) Chapter won the reversal of a disorderly conduct conviction by a judge who said "I had to charge him with something;" the Colorado Branch was sustained by the state Supreme Court in its charge that a robbery conviction of William Montoya was unfair because persons with Spanish names are "systematically excluded" from county jury lists; the Maryland Branch persuaded a judge to stop asking accused drunks to sign "guilty" statements so that arresting officers would not have to appear in court; and the Washington state Supreme Court agreed with the Union affiliate that a perjuring witness is deprived of due process when a judge immediately cites him for contempt on the spot instead of waiting for a full trial on the perjury charges which includes full legal protections.

RIGHT TO COUNSEL. A bill passed the Congress which would furnish paid counsel to indigent defendants indicted in criminal proceedings in the District of Columbia. The bills which received the strong support of the ACLU, would provide counsel for defendants appearing in the U.S. District Court, Municipal Court, the Juvenile Court and before the Mental Health Commission. The Pittsburgh Chapter of the ACLU of Pennsylvania intends to petition the U.S. Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of John Simon who was given a 20-40 year prison term 18 years after conviction for criminal assault and robbery. Simon, contends the affiliate, was deprived of his legal rights by being forced to sign several confessions, although he could neither read nor write, and was not represented by counsel, even though his IQ is between 55 and 61. The California Supreme Court agreed to review a six-month jail sentence received by Lucy Turrieta, an unwed mother who was jailed for breaking a probation order to "cease having illicit sexual relations." When the case first arose, the ACLU of Northern California argued that the order violated rights and personal liberty and privacy guaranteed by the First, Fourth, Fifth and Ninth Amendments and the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The affiliate's further contention that Miss Turrieta was not advised of her right to counsel in another charge involving alleged fraud in receiving welfare payments was the issue before the state high court.

APALACHIN. The roundup and subsequent trial of 20 participants in a so-called gangland convention held in a private home near Apalachin, N.Y. in 1957 raised serious civil liberties issues, in the opinion of the ACLU and its New York affiliate. Both groups filed a brief with a U.S. Court of Appeals which contended that the convictions were based on evidence seized by police who threw up a road block near the home of convention host Joseph Barbara. Police violated rights of privacy merely for the purpose of an investigation, said the brief, thus invading protections against search and seizure written into the Fourth Amendment. The Federal District Court had ruled that the roadblocks were a proper exercise of the state's power to act when there are reasonable grounds for believing a crime has been committed. The ACLU answered that the stopping of the cars was coercive and did not meet the Fourth Amendment's requirement that probable cause to believe a crime has been committed exists before an arrest without a warrant can be made. Earlier, the ACLU and NYCLU questioned the validity of the government's use of a conspiracy charge in bringing the men to trial. The groups said the indictment really was aimed at alleged false swearing before a federal grand jury and should not have been returned as an alleged conspiracy just because prosecutors did not believe the witnesses' testimony. By this device, they declared, the government circumvented special protections provided in perjury cases. The statement noted the growing use of federal conspiracy indictments and warned that states might use this "legally loose" weapon to curb unpopular minorities, as some Southern states have done in the case of the NAACP.

GRAND JURY TESTIMONY. The New York Civil Liberties Union was active in a number of incidents involving the rights of grand juries and individuals who testify before them. The affiliate sponsored a bill in the legislature, which grew out of the disclosures of TV quiz rigging, which would have barred grand juries from making public presentments which criticize persons or policies but which do not charge the commission of a crime (except in cases involving public officials). The bill also would apply to another grand jury investigation into Puerto Rican migration and public welfare policies, which the NYCLU sought to block through a taxpayer's suit.

RIGHTS OF JUVENILES. The Washington, D.C. representative of the ACLU urged several reforms in the district's procedures in juvenile law enforcement. Among the recommendations were that no confessions should be taken unless a child's parent or other adult representative is present and that every child or his parent should have the right to a jury trial. In general, said the Union, most juvenile legal procedures are so vague that they would be declared unconstitutional in an adult court. The Metropolitan Detroit Branch of the ACLU joined with a church organization in protesting the frequent practice of a circuit judge of sentencing juveniles to 45 days in solitary confinement on a diet of bread, water and vitamin pills. The affiliate said the punishment was cruel and unusual, in violation of the Eighth Amendment. The Arizona Civil Liberties Union scored a victory on behalf of a youth who was found guilty as a juvenile for petty theft but who subsequently was convicted again when he turned 18 and became subject to the jurisdiction of the Tucson City Court. The affiliate successfully won a dismissal of the second arrest on double jeopardy grounds.

DRIVERS AND THE LAW. The ACLU said that chemical tests for persons charged with drunken driving were "a reasonable exercise of the state's police power to impose conditions to guarantee safety on the public highways." The Union added, however, that a proposed "model law" should include the specific provision that a person be precisely informed that a refusal to take a chemical test will result in revocation of his license. The New York Civil Liberties Union is appealing to the state courts, the denial of a license to a man on the basis of a past criminal record. The state's discretion to refuse a driving license on grounds of political "fitness" was struck down in another state court ruling, which said that the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles had no authority to refuse a license to former Communist Party official Ben Davis, whose conviction under the Smith Act was the basis of the Commissioner's action. The Attorney General of Washington state has held that highway police cannot interfere with the right to travel by establishing spot-checks in order to check drivers' licenses. Union affiliates in Washington state and Northern California insisted that persons convicted of traffic offenses have a right to a jury trial. The Iowa Civil Liberties Union is appealing a new regulation which results in the immediate suspension of a driver's license upon an arrest for drunken driving and before the case is tried. The Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU scored a major victory when the state Attorney General, in response to the affiliate's question, said that the police practice of establishing random roadblocks violates guarantees from unreasonable searches and seizures. (See last year's Annual Report, p. 94.)

NEWS MEDIA AND THE COURTS. U.S. Supreme Court Justice

William O. Douglas condemned the photographing or televising of trials as a "vulgarizing process" which undermines the fair administration of justice. Television, he said, increases the anxiety of a witness who knows that millions are watching him while still photographs may "inflame" public sentiment. A public trial, said Justice Douglas, upholding a long-held position of the ACLU, "is for the benefit of the accused, not the press." A judicial committee of the Ohio Supreme Court found that the taping of traffic court proceedings for broadcast later from another location does not violate Canon 35 of the American Bar Association. Canon 35 bars live microphones and cameras from courtrooms. A Cleveland court supported the right of a prisoner to the press if he wants to, reversing a local prosecutor who denied a defendant the right to be interviewed in order to thwart pre-trial publicity. The Georgia Court of Appeals cleared both Atlanta newspapers of contempt on a technicality, but urged the legislature to prevent "trial by newspaper" in the publication of criminal records and other information before a verdict is reached.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES

Despite repeated assertions of the United States' support of the "rule of law" in the world, no progress whatever has been made toward American participation in those judicial processes by which law is maintained. An effort was made in the Senate to get rid of the crippling amendment to United States adherence to the International Court of Justice by which the U.S. itself determines what cases allegedly affecting domestic jurisdiction the Court can hear—the first step toward the practical application of law between nations.

The proposal aroused a fury of opposition from isolationist groups, among them the American Legion and the DAR which had backed the earlier Bricker Amendment to quarantine the United States against any international jurisdiction over American law by extending the powers of Congress derived from treaties. Not only was the bill to repeal the so-called Connally amendment bottled up in committee, but the Senate also cut out of the few international treaties that came before it any reference to the International Court. The Union, along with the Administration and the American Bar Association, supported repeal of the Connally amendment, but could not overcome the opposition. A distinguished national committee has been formed to campaign for the repeal of the amendment in the next Congress.

At the United Nations, the U.S. continued to oppose any international treaty for civil rights, reflecting the Administration's deference to the Senate opposition. The human rights covenants remained bogged down in detailed drafting with little likelihood of completion for some years and with doubtful prospects of ratification by any substantial number of nations when completed because of their wide coverage. No limited treaties for human rights were added to the few now in effect. The United Nations remains confined, as it has been for some years, to promoting human rights, not by law, but by studies, conferences and resolutions—all of considerable educational value in impressing the principles on governments and influential sections of public opinion.

The Union continued its efforts at the United Nations through its contacts with the United States Mission, the organization of U.S. national agencies on the United Nations, and the International League for the Rights of Man, with which it is affiliated in company with some thirty national organizations throughout the world. The prospects for progress by international law are slight in an era of cold war and intense nationalism.

U.S. TERRITORIES

PUERTO RICO. Although Puerto Rico is not a territory, but an autonomous Commonwealth associated with the United States by a legal compact, federal laws of a general character apply to it. A bill to define more precisely the relation of federal to Commonwealth law was given extensive hearings, but so much opposition developed that it was not acted upon. The question of Puerto Rico's status continues to be hotly debated in the island between the advocates of statehood, strengthened by the admission of Hawaii and Alaska, the independence movement, now weakened, and the Commonwealth forces in office. Some of the recommendations of the island's Civil Rights Commission, appointed by the governor, were adopted by the legislature. These included elimination of racial discrimination and the strengthening of municipal government, including a provision for minority party representation in city councils.

VIRGIN ISLANDS. Virgin Islanders have long sought both representation in Washington through a resident commissioner like Puerto Rico's, and an elective governor. The Secretary of the Interior for the first time approved a bill in Congress for a resident commissioner elected by the people. It was favorably reported but not passed. The Union supported it. The proposal for an elective governor was deferred; the desire for one has been somewhat appeased by the appointment of a native son as governor.

Since the Virgin Islands are the only area in American jurisdiction without town governments, the islands' committee dealing with all aspects of local government accepted and introduced a bill for that purpose prepared by attorneys for the Union and put into draft form by Judge Albert B. Maris of the U.S. Court of Appeals. The bill was introduced too late in the session for action in 1960.

GUAM. Like the Virgin Islands, Guam wants a resident commissioner in Washington and an elective governor. A bill for a resident commissioner, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, was favorably reported but not passed. The Union supported it.

Despite a considerable degree of self-government, the Navy, which has a major base in Guam, controls all travel under an old executive order, which attorneys think now invalid. A law review article demonstrating its lack of present authority was published by attorneys in Guam and was used by the Union in an effort in Washington to abolish the arbitrary controls. No results have yet been secured. The Navy defends the practice on grounds of security, but avoids every challenge in the courts by issuing permits to the travelers who sue.

SAMOA. American Samoa, unlike the larger Western Samoa, a trust territory which becomes independent in 1961, evidently desires to remain under American control. But it also desires more self-government and the Department of the Interior moved to grant it. A constitution was drafted—the first Samoa has had—and went into effect in April. Although professing the principle of self-government, it leaves in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior a veto power over legislation and court decisions, and retains his power to appoint and remove the governor. The Union criticized the document as inadequate for the purpose of advancing the rights and liberties of the Samoan people, and was assured that experience with these restricted rights would determine what liberalizing changes might be made. Samoans are not American citizens; they are not governed by an act of Congress like other territories. The Secretary of the Interior has practically sole jurisdiction.

OKINAWA. The Ryuku islands, with a population of almost a million Japanese, are governed by an executive order placing almost unlimited power in the hands of a High Commissioner, the general in charge of this strategic U.S. military base.

Following Roger Baldwin's visit to Okinawa in 1959 at the invitation of the High Commissioner, a series of recommendations were made by the Union to the Defense Department and the High Commissioner dealing with greater self-government, civil rights and liberties, liberalization of travel with Japan and revision of the penal code. Both the Defense Department and General Booth, the High Commissioner, have received the Union's suggestions cordially, with expressions of a desire to accord the greatest possible liberties consistent with security.

Some reforms have been made; more are evidently under consideration. The Okinawans, however, are far less interested in reforms or their liberties under a military occupation than in regaining Japanese authority and unity with their own people. However, impractical in view of the international situation, the demand for reversion is ceaseless and universal. The Union has urged closer Japanese-American cooperation in dealing with the Ryukus, and some advances have been made—far too little to affect the passion for return to the motherland or the fears of modern weapons on their little islands.

MEMBERSHIP AND FINANCES

Fiscal Year February 1, 1959, through January 31, 1960

On February 1, 1959, the national ACLU and its 24 integrated affiliates had an enrollment of 41,700. By January 31, 1960, by which time there were 27 integrated affiliates, this figure had grown to 45,935, a net increase of 10%. About 7,300 new members were signed up during that period, but more than 3,000 were dropped for failure to renew their memberships. The ACLU of Northern California, which maintains separate membership and finances, had 4,000 members, some of whom also belonged to the national ACLU. Allowing for this overlap, the Union had a total membership of approximately 49,000 at the close of the fiscal year on January 31, 1960.

During the course of the year, membership dues and contributions totaled $478,600. Income of $8,100 from other sources brought the total to $486,700, an increase of 22% over the previous year. Expenditures were $19,000 less than income.

Bequests from the estates of former members totaling $44,300 added to the Union's reserve. Net worth rose from $66,300 at the beginning of the fiscal year to $139,204 at the end.

The average member contributed $10.58 during the year. About 15% gave less than $5, 50% between $5 and $9.99, 30% between $10 and $24, 3% between $25 and $49, 1% between $50 and $99, and 1% $100 or more. Those contributing more than $200 during the 1959-60 fiscal year were:

Rowland Allen, Indiana; William Prescott Allen, Texas; Mr. and Mrs. John P. Axtell, New York; Mrs. Helen D. Marston Beardsley, California; John Becker, Italy; Laird Bell, Illinois; William Benton, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bernhard, Illinois; Daniel J. Bernstein, New York; Alfred H. Turner, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Untermyer, Illinois; George Wallerstein, California; Mrs. George West, California; Mariquita West, California; Duane E. Wilder, Pennsylvania; Edward Bennett Williams, District of Columbia; Miss Mary C. Wing, New York. Three anonymous contributions of $1,000, of $250 and of $200 were received.

In addition to its regular fiscal operations, the Union continued to supervise the Roger N. Baldwin-ACLU Escrow Account, administered by the Fiduciary Trust Company. During 1959-60 the Account's book-value Net Worth remained almost stationary at $35,500, but the market value of its securities declined from approximately $66,600 to $58,000.

Certificate

In our opinion, the attached financial statements present fairly the financial position of American Civil Liberties Union, Inc., and the R. N. Baldwin Escrow Account at January 31, 1960, and the results of their respective operations for the year then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.

A copy of the complete auditor's report will be sent on loan to any member on request. The ACLU's financial and accounting methods are endorsed by the National Information Bureau, 205 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N.Y., a private agency organized to help maintain sound standards in philanthropy and to provide contributors with information and advice.

Contributions to the American Civil Liberties Union are not deductible for income tax purposes, since the Treasury Department has held that a "substantial part" of the Union's activities is directed toward influencing legislation. The ACLU itself pays no taxes other than Social Security, Old Age Benefit and Workmen's Compensation levies in connection with its employees' salaries.

YOU HAVE AN INTEREST IN CIVIL LIBERTIES! SO — JOIN THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION!

ACLU members in these categories receive Civil Liberties each month, this 1959-60 Annual Report (and future annual reports), and their choice of pamphlets:

PARTICIPATING MEMBER $100

COOPERATING MEMBER ..... $50 SUPPORTING MEMBER $10

SUSTAINING MEMBER ..... $25 CONTRIBUTING MEMBER ..... $ 5

Associate Members at $2 receive Civil Liberties and the Annual Report. Weekly bulletin is available on request to contributors of $10 and over. Members living in the areas listed on pp. 73-74 (with the exception of ACLU of Northern California which maintains separate membership and finances) also belong to the respective local ACLU organization, without payment of additional dues. If you live in one of these areas, it will automatically receive a share of your contribution. The more you give the larger its share. Be as generous as you can! See coupon on inside cover.

BEQUESTS TO THE ACLU

Between February 1, 1950 and January 31, 1960, the national American Civil Liberties Union has received by bequest a total of $152,000 from the estates of forty-two persons. (Some affiliates have also received bequests.) The legacies have ranged from $20 to $34,000.

The Union regards such gifts with special pride and special obligation, because they represent the legators' final dedication to the preservation of civil liberties in our democracy.

Anyone desiring to make such provision in his or her will may wish to use this language: "I give $..... to the American Civil Liberties Union, Inc., a New York Corporation." If the testator is in an area where there is an ACLU affiliate, and wishes the affiliate to share directly in the bequest, there should be added to the foregoing, "of which $..... shall be applied to the use of its ..... affiliate."

Price of this pamphlet: 75¢ postpaid.

Dear Alan:

Many thanks for your two recent letters. I'm sure the talk you and Pat had with John Oakes of the Times did some good -- if only because of the concern it manifested.

I'm happy to send you, separately, another set of our reports on the sit-ins and 30 copies of "School Desegregation" for distribution to your affiliates. We're pleased by the reception of the school pamphlet so far, and your kind words add to our hopes for it. In quantity, we are making the pamphlet available at cost -- 30¢ each -- plus postage.

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Dear Harold:

Here is my report on the NEW YORK TIMES situation following a lunch that Pat Malin and I had with John Oakes last week. We made the point that other newspapers may be affected by the pressures exerted on the TIMES because of the Birmingham situation and that we would like to use our good offices to help. The discussion brought out the fact that it was almost impossible to tell whether Southern news reporting had been affected by the libel suits and Oakes checked this with Turner Catledge himself. The consensus was that while certainly there may be some subconscious effect, it would be difficult to prove this.

As for the professional journalism associations making a statement which, in effect, would back up the TIMES, Oakes thought this was impossible. He felt that the associations are just too afraid to act, as witnessed by the way they dragged their heels on the announced investigation of news coverage of the 1952 presidential campaign. However, we will keep on top of the situation and if we feel that we can do more, we certainly do so.

Many thanks again for the materials you sent us in preparation of our annual report. I have only one more request. Could you send us another set of your very excellent reports on the sit-in situation.

Best wishes.

Dear Mr. Reitman:

Paul Rilling is out of the city this week, but asked me to forward a copy of Kenneth Morland's report on "the Turks" to you. I imagine Paul told you of Dr. Morland's background, that he is head of the department of Sociology and Anthropology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Lynchburg, Virginia. He is also a specialist in community relations, and has done several other consultant assignments for us.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Timothy Miller

Dr. Pauling Attacks Senate Version of Hearing Record

Dr. Linus Pauling last week lashed back at the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee for inserting implications of Communist support in the record of the scientist's Oct. 11 hearing in Washington, D.C.

The twice-postponed hearing, chaired by Sen. Thomas J. Dodd, resulted in a free-swinging foray over a wide range of personalities and issues, but the Subcommittee backed down from a threatened contempt citation against the Cal Tech scientist.

However, after receiving galley proofs of the hearing record, Dr. Pauling accused the subcommittee of "injustice and unfairness" by adding damaging sections to the record that were not read at the open hearing.

False and Unfair

Dr. Pauling took particular exception to a statement which read: ". . . our interest in Dr. Pauling's petition is justified by Dr. Pauling's own record of service to Communist causes and objectives, many of them related in no way to his special field of science."

The scientist called the statement "unreliable as to facts and false as to implication," and demanded that it be expunged from the printed record.

"The added sections clearly represent an effort to link me with the Communist Party, with Communists, with Communist propaganda, activities, techniques, or infiltration, and with subversion and subversive activities in a way completely unjustified by the evidence presented at my hearings or by any facts whatever," Dr. Pauling said.

Effective Protest

The huge public protest which supported Dr. Pauling's refusal to turn over the names of scientists who circulated his petition against nuclear tests, was credited by "The Nation" magazine and other periodicals with the Committee's failure to issue a contempt citation, thereby avoiding a head-on collision over constitutional rights.

Scores of newspaper editorials and hundreds of petitions of pro-

Student Receives First Study Grant

Kenneth L. Johnson, 22-year-old law student from Baton Rouge, La., has been awarded the first scholarship grant under the fund launched by the Student Council of the Southern California ACLU.

Johnson was expelled from Southern University Law School last March 28 after participating with six other students in a sit-in administration at the Kress store in Baton Rouge.

He has been admitted to the Howard University Law School in Washington, D.C., where he expects to receive his law degree in 1962.

First Installment

An initial grant of $400 was approved by the ACLU academic committee which includes Prof. Melvin Sloan, USC; Dr. Sidney Albert, Los Angeles State College; Dr. James Lien, Long Beach State College, and Dr. Jere King, of UCLA.

Atty. Lloyd Smith, president of the Southern California ACLU, has been instrumental in planning the project.

The fund is being administered by the Claremore Fund, a tax-exempt charitable trust which

New Finance Project Spurs Local Growth

Civil Liberties on Installment Plan Seen as Bridge to Financial Security

A "pay as you progress" program designed to stabilize the financial growth of the Southern California ACLU was announced this month in a special appeal to 1000 members by Dr. Eason Monroe, executive director.

Objective of the program is to provide a regular, predictable income for the basic operating expenses of the local office through a "sustainer program" of monthly contributions.

During the past eight years of rapid growth, each year's financial commitments have been based upon "the best guess we can make concerning anticipated income," Dr. Monroe said.

Growth Factor

The sustainer program was adopted as a means of bridging the next three years of expected growth, and providing a sound financial basis upon which the expanding program of the Southern California office can build with certainty.

The installment plan feature was incorporated in the plan to "reduce the pain and resistance" of members answering the call for increased financial support.

Dr. Monroe cited as evidence of local growth the increase from 1500 members and an income of $12,000 in 1952, to a present membership of 7000 and an income of $95,000 (approximately $23,000 of this income was allocated to the national office for its share of membership contributions).

Court Peak

"A steady rise in prestige and respect has marked our work in recent years," Dr. Monroe said, noting that 21 separate legal cases are now in the process of development by Counsel A. L. Wirin with the help of more than 30 volunteer attorneys.

New cases arise at the rate of ten or more each month, but many cannot be handled, even though they have merit, because of the legal expense involved.

During recent sessions of the Legislature, Dr. Monroe added, the ACLU has played a steadily increasing role in the defeat of repressive legislation and in enactment of constructive measures.

By the end of 1963, Southern California membership should exceed 10,000 and total income should total nearly $150,000, he said.

"At this level of membership and income, it will be possible to fulfill much more adequately the very great responsibility which ACLU has to the residents of Southern California, and to support substantially the national program of the Union."

The new plan will be extended to the entire membership in January, when members will be urged to send a single annual contribution for renewal of their membership or join the monthly installment plan under the sustainer program.

Nov. 13 Brunch To Air Need for Police Board

The urgent need for establishment of a Los Angeles police review board will be explored at a brunch Sunday, November 13, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. sponsored by the Women's Division of the Southern California ACLU.

The event will be held at the Wilfandel Club, 3425 W. Adams Blvd. Mrs. Leo Branton and Mrs. James Garrott are co-chairmen.

Speakers will include Attys. Henry Lopez, Herman Smith, Morgan Moten, and Hugh R. Manes, active leaders in the formation of the Los Angeles Committee for a Police Review Board.

Proceeds from the affair will be allocated to the work of the Committee and the creation of a model review board that would demonstrate the functions of an official agency.

Admission tickets at $1.25 per person are available at the ACLU office, 323 W. Fifth St., Los Angeles 13.

Orange County Member Fights Recall Campaign

A fact-finding meeting attended by more than 250 persons was held last week to organize support for Joel Dvorman, Anaheim school board member who is under fire for his membership in the Southern California ACLU.

Dvorman, a Fullerton High School student counselor and a member of the board of trustees of the Magnolia Elementary School District, is the target of a recall petition initiated last month.

The petition seeks Dvorman's removal from the Magnolia school board in west Anaheim and is directed against his activities as membership chairman of the Orange County Chapter of the ACLU.

Grounds Cited

The recall campaign also attacks Dvorman for holding an ACLU meeting at his home at which Frank Wilkinson, executive secretary of the Committee to Preserve American Freedoms, was a guest speaker.

Dvorman's support of abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee also was cited as grounds for the recall move.

At the well-attended meeting of Dvorman's supporters last week, Dr. Eason Monroe, Southern California ACLU executive director and Counsel A. L. Wirin discussed the charges and cited the facts of ACLU's history, functions, and scope of legal, legislative and educational activity.

Hit and Run

Focal point of the campaign against Dvorman is the charge by the recall committee that "the ACLU is a Communist front organization cited by the California Legislative committee."

Dr. Monroe emphasized that this charge stems from a 1943 report of the long-defunct Tenney Committee which was made under the protection of legislative immunity.

ACLU officials repeatedly challenged former Sen. Jack B. Tenney to repeat the charge off the floor of the State Senate, but without success.

The charge, which has been completely repudiated by all responsible sources, is the only accusation by any local or national government agency which links the ACLU with Communist-front support or association.

Repetition of the charge by the Dvorman recall committee has aroused the attention of interested local attorneys who are studying the case with the view of initiating libel action against the recall group, Dr. Monroe said.

Fan Mail Boosts Radio Series

The ancient tradition of listening (as distinguished from TV watching) may be saved from atrophy now that the Southern California ACLU has gone on the air with a series of FM radio programs on station KPFK.

An enthusiastic response from listeners who troubled to phone or write following the debut of the series last month indicated a Hooper rating of respectable intensity.

The second program in the series is scheduled for Wednesday, Nov. 16, from 8:45 to 9:30 p.m.

Dr. Eason Monroe, Southern California ACLU executive director, and Counsel A. L. Wirin will discuss cases involving constitutional freedoms under the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Amendments.

A number of "listening parties" have been arranged in an effort to acquaint new and prospective ACLU members with the programs and policies of the Union.

The series will conclude on Dec. 14 with a Bill of Rights commemorative broadcast.

test supported Dr. Pauling's refusal to be a party to possible "harassment and infliction of reprisals upon conscientious Americans."

The national ACLU, however, was the only organization to join as a friend of the court in a petition to the U.S. Supreme Court for a writ of mandate to halt the hearings until Dr. Pauling's rights before the Committee could be determined.

The high court has not yet ruled on the petition. The issues presented by the petition may be rendered moot in the absence of a contempt citation.

In his new bout with the Committee over sections of the hearing record, Dr. Pauling told Sen. Dodd, "I have not served Communist causes and objectives, and I am indignant that your Subcommittee should accuse me of doing so. All of my actions have been characterized by independence.

"All of my life I have striven to discover the truth and behave in a way compatible to the greatest possible extent with the highest moral and ethical principles."

The allegations of Communist influence were "indignantly and vehemently" protested by Dr. Pauling as "completely unsubstantiated by the facts brought out at the hearing."

Counsel Tells Importance of Cal. Supreme Court Rulings

● Following is the second in a series of articles prepared by ACLU Counsel A. L. Wirin analyzing court decisions in the past year in cases supported by the Southern California ACLU.

By A. L. WIRIN
Chief Counsel

During the last year, we have participated, either as a "friend of the court" or provided counsel, in five proceedings in the Supreme Court of California. Three of the five cases were won; one is pending undecided; in the one case lost, the Supreme Court of the United States has granted a review.

In Abbott v. City of Los Angeles, the court invalidated an ordinance requiring "ex felons" to register; in so doing, it, at the same time, struck down a large number of similar city and county requirements throughout California; and the broad effect of the court ruling prevents municipalities and counties anywhere in California from adopting such ordinances in the future. The opinion of the court was unanimous; it was written by Justice Raymond E. Peters.

Rehabilitation

The court commented approvingly "upon the modern trend of penology to stress rehabilitation rather than punishment of criminals" and it suggested that registration provisions may run counter to "moral and ethical concepts of decency, human dignity and other theories regarding the assimilation and acceptance of the unfortunate."

Additionally, the court established a broad precedent permitting a challenge in the courts of ordinances and statutes, by a suit for declaratory judgment—so that a victim of an illegal law does not have to run the risk of criminal prosecution and jail sentence, in order to test its constitutionality.

Justice Peters noted "that to exclude examination of penal statutes from the operation of declaratory relief is like 'telling the prospective victim that the only way to determine whether the suspect is a mushroom or a toadstool is to eat it.' "

The Abbott case is one example of the manner in which the ACLU of Southern California functions in the courts.

Parallel Case

Mrs. Virgina Lambert had attacked the Los Angeles registration ordinance and her case had been appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States; that court did not reach the question as to the constitutionality of the ordinance, the court holding only that Mrs. Lambert's conviction should be reversed because the record disclosed that she had had no notice of any requirement to register. Her case then began its slow second round through the courts; but, this time, the prosecution asserted that she did have notice; the ACLU appeared as a "friend of the court" in her case.

It became clear to us, however, in her case, the courts could (and probably would) avoid a decision as to the constitutionality of the ordinance by merely ruling on the narrower question as to whether she did or did not receive notice; besides, Mrs. Lambert had been convicted of forgery.

It therefore seemed desirable to us to test the constitutionality of the ordinance in a "better" case—one in which the "ex felon" was subject to as little public (and hence judicial) opprobrium as possible; and preferably, one whose case even had some "moral appeal."

Such a case was that of John Hunley Abbott, whose "criminal record" consisted of a violation of the Selective Service Act—namely leaving a conscientious objectors camp, and doing so solely because of conscience. Abbott's refusal to comply with the Los Angeles registration ordinance, also, was based upon conscience and principle.

Accordingly, at John Abbott's request we launched a test case in his behalf; we moved it along expeditiously through the courts, and into the California Supreme Court, so as to "catch up" with the Lambert case.

The result was that John Abbott won his case; so did Mrs. Lambert; and so did the thousands of "ex felons" who are the victims of police harrassment in the enforcement of city and county registration ordinances.

Employment Oath

Virginia Wilson v. City of Los Angeles. Mrs. Wilson was discharged by Los Angeles County in 1948, for refusing to take the "Tenney Oath" then required of county employees. Upon application a decade later for employment with the city of Los Angeles, the city held her disqualified from such employment solely because of her former refusal to take a "loyalty oath".

Again in a unanimous opinion, this time written by Justice Thomas P. White, the court noted: "Her objection to subscribing to the oath at that time appears to have been based upon her disinclination, for reasons of conscience, to disavow membership in particular organizations which, according to her knowledge, did not advocate the overthrow of the government of the United States by force and violence."

The court established the principle that even an applicant for public employment may not be barred from public service arbitrarily, stating:

> "The right which the petitioner seeks to preserve here—that is, the right to public employment providing that such employment is available and that she meets all reasonable requirements—is entitled to protection, at least against deprivation thereof by arbitrary means. . . ."

Although reaffirming its earlier position that a public employer may by reasonable investigation inquire into the "loyalty" of its employees, the court noted that: "But where there is no rational and substantial connection between the nature of the investigation into loyalty and the qualifications of an applicant an inquiry which requires that he disclose his political affiliation and beliefs constitutes an unreasonable and capricious infringement on the freedoms protected by the Fourteenth and First Amendments of the federal Constitution."

Accordingly the court, by writ of mandate, set aside the action of the Los Angeles board of Civil Service Commissioners. Seymour Mandel was ACLU volunteer counsel.

Free Speech

Katzev v. County of Los Angeles. Again by a unanimous court, with Justice Marshall P. McComb writing the opinion, the court concurred with the views of the ACLU submitted as a "friend of the court" that a "comic book" prohibition violates freedom of speech. It ruled unconstitutional Los Angeles County's "comic book" ordinance, in the most sweeping decision of any court in the United States, on a regulation proscribing distribution of such books.

The court accepted and effectuated the "clear and present danger" rule which we urged (successfully) in the courts in our former court appearance in the Los Angeles Times case (about 25 years ago)—our appearance in that case being also in our traditional role as a "friend of the court". The Supreme Court of California ruled:

"The ordinance is an unjustifiable abridgment of freedom of the press, because distribution of such crime comic books is protected by the state and federal Constitutions, and no showing has been made of a clear and present danger of a substantive evil justifying suppression of the constitutional guarantee."

The court also decided that: "In reviewing the findings of the trial court as to whether an ordinance infringes the First Amendment to the United States Constitution or article I, section 9, of the California Constitution, the court will make an independent examination of the evidence to ascertain whether there has been a violation of either of the provisions . . ."

In addition to ruling favorably to the ACLU position on free speech, the court charted a broad civil liberties course as to what constitutes "due process of law". It accepted the following definition that: "No one may be required at peril of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes. All are entitled to be informed as to what the State commands or forbids," and decided that the ordinance was too vague to define a crime with that clarity which "due process" requires.

Richard Kamins was ACLU volunteer counsel.

Fair Trial

Elizabeth Duncan, Luis Moya and Augustine Baldonado v. California.

In our appearance as a "friend of the court" we attempted to make it clear that our sole concern in this sensational murder case in Ventura county was with "due process"—with right to fair trial and hence the right to a trial, for all persons, free from prejudicial misconduct by the prosecutor.

The Supreme Court of the United States has taken over the case following an adverse ruling by the California Supreme Court. The appeal will be heard in the United States Supreme Court, with ACLU counsel participating in the oral argument this Spring.

Gerald L. Rosen and Richard L. Lissner prepared the ACLU briefs filed as a "friend of the court."

School Use Oath

ACLU and Eason Monroe v. Boards of Education of Los Angeles and San Diego.

ACLU's challenge of the "loyalty oath" currently required as a condition for the use of public school premises for public meetings is awaiting decision.

Abraham Gorenfeld prepared our briefs.

In all our cases in the California Supreme Court, Fred Okrand acted as general consultant; and supervised the preparation of all our briefs.

Key Ruling Due on Sunday 'Blue Laws'

The constitutionality of Sunday "blue laws"—an issue affecting businessmen in some states almost as much as desegregation—will be considered by the U.S. Supreme Court during the current term.

The question of whether the Constitution permits states to forbid business on Sunday has generally depended on local attitudes. But in recent years, as discount houses across the country extended selling to Sundays, other merchants have clamored for the enforcement of Sunday closing laws.

The high court agreed to hear appeals in Massachusetts, Maryland and Pennsylvania cases, indicating that it is considering a finding of great significance.

300-Year-Old Law

The Massachusetts case was brought by a kosher supermarket of Springfield in an appeal by the state of a Federal District Court ruling that the state's Lord's Day Act of 1653 was unconstitutional.

The act was held to violate the constitutional prohibition against favoring one religion over another.

The Maryland and Pennsylvania cases involve two discount firms owned by the same company, Two Guys From Harrison-Allentown, Inc., who are appealing a lower court decision which upheld the closing law. The court ruled that the state could properly prescribe one day of rest each week and that as a matter of convenience it could choose Sunday as the day favored by the majority.

Individual Choice

The national ACLU, in a friend of the court brief supporting the discount firm, argued that the state's police power may not deprive the citizen of his right to choose the day on which he will refrain from labor.

"The fact that the requirement of one day of rest in seven, with the individual choosing the day, would cause inconvenience in enforcement is not sufficient reason to take the right of choice from the individual."

The ACLU brief stressed that old Supreme Court rulings upholding Sunday laws should be overruled in line with recent court decisions in matters of great public concern and changed conditions.

"The automobile age, the distance of shopping centers from concentrated areas of population, the demands of minorities to observe their own days of religious worship, the need of the public for manifold forms of recreation and entertainment on their days of rest—all these call upon the judicial arm of our government to protect the right of all men to choose their form of rest and worship," the ACLU stated.

In some areas where certain Christian sects are strong, the laws are rigidly enforced. In other communities, where liberal Christian sects or non-Christian faiths predominate, the statutes are ignored.

Fall Harvest

A fall harvest of 202 new ACLU members has been reaped so far in the 1960 membership drive conducted in Southern California.

The campaign has topped the results of any membership recruitment effort in recent years, with contributions totaling $1411, an average of nearly $7 per member.

The final results are expected to double the present tally when chapter membership committees complete their area assignments, according to Mrs. Kathryn Walton, associate director.

She also expressed deep appreciation to all ACLU members who assisted with the campaign in numerous ways which helped boost the drive total to a new record.

"All We Want Is The Truth As We See It"

HUAC Film Demonstrates Fine Art of Propaganda

The House Un-American Activities Committee, which supposedly has been investigating subversive propaganda all these years recently decided to try its own hand at it by playing a starring role in "Operation Abolition," a propaganda film all about the gentle strength and patience of the HUAC.

The 40-minute epic, now being shown throughout the country to civic, business, police and school groups, may be purchased directly at $100 a copy from Washington Video Producers, of Washington, D. C., according to the November issue of the ACLU News, published by the Northern California ACLU.

The film purports to show that a few Communists were directly responsible for the huge picket lines and stormy protests which marked the House Un-American Activities Committee hearings in San Francisco last May 13.

Moral of Story

It attempts to portray the demonstrations as a Communist-incited riot in which thousands of students were duped into defying law and order.

The moral of the film is obviously simple: the HUAC is desperately needed to combat such subversive influences.

The ACLU News speculates that the producers of the film have used television newsclips subpoenaed by HUAC investigator William A. Wheeler from San Francisco TV stations KRON and KPIX.

The films "must have been turned over to corporation representatives by the HUAC because the committee subpoenaed films" from both television stations, the News said.

Distortions Conceded

The most damaging appraisal of the film came from Wheeler himself who conceded on an August 9 television program "The Goodwin Knight Show" on KCOP-TV, Los Angeles, that "the film has inaccuracies and distortions."

The Orange County Chapter of the Southern California ACLU prepared for distribution to its own members an analysis of the distortions in the film.

The chapter pamphlet also raises the question of whether the HUAC has exceeded its authority by being a party to the making and distribution of such a film.

Atty. Gen. Raps College Agreement to Bar Sit-ins

"A gentlemen's agreement" among California state college presidents to bar student sit-in demonstrators expelled from Southern colleges has apparently been lifted following intervention by Attorney General Stanley Mosk.

The question of a "uniform policy" informally adopted by state college presidents at a meeting in Sacramento last August was raised when San Jose State College officials reversed their position and agreed to admit St. John Dixon, a Negro student expelled from Alabama State College for participating in a Montgomery lunch counter demonstration.

Dixon, however, will not be admitted until the Spring semester because he registered after the fall deadline when "hundreds of other late applications of fully qualified students had already been denied," according to William J. Dusel, vice-president of the college.

Ban Confirmed

Earlier, four San Jose faculty members said Dusel had agreed to waive the regulation against late admissions in Dixon's case.

The faculty representatives asked the Attorney General's office to take action in the case after John T. Wahlquist, president of San Jose State College, confirmed existence of an informal ban on expelled students.

"It is the uniform practice of accredited U.S. colleges and universities to deny admission to students attempting to transfer from other accredited colleges and universities without an honorable withdrawal from the institution previously attended.

"Accreditation of San Jose State College would be jeopardized . . . if it ignored this practice," Wahlquist stated on Sept. 26.

Official Inquiry

In a letter to Superintendent of Public Instruction Roy E. Simpson, Atty. Gen. Mosk noted that the Dixon incident raises the question of "whether southern segregation policies and reprisals against those seeking enforcement of civil rights will determine the effective admissions policy of California."

Mosk noted that of the nine students expelled from Alabama State College, two are now attending schools in New York and two are now completing their education in Georgia.

"This suggests there is no firm national policy, but that San Jose State College is somewhat unique in enforcing this uniform policy.

"President Wahlquist was emphatic in his view that St. John Dixon could not be admitted because he 'does not have an honorable withdrawal.' Certainly it does not clarify this situation to state that he is not being denied admittance because of his civil rights activities in Alabama, when precisely these activities resulted in his expulsion," Mosk said.

Arrangements for bringing Dixon to San Jose were made by the local chapter of CORE (Congress of Racial Equality) in cooperation with the four faculty members who brought the case to the attention of the Attorney General.

Religious Test Challenged

The national ACLU last month appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court for review of a Maryland law requiring an affirmation of belief in God as a prerequisite to holding public office.

The Union joined with the American Jewish Congress in a test case involving Roy R. Torcaso, of Montgomery County, Maryland, whose appointment as a notary public was cancelled after he refused to sign an oath declaring his belief in the existence of God.

The religious requirement violates the ban on establishment of religion under the First Amendment by aiding religion as against non - religion and transgressing the mandate of neutrality, the ACLU brief declared.

Culver City Limits Political Inquiry

A recently revised employment application form issued by the Culver City civil service shows a pertinent change in its inquiry into political affiliations, apparently to conform to a recent State Supreme Court decision.

The former query asked prospective employees, "Are you now or have you ever been a member of the Communist Party or any Communist organization?"

The question probed further than the state Levering oath required of public employees, which limits the inquiry to five years prior to passage of the oath.

The new Culver City test is limited to present membership in the Communist Party and present advocacy of overthrow of the government by force, violence or unlawful means.

ACLU Counsel A. L. Wirin said the revised form probably results from the recent ACLU-sponsored test case in which the State Supreme Court held that past refusal to take a loyalty oath was not a ground for disqualification from public employment.

"It would follow from this court ruling that past membership in the Communist party or in any communist organization is similarly not a ground for barring applicants from city employment," Wirin said.

The State Supreme Court decision was handed down in the appeal of Mrs. Virginia Wilson who challenged a Los Angeles Civil Service Commission ruling which barred her from city employment for refusal to sign a 1948 county loyalty test.

Dual National Challenges Expatriation

A section of the Immigration and Nationality Act which automatically cancels the citizenship of a dual national — a person born abroad of American parents — was challenged by the national ACLU last month.

The contested provision specifies that ten years' residence in a foreign land is "conclusive presumption" of voluntary military service in that nation's army.

A motion filed by ACLU attorneys in Washington, D.C. asked the Federal District Court to void the provision under which Antonio Cafiero of Jersey City, N. J., was expatriated and ordered deported to Italy as an alien.

Forced Service

The motion argued that Cafiero was forced to serve in the Italian Army from 1953 to 1955; "undisputed evidence" of his involuntary military service was offered.

Former Supreme Court decisions have held that expatriation cannot be decreed except for voluntary conduct, the ACLU said. The high court has ruled that statutes cannot create a conclusive presumption of guilt where a constitutional right is concerned.

The individual must be given an opportunity to rebut the presumption, ACLU counsel argued.

Draft Call

Cafiero's military service came as a result of a draft call, the ACLU said, and he had no "free choice" in determining whether to serve in the Italian military service.

The government contends that Cafiero's military service abroad automatically expatriated him even though the service might, in fact, be involuntary.

SOCIOLOGIST TO VIEW CHANGES IN FREEDOMS

Dr. Herbert Alexander, professor of sociology at Los Angeles City College, will address a meeting of the Hollywood Chapter of the ACLU, Saturday, Nov. 19, at 8 p.m. at 2209 Meadow Valley Terrace.

Prof. Alexander will examine from a sociological viewpoint the ways in which civil liberties have been modified and interpreted during the past 171 years since adoption of the Bill of Rights.

Chapter members are requested to bring a prospective member to the meeting.

Other chapter activities this month include:

LONG BEACH

Atty. Coleman Blease, legislative director of the Southern California ACLU, will speak on "The Work of the ACLU," at a meeting Saturday, Nov. 19, at 8:30 p.m., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gabor, 6495 El Jardin.

BEVERLY HILLS-WESTWOOD

ACLU Counsel A. L. Wirin will discuss "The ACLU's Position in the Rockwell Case" at a chapter meeting Wednesday, Nov. 30, at 8 p.m. in the Community Room of the Gibraltar Savings and Loan Association, 9111 Wilshire Blvd.

Chapter members and friends also are invited to attend a meeting of the steering committee, scheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 15, at 8 p.m., at the home of Dr. and Mrs. David A. Marcus, 336 S. Canon Drive.

LETTERS: Student Speaks for the Defense

Dear Sirs:

One of ACLU's handicaps in fast-growing Ventura County is lack of legal advice and representation. It has occurred to me that an attorney with a warm feeling for the Bill of Rights and who is seeking a place to move or establish his practice, might well look to Ventura County.

It is improbable that any attorney becomes wealthy on civil liberties practice, but it is not a money-hungry attorney that I have in mind. There would be sufficient legal practice in addition to civil liberties activity to provide a reasonable living standard for an ACLU attorney in this beautiful but rapidly-expanding county.

This is not a barbaric area, but we have our share of civil liberties problems for which legal advice and representation are required. And these problems will multiply as the population continues to increase at its present rapid rate.

Robert H. Sollen
Oxnard, Calif.

Dear Sirs:

I am currently enrolled at the University of Southern Califonia where I am a cinema major. About two years ago I learned of your A.C.L.U. activities which I felt were in defense of our undeniable rights as citizens and human beings. At that time I contributed $5.00 and became a student member, feeling that a single voice crying in the wilderness is often lost, but that a multitude of voices may command some respect.

Since allying myself with this group, I have been asked by friends and relatives to explain our position in relation to the world around us. I have always mounted the nearest soapbox to proclaim in my proudest tone that A.C.L.U. is like a carbide lamp in a coal mine. It tries to light a pathway through the dangerous tunnels which try to fall and press the miners in a crush of coal and stone.

We feel that we are miners searching for a path of freedom and equality for all men in the mine of human relations. At times, the walls try to fall and trap us with bigotry and hatred along with the rubble of totalitarian government. This is when A.C.L.U. turns on the light. The warm beam floods the fault in the weakened structure for all to see. Sometimes the seer seems blinded by the light, however, and walks beneath the deadly spot to be caught in the fall.

Feeling well satisfied with this allegory, I go about my business. Then, a wide eyed relative thrusts an editorial column snatched from a local paper at me and screams, "Get out of that filthy organization. It's nothing but a Communist Front!" At this, Joe McCarthy wriggles in his hole and smiles an evil smile which spreads like a pox across his earthly remains and steals up into the light of day, clouding the sky with lead and hiding the sun from peoples minds. So hazy do their eyes become that obvious half truths and misstatements appearing in local papers go unnoticed, and praise rings down from the masses on the disciples of Cotton Mather as, in grand old "Salem" style, the scapegoats of society are purged.

In a civilization governed by men elected to their high office and placed in trust with the rights of their brothers through free elections, I can only weep when I see one of these men closing his eyes and following the blind witch hunters of the seventeenth century.

Dear Sirs.

Just ran across this poem by James Russell Lowell which I thought may be worth reproducing in your paper:

And I honor the man who is willing to sink
Half his present repute for the freedom to think,
And when he has thought, be his cause strong or weak,
Will risk t'other half for the freedom to speak.

SCHOLARSHIP

has been made available for the receipt and disbursement of scholastic contributions.

Contributions in excess of $600 have been received to date. Nine applications for financial assistance have been received from students suspended from Southern colleges and universities for their participation in the sit-in movement.

Smith said the trustees of the Claremore Fund and the academic committee considered five of the applicants to be particularly worthy of financial aid.

If adequate funds are available, additional grants will be made next semester.

Johnson also may require further assistance from the fund in order to complete his law studies, Smith said. He plans to practice law in Mississippi when he receives his law degree.

Contributions to the fund are tax deductible and may be sent to the Claremore Fund, Scholarship Fund, 633 Shatto Place, Room 200, Los Angeles 5.

Alaska Election Law Seen as Barrier to Minority Parties

The national ACLU has called on Governor William Egan of Alaska to recommend a change in the state's election code so that minority political parties will have a better chance of placing their presidential candidates on the ballot.

Citing the recent denial of a ballot place to the Socialist Workers Party, the Union said the present system "fatally impairs" a minority party's right to gain access to the ballot in presidential election years.

The Alaskan election code, which establishes the only procedure for nominating electors for President and Vice President, applies only to "political parties."

Burdensome Barrier

An opinion by the state's Attorney General defined political parties as a group of organized voters which receives at least 10 per cent of the total votes at the last gubernatorial election. Under this definition, the SWP, which appeared on the ballot in 12 other states in last Tuesday's election, could not qualify in Alaska.

"We believe this provision is so burdensome and unreasonable that it effectively deprives citizens of Alaska of the right to vote for candidates of their choice and totally stifles the voice of any but the two major parties," the ACLU said.

N. Y. Comparison

As an example of the unfairness in the present election code, the ACLU compared the Alaska provision with the New York state law which grants a place on the ballot to a party which wins 50,000 votes in the last gubernatorial election.

"In 1958," the ACLU said, "more than five and a half million votes were cast for governor in New York and a party needed, therefore, to win less than one per cent of the vote to qualify."

American political history affords a good example of the basic unfairness of the present Alaskan law, the ACLU wrote Gov. Egan.

"In the summer of 1912, the Bull Moose (Progressive) Party brought itself into existence and nominated Theodore Roosevelt for President. At the November, 1912 election, he won more electoral votes than William Howard Taft, the regular Republican candidate.

"If Alaska were then a state, and if its present Electoral Code were in effect, Theodore Roosevelt's name would not have appeared on the Alaska ballot because his party would not have existed at the last gubernatorial election and could not, therefore, have received ten per cent of the total vote cast. The same situation may recur in the future, and the same result would follow because of the unreasonably burdensome and inflexible terms of the Alaska Election Code."

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

My absence from New York on an organizational trip has caused me to delay this letter of congratulations on your appointment as executive director of the Southern Regional Council. In the civil rights advance made in the South in recent years, the Council has played a major role, and we hope that under your direction, even further progress will be recorded. The Union has always enjoyed working on mutual endeavors with the Council and looks forward to further cooperation.

I am enclosing the text of a public letter to President Kennedy issued by the Union urging him to support civil rights legislation in the Congress. I was glad to point out to him the excellent report prepared by the Council on "The Federal Executive and Civil Rights." It is a comprehensive blueprint for meaningful executive action and we will do all we can to further its study.

Sincerely yours,

FOR RELEASE: FRIDAY AM NEWSPAPERS, MAY 26, 1961

(ADVANCE) NEW YORK, N. Y., May 25. - The outbreak of violence in Alabama by mobs opposing racial desegregation emphasizes the need for "forceful" Congressional action on a broad civil rights front, the American Civil Liberties Union said today. The civil liberties organization released a letter sent to President Kennedy urging that he"place the full influence of the President's office" behind such a program.

"...the end of violence in Alabama does not solve the basic problem of how to achieve greater progress in the effort toward equal rights for all citizens," ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin said. He added: "So long as it is not clear to every citizen -- a governor or a member of a hate-infected mob -- that the federal government is moving vigorously in all ways to achieve equal rights, last-ditch resistance is encouraged."

Although congratulating the President and Attorney General Kennedy for "swift and firm action" in preventing major bloodshed in Alabama and noting various steps taken by the Administration to speed up the civil rights drive, the ACLU expressed disappointment that the White House would not back an omnibus civil rights bill introduced on May 8 by Senator Joseph S. Clark (D.-Pa.) and Representative Emanuel Celler (D.-N.Y.). The bill embodies the civil rights plank of the 1960 Democratic convention.

"While the Congress is an independent branch of government, it does not legislate in a vacuum. The attitude of the Administration, and the vigor with which that attitude is expressed, influences the course of legislative action. Therefore we are disappointed and dismayed by the announced Administration decision not to support civil rights legislation 'at this time'," the ACLU said.

"What better time is there? We have just passed the seventh anniversary of the historic Supreme Court decision on school desegregation, and still only 6% of the South's 3,000,000 Negro children attend desegregated schools -- not to mention the de facto school segregation in the North and other sections of the country produced in large part by housing discrimination. We have experienced an economic recession in which unemployment of Negro workers was especially severe. We observe daily in the United Nations and around the world the terrible effect on our foreign relations of continuing racial discrimination and segregation in the United States."

The full text of the ACLU letter follows:

"Recent events in Alabama have shocked the national conscience. Mob violence to block American citizens from exercising a constitutional freedom startlingly illustrates the depth of the civil rights problem confronting the country. Only the swift and firm action of the Executive Department prevented major bloodshed, and the American Civil Liberties Union congratulates you and the Attorney General for your vigorous steps to protect American citizens against this flagrant flouting of the law.

"However, the end of violence in Alabama does not solve the basic problem of how to achieve greater progress in the effort toward equal rights for all citizens. So long as it is not clear to every citizen -- a governor or a member of a hate-infected mob -- that the federal government is moving vigorously in all ways to achieve equal rights, last-ditch resistence is encouraged.

"The present Administration has recognized the need to accelerate the civil rights program in several ways -- for example, by appointments to executive offices, by a strengthened government-contract and civilian-employment program, by direct entrance into the Prince Edwards County school desegregation case. And the position of the judiciary is unmistakable.

"However, one major element is missing: forceful action by the Congress. An effort to fill this gap was made by Senator Joseph S. Clark and Representative Emanuel Celler, who on May 8 introduced a six-point program embodying the civil rights plank of the 1960 Democratic platform. The passage of this program would greatly advance the civil rights drive, and yet on May 10 the press reported Press Secretary Salinger as stating that the Administration dissociated itself from the Clark-Celler proposal.

"The Clark-Celler bill is not revolutionary. It would eliminate the poll tax and literacy tests as requirements for voting in federal elections; require school boards operating a racially segregated public school to adopt a desegregation plan within six months and provide for first-step compliance no later than the beginning of the 1963-64 school year (with provision of technical aid to desegregating school districts and court enforcement of duties set forth in the Act); authorize the Attorney General to initiate civil injunction suits in the federal courts to prevent the denial of any civil rights on the grounds of race, color or creed; establish a fair employment practices commission; and make the Civil Rights Commission a permanent agency with strengthened fact-finding powers.

"While the Congress is an independent branch of government, it does not legislate in a vacuum. The attitude of the Administration, and the vigor with which that attitude is expressed, influences the course of legislative action. Therefore we are disappointed and dismayed by the announced Administration decision not to support civil rights legislation 'at this time.'

"What better time is there? We have just passed the seventh anniversary of the historic Supreme Court decision on school desegregation, and still only 6% of the South's 3,000,000 Negro children attend desegregated schools -- not to mention the de facto school segregation in the North and other sections of the country produced in large part by housing discrimination. We have experienced an economic recession in which unemployment of Negro workers was especially severe. We observe daily in the United Nations and around the world the terrible effect on our foreign relations of continuing racial discrimination and segregation in the United States.

"We do not minimize the difficulties of the Executive Department in this situation, nor the importance of patient, educational efforts such as the excellent work of the Southern Regional Council. The Council's January 1961 report, 'The Federal Executive and Civil Rights,' contains many valuable suggestions, which we endorse in principle and commend to you and the Attorney General for your special attention. We are pleased that several points advanced in that study have already been implemented by the Administration.

"Yet, despite all these good efforts, we find the civil rights drive lagging, primarily because the Congress refuses to accept its responsibility to join the other branches of government in giving finally to millions of American citizens what is their just due, their constitutional rights. We therefore urge that you reconsider the decision not to press civil rights legislation, and with the same determination with which you acted in Alabama, place the full influence of the President's office behind the Clark-Celler proposal."

Dear Alan:

Many thanks for your good letter received yesterday. Your favorable comments on "The Federal Executive and Civil Rights" are music to our ears.

We are also grateful for your criticisms and would welcome further comments that may be forthcoming from your Equality Committee.

There are, of course, a lot of debatable points in our report and in the subject matter generally. Some parts of the report represent compromise of difference in our own midst. As you will note, we did not recommend benign quotas -- merely that the President and the housing agencies should follow their experimental use by private builders with careful study. After all, if the FHA exerts any influence at all on the racial aspects of housing it must arrive at some reasonable conclusions about the legitimacy and practical efforts of this device. Speaking personally, I might add that I am strongly opposed to outright government endorsement or official use of benign quotas, because I feel this is a sacrifice of principle that the government simply should not make.

Conditions governing Federal contracts are a somewhat different case. Here there is no "right," constitutional or otherwise, to do business with the government. For the government to elect to choose its contractors on the condition, among others, that they make positive efforts to recruit minority group employees does not seem to us to raise constitutional questions -- though it could be questioned on other grounds.

But, like you, my mind is open on these and other points of possible disagreement, and I think it is useful for us to carry on some dialogues about them. Presumably many of us will be dealing with the Executive Branch on these questions for some time to come.

I am enclosing three (3) extra copies of the report, which, by the way, we are releasing to the press for Monday morning, January 30.

My very best regards.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Dear Harold:

Pat Malin is away from the office for several weeks on a much-needed rest, so I am replying to your January 16 letter concerning the SRC report on "The Federal Executive and Civil Rights." It is a terrific document which I read from cover to cover. Our congratulations to all those responsible for its preparation.

There are many sound suggestions whose adoption would certainly advance equal treatment in the country. The only personal caveats I have are in the area of "forced government action", i.e., the benign housing quotas and the requirement that employers holding federal contracts must employ Negroes. I am open to conversion on these points, but it seems to me that such action goes past the constitutional argument re: equal treatment.

Would it be possible to obtain two or three extra copies of the document? I would like to obtain the opinions of Judge Waring and Lisle Carter, chairman of our Equality Committee. After they have read the report and we have discussed it further in the office perhaps we could offer some additional comment.

Our best wishes.

Cordially yours,

Alan

RE: Report on Ultra-Right Organizations

In the past year the office has responded to requests from affiliates, members, the press, national organizations and the general public for information on the activities of ultra-right groups, their impact on civil liberties, and measures which might be taken to combat their dangers.

We have replied that in addition to reviving McCarthyism within some local communities (especially in the far West and Southwest), which creates an atmosphere hostile to the exercise of civil liberties, these groups have made specific attacks on teachers, textbooks, libraries, public officials and the judiciary. We have also expressed our concern that, unless counter-measures were taken, we might experience a full return to the McCarthyism of the 1950's when loose charges exerted heavy pressure on civil liberties by making teachers less courageous in handling controversial issues, librarians less willing to stock politically unpopular books and public officials eager to ferret out "subversives" through investigations which attacked the right of freedom of speech and association.

Several national organizations, such as the Foreign Policy Association, the National Council of Churches and the National Education Association, have been assailed by ultra-right groups, and the Union itself is a prime target. We have seen statements by Robert Welch of the John Birch Society, Dr. Fred Schwartz of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, the Rev. Billy James Hargis of the Christian Crusade and Hurst A. Amyx, a daily radio broadcaster in a number of cities under the title "Know Your Enemy," attacking the Union for its support of Communism or its alleged failure to follow a single-standard defense of civil liberties.

Several of our affiliates have directly locked horns with ultra-right groups; the use of a Houston public school for a public meeting sponsored by our Greater Houston Chapter was denied after ultra-right pressure was exerted; two Board members of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union lost their teaching jobs because of the ACLU activity re: House Un-American Activities Committee; the Florida Civil Liberties Union came under heavy attack by right-wing Protestant ministers in Miami when one of its Board members ran for the Board of Education. Other affiliates have suffered similar attacks. Our press clipping service shows a rise in letters to editors scoring the "pro-Communist sympathies" of the Union. Happily, -- chiefly through provision by the national office of myriad defense materials -- there has been increased local defense of the Union in reply letters to the editor. This is evidence of a growing general consciousness of civil liberties and their importance (perhaps a lesson learned from the McCarthy period), a determination to fight assaults on the First Amendment and growing professionalization and know-how of our staffs and volunteer workers -- national and local.

The similarity between today's ultra-right phenomenon and the McCarthy period has been reported in numerous newspapers and magazine articles. However, one striking difference -- which illustrates one difficulty in dealing with the current revival -- is the high degree of organization attending the activity of today's rightist groups. There is no single person who symbolizes the "crusade," no McCarthy or Huey Long; rather there are many "crusades" which are well publicized in advance of their arrival in local communities and bring within their folds some of the major segments of the community. Municipal officials, the clergy, the press -- and especially the schools -- are asked and frequently agree to endorse the "crusade." When Dr. Schwartz went to Phoenix, Arizona in 1960, the Acting Superintendent of the Phoenix College and High School District arranged facilities for a great rally and urged faculty members, students and their parents to attend.

There is also, frequently, a degree of sophistication which marks this period as different from the McCarthy period. Dr. Schwartz, for example, takes pains in his speeches to warn against "guilt by association;" the Rev. Hargis disavows any anti-racial overtones to his movement. Yet the emotional setting created by the mass meetings of the former leaves the local community ripe for attack on "subversives" after Dr. Schwartz's school departs, and advocates of racism have been featured at Hargis' meetings.

In dealing with this problem, the Union has been confronted with the usual dilemma: the need to defend the civil liberties of groups which by their activities do fundamental injury to constitutional freedoms. We have, of course, publicly reiterated our traditional position (through such actions as our March 31, 1961 letter to the House Un-American Activities Committee opposing its announced preliminary investigation of the John Birch Society) and coupled this opposition to governmental investigation of any group's political opinion with acknowledgment that the activities of the extreme right can limit civil liberties, and explanation that it is the responsibility of individuals and non-governmental organizations to utilize their own free speech to combat this danger. (The opinion voiced by the Santa Barbara News Press, the first newspaper to expose the John Birch Society, is an example of such effective non-governmental action.)

This position was amplified in a memorandum to our affiliates on December 8, 1961 in which these guide lines were set down:

"1. The right of all groups to express their opinions must be defended regardless of the point of view they express.

"2. The ACLU does not comment on any part of the content of these groups' (the ultra-right) programs which does not directly concern civil liberties, whether it be repeal of the income tax, the social security program, or removal of the UN from New York City.

"3. However, when these groups espouse positions adversely affecting civil liberties, for example, efforts to remove a teacher for her "liberal" views, or attacks on librarians for refusing to take "Communist" books off library shelves, we should vigorously present our position (while defending their right to speak). We should also emphasize the point... that the loose accusations of these groups can create an atmosphere of caution in which dissident views will not be expressed."

We also noted in the memorandum that because the national office lacked the financial resources to conduct a major educational drive of our own, we had stimulated and were working closely with other national organizations that were concerned with the threat to the democratic process from the ultra-right. The Union helped plan and participated in late January in a week end conference attended by over 100 persons from 20 communities. This unpublicized Greenwich, (Connecticut) "Conference on Preserving the Democratic Process" included persons representative of organized labor, international relations, civil liberties, inter-group relations, public schools, universities, non-partisan political groups (for example, the Fair Campaign Practice Committee), government agencies, publications, and all major religious faiths.

The Conference heard appraisals of the ultra-right in the context of (a) the cold war, (b) its particular characteristics, and (c) specific case histories depicting assaults on schools, labor, welfare organizations, foreign policy groups, and religion. After plenary discussion, the Conference broke into small discussion groups from which the following points emerged:

1. There is a lack of precision in discussing the ultra-right organizations. For example, there is a real difference between the approach and program of The National Review and Hargis' Christian Crusade.

2. So far there has been almost complete isolation on the local level among organizations concerned with preserving the democratic process. Isolation includes the separation of local groups from one another, from their own national organizations, and national organizations among themselves. (Happily, this is not true within the ACLU, as communication on this problem has been frequent and rapid.) One of the results is the relative lack of local activity in support of the democratic process.

3. There is a lack of sensitivity to the importance of the democratic process. There is a tendency, indeed a desire, to protect the individual group's program content, but not to defend the principles of free speech and fair debate for everyone. This failure was related to the problem of isolation, the fear of standing up alone to say that ultra-right activity impaired constitutional liberties that are of importance to everyone.

4. Community apathy prior to local ultra-right activity and harm is especially conspicuous; preventive measures are necessary.

5. In communities where at least one medium of mass communication expresses concern about the democratic process there is a better chance to offset the ill effects of the ultra-right.

6. There is need for full information about ultra-right groups.

To sum up, increased leadership from national organizations is needed; hopefully, local branches would respond through improved communication and activity -- and in advance of attacks by the ultra-right.

These points led to the adoption of the following recommendations:

1. A national clearing house should be established for the purpose of assembling, analyzing and distributing information about ultra-right activities.

The clearing house would be responsible for:

a. Screening and identification of materials, and channeling them to local groups either directly or through the national organizations;
b. A fact-finding operation designed not only to keep abreast of developments, but also to anticipate them whenever possible so that affected areas might be alerted and appropriate action taken;
c. Publication of periodic newsletters to include analyses of various groups, to convey techniques which might be used locally, and to report on success stories.

2. Regional meetings paralleling the Greenwich Conference should be held.

The national groups would cooperate in setting up such meetings, either off-the-record or publicized, on an ad hoc basis. Maximum use would be made of the resources of each group. An understanding would be reached among them as to the degree to which they are prepared to sacrifice and subordinate their day-to-day programs to the basic issue at hand. Also, the degree to which they are prepared to meet the larger problem, namely, the threat to the democratic process, rather than to be fragmented into dealing with specific issues.

3. Task forces should be established to visit communities under attack and to provide guidance and help.

The individuals involved would be provided by each participating national organization which would pay their full salary and expenses. There would be a determination of priorities to select those geographic areas requiring concentration of resources. This would require continuing review and analysis of developments to determine where resources may be most needed and effectively used at any given time. The task teams would train local leaders.

4. A meeting similar to the Greenwich Conference should be planned for the lay leaders of national organizations.

5. An educational program for the mass media should be developed including the preparation of a national television program and the production of audio-visual material. Also, a national prestige rally of leading American figures, -- Warren, Eisenhower, Kennedy, et al, should be arranged.

The implementation of the above recommendations will be the responsibility of the ad hoc steering committee, on which the ACLU is represented, which is to continue functioning as the Continuation Committee. In the meantime, until resources can be provided, it was agreed that:

1. Local or regional conferences of concerned groups and individuals should be set up immediately.

2. Information should be directed from local groups to their national organizations to be channeled to a central source.

3. Counter measures should not await the completion of the plans outlined, but should be initiated without delay in each affected community as best they can, with whatever guidance and resources national groups can now provide. (Our local affiliates have been deeply involved in such counter-measures. The ACLU of Washington state successfully protested against indoctrination-in-Communism courses in public schools; the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee recently reproduced sections of speeches made at Dr. Schwartz's School of Anti-Communism for presentation to the local school superintendent as an indication of the indoctrination materials being pressed in the schools [full recognition was given to the right for all points of view to be expressed]; and the ACLU of Illinois made strong protest against military participation in partisan "education for security" seminars on U. S. Navy property.)

Comment on Greenwich Conference Recommendations

1. From the outset of the planning committee's work, the ACLU's primary role was to keep the group's attention focussed on the ultra-right's threat to civil liberties -- the democratic process -- rather than the content of the ultra-right programs. Although there was some mixing of the two points at the Conference, we will continue our effort to delineate our civil liberties concern. This is particularly true with respect to the clearing house of information about ultra-right groups. It is impossible that in such a broad information-gathering operation, information will not be presented about what is being said at ultra-right meetings -- the content of their speeches -- and indeed organizations -- other than the ACLU -- have every right to discuss the merits of ultra-right programs. But every effort must be made to:

a) Keep such discussion from degenerating into charges of "guilt by association," smears and intimidating activities (for example, a listing of ultra-right groups without making clear the dangers of using it as a private "Attorney General's list.")

b) Include detailed information on how the ultra-right attacks the democratic process (economic coercion, middle-of-the-night telephone calls, kinds of pressures on school boards and libraries) and what can be done to combat such attacks. This effort has special meaning for our affiliates, and we should encourage them to forward information on this aspect of the ultra-right activity.

2. A regional meeting has been held in Boston, and others are now being planned for Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle; we have urged our affiliates in those communities to cooperate in such endeavors. The Illinois Division has sparked organization of a "Communications Group" of interested organizations and individuals in the Chicago area who are concentrating on information-gathering and various educational activities (speakers, a list of suggested written materials and films, etc.) All this activity should help to break down the sense of isolation at the local level and enable strong opposition to be organized. A kit of materials is being developed by the Greenwich Conference Continuations Committee for use by all participating groups. In addition to the kit, plans are under way for production of a popular pamphlet which would contain suggestions for action.

3. The idea of a task force composed of representatives of different organizations available for training local leaders to oppose attacks on the democratic process by the ultra-right is a creative approach which, if fully implemented, could produce good results. Presumably such forces would not be needed in major metropolitan areas where existing organizations are strong and experienced in techniques, but would be needed in smaller communities where organization is not as great nor effective. There are unanswered questions such as how much time would be taken from normal national staff operations and the expense involved. Because of the small national staff of the ACLU these are serious problems; perhaps the cooperation of affiliates close to affected areas can be enlisted, or the assistance of ACLU members who are particularly skilled in a particular technique.

4. As the Conference discussion groups agreed, preventive action is needed so that there will be more community understanding of the dangers before attacks occur. Apart from continuing general education on civil liberties, in which our affiliates more and more are engaging, the suggestion has been made that the Union should sponsor full-page advertisements and/or special communications to groups likely to be attacked. Apart from the expense of such advertisements, which is quite high, the question arises again of the Union's commenting on the specific content of the ultra-right programs. Certainly a general advertisement could be written extolling the virtues of the democratic process. But most of the ultra-right attacks are quite specific and would place the Union in the position of evaluating all kinds of government policies and non-governmental organizations. For example, is it the Union's business to defend the United States NATO policies with countries Dr. Schwartz alleges are Communistic? Is it the Union's business to answer specific charges of Communist-sympathy against the National Council of Churches, or rather to urge the National Council of Churches to do so? I suggest it is not, and that our job is to work to keep the communication channels open for all groups to make their answer.

Certainly we should make every effort through our ACLU channels of communication to enlarge community understanding of civil liberties so as to reduce the effectiveness of ultra-right attacks, but this is part of our regular educational work and does not require a special project.

5. The role of the mass media naturally is of great importance. It was suggested at the Greenwich Conference that committees made up of local organizational representatives should visit editors and radio-TV stations in advance of ultra-right "crusades" to point up their danger to the democratic process. This is a good idea provided again that it is made clear that no effort is being made to hinder the right of an ultra-right group from presenting its opinions, or the right of the press to report the news as it sees fit. However, effort should be made to convince newspapers and radio-TV stations to editorialize on the ultra-right visit in the context of our civil liberties concern.

Another aspect of the problem is the growing use of radio-TV to air ultra-right commentators and the widely-publicized "anti-Communist schools," such as the recent three-hour Hollywood Bowl telecast of Dr. Schwartz's Anti-Communism School. Here, too, as the Union has always held, our job is not to insist that a particular commentator or program be kept on the air, but to encourage the widest diversity of opinion on controversial issues -- which is the station's obligation under the FCC law. The attached memorandum from Dorothy Dunbar Bromley explains our operational position in full.

Recommendation

The Board should endorse the Greenwich Conference recommendations, as qualified by the Comments in 1-5 above, within the ability of the national budget and staff resources.

New York 10, N.Y.

MINUTES
DUE PROCESS COMMITTEE MEETING
THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1959 - 4:30 P.M.
UNION'S OFFICES, 170 FIFTH Avenue, N.Y.C.

Present: Frank, presiding; Judge Kenyon, Paulsen and McKay.

Guests: Messrs. Gellhorn, Minkin.

Staff: Reitman, Watts and Wulf.

1. Native American Church v. Navajo Tribal Council. The Committee agreed that this case was properly within the jurisdiction of the Indian Civil Rights Committee, not the Due Process Committee.

2. Larche v. Hannah (Civil Rights Commission). Mr. Watts explained to the Committee that the issue before it for determination was whether the ACLU should or should not support the position of the Civil Rights Commission that it may subpoena witnesses on the basis of information supplied in sworn statements without informing the witnesses of the nature of the complaints against them, and without allowing the witnesses to confront and cross-examine the complainants. Mr. Watts supplemented the information provided in his memorandum of December 7, 1959, previously circulated to the Committee, by informing the Committee that the Supreme Court has agreed to hear this case on January 18,1960.

Judge Waring, being unavoidably absent from the meeting, asked Mr. Watts to inform the Committee that it was his view that the Government's right to be informed about the overriding issue of equal voting rights and the enforcement of federal law in this field outweighed in this case the right of witnesses to be confronted with their complainants.

Mr. Watts reported on a conference with Dean Johnson of the Civil Rights Commission who, recognizing the possibility that ACLU might appear in opposition to the constitutionality of these aspects of the Civil Rights Commission's current procedures, urges that we suggest a meaningful alternative suggestion that will allow the Commission to continue to function. Mr. Watts suggested in this respect that the Commission's second enumerated statutory duty ["study and collect information concerning legal developments constituting a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution;" §104(a)(2)] would allow the Commission to subpoena public officials without having received complaints against them if it was believed that useful and relevant information could be obtained from them.

With respect to #4 on p.2 of the December 7th memorandum, which stated that the Department of Justice officials had argued that the ACLU had not advanced hitherto the position that confrontation and cross-examination were necessary in Congressional hearings, it was pointed out that in 1954 we "heartily" supported S.Res. 256 (Kefauver et al) which was introduced to establish fair procedures in Congressional hearings. It provided, among other things, that persons adversely affected by testimony in a public hearing be entitled to recall the adverse witness for cross-examination and to introduce witnesses and documents in his own behalf.

During discussion, the following views in favor of the Commission's present practices were expressed:

The Commission, which by statute is in the executive branch of the government, fulfills an investigative, not an adjudicatory function. Consequently, it is no different than any other executive agency, pursuing its investigative function. For example, the FCC or the FTC will call in or visit persons or firms that it has reason to believe may be violating the law. There is certainly no burden on the investigators, at this stage, to advise the person or firm under investigation of the source of its information, no less allow cross-examination of the sources. If an adjudicatory proceeding is instituted, the accused party will at that time be entitled to his due process protections including confrontations, cross-examination, and a fair hearing in general.

Likewise, there is no parallel between the Civil Rights Commission's hearing and loyalty-security proceedings. The latter are adjudicatory, not investigative, and confrontation and cross-examination should be mandatory.

On the other hand, there is a resemblance between the Civil Rights Commission's hearings and grand jury proceedings. There, witnesses are not permitted to confront or cross-examine informants, but if an indictment is issued, the accused is allowed, at trial, to exercise these rights. The resemblance is pointed up by the terms of the statute creating the Commission which state that "the Commission shall investigate allegations in writing under oath or affirmation that certain citizens of the United States are being deprived of their right to vote and have that vote counted by reason of their color, race, religion or national origin."

The Commission hearings are in the nature of executive investigations. If evidence of a crime is disclosed against a witness, he will be entitled to his hearing in court, if he is prosecuted.

The Commission's hearings are not comparable to the hearing before the Un-American Activities Committee or the Internal Security Sub-Committee. In those cases our objections were that the hearings, although purportedly investigative were, in fact, conducted solely to expose the witnesses to public obloquy, and were therefore, in fact, adjudicatory.

The purposes, then, of a hearing are germane to a determination of the proper procedures to be followed for the sake of the witnesses.

It was also stated that the Goldfine or Hoffa hearings had not been the subject of ACLU criticism and that justification for our silence could be found only in the belief that the purpose of the hearings justified the manner in which they were conducted, or that the manner in which they were conducted were qualitatively different from hearings held before the Un-American Activities Committee - i.e., although given much publicity, they did not purport to adjudicate but were actually investigative.

The purposes of the Civil Rights Commission's hearings are most desirable in all respects. If its present procedures were to be disallowed, the Commission's work would come to a complete stop. Weighing the two alternatives, the agency's purpose justifies the procedures followed.

The following views in opposition to the Commission's present practices were expressed:

The salient fact to be borne in mind with respect to the Commission's hearings is that it is an official inquiry under compulsory process being conducted in a public forum, and that the testimony adduced may very well bear upon the commission of a crime. The efforts, therefore, to distinguish these hearings by comparing and contrasting them to other kinds of investigations carried on by the Executive branch, miss this crucial element.

Likewise, to assert that these hearings are proceedings in the Executive branch of the government (as they are by statute) overlooks the fact that they very much partake of the nature of legislative hearings - not only because they look and sound very much like legislative hearings, but also because the statute expressly invests the Commission with attributes of legislative investigations, namely, §104(b), which commands the Commission to report not only to the President, but to the Congress as well.

If these hearings in fact resembled grand jury proceedings, or preliminary investigations of an administrative body, there would probably be no dispute. But the resemblance is weak. Unless a grand jury issues an indictment, its proceedings remain secret (unless a presentment issues, but the NYCLU opposes presentments). If an indictment does issue, the accused will have his day in court.

An investigation by an administrative agency such as the FCC that does not come to the hearing stage, presumably remains in the agency's files and is not made public. If a hearing is held, the person or firm again has his day in court. Whatever public obloquy flows from a trial or full-fledged administrative hearing, is the unavoidable result of the administration of justice.

But the Civil Rights Commission's hearings and their consequences, are substantially different. First, the hearings with which we are concerned are public hearings. The testimony elicited may incriminate or degrade a witness. If so, public obloquy without trial may follow. The Commission, of course, could have turned the incriminating evidence over to the Department of Justice in the first instance. If Justice then sought an indictment, the regular consequence of an indictment or no-bill would follow. But by holding public hearings, the Commission runs the risk of exposing a defenseless witness to public scorn and yet reserves the right to turn incriminating evidence over to the Department of Justice. If grand jury proceedings are then initiated, its secretness has already been violated in the Commission's hearings at the witness' expense. If an indictment issues, the accused here will have a day in court. If no indictment issues, or if the Commission doesn't turn its information over to Justice in the first place, the witness is forever foreclosed from his day in court.

[It is to be noted that the ACLU did speak out concerning the Senate investigation of Dave Beck. We said that the investigation had been marked by lapses of fair procedures violative of due process. We expressed approval of the Committee's objectives, but said that its procedures may lessen its contribution in the important field of internal union democracy.]

A motion to support the respondents in Hannah v. Larche and in Hannah v. Slawson (i.e., to oppose the present procedures of the Commission) was defeated. It was agreed that if the Board affirms the Committee's action, that a thorough statement explaining our position be prepared by the chairman and the staff.

Re: Recommendation of the staff on Overstreet, The Strange Tactics of Extremism

The Union has been asked by the National Council of Churches whether we would purchase and distribute the paper-back edition of "The Strange Tactics of Extremism" by Bonaro and Harry Overstreet. The book previously mailed to the Board in hard-cover edition, analyzes the program of the John Birch Society and several other ultra-right organizations. The NCC as well as many other national organizations with whom the Union cooperates in a clearing house group on ultra-right problems (see page 3 of attached March 21, 1962 memorandum) are much concerned about ultra-right groups and particularly the large circulation presently being given to some of their publications, notably two pocket-books, "None Dare Call It Treason," by John Stormer and "A Voice Not an Echo" by Phyliss Schaffly whose combined circulation is estimated at close to 8 million. The NCC hopes that large public distribution of the Overstreets' book will help to offset what it regards as the harm being done to the democratic process by ultra-right groups and their publications.

The Union's traditional practice has been to avoid endorsing or disapproving the contents of any book while we defend its right to circulate. In its 1951 statement on pressure-group censorship the Board said: "In accordance with its long-established policy, the Union will refrain from expressing disapproval of the contents of any book...unless in the opinion of the Board, extraordinary circumstances necessitate such expression." While this policy statement dealt only with expressing disapproval of the contents of a book, it has implications for proposals to approve or endorse the content of a book.

In the view of several staff members who have read the Overstreets' book it contains generally useful information about the program and operations of ultra-right organizations. At the same time it attacks the way in which certain groups conduct their letter-writing and petition campaigns -- which may be taken as attacks on these civil liberties-protected techniques of expression. ACLU purchase and distribution of the book may well be regarded as an attack on the ultra-right itself -- as joining by ACLU in efforts to "expose" them.

The book issue symbolizes a dilemma which the office has faced since 1961 when the ultra-right phenomena came to be viewed as a direct threat to civil liberties. As the March, 1962 memorandum points up, the Union must both defend the civil liberties of ultra-right groups while also attacking their specific acts which infringe civil liberties. (See pages 2 and 5 of the memo). In recent months a great part of our activity in the Conference on Preserving the Democratic Process has been devoted to reminding other national organizations that while the end product of the ultra-right may seriously harm the democratic process, we can't adopt their tactics in opposing them. Many of the groups, under the heading of "exposure," are not reluctant to use the associational technique, for example, in illustrating the evil of particular groups. This is pronounced during this political campaign, and may become more so as the Conference on the Democratic Process plans to coordinate local affiliates of national agencies in counter-educational campaigns at the local level.

In our staff discussion several approaches to the problem of the Overstreets' book have been suggested.

1. We should not purchase or distribute copies of the Overstreets' book at all. Our function is simply to defend the civil liberties of individuals and groups, not to expose their program.

2. We should purchase copies and list them as available on our regular literature list. This would be a limited way of making the book available, consistent with the fact that many of the reprints on our literature list may contain material not wholly in accord with ACLU policy.

3. We should -- perhaps breaking precedent -- purchase copies and actively promote distribution of the book, by carrying a major book review in Civil Liberties. This review would make clear the precise differences between the Overstreets' civil liberties positions and others, and point out the civil liberties dangers in some of their analysis. However, it would conclude that because accurate information on the program of ultra-right groups is so important, particularly at local levels where ultra-right tactics may negatively affect civil liberties, we believe the Overstreets' book is a valuable resource.

My personal recommendation is that we adopt point 3.

In addition to deciding what specific action we should take on the Overstreets' book, the office would welcome guidance on the broader questions raised herein and the March, 1962 memo concerning the Union's role in generally exposing movements which ultimately threaten civil liberties.

STATEMENT OF AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION WITH REGARD TO THE REPORT OF THE WARREN COMMISSION

October 15, 1964

On December 6, 1963, the ACLU issued a statement about the Oswald case in which it expressed doubt about the propriety of his interrogation in the absence of counsel and criticized the local law enforcement agencies and the various mass media for the publicity given to the evidence supposed to have been uncovered. The Warren Report's treatment of these two matters has somewhat lessened our doubts about the first of them and plainly sustains our position with regard to the second. In addition the Report raises a question which deeply concerns us: the impact on individual liberty of strengthening security measures.

1. The Report accepts (200) * the testimony of various officials that Oswald had been advised of his right to remain silent and of his right to have a lawyer. This testimony is supported by various reports of Oswald's interrogation prepared by law enforcement agencies and printed in full in Appendix XI.

Thus Capt. Fritz of the Dallas police noted that Oswald had, on November 22nd, expressed a desire to consult John Abt (602) and on the next day had "reminded" the captain that he didn't have to talk until he had seen a lawyer (606). Oswald was then told he could use the jail telephone to call Abt collect and evidently made the attempt (606). Fritz's report, which is not dated, was made from "rough" notes and memory (611).

Three FBI agents made various reports contemporaneously. One, signed by both Hosty and Bookhout and dated November 23rd, stated that when the agents questioned Oswald on the previous day they had told him that anything he said could be used against him (612). Clements, in a report also dated November 23rd, expressly stated that Oswald had been advised on the 22nd that he need make no statement and that he had the right to get a lawyer (614). Bookhout in three separate reports dictated on the 24th stated that Fritz had, on the 22nd, told Oswald that he need make no statement (619, 621, 625). This last report also indicated that Oswald refused to discuss the picture showing him with a pistol and gun without the advice of counsel (625). And Inspector Kelley of the Secret Service noted in an undated report that Oswald had, on the 23rd, refused to answer questions about the pistol or gun until he had talked to a lawyer (629, but see 622). In another report dated the 29th Kelley stated that Oswald had, on the 24th, refused to talk further without a lawyer (630). Postal Inspector Holmes in a report dated December 17th stated that on November 24th Oswald was alert and was skillful in parrying questions he didn't want to answer.

Otherwise the Report adds nothing to what had previously been known about Oswald's attempts to reach Abt and his statement to the president of the Dallas Bar Association on the 23rd that if he couldn't get Abt he would like a lawyer from the ACLU (201).

On the basis of the foregoing, we do not feel that the authorities are subject to criticism for having questioned Oswald in the absence of any lawyer as the law does not yet prohibit this. It appears that Oswald understood his rights (see 606,

* The references are to the Government Printing Office edition of the Report.

609, 627) and had been willing to talk freely except on the subject of the two weapons. Moreover, he made no admissions of guilt (see 609, 613, 633). Since he had indicated a desire for a lawyer of his own choosing, the local bar appears to have fulfilled its responsibility when it offered assistance.

2. In dealing with the publicity given out by the law enforcement agencies the Report (231-242) stresses both that misinformation was widely disseminated because reports were issued without adequate scrutiny (231, 235, 237) and that Oswald's right to a fair trial was seriously impaired (238). The Report places the responsibility on the enforcement officers and the news media. Chief Curry was the main offender (231, 233). And District Attorney Wade is also criticized for having disclosed evidence despite his original recognition that it would be improper for him to do so (235, 236). The news media participated in this and so spread much misinformation (240) and impaired Oswald's right to a fair trial. "The court room, not the newspaper or television screen, is the appropriate forum in our system for the trial of a man accused of crime" (240). And the Report places part of the responsibility on the media for the confusion which impaired the security of Oswald's transfer from police headquarters and so made possible Ruby's shooting (240-242).

The Commission was unable to make any specific recommendations for lessening these evils beyond saying (27) that the bar, enforcement agencies, and news media should cooperate to establish ethical standards which, while safeguarding the public's right to information, will not sacrifice an accused's right to a fair trial. The ACLU, also, is not at this time prepared to make any comprehensive proposal. But we do believe that police and prosecutors should be prohibited from making any statement about the evidence adduced during their investigations, whether from the accused or from others.

3. The Report deals at great length with the necessity for improving security measures (426-469). Most of its recommendations relate to cooperation between the various agencies involved, which is, of course, highly desirable. But the Report also stresses the need for broadening the category of persons who might be dealt with as "dangerous" (26, 461, 462). While it does not specifically propose any new method for dealing with them it stresses the importance of not creating "even the suggestion of a garrison state" (427) and expresses the hope that its recommendations be accomplished "without any impairment of our fundamental liberties" (469).

The Report does not refer to Mr. Hoover's statement in his testimony (as reported in the press on October 1, 1964) that anything like house arrest of such persons would be contrary to our traditions, but does quote him as saying that the new criteria proposed "might, if not properly handled, result in some degree of interference with the personal liberty of those involved" (462). We fully support Mr. Hoover's position against house arrest or other detention of suspects.

We believe that explicit instructions should be given to all agencies concerned with the safety of the President that there be no harassment of suspicious characters, no leaks about them to unauthorized persons. It would be very unfortunate if the demand for increased security should result in the FBI becoming involved or in local police obtaining too much power. And it is essential, therefore, that this function be restricted to security agencies whose employees have all been thoroughly trained in the necessity for the preservation of individual liberty. Only in this way can the dangers adverted to by Mr. Hoover and the Commission be minimized.

RE: Procedure in acting on Church-State Committee recommendations submitted to affiliates for advice.

Last June the Church-State Committee, culminating two years of study, submitted three issues, on which its own votes had been sharply divided, to the affiliate boards for advice:

1. Tax exemption for churches;
2. Public aid to church-related colleges and universities; and
3. Shared time.

Responses were requested on or before October 13th to permit submission to the board at its October 26th meeting (and such additional meetings as might be required for disposition of the issues).

As of October 13th responses had been received from only 8 affiliates, several of them addressed to only one or two of the three issues. Several other affiliates earnestly requested additional time within which to study and debate one or more of the issues further. Having participated in the Church-State Committee's own prolonged deliberations of them I find it impossible not to be wholly sympathetic with these requests. The issues warrant such additional effort.

No external circumstances compel action within the time contemplated by the original deadlines, though the public attention being given especially to the two issues affecting church-related schools underscores the operational importance of our resolving them as soon as is consistent with thorough consideration.

I recommend that the board defer consideration of all three issues and provide specially for additional consideration to be given the shared time issue. A wide variety of shared time proposals may be expected to be considered by local boards of education throughout the nation in the foreseeable future. Of the three shared time is the one on which thorough participation in the Union's decision-making, on the part of state and local ACLU leaders and members, may thereafter bring the greatest benefit to our operations.

I propose, therefore, that the shared time issue be referred again to affiliates with the additional request that they submit it, if they so choose, to their membership for discussion and advice under the terms of the 1964 Biennial Conference recommendation that:

> 6. The national Board shall inform the affiliates of important issues which it has under consideration but which do not require immediate action; that the affiliates may, in their discretion, call membership meetings to debate such issues; and that they shall transmit to the national Board a summary of the views there expressed.

I further suggest that this issue be one of those scheduled for determination at the first "plenary meeting" of the national board held under the 1964 Biennial Conference recommendation for affiliate representation on the board (now being implemented by the Constitution Committee). I believe that meeting could be scheduled for a date in the second half of March 1965, in which event resolutions adopted by membership meetings and advice submitted by affiliate boards (which should be solicited whether or not membership action is taken) would be timely if received by March 1.

I propose, if the board determines upon that procedure for disposing of the shared time issue, that the remaining two issues also be referred again for the advice of affiliate boards in the normal manner, with a deadline of February 1, 1965, set for receipt by the office of responses which will then be brought before the board at its next succeeding regular meeting.

Dear Sirs:

Here in Columbus, Ohio, which for civil liberties issues might as well be Columbus, Mississippi, in many ways, we just hit a new legal problem. I hope you can be some help to us in sharing with us any research your office may have done regarding this problem or a similar problem.

The problem is as follows:

About a week ago some funds were collected by four organizations. The North Columbus Friends Meeting (our local Quaker Meeting, which is relatively conservative and enjoys a good reputation in the community), the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, the Fellowship of Reconciliation, and the local student Peace Union (which has been active in picketting and public protests against the Cuban situation, bomb testing, etc.) these funds to be used to pay for an advertisement in the local Columbus Dispatch. The Columbus Dispatch has a tremendous circulation in this city, and it also controls the Citizen-Journal, the only other paper of any substantial circulation in the City of Columbus.

The advertisement (I can furnish you a photostatic copy of this if you feel this is necessary) made some quote from Krushchev in his letter which started relieving the Cuban crisis, this quote being to the effect that we must all strive for peace, made some quote from Kennedy, this being in his answering letter to Khrushchev, and this quote being to the effect that we must all work for world peace, went on to state that we had all stood on the brink of nuclear holocaust and backed away from it, then concluded by urging that we make earlier use of the United Nations and that we not come into the United Nations with decisions irrevocably made and minds closed to the issues involved. The ad then stated that if the reader agreed with the principles therein stated, it would be appreciated if he would send a donation of $1.00 or more to an address designated in the ad. The address was a street address of a member of our Friends Meeting.

The ad was refused by the Dispatch and the Citizen-Journal and these papers refused to give any reason why they refused the ads.

What can we do about this legally?

As I look at this case, it would require a tremendous amount of initial legal research to come to a conclusion concerning legal rights. Possibly someone in your office has done this legal research. The preliminary research I did over about an hour and a half period was discouraging. Most of the talk was, of course, about freedom of the press, and the discussion of freedom from restraint from the outside, without any discussion of the question of restraint of outsiders by the press. If the press is looked on as an entirely private enterprise, despite the fact that in Columbus,Ohio, the newspaper field is a monopoly, then it could refuse an ad for any reason or no reason. If the paper is vested with a public interest, then it should be permitted to refuse only ads which are libelous, lewd, etc.

We don't want to be gagged here in Columbus by the throw-back reactionary newspapers we have. Little as we like to give our money to them, we do want to be granted the right to purchase paid advertising space in the paper from time to time.

I am inclined, if we can find any legal basis for it, to bring a mandamus action against the papers directly in the Supreme Court of Ohio, and, after probably being defeated there, appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. I believe that if we could find any legal precedent, the Supreme Court of the United States would be interested in passing on a case like this.

Any work I do on this case will be without compensation. Will you please give me the benefit of any research you have done or could do on this matter? I'd like to hear something, if at all possible, in about a week.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Stanley U. Robinson, Jr.

Dear Mr. Robinson:

This will reply to your letter of November 12, 1962 in which you raise the problem that is presented by the refusal of the "Columbus Dispatch" to print an advertisement concerning the Cuban crisis that was drafted by the Friends, the WILFPF, the FOR, and the SPU.

First, it is the position of the ACLU that a newspaper is entitled to accept or reject any advertising matter as it pleases. Second, I know of no statute or case that requires that a newspaper accept advertising matter regardless of its content. The only kind of related regulations that come to mind are state anti-discrimination statutes, such as in New York, which forbid places of public accommodation from advertising that they exclude racial and religious groups.

Although ACLU policy holds that newspapers are free to reject whatever advertising they choose to, this does not mean that we do not realize the serious limitations that this imposes in cases such as the one that your letter relates. If a newspaper is truly to serve its proper purpose, it ought not carry over its editorial policies from its editorial page to its news columns or advertising policies. But this is a problem of the conscience of the publisher. It is our feeling that to impose an affirmative duty upon newspapers to accept all advertising matter is a threat to the freedom of the press, on the theory that such a step would tend to break down the insulation that stands between the press and the government. It is paradoxical perhaps that in the case you pose, this policy works in fact to disadvantage of free speech, but we think that the better remedy is not governmental sanctions but rather efforts towards educating the publisher of his public responsibility. The entire problem, of course, is exacerbated where there is a newspaper monopoly in a community for then an irresponsible publisher is in a position not only to keep out of his news columns information with which he disagrees but is even able to prevent such viewpoints from being circulated in paid advertisements.

There is a related problem that concerns balanced programming in radio and television. Our point of view there is somewhat difference in respect to newspapers because of the natural limitations of the wave length that impose a strict limitation on the number of broadcasting stations that can be constructed. Therefore, we have supported the mandate in the Federal Communications Act that calls for some kind of balance in programming, although we have opposed any inquiry by the Federal Communications Commission into the contents of particular programs. Rather, it is the responsibility of the FCC to look at the programming of a station in its entirety and to determine whether it is serving the public's interest, convenience and necessity.

There are those, including some within the ACLU, who believe there is an inconsistency in the ACLU position in broadcasting as compared to newspaper publishing. They say that our distinction between the two forms of communication media is unrealistic because it is fanciful to say that it is any easier to begin publication of a newspaper than to obtain a license to operate a television station. Again, the increasing number of communities that have either a single newspaper or newspapers owned by a single publisher may bear this out in part.

The House Anti-Trust Subcommittee is beginning an investigation early next year into mergers in newspaper publication. We have been asked to give the Committee our views on the problems that such an investigation will necessarily raise, principally how to avoid having the investigation take on the appearance of interfering with the freedom of the press. Our Free Speech Committee is meeting at the end of this month to discuss that problem and I will bring before it at the same time the issue you raised in your letter.

I look forward to your response to this letter.

Dear Miss Pauley:

It was thoughtful of you to send along the name of Fred and Florence Robin as contacts for an ACLU affiliate in Atlanta. I know Fred quite well; in fact, he was an assistant director of the Union for a few years in the late 1940's and interviewed me for my first job with the Union in 1949. The Robins are talented, and would be of real help to the affiliate. We'll certainly be in touch with them.

Dear Dr. Ladd:

Leslie Dunbar of the Southern Regional Council told me several weeks ago about the plans for the interim group that we hope will come into being and spark the organization of an ACLU affiliate in Atlanta. He mentioned that a meeting of the group had been arranged, I believe, for the early part of March. As we naturally are eager to see if our hopes can be realized, I would like to know if the meeting has been held, or what the prospects are. Could you fill me in?

On a separate but related matter, we are beginning to receive inquiries from persons concerning the course on Communism that is supposed to be taught in the Georgia schools, under a law passed by the legislature a few years ago. I remember that when I was in Atlanta someone said this law was not being vigorously enforced, or at least that our civil liberties concern that indoctrination would result from such a course had not materialized. Is this report accurate? Could you send me whatever information you have about the course? Many thanks for your cooperation.

PUBLIC AID TO CHURCH-RELATED INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION

(MAJORITY POSITION ADOPTED BY THE CHURCH-STATE COMMITTEE AT ITS MEETING ON JUNE 1, 1963)

I.

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof ...". When applied to private schools and colleges, this principle means that no public funds or financial assistance shall be used to aid or support any institution the educational program of which is designed by those who control it to foster religion through instruction, practices, or religious exercises. (This does not foreclose, however, government practices -- such as are specified in II.B. below -- which, since they do not represent the type of financial assistance prohibited by the First Amendment, may validly involve such institutions.)

Not every activity of a religious group is necessarily a religious activity. It is the nature of the activity looked at as a whole, rather than the nature of the sponsor, which is the important factor. Hence, the mere affiliation of an educational institution with, or its sponsorship by, any church, sect, denomination or religious society does not necessarily bar the educational institution from public funds. Other features of the institution's activity must be examined to determine its eligibility. These should be such that they can be determined without too much difficulty by a public administrator or court of law.

Schools or colleges which engage in any of the following practices do foster religion and are therefore prohibited from receiving any public funds or financial assistance:

1. Faculty members or students are required to be members of a religious organization or are required to subscribe to any particular belief, or to any opinion whatsoever, as a condition of employment, admission or graduation.

2. Any student is required to attend religious services or participate in religious programs.

3. Any student is required to register for courses or to attend classes designed to foster religious doctrines. (This does not relate to objectively presented courses about religion such as comparative religion or the history of religion.)

4. Any student is subject to disciplinary measures based solely on religious grounds.

5. Instruction or educational activity is conducted in classrooms displaying religious symbols, pictures, or objects.

In all of the foregoing criteria, wherever the words "religion" or "religious" occur they may be understood as referring to an organized church, sect, denomination, body or association of such bodies.

II.

A. We believe that the following forms of public financial assistance are prohibited by the constitutional principle embodied in the First Amendment to the institutions of higher education described by any of the criteria stated in I, above:

1. General federal or state grants for such purposes as:

   a. construction of buildings, facilities, or equipment
   b. faculty salaries or general instructional costs
   c. costs of operation and maintenance.

2. Per capita grants from public funds on the basis of the number of students attending or graduated.

3. Scholarships to students from public funds for the purpose of attending a seminary or divinity school.

4. Loans from public funds for the construction of buildings, facilities, or equipment.

B. We see no objection on constitutional or civil liberties grounds (although we express no opinion as to their desirability from a policy point of view) to the involvement of any accredited institution of higher education in the following programs, since we do not believe they represent the type of use of public funds or financial assistance prohibited by the First Amendment:

1. Grants from public funds through reasonable contracts for specified projects of research required by the national interest and of non-religious import.

2. Tax deductions for the educational expenses of persons who are in attendance at accredited colleges or universities.

3. Public scholarships and fellowships to aid students to attend accredited colleges or universities of their choice; provided that the scholarships or fellowships

   a. Are awarded in public competition on the basis of academic ability, scholarly achievement, or professional aptitude (but not to include attendance at a seminary or divinity school); or

   b. Are granted in reward for specified services to the country, which may have affected the recipient's educational opportunities.

4. Public loans to aid qualified students to attend accredited colleges or universities for scholarly or professional purposes (but not to include attendance at a seminary or divinity school) provided the loans are based on academic ability, scholarly achievement or professional aptitude.

5. Tax exemptions on properties or income of non-profit institutions not including income from properties or activities that are unrelated to educational purposes.

STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF MAJORITY POSITION
OF ACLU CHURCH-STATE COMMITTEE re: PUBLIC
AID TO PRIVATE COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

This memo is written in support of the "majority" position of the ACLU Church-State Committee respecting public aid to church-related colleges and universities.

The majority position is substantially the same as the traditional one which has been followed by the ACLU in the past. Some of the underlying premises in the traditional ACLU position have been explicitly set forth in the majority statement. The philosophic bases of the majority position are contained within the statement itself.

However, there were at least two other views which received support within the Committee. They were diametrically opposed to one another and, to a greater or lesser extent, opposed to the majority position.

Re: Opposing Viewpoint Supporting Aid to Church-Related Colleges and Universities

One of these opposing views differs with the majority's in two respects: It holds that (1) the criteria used by the majority to differentiate between church-related colleges (to which public aid may not be given) and non-church-related colleges are unwise and exclude too many private colleges; and (2) some types of aid the majority deemed prohibited to church-related colleges might constitutionally be given to them.

The majority position set forth criteria to distinguish between church-related colleges and universities and non-church-related institutions. The criteria seemed to us a fair way to distinguish between institutions of higher learning primarily devoted to education and those in which religious indoctrination was a significantly important goal. It should be pointed out that the criteria used for colleges and universities are in a few respects different from those applicable to elementary and public schools, account having been taken of the fact that students in colleges and universities are less susceptible to certain influences than younger children. Thus, the wearing of religious garb by some faculty members does not disqualify a college or university from receiving public aid where it would have that effect in an elemenatary or secondary school.

As for the types of prohibited and permitted financial assistance, we believe they look to the substance rather than the form of particular types of assistance. Thus we believe per capita grants to church-related colleges based on the students attending the same are as much assistance to such institutions as grants for construction purposes or faculty salaries.

Re: Opposing Viewpoint which Would Exclude More Colleges and Universities from Public Aid

Another opposing view holds that the majority position is not broad enough and those holding this view would exclude from public aid not only colleges and universities which follow any of the forbidden practices enunciated in the majority position, but, in addition would exclude colleges which do not follow any of the prohibited practices so long as they are controlled by a church group. The majority rejected this view, I believe, because they felt that the practices at a college are what determines whether or not it is church-related for constitutional purposes -- not the affiliation of the college with any pariticular religious group. Further, control is too difficult to define in this context in a meaningful way and might be used to discriminate unfairly between schools affiliated with one religious group and those affiliated with another. For example, it would be unfair to prohibit aid to Fordham University, which is affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church and to allow it to American University, which is affiliated with the Methodist Church, if the practices followed at both schools were the same (a fact on which I express no opinion here, having used both universities for hypothetical purposes only).

A final point -- the majority view confines itself to the civil liberties issues only. It is not concerned, anymore than the ACLU is, with such policy considerations as

(1) Whether public aid for any colleges and universities is desirable from an educational, fiscal or other policy point of view;

(2) Whether church-related colleges and universities offer a better or poorer education than non-church-related institutions.

(3) Whether church-related institutions promote religious bias;

(4) Whether church-related institutions help fulfill national defense or similar objectives.

These policy considerations, and others, are important and should be weighed carefully by all persons. However, they are not considerations relevant to the ACLU's limited role as a guardian of constitutional and civil liberties and should play no part in its determinations.

AMENDMENT PROPOSED BY MR. GREENAWALT TO THE COMMITTEE
STATEMENT ON PUBLIC AID TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION

The following is the text of Kenneth Greenawalt's proposed amendment of the first paragraph of Part I of the committee "majority" statement, as excerpted from the March 27, 1963 Church-State Committee minutes. Mr. Greenawalt has requested that his amendment be circulated to the Committee for the purpose of this mail poll.

> "[Mr. Greenawalt] moved that the first paragraph [of the Committee statement] be amended to read as follows:
> > The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof...'. This principle means, when applied to private schools and colleges, that no public funds or financial assistance shall be used to aid or support any institution of learning wholly or in part under the control, direction or support of any religious institution or in which the educational program is designed by those who control it to foster religion through instruction, practices, or religious exercises at the school or college.
> His motion also urged the striking of the second sentence of the second paragraph of [Part I of the Committee statement], beginning 'Hence...'."

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF COMMITTEE STATEMENT ON PUBLIC AID TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION

I have studied the "final" form of the statement on "Public Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Learning" and would endorse it with the exception of Section #3 in the third paragraph, which reads "Any student is required to register for courses or to attend classes designed to foster religious doctrines. (This does not relate to objectively presented courses about religion such as comparative religion or the history of religion.)" I would want this section deleted on the following grounds:

A. It is unenforceable. "To foster religious doctrines" refers to the intention or aim of the instructor and that is impossible -- or at least very difficult -- to ascertain.

B. It is educationally unwise, especially in higher education. I think a passionately committed teacher, anxious to persuade and indoctrinate, is often the very best kind of teacher, provocative, stimulating, exciting. As a matter of fact, I even believe that a passionate advocacy of Communism would be illuminating and exciting educationally. I do not think students at the college or university level are likely to be swept away by such indoctrination. President Grayson Kirk in his recent Commencement address argues that college students are mature enough to evaluate such advocacy (he was speaking about Communism) and to see its weak points and inadequacies. I should say the same thing about attempts "to foster religious doctrine."

C. It stacks the cards against the advocacy of religious doctrines held by organized churches, sects, denominations, etc. and is the very opposite of neutrality. Neutrality would demand that a clause be added prohibiting equally any course designed to foster disbelief in religious doctrines, any course designed to subvert, ridicule, or cast doubt upon any religious doctrines. I should find that a shocking invasion of the freedom of teaching, and I must also judge #3 to be such an unwarranted invasion.

If the motion to delete does not prevail, I must reserve the right to attack the inclusion of #3 as vigorously as I can in public and private. I should certainly want my objection to it recorded.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF COMMITTEE STATEMENT ON PUBLIC AID TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION

In response to the Committee's majority "Statement on Public Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Education", I would move that we adopt Part I, 1 & 2 as representing our position and omit the rest.

My reason for moving to delete the remainder of the memorandum stems from a firm conviction that the notion or concept of "neutrality" with respect to matters affecting religion can only lead to a position that limits "the free exercise thereof" and gives preferential treatment to all other viewpoints.

My position is that on the level of accredited higher education the notion of "neutrality" and "objectivity" is a fiction. Everything taught in a university involves commitment to a particular viewpoint, methodology or ideology. This is as true in philosophy, the social sciences, and English, for example, as it is in religion. Further, the future of a "free society" depends for its realization upon the exposure of students to every possible kind of ideological commitment. To conduct the educational venture otherwise would be to divorce certain passionate intellectuals from participating in the task of the creation and preservation of a truly human society.

I am naturally aware that many, if not most, of our committee reject the implications of the possition that regards religion as ideology and/or methodology. I am also aware that the definition of religion in terms of traditional cultic or confessional association and whether or no one "claims" to be religious is a more manageable definition for those concerned with law and church-state constitutional questions. However, some of us on the committee are primarily students of religion as distinguished from law and also from religious leaders interested in legal aspects of church-state questions. Perhaps the traditional categories for dealing with the definition and implications of religion in contemporary society are outdated? Can a free society truly survive without at least a protest that suggests that new avenues are needed to deal with these questions?

In conclusion I offer two comments about our work thus far. First, as I review our interests over the past two years I think we have raised as many questions involving academic freedom as church-state. Perhaps we ought meet together? Secondly I think much constructive thinking about religion in our committee is handicapped by the traditional liberal's fear of Roman Catholicism. I am increasingly more concerned about the effect of this mentality upon the future of religion and free inquiry in a free society than I am about the threat posed by any religious minority group. If the debate between these two mentalities could be confronted as an "ideological" and "methodological" conflict by our members, then the task of this committee would be completely recast.

PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE MOTION FOR COMMITTEE
STATEMENT ON PUBLIC AID TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION

There are three reasons why I dissent from the basic approach of the majority of my brothers on the Church-State Committee:

1) Their approach is not adequate to deal with the civil liberties problems of public aid to higher education.

2) Their approach is not consistent with the stand taken by ACLU in the South Carolina unemployment benefits case.

3) Their approach makes ACLU a religiously partisan organization.

1) Adequacy of approach: There are some special Church-State problems in public aid to higher education, but they are not the only civil liberties problems. My most fundamental objection to the Committee's proposal is that it is not linked with proposals from other relevant committees, such as the Committee on Academic Freedom. If ACLU approaches public aid to higher education solely from the Church-State point of view, it will be gravely deficient in its concern for civil liberties.

The greatest danger in public aid to higher education is not that the churches will use it to subvert the government but that the politicians will use it to subvert education. One has only to think of what Southern politicians have done with public school systems. They have used them to perpetuate the myths of white supremacy and of the right of nullification. Again, one need only think of the problems of academic freedom in state universities and colleges throughout the nation. No one could seriously contend that those problems are less grievous than similar problems in private and church-related institutions.

In our day and age, governmental support of education at all levels is absolutely necessary. The problem is how to prevent this support from turning into domination of education. To my mind, there is only one way: by keeping the government neutral towards diverse systems of education.

If the government supports only one type of education, that type will prevail. If government supports all types of education which meet recognized academic standards, then those types will survive which the citizens freely choose. If church-related colleges and universities are to pass from the American academic scene, they should disappear as a result of the free choice of parents, students, and teachers -- not as a result of economic disadvantages imposed by politicians or any dominant majority.

2) Consistency of position: Intellectual consistency is not the supreme virtue, but neither is it negligible. I do not see how ACLU can argue that government must accommodate some financial programs to religious pluralism but not others.

The same day that the Supreme Court outlawed the Lord's Prayer and devotional

Bible-reading in the public schools, the Court also held that South Carolina must give unemployment benefits to a Seventh Day Adventist whose reason for being unemployed was that her conscience forbade her to work on Saturday. ACLU supported both decisions of the Supreme Court.

These decisions can be reconciled in terms of accommodating governmental programs, such as public schools and unemployment benefits, to the religious pluralism of our country. The Supreme Court was at pains in both cases to emphasize that the traditional and fundamental Church-State principle is the neutrality of the government. As I understand it, this is also ACLU's position.

It seems to me that consistency requires objection to economic burdens in the area of higher education as well as in the matters of Sunday closing laws or unemployment benefits. Surely the right to an education consistent with conscience is not less precious than the right to conduct a business or to public assistance during periods of involuntary unemployment.

A majority of the Church-State Committee would disqualify church-related colleges and universities from any substantial participation in public aid to higher education. Such disqualification would obviously create a serious economic burden on those whose conscience requires an integration of secular and religious knowledge. I do not see how the Committee can reconcile this disqualification with the position ACLU took in the South Carolina case.

3) Religious neutrality: The Committee's majority proposal is based on a concept of Church and State which has been rejected by the Supreme Court and by many American intellectuals. That concept interprets "separation" to mean "segregation." Separation of Church and State is a fundamental constitutional principle, but it makes a lot of difference whether "separation" means "segregation" or "neutrality." The two most recent decisions of the Supreme Court emphasize once again that familiar legal practices must sometimes be changed in order to preserve governmental neutrality and the equality of all religions before the law.

In the past ACLU has been identified with opposition to coordination of governmental programs with organized religions, whatever their creed. The Committee's proposal will certainly reinforce this reputation. True religious neutrality would seem to require that ACLU be just as opposed to laws which give an enormous practical advantage to unorganized religions such as agnosticism or secularism.

Even in its opposition to governmental coordination with organized religions, ACLU has not been consistent. It has supported changes in the laws which would be favorable to Jews and Seventh Day Adventists. There is one organized religion, however, with which ACLU finds itself in almost constant disagreement on Church-State matters: Roman Catholicism. Since ACLU is a religiously neutral organization, the fact of such disagreement is certainly worth special attention from both parties.

If it is wrong for the government to support any orthodoxy, it is just as wrong for the government to support the brotherhood of man as it is for the government to support the Fatherhood of God. If it is right for the government to support some orthodoxies but not religious orthodoxies, some distinction must be found between those principles which are religious and those which are not. This the Committee's proposal does not do -- except in terms of organized religious orthodoxies.

For these reasons it seems to me that the Commitee's proposal is inadequate, inconsistent, and religiously partisan. As a result, I make the following motion:

Resolved, that the majority proposal be stricken entirely and the following statement substituted therefor:

STATEMENT ON PUBLIC AID TO HIGHER EDUCATION

The reconciliation of academic freedom with governmental support and regulation of education is one of the enduring problems of civil liberty. In the field of higher education, on whose excellence and creativity the other levels of education depend, this problem is particularly acute. If the Federal Government embarks upon substantially increased programs of support of higher education, we believe that the following principles should be followed:

1) Unrestricted grants and loans, to be used at the discretion of the recipient institutions for construction, salaries, or other educational expenses, should not be made available to any institution, because

   a) the Federal Government has an inalienable responsibility for the proper use and expenditure of Federal funds; and

   b) such grants and loans, since they go to meet current operating expenses, tend to make the recipient institutions totally dependent on the Federal Government.

2) Restricted grants and loans, to be used for clearly defined national interests in education, should be made available to all accredited institutions of higher learning, public and private, demominational and non-demominational, because

   a) such neutrality of the Federal Government towards diverse systems and philosophies of education will help preserve governmental neutrality towards religious pluralism in our country; and

   b) such clearly defined purposes for the funds will help delimit the area of Federal regulation and thus preserve the legitimate autonomy of educational institutions, both public and nonpublic.

3) Accredited institutions of higher learning should not be eligible for Federal aid for those departments within the institution which require students or faculty members to subscribe or conform to any creed, theistic, atheistic, or agnostic, because

   a) such requirement of belief or conformity is not a legitimate object of Federal assistance; and

   b) such departments or institutions as divinity schools should be totally free from governmental interference or assistance.

4) So far as possible, Federal aid should be given on an individual basis, through such media as tax deductions or credits, and through scholarships and student loans based on merit and need, because

   a) such individualization of aid will help guarantee individual freedom of choice; and

   b) such individualism of aid will help minimize direct governmental dealings with academic institutions, whether public or nonpublic.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF COMMITTEE STATEMENT ON PUBLIC AID TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION

1. I believe that our purposes are well served by concise statement and would therefore argue that all of Part II might be deleted, leaving Part I as a general and I think excellent statement of principle. I have to concede on the other hand that there is virtue in the view you have advanced, Jack, that we spell out in some detail the forms of public assistance that we approve and disappprove, and I therefore indulge in a small commentary on Part II.

2. With respect to Section A of Part II, I agree without exception.

3. I similarly agree with Paragraphs 1, 2, and 5 of Section B of Part II.

4. I would support Paragraph 3b of Part II for the same reason that I do not disapprove of the use of public funds for the maintenance of chaplains in the military forces -- those who serve would otherwise be deprived of the free exercise of religion by the state. Scholarships and fellowships to ex-servicemen, as under the GI Bill of Rights, may therefore be looked upon both as restitution of a kind for state-induced deprivations and as a reward for service to country.

5. I would oppose Paragraph 3a, however, and all of Paragraph 4 on the ground that these two provisions largely nullify the principles set forth in Part I and I think therefore that they should be excised. Both scholarships and loans would seem to me to constitute assistance to schools and colleges that indulge in the practices condemned in Part I, even though here the assistance may be said to be indirect. It is a gray area, to be sure, but we have to draw the line somewhere, and these two items seem to me to begin to circumvent our principles. I would also have grave doubts about the constitutionality of these two provisions, and would therefore have difficulty in subscribing to the preamble of Section B.

6. This is probably not the place to re-argue the entire case with Father Whelan, but I must confess that I fail to find merit in his contentions. I have a comment on each of them, as follows:

1. Adequacy of approach. Father Wheland believes that "If church-related colleges and universities are to pass from the American academic scene, they should disappear as a result of the free choice of parents, students, and teachers -- not as a result of economic disadvantages imposed by politicians or any dominant majority.' But they began precisely as a result of the free choice of founders and parents who were willing and indeed glad to find financial support for them. They suffer no new deprivation if they do not now share in government aid.

2. Consistency of position. The inconsistency Father Whelan discerns in the case of the Seventh Day Adventist is illusory. The fact that her religion does not disqualify her for unemployment benefits by no means implies that it qualifies her to receive government funds for the support of Seventh Day Adventist schools. The Constitution neither disqualifies her for the one nor qualifies her for the other. This is the genius in the two clauses of the First Amendment.

3. Religious neutrality. Father Whelan's argument here requires one to agree that agnosticism is a form of relgiion and that neutrality is a form of partisanship. I can only say that I regard this as a curious use of the English language.

MEMORANDUM

From: Spencer Coxe, Executive Director
To: Freedom of Expression Committee

Subj: Shared Time Arrangements in Area Technical Schools

In January 1963, the Committee discussed "shared time" and resolved that "ACLU should oppose any program of shared time which would involve a substantial alteration in the program or activities of the public school system in order to compass ends other than education of public school children." The Committee decided that shared time programs should not be opposed per se, but indicated a desire to review any specific program.

One of our members, William M. Pye, Jr., who is on the Upper Gwynned School Board now asks us to consider whether or not the plans for area technical schools, to be open to non-public school children, constitutes a violation of separation. Mr. Pye is being invited to the meeting, as is Harry E. Sprogell, Esq. (Mr. Sprogell is one of our Board members, was formerly a school Board member in Gwynned, and has discussed the problem with Mr. Pye.)

Act 463 of the 1963 Session of the Pennsylvania General Assembly establishes a legal framework for the development of "area vocational-technical education at the secondary level." It provides for the establishment of new vocational schools offering courses in 25 vocational subjects, from foundry work to beauty culture. Students who sign up for courses in these schools will continue to attend their regular high school for academic courses, but will spend part of their school day in the technical school. The area technical schools will be created by the County Board of Education, and individual school districts within the area to be served will sign up to participate. The technical schools will be supported partly by the local school districts whose students are making use of them, and partly by additional state funds. The technical schools will be open to students from non-private schools, apparently on the same basis as for students from public schools.

The county Boards are now in the process of deciding where to create the technical schools (and how many to create) by circulating questionnaires in all the high schools to determine student interest in the 25 courses. In Montgomery County, a "tabulation of student interest survey" has been prepared, indicating that a questionnaire was circulated in 5 high schools including Lansdale Catholic High School. A total of 1251 students indicated an interest in technical courses (648 boys and 613 girls); of this total 144 were students at Lansdale Catholic.*

* Sociological Note: Beauty Culture is the most popular "technical" subject among Catholic and non-Catholic alike, and is slightly more popular among Catholics than non-Catholics.

2. Shared time recognizes the reality of a major religious group, numbering over 40 million Americans, intent upon a Catholic education for every Catholic child. The realization of this purpose is possible only with public assistance. Opponents of shared time might well ponder the question: How long will it be possible to resist this drive for tax aid; and, if we are unsuccessful in resisting it, what will be the result for public education?

In a word, opponents of shared time apparently assume that the status quo is irrevocable and unchangeable. It is exceedingly dangerous to rest on the assumption that pressures for public aid to parochial schools will forever be successfully resisted.

3. The plan would afford the opportunity for several hundred thousand children - those who might otherwise attend a church-related high school full time - to "rub shoulders" with public school youngsters. These helpful contacts would take place in the democratic atmosphere of the public school, and therefore would have a meaningful influence on the children affected. As Sister Annette Walters, C.S.J., said in Religious Education (all references to this publication are to the January-February, 1962 issue), shared time would "effect an orderly transition from the relative isolation of the Catholic school to a broader participation of children and youth in the activities of their non-Catholic peers. Some Catholic educators and parents might even welcome the opportunity afforded by shared time to break down the so-called 'ghetto mentality' or parochialism supposedly engendered by the Catholic school environment consonant with his religious faith."

Thus the plan would make possible an integrated educational experience for many among our school population who would otherwise remain complete strangers, at least during some part of their school life. Doubtless, all will agree that religious segregation, not unlike racial segregation, deprives young people of a culturally enriching life experience. Shared time could well serve to lessen existing divisiveness and mistrust.

4. The plan should reduce the current pressures on the public school to provide a greater religious emphasis than is constitutionally permitted. As Richard Upsher Smith, former chairman of the Committee on Weekday Religious Education of the National Council of Churches, said in his comment in Religious Education: "We would free them [the public schools] to do well what is within their province and not expect them to deal with necessary but divisive or controversial religious questions." Thomas J. VanLoon, director of Staff Services, General Board of Education of the Methodist Church, expressed the same thought in that symposium: "Shared time programs may well see a decrease in practices judged sectarian in the public school since these emphases presumably would be the province of home and church. Improved intergroup and community relations might well result."

5. Proponents of shared time must necessarily recognize that the plan would be inoperable without a commensurate expansion of public school facilities and an increase in the number of teachers. In any event, with more Catholic children attending the public schools it might be expected that the controversy over federal aid to church-related schools will be lessened, and that increased taxes and bond issues to expand and improve public school education will receive wider support. Thus, one of the problems currently responsible for undermining interreligious relationships might diminish in intensity or, perhaps, even disappear.

If this prediction proves to be untrue, it would follow that shared time could not become a reality, for without an expansion of public school facilities and an increase in teaching personnel the plan would simply be inoperable, and support for it should be withdrawn. In no event should shared time be responsible for an increase in class size or double sessions and a consequent diminution in the effectiveness of the public school.

6. It is argued that shared time will impose an insuperable scheduling burden upon school administrators. If, indeed, this is true, that is an end to the matter, and there is nothing further to discuss. However, the shared time proposal necessarily assumes that the administrative problem can and will be resolved, so that this phase of the question should not be an issue except among specialists concerned with scheduling techniques.

7. It is sometimes said that shared time is but an extension of released time. This is a misconception; the plan does not provide a governmental constraint in support of religion; nor would there be possible those subtle influences upon children, present in released time, to participate in religious instruction. In fact, one might argue that shared time and released time are diametrically opposite concepts.

8. If shared time will succeed, to some extent, in minimizing religious conflict and in reducing the grave dangers inherent in a dual system of education, much will have been gained at a minimum cost, for the plan would be operable at the high school level only and the number of children affected relatively small. (As is well known, the church-related high school serves but a small proportion of the non-public school population.)

Arguments in Opposition to Shared Time

1. Shared time might result, over the long run, in a fragmented educational system and a weak and limited public school system.

The proposal probably would lead to a progressive multiplication of part-time day schools, among Protestant, Catholic and Jewish groups, and conceivably among secular special interest groups, as well. With such educationally costly subjects as sciences, industrial arts, home economics, physical education and foreign languages taught in the public schools under the shared time proposal, religious institutions could at comparatively limited expense undertake part-time day school programs in class-room facilities now limited to weekend and after-school use.

A by-product of such an expansion probably would be greatly increased pressures - not unlike those present in the released time program - on public school children to attend part-time religious day school.

If the shared time program were to become widespread, the consequences, over the long run, probably would be a dual part-time educational system which may find public education concentrating on vocational type subjects, with its liberal arts and social science programs greatly weakened.

2. It is recognized that shared time poses Herculean scheduling problems for school administrators. While such administrative problems probably can be solved, the solutions may have negative educational consequences.

It may be anticipated that such complex scheduling would require a rigid, inflexible pattern of cafeteria-style, compartmentalized education. (Somewhat analogous are the problems of scheduling for overlapping sessions and double sessions.) Such a step backward would discourage the trend in experimentation in more flexible and integrated programs of education more responsive to individual needs.

The complex administrative problems also would require the closest ongoing collaboration between public and religious educational officials. Such collaboration would for the first time directly involve religious educators in the planning of schedules for public school courses, which also may lead to involvement in substantive matters, such as overall curriculum, class size, and, for that matter, text books. This might result in unfortunate pressures on public school officials to revise the curriculum to reflect a religious orientation.

Other related administrative problems whose resolution has educational implications relate to the question of responsibility for guidance services and other special services.

3. Shared time, rather than facilitating intergroup relationships, as in the case of released time, may lead to greater religious self-consciousness among public school students, and to increased divisiveness. A large group of youngsters coming into the public school from a religious school for a few periods a day would give added emphasis to youngsters as separate religious entities. The positive, dynamic interplay among students is more likely to occur in those courses such as history and English, which are not taken jointly, and less likely to occur in courses such as the sciences or industrial arts.

4. During the adolescent period, the need for group identification and belonging is particularly acute. The teenager's strong identification with his school, whether parochial or public, meets this need in part. Thus, to thrust a youngster in a dual school system in which such identification is weakened may confuse and disturb him with resultant educational harm. Confusion may also flow from his receiving instruction in two educational systems where the philosophies and approaches to education are in sharp conflict.

5. Previous experiences indicate that it may be questioned whether the increased need for facilities and teachers required under shared time will lead to a greater support for school taxes and bond issues from those who in the past have refused to give such support. Their refusal in part has been based on conflicting philosophies of education reflecting, for example, positions on class size which in turn determines whether there is a need for additional facilities and teachers. Shared time also will not diminish the continued expansion of parochial schools and their need for increased financial help. Thus, it can be questioned whether it will reduce pressures for federal aid to parochial schools.

Dear Alan:

I may have failed to respond to your query about the shared time program in the Philadelphia Public Technical Schools. Enclosed herewith is the agreement setting forth the program which is now in effect. Also enclosed are a memorandum on similar plans in Montgomery County and a "pro and con discussion guide on shared time" from the NCRAC.

Here is an excerpt from the October 15 meeting of our Freedom of Expression Committee:

> Shared Time: The Committee heard a report from Mr. Pye about the plans in Montgomery County to establish area technical schools. Mr. Orlofsky then reported on the shared time arrangements already in effect in the Philadelphia technical schools, and stated that the Jewish Community Relations Council had expressed to the Philadelphia Board of Public Education its conviction that these arrangements are violative of the principle of separation. Mr. Orlofsky would have no objection to opening the technical schools program to individual students enrolled in parochial schools, provided the arrangements were made with the individuals. The objection is to an agreement between the public schools and a religious institution - namely the Catholic school system - conferring on this institution certain rights which are of aid to it. Mr. Orlofsky pointed out that the diocesan high schools decide which of their students shall participate (See III D of agreement).
> Following full discussion, the Committee resolved without dissent that neither the Montgomery County plans nor the Philadelphia program gives rise to a civil liberties problem at this time, and that ACLU should reserve final judgment until the community has had more experience with the experiment.

The Committee's conclusions will be reviewed by our Board of Directors on October 24.

Sincerely,

/s/ Spencer Coxe

SHARED TIME PROGRAM

I. General Philosophy

A. The pupils assigned to the Technical High Schools for shop instruction will remain on the sending school rolls, but a record of school membership on appropriate forms for purposes of state reimbursement will be kept for each "shared time" pupil in a Technical High School.

B. Tenth Grade pupils only will be assigned on the intial program.

C. Pupils will be assigned, by the sending schools, to various trades in the Technical High Schools according to the number of pupil stations open in a trade at the Tenth Grade level as reported by the Technical High School Principal after all properly qualified applicants from public schools have been accommodated.

D. The Technical High Schools will inform the Associate Superintendent in charge of Secondary Schools of the available facilities, such as trades, numbers, morning or afternoon session. The Associate Superintendent in charge of Secondary Schools will send this information to the Superintendent of Diocesan Schools.

E. The pupils' choice of trade will be the responsibility of the Diocesan school coordinator. There will be only one choice indicated to the Technical Schools.

II. Organization

A. Each Diocesan High School will have one person assigned to coordinate the program with the Technical High School to which that school's students will go on a shared time basis.

B. Each Technical High School will have a coordinator to act as liaison person between his school and a sending school.

C. Classes in the Technical High School will be three clock hours per day, five days per week.

D. Diocesan pupils will report either at 8:30 A.M. or 12:15 P.M. to their assigned trade classes in the Technical School according to the availability of work stations.

E. School year and school holidays for Diocesan pupils, while enrolled for trade classes in the Technical High School, will be the same as full time Technical school pupils. However, the decision as to the observance of vacations or holidays not in the public school calendar will rest with the coordinator in the Diocesan school or his superior.

F. Reports of progress, behavior, and attendance will be sent to the home school at the time of the scheduled issuance of reports to parents in the Technical High School.

G. Graduation requirements will be the responsibility of the sending school.

H. Transportation between Diocesan school and Technical High School will be the responsibility of the individual pupils or of the sending school.

I. Lunch facilities may be used when space is available, if in the opinion of the sending school, this is desired.

J. Diocesan coordinator will be notified of the various shop requirements such as financial expenses, kits, proper uniforms or clothing, safety protection where necessary.

K. There will be only one admission date established by the Technical High School in cooperation with the Diocesan High School. There will be no mid-year admission since the program will be on an annual basis.

L. Change of trade

1. May be recommended by either Diocesan coordinator with permission of parent or by Technical school coordinator to Diocesan coordinator.

M. In summation, the Diocesan pupils will be treated the same as any other pupil in the Technical School during their presence in the school.

111. Admissions

A. Requirements

1. Entrance examination, in keeping with the admissions requirements of the Technical High School.

B. Admissions Committee of the Technical High School will notify Technical School Principal of the following:

1. Vacancies available according to trade, boys or girls, time of day.

2. Names of applicants who have qualified.

C. The Technical High School will notify the Diocesan High Schools from which applicants for "shared time" enrollment have come of those pupils who have qualified for admission.

D. Each Diocesan high school will make the decision as to which pupils will be enrolled in the "Shared Time Program" and send the names to the Technical High School in which they have qualified for admission.

IV. Removal of pupil from Technical High School

A. A Technical High School may request removal of pupil.
B. Sending school may request removal of pupil.
C. All removals will be arranged between the coordinators of the schools concerned after consultation with their principals.

Approved:

Allen H. Wetter Superintendent Phila. Public Schools	Wm. M. Duncan Associate Superintendent Phila. Public Schools	(Rt. Rev. Msgr.) Edward T. Hughes, Superintendent Phila. Diocesan Schools

MEMORANDUM ON THE FORBES TRAIL, PA. SHARED TIME EXPERIMENT BY THOMAS M. KERR, JR., OF THE PITTSBURGH CHAPTER

I have talked personally with Father Leo T. Henry, the principal of the St. Thomas District High School in Braddock, Pa. which is the parochial school cooperating with the Allegheny County Board of Education in the Forbes Trail Technical School program. I have also talked with the principal, Mr. Brown, of the school and with the secretary of Dr. Beatty, Chairman of the County School Board. Dr. Beatty was unavailable. However the secretary was able to provide me with the information which I requested.

Shared time in Pennsylvania is not a new type of program. I have been informed that one form or another of shared time has been practiced for more than 55 years in the state. Previously this program was limited to vocational shop work and home economics. The Forbes Trail experiment represents an extension of the program as it was previously operated.

Forbes Trail Technical School was established by the County Board of Education to meet a specific need in the area of vocational training in Western Pennsylvania. Its entire curriculum is basicially non-college preparatory. It is aimed at providing technical skills in the field of electronics, marketing, chemistry, civil construction and computer programming and maintenance. It offers eight courses as follows: 1. Computer programming; 2. Computer maintenance; 3. Civil construction; 4. Electronics; 5. Engineering; 6. Automotive engineering and theory; 7. Marketing; 8. Chemistry technician.

None of these courses are offered in any of the public high schools of the County as far as I could discover. The program is offered to all of the County public high schools as a supplement to their curriculum. No student is enrolled primarily in the Forbes Trail Technical School. His primary enrollment is in another public high school, from which he is transported if he elects to take these courses for three hours daily for two years. These courses count as credits towards graduation. All other curriculum requirements for graduation are met in the primary high school of registration.

The program was offered by the County to the St. Thomas District High School in Braddock on an experimental basis. It should be pointed out that the parochial students who elect these courses enter the Forbes Trail Technical School as public school students. As far as the County is concerned they are residents in a school district of the County to which this program is offered.

The school was built and equipped and staffed for a capacity of 500 students. The present enrollment is 449, with 36 coming from St. Thomas High School in Braddock, the remainder coming from public high schools in the surrounding area. The students from the parochial school walk from the parochial school to the public school nearest to them where they receive transportation on the same basis as the public school students to the technical school at Forbes Trail.

The current operating budget for the school is $203,000. At its capacity the cost per student would be approximately $400. Since it is below capacity the cost per student is slightly higher. At the present level of operation the 36 parochial students out of the present enrollment of 449 do not present any appreciable financial cost to the taxpayer.

I have not heard any conversation or received any indication that there is any intention to expand this program to cover scientific and laboratory subjects which are considered to ne academic or college preparatory. At the present this program is geared solely at the level of the more intensive vocational training in areas where there is a personnel shortage in the area. The present policy offers this County supported technical vocational training program equally to all residents of qualified school districts whether parochial or public.

In summary these points emerge:

1. There are no students at Forbes Trail who are registered primarily at that institution. All students spend only a half day there returning to their school of registration.

2. Students attending Forbes Trail from parochial schools must arrange for their own transportation from the parochial school to the nearest public school participating in the program. The County provides bus transportation from the public school to the Forbes Trail School.

3. The school was originally conceived as an experimental attempt to provide high school students with intensive technical training in areas of increasing job opportunity in Western Pennsylvania. As a vocational supplement to the standard academic curriculum of the public school it was offered on an experimental basis to one parochial school in the district. Indications are that if the experiment proves satisfactory to both schools it may be expanded to include other parochial schools in eligible school districts.

4. The County School Board has taken the position that all students at Forbes Trail Technical School are public school students as far as their participation in the Forbes Trail program is concerned, since they are all residents in qualified school districts in the County.

5. The points of administrative cooperation between the parochial school system and the County school system appear to be the following. The parochial school must adjust its academic schedule in order to release those students who elect to take courses at Forbes Trail for three continuous hours or a half day. These students attend both morning and afternoon, that is, a separate group each period. Since the parochial school grants credit for these courses toward graduation, Forbes Trail School provides St. Thomas High School with grade records.

6. The school was projected by the County School Board to take a capacity of 500 students. Since this capacity has not been reached the basic overhead in staff and equipment would remain the same whether the 36 parochial school students participated or not. (A problem may arise here if the parochial school enrollment pushes the total enrollment beyond the capacity thereby causing a limitation on enrollment from public school sources.) There is no policy statement on the part of the County School Board as to what would happen in the event of the above.

CATHOLIC SHARE IN A PUBLIC SCHOOL

"SHARED TIME," A daring experiment in American education, has been called the best answer yet to the problems facing Catholic schools. The plan is gaining speed across the country. Here is a first hand report on one town's successful test of it for fifteen years.

From The Sign, June, 1963 Author: Edward Wakin

The shortest distance between public and Catholic schools is probably the walk taken daily by eighty-two boys and girls at Michigan's Cheboygan Catholic High School. The walk is so short that the interval between classes has been reduced from five to three minutes, because that's all the time needed to leave an English or history class and get over the public school for solid geometry or home economics.

In Cheboygan, a small, northern Michigan town, Catholic and public-school educators have been doing what came naturally for fifteen years. Catholic high-school students have taken public-school courses on a piecemeal basis since 1948 and in an extensive program since 1952. But as the Catholic Superintendent of Schools, Father Robert W. Heyer, recalls, "We never called it anything special. Our students just went across the street to classes in the public school."

Only in the past two years did Cheboygan discover that it was running a revolution. It has been operating a "shared time" program, the experiment in co-operation between public and Catholic schools that has caught national attention. All over the country, educators have been speculating: "Will shared time work?" In the obscurity of Cheboygan, students walk back and forth, getting an education.

Students have one foot in Cheboygan Catholic High School, where most of the teachers are nuns, where they go from class to class in single file and in silence and raise their hands before speaking in class. The other foot is in the public school, where most of the men and women teachers are not Catholics, where the atmosphere is informal, and where you'd better stay clear of the door when class ends.

At graduation time, the typical remark of the Catholic students is, "We have learned the worth of both schools." Administrators, teachers, and students on both sides agree that shared time is such a success in Cheboygan that it takes an outsider to remind them that it is something special.

CHEBOYGAN'S SUCCESS STORY is a remarkable case in point for shared time. And it contains the elements which have made shared time one of the most-talked-about experiments in American education: a booming school population, a shortage of money and teachers, a demand by Catholic parents for both a Catholic education and the best possible preparation for their children.

During the past school year, shared time has been gaining momentum all over the country.

In Pittsburgh, where the most-publicized attempt was made in September, twenty-three suburban students are involved in what is already regarded as a successful experiment.

In Bay City, Michigan, sixty-three students from two Catholic high schools are attending classes in two nearby public schools. Detroit has announced the most ambitious program; this fall, 203 seventh-and eighth -grade pupils will attend half-day sessions at the local public school.

In Chicago, Monsignor William E. McManus, Superintendent of Archdiocesan Schools, announced a plan to build a Catholic high school near a new coeducational public high school, in order to take advantage of shared time. All seven pastors in southwest Chicago approved the plan, as did Catholic parents, by an eight-to-one margin.

The idea has sparked favorable comments from both Catholic and non-Catholic leaders all over the country. At the very least, practically everyone is agreed that shared time should be given a full and fair trial. Archbishop Lawrence J. Shehan, of Baltimore, has said that he hopes "narrow assumptions" will not interfere with such a trial. Bishop Stephen S. Woznicki, of Saginaw, Michigan, has called it the "best answer yet" to the problems facing Catholic schools. Arthur S. Flemming, former U.S. Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, has written in a national magazine: "Why not ask the leaders of the public and parochial schools in your community to explore the possibilities of a shared time program in your community? By doing so, you will be promoting unity in your community, state, and nation."

The Cheboygan Formula

MEANWHILE, BACK IN CHEBOYGAN, the main questions about shared time have been asked and answered, though, of course, the answers don't automatically apply everywhere else. The questions are both psychological and practical.

Father Heyer and his Lutheran counterpart, Public School Superintendent Paul C. Lemin, emphasize that Catholic and public school officials must get along. A lack of harmony on the administrative level would jeopardize the program. Mr. Lemin adds -- and Father Heyer agrees -- that both sides must meet as educators, not as priest and outsider talking different languages. Coincidentally, both men have their master's degrees in educational administration from the University of Michigan.

Father Heyer, who has guided the Catholic end of shared time since his arrival in Cheboygan in 1952, points out that the program needs "constant watching so the harmony is not shattered." He has managed to do this with three different public-school superintendents. When problems arise, both school superintendents sit down and discuss solutions, keeping in mind that their basic commitment as educators is the same -- "that every youngster get the best possible education."

But the program can only thrive if the local community is behind it. In Cheboygan, this is the case, even though the school board is comprised of one Catholic and six Masons. The source of community co-operation is the realization that both sides need each other and that if they don't co-operate, their children and the community will suffer.

A fact of life in adoption of shared time is the Catholic vote. In Cheboygan, where Catholics comprise about half the population, no public-school bond can pass without Catholic support. In Detroit, a new school bond was recently passed in the same school district where whared time is being instituted. About half the families in the district are Catholic. It is hardly a coincidence that the same issue of the "Michigan Catholic" that headlined shared time in Detroit editorially urged support of an additional tax for public schools.

While public-school administrators and non-Catholic parents realize they need Catholic support on local taxes and bond issues, Catholic educators openly, admit they are caught in a supply-and-demand squeeze. As Monsignor O'Neil C. D'Amour, of the National Catholic Education Association, has pointed out, "Fifty percent of our children are not in Catholic schools and we must do somethingabout them." Father Heyer says frankly, "If we did not have this shared-time program, we would not be running a Catholic high school in Cheboygan."

With shared time, the Catholic school can handle more students and provide a crucial core of courses in English, history, social science, and religion. These are the courses intimately involved with Catholic values and viewpoints. The so-called "neutral" subjects in science, language, and vocational training are studied in the public school. These are courses often beyond the means of the Catholic school.

In Cheboygan, the Catholic students are taking both academic and vocational courses. The academic include physics, chemistry, trigonometry, solid geometry, and speech. The vocational include wood shop, metal shop, advanced mechanical drawing, and home economics. Sixty-two students are also taking driver training.

The Catholic-school students are officially part-time students in the Cheboygan public school, and the state of Michigan allots funds for them as it does for any student. Since the Catholic students are taking a total of 120 courses and since four courses are regarded as equivalent to one student, the public school receives state funds for an extra 25.75 full-time students.

As Father Heyer confirmed upon his arrival in 1952, shared time is legal. On this, Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish experts agree. In fact, a leading Protestant educator, Dr. Harry L. Stearns, coined the term "shared time" in the fall of 1961.

One of the leading opponents of federal aid to parochial schools, Leo Pfeffer, of the American Jewish Congress, was an early supporter of shared time as a way out of the federal-aid- dilemma, though he now questions its desirability. He has called shared time "perfectly legal and perfectly permissible but not wise."

Fruits of Experience

IN CHEBOYGAN, WHERE shared time is a fact of life, the two schools are more than friendly neighbors. They are more like teammates. The two school bodies are so well integrated that they attend each other's dances and root for each other's teams. More than a hundred students from the public school recently traveled a hundred miles to cheer for the Catholic basketball team. The public-school newspaper allots three pages of news to the Catholic school, which has no paper of its own. The public-school counselor helps the Catholic students pick careers and colleges, she even advised the principal of the Catholic school about a guidance institute she could attend this summer. The public-school chemistry teacher showed me an inscribed cigarette lighter which last year's Catholic-school students gave him.

Even those public-school teachers who profess indifference to religious schooling praise shared time. A former teacher who was openly critical of the program finally said to Father Heyer, "You keep sending me those kids; they're making my classes." One teacher summed up the general attitude: "As far as I am concerned, the students are all the same -- students are students. There are the bright ones who won't work, the average students who work hard, the eager ones who are out to learn, the ones who just get by. I don't even notice which are Catholic-high students and which are public, and I'll bet you can't tell them apart." I couldn't.

To an imperturbable nun, Sister Mary Basil, R.S.M., falls the problem of figuring out a class schedule for 129 boys and 124 girls when one-third of them attend two different schools. As principal of the Catholic school, she is the master juggler who solves a problem that is often cited as a stumbling block to shared time. Sister Mary Basil begins by putting down the schedule of the public-school classes which her students will attend and then builds her own school schedule around them. She sometimes has the choice of two sections of one course and can always rely on manipulation of study periods to help her juggling game. Difficult, and extra complication, yes, but by no means impossible. Sister Mary Basil feels that with a larger school and more teachers, her juggling job would be easier rather than harder.

From her own experience, Sister Mary Basil drew up a balance sheet on shared time. As advantages, she cited the elimination of small classes where facilities and teachers are not fully utilized, alleviation of the teacher shortage, and major economies in not having to build and maintain expensive laboratories for science, language, and vocational courses. The resulting variety provides greater opportunities for students at all levels of ability.

The two practical problems are scheduling (which she has solved) and transportation (which is not a problem in Cheboygan, since the public school is only a half block away). Where the public school is some distance from the Catholic school, bus transportation must be supplied and students attend a block of classes in the public school.

But the Catholic school must also accept the fact that the public-school students get preference and that the Catholic school students can only take classes if there is room. A scheduling conflict must always be resolved in favor of the public school. This year, for instance, not all the Catholic high-school students could be accommodated, and with next year's increase to 510 students from the present 460, the public school is facing pressures from its own rising student population. As Public School Superintendent Lemin points out: "We must make sure we take care of every public-school pupil first."

Both Father Heyer and Sister Mary Basil are impressed by the favorable side effects of the program. The Catholic students have the opportunity to make an impression as students and as Catholics. Where there is so much intermingling, it is easier to prevent a wall of bigotry from rising between Catholics and non-Catholics. Catholic students, in turn, face the real world of American pluralism, instead of huddling inside a Catholic environment.

The Cheboygan community views both schools as its own, even to the extent of having an annual civic luncheon to honor the athletes of both schools. To prevent tensions from arising, no games or contests are scheduled between the two schools. They even avoid playing the same opponents, so comparisons are impossible. In the long run, Father Heyer's view has been confirmed: "The kids themselves sell this program."

The Uncommitted Majority

While educators want shared time to be widely tested, they are largely uncommitted. They are waiting for the results. The new Detroit experiment is of particular interest, since it involves - for the first time - a large number of students in a large urban area.

Some reservations about shared time are already evident. Monsignor D'Amour thinks of it as a long-range evolutionary process which needs Protestant support, in particular, in order to move forward. He emphasizes that it cannot be merely a matter between Catholic and public schools. And the public-school administrators, for their part, have been questioning whether shared time is either necessary or desirable.

Though Catholic schools have received the most attention in their response to shared time, the program applies to all denominational schools. From Monsignor D'Amour's viewpoint, shared time is, first a response to religious illiteracy (which Catholics regard as mainly a protestant problem) and, second, a response to the pressures on private schools (largely a Catholic problem).

In the most recent response of Protestants, the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches has approved a recommendation to explore and study shared time. A Council spokesman added that shared time is regarded by some as a misnomer; other suggested labels are "reserved time" and "co-operative arrangements," designed to remove any erroneous impression that the private school is invading the public school.

Shared Time - A Compromise?

While Monsignor D'Amour feels shared time could be a solution to the needs of a rising, Catholic school population, he insists that it must be regarded as a compromise. It involves only partial control of the education of Catholic youngsters. This is the conventional viewpoint of the Catholic educator, who can muster a powerful supporting argument. But out there in Cheboygan the argument grows weaker, Is it so important that wood shop and home economics be Catholic controlled? Is algebra particularly Catholic? It is such questions that shared time provokes, and an unexpected result of the experiment may be some re-thinking on the notion of a Catholicized school curriculum.

Moreover, in Cheboygan, the Catholic-school students said they prefer the more stringent discipline of the Catholic school and the more severe restrictions imposed upon them by the nuns. Comparison seemed to increase the loyalty of the students to the Catholic school. This is what the students said and what the Catholic school officials observed. It is unlikely that this is a grand delusion. One official at the Catholic school said: "If we don't have something special that bears up under comparison, then we should not be in business."

Will success spoil shared time in Cheboygan? It does not seem likely, for both schools are looking ahead to the building of a new public high school about a mile and a half from the present one. The plans will include facilities for part-time, Catholic high school students, who will travel to class by bus and attend the public school on a half-day basis. On the Catholic side, there will be support for the new school bond needed to finance the school. On the public school side, the door will remain open to part-time students from the Catholic high school.

In retrospect, their continuing exercise in co-operation had a promising omen from the beginning. Not only did the Catholic high-school students begin their then unnamed experiment by taking classes in the public school, but a few public high-school students reciprocated by taking a business course in the Catholic school.

Questions and answers for late 1963...

QUESTION: More and more your attention is focussing on the various candidates being considered for the Presidency next year; why then does the non-political American Civil Liberties Union send you this letter now?

ANSWER: Because civil liberties issues are vital and are so recognized by all candidates. Their stand on free speech and association, due process of law, and equality for all Americans will be watched by the entire country. And as the nation's only non-partisan watchdog for the Bill of Rights, the ACLU alone can defend your civil liberties interests wherever they may be threatened -- even at the candidates' headquarters.

QUESTION: Are your civil liberties safer today than, say, 25 years ago?

ANSWER: In 1938, Mayor Hague had crushed free speech in Jersey City. Four of the Scottsboro boys were still in prison. The House created the Un-American Activities Committee. There was much for the ACLU to do.

.....In 1963 reporter William Worthy, an American citizen by birth, has been sentenced to prison for returning from Cuba without a passport. ACLU attorneys in Louisiana, who have defended hundreds of civil rights demonstrators without fee, have themselves been legally charged with "sedition." The House Un-American Activities Committee continues to violate civil liberties. There is still much for the ACLU to do.

We need the strength of every voice whose devotion to the Bill of Rights is not qualified by adherence to Communist, Fascist, KKK, or other totalitarian doctrine. With 33 active local affiliates, we are now 65,000 strong -- with an experienced staff and talented volunteers (including a thousand cooperating attorneys). But I needn't remind you that politicians -- and candidates -- respect numbers. YOU are needed now.

I hope you will become at least a $10 member, but join with whatever you can. By mailing the envelope above you will help keep America a home of freedom.

"Inevitably, many of the causes the American Civil Liberties Union has championed have been unpopular. The fighter for free and untrammeled speech must defend some unsavory characters who abuse their liberty. It follows that many sincere lovers of freedom have at times found themselves at odds with ACLU policy. The alternative, however, is infinitely worse, and the ACLU has earned a welcome from all who cherish the idea of a government of laws under which all men enjoy equal privileges."

Bergen Evening Record

Hackensack, N. J.

"If the battle for democracy in the United States is ever lost it will be lost, in a manner of speaking, over the dead body of the American Civil Liberties Union . . ."

During the 43 years of its existence the American Civil Liberties Union has played a significant role in defending our basic democratic freedoms. Your voice has always been raised clearly and sharply when our liberties have been threatened. America is a stronger nation for your uncompromising efforts.

— JOHN F. KENNEDY

During the span of years covered by your organization, the American people have given increased attention to progress in the field of civil rights. . . . It is good to be reminded that the members of the American Civil Liberties Union and the overwhelming majority of my fellow citizens are working together in this field with steadfast vigor and understanding.

Thirty-three ACLU Affiliates in Twenty-nine States and the District of Columbia

you have an interest in civil liberties!

Protect it by joining the

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

The ACLU is the only permanent national non-partisan organization devoted solely to defending the Bill of Rights for everybody. The Union fights for the civil liberties even of those whose anti-democratic opinions it abhors. But the ACLU bars from its governing councils all adherents of all totalitarian doctrines.

Today the ACLU with its Board and National Committee of leaders in every field, its thirty-three state and city affiliates (and their many chapters), its corps of volunteer lawyers, and its experienced staff, is engaged primarily on four fronts. YOU have a stake in the American Civil Liberties Union's fight in these four areas, among others:

- AGAINST those federal, state and local measures which, though aimed at non-conformists, threaten the civil liberties of all Americans.
- TO PROMOTE fair procedures in court trials, congressional and administrative hearings.
- AGAINST both governmental and private pressure group censorship of movies, plays, books, newspapers, magazines, radio, and television.
- TO ELIMINATE second-class citizenship for Negroes, Puerto Ricans, American Indians and other minorities.

The ACLU needs and welcomes the support of all those—and only those—whose devotion to civil liberties is not qualified by adherence to Communist, Fascist, KKK, or other totalitarian doctrine.

YOU ARE NEEDED TOO—as a member of the ACLU. The Union depends on its nearly 70,000 members (enrollment has doubled in the past six years) for its entire support. To meet the challenge of the times, we need 10,000 new members this year.

The ACLU's Thirty-three State and City Affiliates

PARTICIPATING MEMBER	$100
COOPERATING MEMBER	$ 50
SUSTAINING MEMBER	$ 25
SUPPORTING MEMBER	$ 10
CONTRIBUTING MEMBER	$ 6

Members listed above receive the Union's 96-page Annual Report on U.S. liberties and the monthly paper Civil Liberties. They are also entitled to single copies of some 30 other publications without charge. A weekly bulletin, the main content of which is largely duplicated by Civil Liberties, is available on request to members contributing $10 or more. Associate Members, at $3, receive Civil Liberties and the Annual Report.

By joining the national ACLU, you will join the affiliate in your area, and the larger your check the more it will receive. (Except in Northern California. where the affilitate maintains its membership separately. However, the national ACLU also welcomes support from members in Northern California.)

TWENTY QUESTIONS ON CIVIL LIBERTIES . . .

You believe in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights—but how do you feel they should be interpreted today, in times of domestic complexity and world tension? Short summaries like those below cannot include the many necessary qualifications, but your answers should tell you where you stand on some representative American Civil Liberties Union policies (which were not all adopted unanimously by the ACLU Board —it seldom agrees 100% on any question).

To check whether you and the ACLU agree on the statements below, put a circle around Y (for YES) if you agree; if you do not agree, circle N (for NO).

1. Any private individual should have the right to criticize any government or government official anywhere in the world. ..... Y N

2. Congressional investigations into "un-American activities" are essential to our nation's security. ..... Y N

3. Segregation in public schools violates the equal protection of the laws guaranteed to all Americans by the Constitution. ..... Y N

4. A trade union member should be permitted to advocate "right-to-work" laws without jeopardizing his union membership. ..... Y N

5. Belonging to the Communist Party should be punishable by fine or imprisonment. ..... Y N

6. Everyone who invokes the privilege against self-incrimination must be guilty as suspected. Y N

7. Religious exercises, such as the Lord's Prayer and Bible reading, should be barred from public schools. ..... Y N

8. Books like "Tropic of Cancer" should be banned from newsstands and libraries. ..... Y N

9. States' rights clauses in the Constitution justify efforts by certain states to prevent Negroes from voting. ..... Y N

10. Communist leader Benjamin Davis and Birch Society head Robert Welch are both entitled to make public speeches. ..... Y N

11. Movies, books and plays presenting an offensive characterization of a particular racial or religious group should be suppressed. ..... Y N

12. Everyone should have the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country. ..... Y N

13. In their war against crime policemen are entitled to listen in on private phone conversations. ..... Y N

14. Parochial school pupils are entitled to free bus service, paid for from public funds. ..... Y N

15. Laws against the use and sale of birth control devices violate rights of privacy guaranteed by the U. S. Constitution. ..... Y N

16. Those accused as security risks under the federal security program should have the right to confront and cross-examine their accusers. Y N

17. Students receiving financial aid from the government should be required to swear that they are not members of the Communist Party. ..... Y N

18. Racial discrimination in housing, public and private, should be prohibited by law. ..... Y N

19. Police are entitled to hold and interrogate arrested persons as long as 24 hours before arraigning them in front of a magistrate. ..... Y N

20. To "emancipate the American Indian," reservations should be closed and federal services terminated—regardless of the tribes' wishes. Y N

CHECK YOUR SCORE AFTER YOU ANSWER ALL TWENTY QUESTIONS

In the ACLU's opinion, you get 5 POINTS each for answering YES to numbers 1, 3, 4, 7, 10, 12, 15, 16 and 18; and 5 POINTS each for answering NO to numbers 2, 5, 6, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 17, 19 and 20.

IF YOU SCORE 75 OR MORE, then you agree substantially with the ACLU, and are a member in spirit. Put your belief in civil liberties to work by joining the one national organization which fights—52 weeks a year—for the liberties you cherish. Use the membership blank on the other side.

"The American Civil Liberties Union [is a] useful and thoroughly patriotic organization . . . To equate patriotism with conformity, orthodoxy, and name-calling is dangerous nonsense; and this cannot be pointed out too often."

—The New York Times

" 'I do not agree with a word you say,' said Voltaire, 'but will defend to the death your right to say it.' It would be hard to find a more searching test of the genuineness of democratic sentiments than is implicit in this famous dictum. And it would be equally hard to find an organization that subjects itself to this test more often and more willingly than does the American Civil Liberties Union."

Dear Jack:

I must apologize for being so slow in answering your letter of November 14. If I had had any good news to send you I would have written more quickly.

The fact is that contributors to the Southern Regional Council are chiefly the foundations. We do get some individual contributions, but we have not, for some time, solicited individual contributors in order not to compete with the funds solicited by the Councils on Human Relations. Moreover, Louisiana is the only state in which there is not a council on human relations. (The state council in Texas exists only on paper; there is, however, a flourishing local council in Houston.) So, there is not much help that we can be for suggesting Louisiana contributors to the Louisiana ACLU.

If I missed answering your questions, please let me know. I suppose it might be possible, if you wanted them, to get the contributors lists of the other state councils. I don't think you would get much from them, however, because the state councils largely exist on two sources of income; viz., membership dues and a little help from us.

I want to congratulate you on the statement which the ACLU got out some time ago, "How Americans Protest." I thought it was awfully good, and deserving of widespread and enduring reading. It's pretty hard to get immeiiate attention these days for public statements; we, as a matter of fact, put out one ourselves on December 30, and I am dubious that it will cause much ripple. But yours was good quality, and your piece about the handling of Oswald made me proud to be an ACLU member.

Happy New Year, and all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Leslie W. Dunbar, Executive Director
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street N. W.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Les:

I am writing to inquire whether and on what basis we might make a general solicitation of contributors to the Southern Regional Council. Not only the Georgia effort, but the Florida and Louisiana affiliates of ACLU are making such progress as to encourage us to give greater effort and attention to membership and affiliate development in the area of our greatest weakness -- the southeastern states.

It is particularly at the instance of our Louisiana affiliate that I make the present request. I have just returned from a visit to New Orleans and to their annual meeting, inspired by the energy and vitality of their effort. Althoughthey are one of our smallest affiliates, their legal committee, an integrated group of some 20, mostly very young lawyers, is carrying a staggering work load. Their greatest boast is that the state's electric chair has had a two-year rest. While many of their almost 40 pending cases involve relatively obscure individuals, they have also been active in the hotel segregation law suit, in the James Baldwin Another Country censorship, in the admission of a Nigerian student to L. S. U. (NO). Even one of the many famous Rockwell cases was theirs.

But their membership is very slim and their finances are entirely committed to this heavy docket of litigation (expenses only, of course, no attorneys' fees). And at this point we all feel that an effective membership promotion in Louisiana, if it could substantially enlarge their membership, would make a material difference in attracting the open support of many prominent people who now give the affiliate only grudging and silent respect.

Needless to say, we are entirely ready to entertain any reciprocal proposal.

With all good wishes.

Very sincerely yours,

Jack

Subj: Capital Punishment

The Due Process Committee, having devoted several meetings to the question of capital punishment, has no concrete recommendation to offer the Board. It asks, however, that the Board itself consider Professor Dorsen's memorandum and the results of the Committee poll (set out below) to determine whether the Union should modify its present position in any way. The Dorsen memorandum is enclosed. The poll:

(1) Should the Union take a position against capital punishment?
Vote: 3 affirmative, 3 negative.

(2) Should the Union, based on its policy statement, attempt to secure legislative repeal of laws authorizing the death penalty?
Vote: 5 affirmative, 2 negative.

(3) Should the Union raise the question judicially whether capital punishment is unconstitutional, either under the cruel and unusual punishment clause or the due process clause?
Vote: 2 affirmative, 5 negative.

(4) Should the Union, through its national office and its affiliates, enter litigation to raise all possible constitutional questions (other than the invalidity of capital punishment):
a. On behalf of persons sentenced to death after trial?
Vote: 5 affirmative, 1 negative.

b. On behalf of persons indicted for a capital offense, at the discretion of affiliates and subject to manpower limitations?
Vote: 4 affirmative, 2 negative.

(5) Should the Union take the position that capital punishment is unconstitutional, either under the cruel and unusual punishment clause, or the due process clause, where the death penalty is imposed for a crime where a life is neither taken nor threatened.
/See Rudolph v. Alabama, 32 U.S.L. Week 3154./
Vote: 4 affirmative, 1 negative, 1 don't know, 1 affirmative as to the affiliates (but negative as to the national).

PROPOSED ACLU SOUTHERN CONFERENCE

A major theme of the ACLU Biennial Conference, scheduled for Boulder, Colorado, June 21-24, is "The American Civil Liberties Union - Today and Tomorrow."

An important element of the discussion on the ACLU "tomorrow" will be how the organization can be more effective in advancing the cause of civil liberties in the South.

Before going to the Biennial Conference, the ACLU national staff is anxious to secure the thinking and advice of those with first-hand experience in dealing with civil liberties problems in the South. To this end, we have in mind holding a small (30 to 35 persons) southern conference on a week-end in May (for which, we confess, we have no funds for travel expenses).

However, before asking anyone to take the time, or go to the expense and trouble, to attend such a conference (which would be held in Atlanta) we are hereby soliciting your initial reactions by mail.

The circumstances of the ACLU in the South at present are, briefly, as follows:

1. For some years, we have had affiliates in two Deep South states, Florida and Louisiana. The legal panels of these two affiliates have undertaken staggering caseloads and performed magnificent work for civil liberties in the South. Recently, Florida became the first affiliate in the South to open an office and hire a full-time Executive Secretary.

2. We have a new Georgia affiliate. We have every expectation that the ACLU of Georgia will write another bright chapter in the history of the defense of civil liberties in the South.

3. We have strong affiliates in the border states of Kentucky and Maryland. Portions of these states have civil liberties problems as great as just about any in the Deep South. The work of these affiliates is a source of great pride for the ACLU.

4. We have three affiliates in major urban areas (Austin, Dallas and Houston) of Texas. Though two of these affiliates are of very recent vintage, they are already building an impressive record of work on behalf of civil liberties.

We have no hope of establishing affiliates in Alabama or Mississippi in the forseeable future. Some interest has been shown in Arkansas, South Carolina and Tennessee but affiliation is not imminent.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

If our proposed conference in May is held, we will review our work in the South today. For the present, we would like to solicit your thinking on our work in the South tomorrow. We hope you will address yourself to questions of substance, structure and organization.

I. QUESTIONS OF SUBSTANCE

a) Should any effort to step up ACLU defense of civil liberties in the South be considered primarily as supportive of the civil rights movement?

b) Conversely, should we limit ourselves to areas that are not in the mainstream of the civil rights movement? Of course, we recognize that an overwhelming number of civil liberties problems in the South are connected to the struggle for equal rights.

For example, the current threat to the charter of the Tougaloo College by the Mississippi legislature was clearly inspired by the activity of Tougaloo and its students on behalf of integration. Nevertheless, the defense of Tougaloo would not be within the mainstream of the civil rights movement. It should be (and is) a matter of ACLU concern -- aside from its civil rights overtones -- given our historic concern for academic freedom.

Within the mainstream of the civil rights movement much work is being done by other organizations, even if this work is woefully inadequate to the magnitude of the existing problems. However, civil liberties problems that are not in the mainstream of the civil rights struggle are not being tackled by anyone. It may be that given the ACLU's limited resources, we would be most effective if we restricted our efforts to the areas in which we would be unique.

c) Or, should stepped-up ACLU activity in the South reflect the normal balance of ACLU work across the country? This "normal balance" might be exemplified by the work of the Maryland affiliate. Reverend Irving Murray, chairman of the affiliate, recently described its current work, in a report to the national Board of Directors as including:

1. Legislative work resulting in the passage of the state's first civil marriage laws.

2. The introduction of a bill in the state legislature to abolish Maryland's film censorship board.

3. Defense of the religious freedom of a college chaplain who had sent a letter to parents of incoming freshmen advising them to impose stricter rules on their offspring on the consumption of liquor than the University did. The affiliate's intervention successfully prevented an attempt by the trustees to rule that chaplains couldn't be allowed on campus without the Administration's approval.

4. Securing an end to midnight searches by Baltimore public welfare officials.

5. Participation in the defense of some 1,500 individuals arrested in civil rights demonstrations in Cambridge and other eastern shore communities.

II. QUESTIONS OF STRUCTURE

What organizational form should be used to step up ACLU work in the South? Such suggestions as hiring an additional lawyer to work out of the national office, with heavy concentration on southern problems; aiding existing southern affiliates; organizing new affiliates; or establishing a southern regional office have been suggested.

To open a regional office staffed by a top-notch professional, and a secretary-assistant would cost an estimated $30,000 per year and this would not be the full extent of the cost to the Union. Any increase of ACLU activity in the South would require additional strength in the national office -- which is already understaffed. While the $30,000 is not in hand, it is not unreasonable to believe that new sources could be reached to obtain funds for this purpose.

III. QUESTIONS OF OPERATION

In deciding on our organizational role in the South, certain questions arise as to what needs should be stressed.

a) Do we need a roving litigator entering major civil liberties cases in the South?

b) Will we face special executive and administrative needs, particularly if we draw heavily on cooperating attorneys we have in the South and channel cooperating attorneys from other areas of the country to work in Southern areas?

c) Do we need special organizational help in assisting existing affiliates in the South and to organize additional affiliates?

d) Do we need to establish personal contacts with administrative and executive agencies of state and local governments and with local units of federal agencies?

e) Do we need special educational activity for civil liberties?

f) Should we strive for some combination of the above?

There are, of course, many other questions. We certainly hope that in responding to this memorandum, you will feel free to offer your thoughts on any other matters that may be relevant.

And, of course, since we are contemplating a conference on these questions in May, we look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

The April meeting of the Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held on April 6 at the home of Eleanor Richardson. Present were E. Ladd, H.Steinmetz, P. Morris, E. Richardson. The following had notified that they could not be present: Dunbar, Pauley, Bacote, Cohn, Glustrom. It was known by those present that Hollowell and Stanford were conducting other meetings at the same time.

The minutes of the March board meeting were approved as distributed. E. Ladd explained that a letter to the Atlanta Public Library had been sent requesting use of a room for April board meeting. A reply was received with forms to fill out. E. Ladd felt the purposes as so outlined were fair and just and all meetings open to public and related to library activities. He so responded to the library.

Emily Binkley's report was submitted concerning the annual meeting to be held April 22 at the YWCA, Edgewood Street, Atlanta, 8-10 P.M., first floor lounge. F. Pauley and L. Dunbar are in charge of the program. P. Morris will send out second notice with more details and report of nominating committee.

E. Ladd read a letter from J. Pemberton, National ACLU with an enclosed letter from H. Zinn. It was moved and passed to put this matter on the agenda of a future board meeting.

E. Ladd announced that Barbara Barnum had agreed to do the Newsletter.

E. Ladd also read a form letter from J. Pemberton concerning the possible meeting in Atlanta in May of representatives from southern ACLU groups. Mr. Pemberton had submitted a series of questions concerning work in the south. E. Ladd will answer this as well as send copies of the questions to each board member and asking them to write directly to Mr. Pemberton any views they may have on said questions. A copy will also be sent to H. Gibert, Chairman of the Lawyers' Committee.

E. Ladd asked that as a standing procedure the Chairmen of the Lawyers' Committee, the Membership Committee, and the Newsletter be invited to all board meetings and that copies of the minutes be sent to them. E. Richardson moved this be done, Morris seconded and motion passed.

H. Gibert had submitted the rules adopted by the Lawyers' Committees for their work.

P. Morris reported that R.Cohn was working out procedure with National concerning a $100 gift given for the legal defense of the Peace Walkers in Georgia.

Respectfully submitted,

Eleanor Richardson, Secretary

Dear Jack:

Thank you for your letter of April 3. I am very glad to hear about the proposed southern conference, and I hope it will come at a time when I can attend. Bless you, why do you have to do these things on weekends?

I think the answers to "c" and "e" on your third page are both "yes," and that these are two questions which seem to me of first importance.

Sincerely yours,

Leslie W. Dunbar

Dear Les:

As the civil-rights-civil liberties pressures mount in the South, the ACLU's national staff has discussed what additional role the Union can serve to advance our special interest. Many things have been done, primarily through our local affiliates in the South, but we are eager to place this entire question into sharper focus, particularly as this problem will be thoroughly discussed at our forthcoming Biennial Conference.

Toward this end we have prepared the enclosed memorandum which is being circulated among ACLU affiliates, our state correspondents and a small list of southerners who, we believe, can offer special advice on the organizational questions we raise. We would very much appreciate your reaction to the questions we pose, and invite you to participate in the proposed Atlanta meeting. Unfortunately, because of the Union's limited budget we cannot pay expenses to participants, but we hope this difficulty would not deter you from attending, if the consensus is that such a conference should be held.

Thank you for your cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

Jack

PROPOSED ACLU SOUTHERN CONFERENCE

A major theme of the ACLU Biennial Conference, scheduled for Boulder, Colorado, June 21-24, is "The American Civil Liberties Union - Today and Tomorrow."

An important element of the discussion on the ACLU "tomorrow" will be how the organization can be more effective in advancing the cause of civil liberties in the South.

Before going to the Biennial Conference, the ACLU national staff is anxious to secure the thinking and advice of those with first-hand experience in dealing with civil liberties problems in the South. To this end, we have in mind holding a small (30 to 35 persons) southern conference on a week-end in May (for which, we confess, we have no funds for travel expenses).

However, before asking anyone to take the time, or go to the expense and trouble, to attend such a conference (which would be held in Atlanta) we are hereby soliciting your initial reactions by mail.

The circumstances of the ACLU in the South at present are, briefly, as follows:

1. For some years, we have had affiliates in two deep South states, Florida and Louisiana. The legal panels of these two affiliates have undertaken staggering caseloads and performed magnificent work for civil liberties in the South. Recently, Florida became the first affiliate in the South to open an office and hire a full-time Executive Secretary.

2. We have a new Georgia affiliate. We have every expectation that the ACLU of Georgia will write another bright chapter in the history of the defense of civil liberties in the South.

3. We have strong affiliates in the border states of Kentucky and Maryland. Portions of these states have civil liberties problems as great as just about any in the Deep South. The work of these affiliates is a source of great pride for the ACLU.

4. We have three affiliates in major urban areas (Austin, Dallas and Houston) of Texas. Though two of these affiliates are of very recent vintage, they are already building an impressive record of work on behalf of civil liberties.

We have no hope of establishing affiliates in Alabama or Mississippi in the foreseeable future. Some interest has been shown in Arkansas, South Carolina and Tennessee but affiliation is not imminent.

If our proposed conference in May is held, we will review our work in the South today. For the present, we would like to solicit your thinking on our work in the South tomorrow. We hope you will address yourself to questions of substance, structure and organization.

I. QUESTIONS OF SUBSTANCE

a) Should any effort to step up ACLU defense of civil liberties in the South be considered primarily as supportive of the civil rights movement?

b) Conversely, should we limit ourselves to areas that are not in the mainstream of the civil rights movement? Of course, we recognize that an overwhelming number of civil liberties problems in the South are connected to the struggle for equal rights.

For example, the current threat to the charter of the Tougaloo College by the Mississippi legislature was clearly inspired by the activity of Tougaloo and its students on behalf of integration. Nevertheless, the defense of Tougaloo would not be within the mainstream of the civil rights movement. It should be (and is) a matter of ACLU concern -- aside from its civil rights overtones -- given our historic concern for academic freedom.

Within the mainstream of the civil rights movement much work is being done by other organizations, even if this work is woefully inadequate to the magnitude of the existing problems. However, civil liberties problems that are not in the mainstream of the civil rights struggle are not being tackled by anyone. It may be that given the ACLU's limited resources, we would be most effective if we restricted our efforts to the areas in which we would be unique.

c) Or, should stepped-up ACLU activity in the South reflect the normal balance of ACLU work across the country? This "normal balance" might be exemplified by the work of the Maryland affiliate. Reverend Irving Murray, chairman of the affiliate, recently described its current work, in a report to the national Board of Directors as including:

1. Legialative work resulting in the passage of the state's first civil marriage laws.

2. The introduction of a bill in the state legislature to abolish Maryland's film censorship board.

3. Defense of the religious freedom of a college chaplain who had sent a letter to parents of incoming freshmen advising them to impose stricter rules on their offspring on the consumption of liquor than the University did. The affiliate's intervention successfully prevented an attempt by the trustees to rule that chaplains couldn't be allowed on campus without the administration's approval.

4. Securing an end to midnight searches by Baltimore public welfare officials.

5. Participation in the defense of some 1,500 individuals arrested in civil rights demonstrations in Cambridge and other eastern shore communities.

II. QUESTIONS OF STRUCTURE

What organizational form should be used to step up ACLU work in the South? Such suggestions as hiring an additional lawyer to work out of the national office, with heavy concentration on southern problems; aiding existing southern affiliates; organizing new affiliates; or establishing a southern regional office have been suggested.

To open a regional office staffed by a top-notch professional and a secretary-assistant would cost an estimated $30,000 per year and this would not be the full extent of the cost to the Union. Any increase of ACLU activity in the South would require additional strength in the national office -- which is already understaffed. While the $30,000 is not in hand, it is not unreasonable to believe that new sources could be reached to obtain funds for this purpose.

III. QUESTIONS OF OPERATION

In deciding on our organizational role in the South, certain questions arise as to what needs should be stressed.

a) Do we need a roving litigator entering major civil liberties cases in the South?

b) Will we face special executive and administrative needs, particularly if we draw heavily on cooperating attorneys we have in the South and channel cooperating attorneys from other areas of the country to work in Southern areas?

c) Do we need special organizational help in assisting existing affiliates in the South and to organize additional affiliates?

d) Do we need to establish personal contacts with administrative and executive agencies of state and local governments and with local units of federal agencies?

e) Do we need special educational activity for civil liberties?

f) Should we strive for some combination of the above?

There are, of course, many other questions. We certainly hope that in responding to this memorandum, you will feel free to offer your thoughts on any other matters that may be relevant.

And, of course, since we are contemplating a conference on these questions in May, we look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

May 11, 1964

The May board meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held May 11 at the home of the President, Edward Ladd. The following members were present: Broiles, Hocking, Glustrom, Bacote, Steinmetz, Morris, Ladd, Richardson, Cohn, Hollowell, with H. Gibert, Mrs. Moran and Mrs. Barnum present as chairmen of committees. Regrets had been sent by members Boaz, Lincoln, Maloof, Holloway.

The minutes of the April 6 were approved as distributed on motion passed after being made by J. Glustrom and seconded by P. Morris.

After considerable discussion on best methods to keep information flowing to and from the Board, the Board requested Mrs. Barnum as Chairman of the Newsletter to proceed with getting out the Newsletter once a month, including news notes on Civil Liberties' situations throughout Georgia, checking with established sources for the facts.

H. Steinmetz moved and J. Glustrom seconded a motion requesting R. Cohn to draw up a statement for the approval of the officers expressing the position in conformity with National ACLU on state directed religious exercises in the public schools and for the officers to disseminate the information as they see fit. Motion was adopted.

It was moved by E. Richardson and seconded by H. Steinmetz that a committee on church and state relations be appointed with direction to be concerned immediately with religious observances in the schools with particular attention to the Bicker amendment now before Congress. The following were to be asked to serve on this committee: Reverend G. Murray Branch, Chairman; Dr. James Jordan, Reverend Jim T. Pickens, Reverend Eugene Pickett, R. Cohn, Rabbi Rothschild, William Shields, an Emory theology student (the last three, if they were found to be members). H. Steinmetz was to contact Reverend Branch. Motion was adopted.

There was discussion and questions asked to and answered by D. Hollowell on the school desegration cases. It was felt that the ACLU could not add anything to this area at this time. The particular case of the DeKalb schools was put on the agenda to discuss at the September ACLU board meeting.

There was also considerable discussion on communication routes to and from the board and the Lawyers' Committee. Suggestions will continue to be made from the board to the Lawyers' Committees, sometimes from requests made to them, and the Lawyers' Committee will recommend cases to the Board which they feel have Civil Liberties issues involved and the board will then so direct what action they wish Committee to take. Initiative rests with the Committee, the go-ahead comes from the Board.

R. Hocking moved and D. Hollowell seconded the motion that the Board express its appreciation of the work of the Lawyers' Committee and request said committee to solicit recommendation from its members at its next meeting on the Tolg case and future cases afterwards. Motion passed.

It was decided to hold no further board meetings until September 16th but that members and officers were to contact D. Hollowell if necessary throughout the summer for any needed action.

It was moved by D. Hollowell and seconded by P. Morris that the Committee of lawyers be authorized to enter into the Tolg case with the approval of the majority of the officers who are within the State of Georgia at the time action may be needed. Motion was passed.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Mention was made of the Southeastern Regional meeting to be held in Atlanta weekend of May 15th, with Atlanta providing homes for two from each chapter in the region. Discussion will center on role of ACLU in the South and how National can best help the chapters in the region.

It was moved by D. Hollowell and seconded by P. Morris that if the cost to us does not exceed $100, a member of the Board of another member approved by the officers attend the National Biennial Convention in Boulder, Colorado, June 21-24. Motion was passed.

Action on the how-to of getting out the Newsletter was postponed until September as was the implementation of procedures for a state-wide ACLU operation.

The Newsletter was asked to have H. Bullard write a paragraph for June issue on use of Speakers' Bureau.

C. Moran emphasized the need for a Legislative Committee both for work needed now during Special Session of the Legislature and for the future. R. Hocking moved, and D. Hollowell seconded a motion asking C. Moran, E. Richardson, H. Gibert, R. Cohn, D. Comer to serve as a committee to consider matters before the current session of the Legislature and take action with approval of the officers. Motion was passed.

H. Gibert will write a piece for the June Newsletter re the question raised at Annual meeting on possible contempt charges being made against one at election time.

Meeting was adjourned at 11 P.M.

Respectfully submitted,

RE: Shared Time

You will be interested in the following article from the Chicago Sun-Times of Friday, April 24, 1964.

Shared-Time School Plan Approved by Board 7-3

by Ruth Dunbar

The Chicago Board of Education Thursday voted 7 to 3 to approve a four year experimental shared-time program to go into effect in September, 1965.

Voting against the proposal were board members Raymond W. Pasnick, Bernard S. Friedman and Warren H. Bacon. They questioned the way the proposal was handled.

In favor with votes of "yes" were Clair M. Roddewig, board president; Mrs. Wendell E. Green, Cyrus Hall Adams III, Mrs. Lydon Wild, Edward Scheffler, Thomas J. Murray and Frank M. Whiston.

The plan would permit some Roman Catholic students to divide their class day between the new Kinzie High School at 5625 S. Mobile and the new St. Paul High to be built a few blocks away.

The plan was put into effect with a resolution drafted by Roddewig.

Welcome Court Test

In reference to a court test of shared time, the resolution reads in part:

"The board will welcome the filing of a test case . . . and in the event such a test case is filed, it will be the policy of the board of Education to promptly respond. . . .

"(The board) will co-operate to the maximum extent for an early hearing, disposition and determination of any issues raised in such a test case."

Under Board Control

The resolution also provides that:

1. Students enrolled part-time at Kinzie High School will be under the "exclusive supervision and control of this Board of Education and its general superintendent."

2. No student will be accepted for enrollment at Kinzie except on written request of a parent or legal guardian.

(Roddewig made the point that this constitutes an agreement between the board and parents but not with the Roman Catholic school system.)

3. Willis shall request that various private schools in the city having students residing in the Kinzie attendance area to co-operate in the experiment.

4. On or about Aug. 1 Willis shall present to the board recommended rules and regulations applicable to the part-time students enrolled under the plan.

5. Willis shall periodically evaluate the program.

6. The program would be discontinued if his reports show the program to be detrimental to the public school system.

Number Unknown

Also, the resolution stated, the involvement of private schools in the program would help the board determine "whether shared time is in the best interest of Chicago students and the public school system."

Before the board meeting, Roddewig said he did not know how many students of private high schools live in the Kinzie attendance area.

Presumably there are some attending the University of Chicago Laboratory School, the Francis W. Parker School and Lutheran schools.

Students at these schools, if their parents desire, could split class time between private institutions and the Kinzie school as the Roman Catholic students would.

Excerpt from 44th Annual Report on Shared Time Plan in Chicago

...the Union's Illinois Division vigorously and effectively urged the Chicago Board of Education to delay implementing an extremely sketchy proposal that called for a five-year experimental "shared time" program between the city's new Kinzie High School and a new parochial school nearby, to begin in September 1964. When two official legal opinions were then obtained by the board approving the proposal, the affiliate analyzed them in a detailed public statement which illuminated conspicuous defects in the legal citations and reasoning of the opinions. Thereafter, the board, by a 7-3 vote, approved a resolution authorizing a four-year experiment, to begin in September 1965. In addition, the board added several safeguards omitted from the original proposal.

To: Participants in ACLU Southern Conference of May 16, 1964

From: Alan Reitman

Enclosed you will find the report on the discussion and recommendations made by the conference. We would appreciate any comments or reactions you care to make, hopefully within the next two weeks so that they will be available for discussion at our Biennial Conference on June 21-24.

We did hope to write personally to all of the participants to express again our appreciation for their contribution to our discussion, but the pressures of work requires this mimeographed form letter. This does not diminish our gratitude for the time you gave to the conference which we hope will point the way to increased and effective ACLU work in the South.

REPORT of
SOUTHERN CONFERENCE OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, Held at
EMORY UNIVERSITY, ATLANTA, GEORGIA, ON MAY 16, 1964

* * * * * * * * *

Background

Because of the great civil liberties challenges in the South the national ACLU convened on May 16 a southern conference in Atlanta, Georgia for the purpose of determining whether ACLU activity in that region should be increased; and if so, how such enlarged activity should be carried out. These questions were especially relevant because the Union's role in the civil rights revolution will be one of the major topics of discussion at the Biennial Conference in Boulder, June 21-24, and it was felt that a southern conference would help to sharpen the Biennial Conference debate.

Twenty-one persons attended the conference representing ACLU affiliates, state correspondents, cooperating attorneys, other organizational executives and members of the national staff. The complete list and their representation follows:

Samuel Houston Clinton (Central Texas Affiliate)
Howard W. Dixon (Florida Civil Liberties Union)
Leonard Dreyfus (Louisiana Civil Liberties Union)
Hugh Gibert (ACLU of Georgia)
Donald Hollowell (ACLU of Georgia)
Steve Jones (Florida Civil Liberties Union)
Edward Ladd (ACLU of Georgia)
Wilfred Myll(Kentucky Civil Liberties Union)
Irving Murray (Maryland Branch, ACLU)
Mrs. Ruth Arnold (Arkansas State Correspondent)
John Bolt Culbertson (South Carolina State Correspondent)
LeRoy Ellis (Tennessee State Correspondent)
James Mattocks (North Carolina State Correspondent)
Clifford Durr (Cooperating Attorney)
Ira Kaye (Cooperating Attorney)
Charles Morgan, Jr. (Cooperating Attorney)
Leslie Dunbar (Executive Director, Southern Regional Council),
Marion Wright (National Committee, ACLU)
Aryeh Neier (National Staff, ACLU)
Alan Reitman (National Staff, ACLU)
Mel Wulf (National Staff, ACLU)

A memorandum describing the problem and raising certain organizational questions had been previously circulated.

The discussion was divided into two parts. The first consisted of reports from the participants as to the civil liberties work now being conducted in their area, in order to provide a background against which evaluation of the problem and the Union's role could be made. The second was devoted to consideration of specific proposals for development of the Union's work and the direction it should take, the structure that should be established and the operations to be carried out under it.

Reports of ACLU Affiliate Work

The reports reflected the variety of both civil liberties problems and the approaches taken to deal with them in the South. For example, representatives of the Maryland, Georgia and Kentucky affiliates emphasized the importance of working in all of the traditional ACLU areas, free speech-association, due process and equality rather than focussing entirely on the civil rights movement or particular problems arising out of this movement. Reverend Murray, speaking for the Maryland affiliate which has undertaken the defense of some 2,600 civil rights demonstrators, thought that the affiliate had been effective in working for civil rights precisely because it also defended the rights of segregationists.

He pointed out that because the community had come to recognize ACLU's concern with the rights of all, the affiliate was able to establish relations with police officials, for example General Gelston, commander of the Maryland National Guard assigned to maintain order in Cambridge and other eastern shore communities, a connection which helped the affiliate promote its civil rights objectives. As another example of the value of comprehensive defense of civil liberties, Reverend Murray pointed to the close ties that the Maryland affiliate had established with several members of its state legislature. By meeting and talking with state legislators on bills affecting civil liberties, the group is now at the point where it can concern itself not only with opposing bad legislation, but securing the introduction and passage of legislation favorable to civil liberties.

Mr. Ladd supported the approach used by the Maryland CLU. He noted that in the early months of its existence, the Georgia affiliate had defended the rights of both "The Peacewalkers" and the Klu Klux Klan, emphasizing that this helped to create a public image which, in many instances, could make the ACLU more effective in civil rights work than even the primary civil rights organizations.

The discussion made clear that not every affiliate in the South could carry on such a broad program or adopt procedures used by another affiliate for implementing its program. For example, whereas the Maryland affiliate hired a law student at $20 a week to weed out the requests for assistance made by prisoners who claimed their civil liberties had been violated (including interviews where indicated), after which the promising cases were turned over to an attorney on their legal panel, neither Louisiana or Florida state law allow a law student to interview prisoners. Mr. Gibert of the Georgia affiliate, Mr. Dreyfus of the Louisiana affiliate, and Mr. Jones of the Florida affiliate, all indicated that the volume of prison mail received was so tremendous that they had not been able to fashion an acceptable technique for dealing with it. Mr. Dreyfus commented that unlike Maryland's experience which found that only a very few prisoner cases raised valid civil liberties questions, the Louisiana CLU discovered significant civil liberties issues in the prison mail it received. This is true because of two fundamental problems in Louisiana: One, problems arising out of application of the Gideon decision (requiring appointment of counsel in felony cases for indigents) and two, systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries.

Mr. Dreyfus noted that most of the 30 active cases now being handled by the Louisiana CLU were prisoner cases -- eight of them involving prisoners on death row.

A further illustration of the diversity of problems and approaches was the discussion surrounding the question of whether litigative, educational or legislative action should be emphasized. Mr. Clinton, speaking for the Central Texas affiliate, declared that his group's emphasis was on state legislation, a natural emphasis because the affiliate is located in Austin, the state capital; although Mr. Clinton acknowledged that the group was engaged in litigation, its present case being a suit to desegregate dormitories at the University of Texas.

Reports from Non-ACLU Organized Areas

The conference also received reports from participants in non-ACLU organized areas. Ira Kaye painted a particularly negative picture of South Carolina. He said that the Supreme Court's Gideon decision upholding indigents' right to counsel in non-capital cases practically had no impact at all in the state where felony cases were concerned. Bail was set on a discriminatory basis and death sentences were imposed only on Negroes and not on whites. As evidence of the deep church-state problems in the state, Mr. Kaye noted that children attending public schools were being used to sign petitions urging congressional approval of the Becker Amendment.

Mrs. Arnold reported that the climate was favorable for development of ACLU organization in Arkansas and suggested the interesting organizational technique of first developing a group of lawyers who, under the ACLU banner, would handle several cases. She felt that the publicity arising out of such cases would help to educate the community as to civil liberties and lead to development of an actual ACLU affiliate. Mr. Mattocks, commenting on the North Carolina situation, declared that lawyers would be available to work with the ACLU and it was his hope that following the Biennial Conference he might meet with Mr Wright to start work on forming an ACLU affiliate.

Mr. Ellis noted that Tennessee was different from other states in that its geographical structure created different attitudes towards civil rights in different parts of the state. For example, east Tennessee is almost entirely white, so the issue is not a paramount one there; Nashville has a much better race relations climate than the deep South as shown by the fact that in a city council of 28 members five were Negroes; whereas Memphis, in the southwestern corner of the state, and close to Mississippi, bears a greater resemblance to the problems of the deep South. Mr. Ellis expressed the view that with some organizational work a Tennessee affiliate could be established.

Mr. Durr described a contrary picture for Alabama. He spoke of the curtain of silence which hangs over the legal fraternity in Montgomery and the state and urged that the Union endeavor to have law schools, both north and south, incorporate in their curriculum courses and seminars on legal ethics. Such courses would be designed to educate prospective lawyers on their responsibility to defend civil rights defendants and other unpopular clients. Mr. Durr also spoke of the difficulty of getting information out to the public concerning civil rights suits, adding that since in his community the Montgomery Advertiser does report civil rights matters, he often brings cases challenging police brutality not with the hope of actually winning them, but for the purpose of informing the community of this particular violation of civil liberties.

Mr. Dunbar sketched the organizational work being done by other groups in the South, emphasizing especially the voter registration drive now under way. The drive was meeting with encouraging success, he said, noting the present estimate of 2 million Negroes registered to vote in the South, with 600,000 of these being added in the past six months. With respect to additional legal activity, Mr. Dunbar said that in the near future he thought such activity would come from three organizational sources: the NAACP's Legal Defense Fund which is establishing regional offices this summer in Jackson, Mississippi and Memphis, Tennessee; the President's Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, established last summer by the White House as a way of trying to bring the legal profession more openly and actively into the civil rights struggle; and the recently organized Lawyers Constitutional Rights Committee, established with the help of the ACLU and several other national organizations.

Harrassment of Lawyers

In all of the reports the point was emphasized time and again that the ACLU should be most concerned with the harrassment of lawyers who, because of their courageous stand in handling civil rights cases, have suffered economic loss and other forms of pressure. Reference was made to these cases, many of which were previously known and on which the ACLU had taken action: (1) The original arrest of Ben Smith and Bruce Waltzer of the Louisiana CLU legal panel for alleged violation of the state anti-subversive law, a charge dismissed for lack of evidence, but which subsequently to their indictment by an Orleans Parish grand jury for violation of the state statute (their law offices were raided at the time of their arrest); (2) The criminal conviction used to pressure Bill Higgs to leave Mississippi; (3) The contempt citation against Tobias Simon, counsel for the Florida CLU, because of the refusal of a local judge to accept his explanation that he could not defend a civil rights demonstrator at the time the judge wanted to hold trial (the contempt citation was subsequently dismissed); (4) The attempt to expel Ira Kaye from the local bar association in Sumter, South Carolina because of his participation in a student segregation suit, the plaintiffs not being Negroes but a racially-mixed group called "Turks;" (5) The intense harrassment which forced Charles L. Morgan, Jr. to leave Birmingham because of his outspoken position on the civil rights revolution; and (6) The troubles of John Bolt Culbertson who reported that his pro-civil rights stand, particularly his support of Judge Waring's stand in the school desegregation cases in 1952, had lead to a decline in his political status and his law practice. (However, he noted that because of the recent increasingly heavy enrollment of Negroes on voting rosters in his state, he has found both his political status and his law practice on the rise again).

In addition to Mr. Simon's personal experience, Mr. Jones said the Florida CLU had learned of a conference of state subversive activities control boards that was scheduled for Florida and which might very well lead to increased efforts to harrass attorneys active on civil rights and civil liberties matters in the South. Several participants remarked that apart from the specific cases cited, harrassment of attorneys already had reduced the number of lawyers willing to take civil liberties cases. Mr. Dreyfus said that the Louisiana CLU legal panel of 12 members had been cut in half because of the fear of lawyers, following the arrest and subsequent indictment of Mr. Smith and Mr. Waltzer, that they might suffer similar reprisal.

Several of the lawyers present at the conference commented that the first call on the ACLU in the South was to provide legal protection for attorneys who come under attack because of their work for civil liberties. The view was expressed that unless the Union could provide this kind of assistance it would be almost impossible to recruit the cooperation of new attorneys, who are needed if progress in civil liberties is to be made in the South. Mr. Kaye commented that the Union should attempt to elevate the concept of legal freedom to the level that had been reached by academic freedom.

Direction of ACLU Work in the South

After agreeing that the ACLU should step up its work in the South, the conference discussed what the direction and substance of this work should be. The discussion centered on the three specific proposals made in the preliminary memorandum: a) work directly in support of the civil rights movement; b) limiting work to issues not in the mainstream of the civil rights movement, for example, academic freedom issues arising out of the dismissal of students engaged in race demonstrations and c) the traditional ACLU position of defending all facets of civil liberties -- free speech, association, assembly, etc.; due process; and equal treatment under law. The conference unanimously recommended that the Union's program in the South should cover the broad spectrum of ACLU interests as outlined in (c), not in direct support of the civil rights movement nor limiting work to problems not in the mainstream of the civil rights movement. The conference felt that to limit ACLU work in the South only to support of the civil rights movement would impair its effectiveness; and that if the ACLU ignored the other civil liberties issues, of which there are many in the South, what organization could be expected to work in these areas? The decision to focus on the ACLU's traditional approach to civil liberties defense by no means would exclude civil rights issues; indeed, because of the civil rights struggle civil rights cases would naturally arise which would require ACLU attention.

Structure of ACLU Work in the South

Turning to the question of structure, the conference discussed several approaches described in the preliminary memorandum: (a) Establishment of a regional office; (b) Emphasis on building new affiliates; (c) Providing aid to existing affiliates so their program could be strengthened; and (d) The addition of another lawyer to the national staff who would concentrate mainly on civil rights problems in the South. There was unanimous feeling that a regional office should be established, in Atlanta because of its central transportation and communications position. The regional office would be an arm of the national ACLU, such as the Washington office is in handling our legislative activity in Washington, D. C. Some concern was expressed that the regional office might act as a supervisory body over the activity of local affiliates, but it was noted that while consultation on cases and issues would naturally develop, local affiliates would be as free as now to decide their course of action in particular situations.

During the discussion it was proposed that because of the tremendous need in the deep South, particularly Alabama and Mississippi where legal assistance to the civil rights cause is sorely lacking, retainers should be paid to lawyers in especially hard-pressed areas. The conference recognized, of course, the traditional ACLU policy against payment for legal services, agreeing that this policy had allowed the Union to obtain the volunteer help of lawyers throughout the country and that these attorneys might not be as willing to cooperate if, in fact, other lawyers were being paid. On the other hand, harrassment of cooperating attorneys (including the loss of income) was reducing civil liberties defense and certainly would increase, so that paying retainers might be the only way to keep these lawyers active and functioning in those areas where the problems are so great. The consensus of the conference was that creation of an ACLU regional office should be the first priority and that the retainer system proposal was something that might be reviewed in the future, but only after a regional office had been opened and was functioning.

Function of Regional Office

Although the conference heard comment expressed about the need for the Union to carry on educational activity in the South about civil liberties, there was general agreement that the person in charge of the regional office should be a lawyer and that its prime function should be litigative. The following resolution was recommended to the Biennial Conference:

> "The southern conference regards as a major need, the establishment of a regional office in the South, which would concern itself primarily with litigative work within the scope of the traditional ACLU activity. The function of this office is to facilitate and coordinate legal work in behalf of civil liberties in local communities; where such facilitation and coordination is not possible, the lawyer in charge of the regional office would directly participate in civil liberties litigation."

The conference agreed that if the lawyer had time left over it could be devoted to educational and organizational activity. It was also suggested that if the time came when it was possible to add to the staff of a regional office, the second professional should not be a litigative person but one who could play a behind-the-scenes role, working with governmental agencies and other institutions and in developing educational activity.

The conference unanimously recommended that when a regional office was established another southern conference should be called primarily for the purpose of helping in the recruitment of additional cooperating attorneys to work with such an office. Indeed it was suggested that it would be valuable to hold a conference or periodic conferences of all cooperating attorneys in the South after the regional office had been opened.

Financing of Regional Office

Mr. Reitman commented that preliminary estimates of the national ACLU indicate that the cost of establishing a regional office, covering rent, salary, secretarial expense, travel costs, etc., would be in the neighborhood of $30,000 per year for the office itself. It was stressed that to make the regional office effective the national office would have to be strengthened.* At the moment the ACLU budget does not provide for such an amount and additional means of financing would have to be secured if the conference's recommendation was implemented. It was also mentioned that several ACLU affiliates might be willing to contribute to the funding of such an office because of their consciousness to the tremendous civil liberties problems in the South. In addition discussions have been held with the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Department which has expressed interest in the idea and the Union's plan for increased activity in the South. As an evidence of the southern conference's support for the recommendation made to the Biennial Conference, several affiliate representatives said they would discuss with their Boards the idea of a special contribution to start the southern regional office.

* The consensus within the national office is that minimally we would have to add an assistant legal director. The estimated cost of such a person, including secretarial, travel and other expenses would be between $15,000 and $20,000 annually.

Proposed Policy Recommendation on the Issue of Shared Time

The Church-State Committee recommends to the affiliates and Board of Directors of ACLU that:

1. "Shared time" or "dual enrollment" programs, to permit private (including parochial) school students to enroll as part-time students in public schools and to satisfy the compulsory education requirements of their state through a combination of public and private school courses, do not inherently result in constitutional or civil liberties violations involving the principles of the First Amendment's guarantee of mutual independence between religion and government. At the same time, constitutional principles will not necessarily require that such part time programs be offered by all public schools or preclude a public school board from reasonably finding that it cannot offer its facilities to part-time students without impairment of its total educational program.

2. However, an infinite variety of features may be anticipated in proposals to institute such programs and in the circumstances of different school districts; in fact, wide variations may now be observed in the features of those programs already established or being tried experimentally. Here we endeavor to state some principles that we believe to be essential to the constitutional validity of shared time programs. Of course, we cannot hope to catalog all of the potential circumstances in in which constitutional claim of entitlement to part-time participation in public school offerings or constitutional objection to particular shared time programs might legitimately be made. We believe that each situation and each program should be carefully weighed against the requirements of the First Amendment and individually judged in constitutional terms.

3. The most obvious of the principles essential to the validity of a shared time program is that its benefits to part time students must be offered on a non-discriminatory basis to all who reside within the public school district. A program offered to the students of the parochial schools of but one denomination (where there are others) will afford an unconstitutional aid to the one and will amount to an unconstitutional discrimination against others. As with all issues of discrimination this requirement must be met in substance as well as in form; but it does not preclude the establishment of reasonable classifications of students or reasonable entrance requirements. For instance, a public school might reasonably admit to part-time studies on a tuition-paying basis non-residents of its district who are students of a parochial school from which resident students are admitted to free part-time enrollment.

4. Also essential to validity is the requirement that control of the program be vested in public authorities. This requirement does not preclude cooperation between public and private (including parochial) school officers to insure that the offering of public school facilities is made with knowledge, for instance, of the needs of the private school students, of what events -- such as religious holidays -- will affect the attendance of students from each private school, and of what reporting of student performance will best serve the educational goals of the private school. (Spokesmen for religious groups, including parochial school officers, retain the same right to petition public school authorities when shared time programs are being considered that they have always had and have frequently exercised with respect to all other public school programs.) But ascertaining the special needs of private school students must not imply a commitment that public schools can or will meet each of these needs -- for instance, that it will schedule its offerings to insure accommodation of every religious holiday for which recognition is sought. The requirement of public control means that all decisions must be made by public officials and precludes delegation of authority, to groups in which officers of parochial schools participate, over such matters as the selection of curricula, texts, or course objectives, the selection and tenure of teachers, or the direction of their work.

5. Similarly, shared time programs must serve public rather than religious objectives. Thus a decision to locate a new public school adjacent to an existing parochial school in order to facilitate the offering of a shared time program to students of that parochial school would be fatally infected with a purpose to aid the latter. However, it would not be improper for public school authorities in making decisions concerning the size of new schools to take into account the anticipated part-time enrollment of students attending private and parochial schools.

6. Though it may be proper for a public school to make the benefit of its facilities available to private school students who receive these benefits as part-time public school students, a public school may not make its teachers, texts, equipment and other facilities available to a parochial school itself. Moreover, facilities may not be provided to shared time students because they are parochial school students; thus bus transportation between the public and parochial schools may not properly be provided at public expense.

7. In expressing itself on the civil liberties issues involved in shared time programs or proposals, the American Civil Liberties Union is speaking only of the limitations of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. It is asserting that the fundamental premises of American society implicit in the religion guarantees of that amendment, viewed in terms of their impact upon individual liberty, lead it to believe that these conclusions should be accepted, and should be compelled by court decision if need be, as limitations upon the power of governmental units and their officers. It is not, in this statement, taking account of the provisions of state constitutions and statutes which may additionally limit or even preclude the adoption of shared time programs.

8. Moreover, in so expressing itself, whether on shared time programs generally as it does here, or upon any individual program or proposal, the Union confines its interest to the civil liberties or constitutional implications of them. It does not address itself to collateral (though sometimes not wholly unrelated) public policy considerations which may move public authorities to approve or reject a particular proposal. Thus the Union is not here expressing a view as to whether public school education is better than or inferior to private or parochial school education or whether one or the other is of greater overall benefit to a democratic society. It is not commenting on whether shared time proposals offer an economical means of achieving a school board's educational aims nor on whether they will assist school districts to win public support for additional public school expenditures. It does not argue that public school education either is or is not fostering an atmosphere which discourages religion in American society (though specific practices calculated either to foster or discourage religion would warrant civil liberties concern and objection). It is not saying whether shared time programs are likely to encourage a beneficial contact between public and parochial school students, whether they are likely to foster a proliferation of parochial schools, nor whether doing so would detrimentally encourage sectarian bias and divisiveness or beneficially enrich the pluralism of our many cultural and religious heritages. All of these questions are of genuine importance to public officials contemplating or administering shared time programs, and to the citizens who are constituents of these officials. As such citizens the members of the Union are themselves deeply concerned with and hold varying views upon many of them. But the Union itself is here speaking to fairly narrowly defined constitutional and civil liberties issues, independently of the views of any of its members upon many broader questions of public policy.

Report of the Committee on Capital Punishment

Submitted 15 June 1964 by: Rev. John C. Fowler, Dale Hurliman, Prof. Clifford M. Lytle

In response to an inquiry from the national office, the Southern chapter of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union herewith expresses its position with respect to the issue of capital punishment. It is our feeling that the time has come when the ACLU should take a stand on this controversial issue. It is the collective judgment of the Southern Chapter of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union that the national organization should take immediate steps to set in force a legal and political program designed to eliminate capital punishment as a legitimate sanction within our society.

For a number of years, civil libertarians have been confronted with the delicate question as to whether capital punishment constituted a proper subject with which the ACLU should concern itself. It is submitted that the answer to this question must be an affirmative one. While for many years it has been argued that capital punishment per se does not give rise to a constitutional question, more recent reflection upon this premise reveals a firm argument to the contrary.

There is considerable authority, legal as well as philosophical, supporting the proposition that capital punishment in fact does violate several constitutional provisions. Just last year, three Supreme Court justices, (Justices Goldberg, Douglas, and Brennan) reasoned in Rudolph v. Alabama that the death penalty, when inflicted for a crime that did not result in the loss of life (such as rape) violated the Cruel and Unusual Punishment clause of the Eighth Amendment. In addition to this deprivation, a number of other illustrations can be cited as depriving individuals of their constitutional guarantee to "due process" of law. To name but a few, the infliction of capital punishment discriminates against an accused who is not financially able to provide for an adequate defense. In addition, it is well recognized that in certain states, indeed if not in all states, members of minority groups, in particular Negroes, bear the heaviest toll in loss of life due to capital punishment. Capital punishment then is a criminal penalty the practical effect of which discriminates against those persons at the bottom of the socio-economic ladder in life. Attention might also be directed to the argument that since persons opposed to capital punishment are excluded from juries hearing capital cases, there is a discriminatory effect upon an accused's rights. While the state is protected against a capital acquittal, the defendant is, "not protected against a jury biased in favor of it."

Perhaps the most important denial of "due process" of law which inures to an accused as a result of capital punishment, is that once the death sentence is carried out, any possibility of futhre appellate review is foreclosed. If new evidence is discovered, or, as in Gideon v. Wainwright (right to counsel), Griffin v. Illinois (free transcripts on appeal), and Mapp v. Ohio (illegally seized evidence), the Supreme Court were to render a retroactive decision affecting the rights of the deceased defendant, he would be unable to take advantage of this new constitutional guarantee. This certainly gives rise to a presumption that capital punishment can and does deprive a defendant of "due process" of law.

While it is our considered opinion that capital punishment in violating several provisions of the Bill of Rights does fall within the purview of a civil liberty, we recognize that there are those who argue that in the absence of the special circumstances alluded to above, capital punishment per se does not violate the constitution. While this position appears to be reasonable and tenable at the present time, it is suggested that the prevailing development of ideas today seems to be drifting away from this position. Certainly an attack upon the peripheral aspects of capital punishment should be commenced immediately. This not only will eliminate an apparent blemish upon our system of criminal justice, but it will also lay the foundation upon which to predicate an assault upon the whole concept of capital punishment in the future.

These last remarks should not be interpreted as conceding that capital punishment per se is not a proper subject with which the ACLU should be concerned. Indeed, as alluded to earlier, it is our opinion that capital punishment may well violate the Constitution and should be approached accordingly. If this line of reasoning is rejected by the national office, it is our collective judgment that the issue of capital punishment is still a proper subject for libertarian concern regardless of the constitutional ramifications involved. As Norman Dorsen pointed out in his Memorandum on Capital Punishment dated January 2, 1964, the ACLU has often concerned itself with subjects which have not precisely and technically offended the constitution. It is our feeling that capital punishment is of such vital importance, going to the very heart of a civilized society, that the ACLU would be remiss in its duty if it did not face this problem immediately and with all of its energy.

While recognizing that the basic purpose of this communique is to evidence our support for positive and determined action by the ACLU with respect to the issue of capital punishment, it is felt that the following list of arguments against capital punishment should be included for purposes of supporting the chapter's overall position.

1. Capital punishment in and of itself is an unspeakably cruel act.

2. The right to life is inherent in man. It is inviolate and may not be taken by the state in the guise of protecting the public welfare.

3. There are effective and meaningful alternatives which may be used in place of capital punishment.

4. The idea that capital punishment is a deterrent to criminal activity is a myth unsupported by adequate statistical data.

5. Innocent men have been needlessly put to death.

6. Capital punishment is a crutch which society has used to rationalize its neglect of and inability to cope with the real problems in society which give rise to criminal activity -- problems emanating from deplorable social conditions.

7. Capital punishment is often used as a penalty for crimes which have not involved an initial wrongful death (for instance, in Arizona train robbery is punishable by death).

8. Capital punishment is meted out to individuals in a capricious manner defying rational analysis.

9. The real, though seldom admitted, reason for capital punishment is predicated upon the idea of retribution -- a concept which is not only repugnant to our philosophy of criminal rehabilitation, but discordant with the ideals of a civilized society.

These constitute some though certainly not all, of the arguments against capital punishment. It is felt that the sum total of these dictates that the ACLU has but one path that it may pursue -- the immediate institution of a program designed to eradicate capital punishment. Recognizing that the laws of our society evolve in their development slowly, it is recommended that an immediate legal program be commenced designed to challenge the constitutionality of the peripheral ramifications of capital punishment, i.e., those pertaining to the use of the death penalty in cases in which the crime involved no loss of life, and to those cases which involve discrimination against an accused alluded to above. It is hoped that this legal approach will eventually lead to a judicial interpretation that capital punishment per se offends the constitution.

While the legal attack upon capital punishment is an important technique which should be instituted with all deliberate speed, equally important is the political attack which may be waged in the legislative halls of our national and state governments. Only via a two-pronged attack, both legal and political, will effective pressures be exerted to the extent that we can expect some meaningful achievement in attaining the desired goal -- the eradication of capital punishment.

MINUTES

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1964 - 12:30 P.M.

ACLU OFFICES

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Bierstedt, Black, Brown, Crowell, Evans, Fraenkel, Frank, Hacker, Heckscher, Jones, Maslow, Miller, Rice, Soll; Judge Kenyon; Mesdames Jacobs, Pilpel.

From the National Committee: Messrs. Baldwin and Malin.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Speiser, Wulf, Morgan, Adler, Neier, Haskell; Mrs. Floyd; Misses Golden and Strickland.

Visitors: Mr. Selzer; Mrs. Jones.

1. Minutes. The minutes of the September 14 meeting were approved as circulated.

2. Introduction of visitors and new staff. Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Malin were given a special welcome. Mr. Charles Morgan, Jr., newly appointed Director of the Southern Regional Office, was introduced, as was Miss Anne Strickland, Mr. Pemberton's secretary. Mrs. J. P. Jones and Mr. Isadore Selzer, a volunteer in the Legal Department, were also introduced.

3. Financial Report. Mr. Haskell announced that the 1964 fund-raising drive has reached 92% of its goal, which is 2% ahead of the projection for this time. Moreover, as a result of the membership list cleaning operation, 656 members have been returned to the list, with a corresponding increase in income.

4. Mr. Malin. Mr. Malin expressed his delight at being at the meeting and was especially glad to report that since his operations there has been no sign of cancer and he is feeling quite well. He thanked the members for the many letters which he and his wife have received and for the good wishes expressed. He then proceeded to give a report on the Cyprus situation and on Turkey.

August 5th was a most critical time in Cyprus, but since then things have stabilized relatively, and it can be expected that the situation will remain calm.

In Turkey, civil liberties were better than he had imagined, even during the period when the country was under martial law. One favorable factor is the lack of any sizable minority: there are 80,000 of Greek extraction (most of them Turkish citizens) and this is the largest single minority. Most of the actual Greek citizens have left. Consequently, there seems to be general equality before the law.

However, quite the opposite situation prevails with respect to due process for this fundamental freedom is in its infancy. This is reflected in arbitrariness of officialdom and in favoritism.

Freedom of speech and of press has been relatively broad even during martial law (which ended in the middle of the Cyprus crises). In fact, there have been only two major restrictions: During the period of martial law, party gatherings had to be held indoors and political news and comment were sometimes subjected to post publication censorship. Mr. Malin made the point that the real problem which inhibits free speech and press is the constant fear that there could be a new coup d'etat and what one has previously said with impunity will come to be unacceptable.

5. Death of J. Frank Dobie. Mr. Malin moved that a resolution be adopted expressing the Union's sense of loss upon the death of Mr. Dobie. The motion was carried unanimously.

6. Recommendation from the NDC Steering Committee. Mr. Neier reported the recommendation of the National Development Council's Steering Committee that, instead of having the affiliates share immediately the proceeds of their new member promotion activities with the National Office, and vice versa, the entity recruiting each new member be allowed to retain funds during the first year and then share them thereafter. (See NDC SC minutes of its August 1, 1964 meeting.) Mr. Neier explained that the Steering Committee had directed withholding of this recommendation until now to permit more thorough canvessing of affiliate views, which had been done. The response has been almost entirely favorable to the recommendation since it will encourage greater new member promotional activity at both affiliate and national levels. This recommendation was approved unanimously.

7. Planning for the 89th Congress. Mr. Speiser reported that, hopefully, the 88th Congress will end this week. He then outlined some of the issues with which the 89th Congress will probably deal and mentioned that there will be a major effort in both Congress and the states to revise or overturn the Supreme Court reapportionment decision. In addition, the following are special areas of concern: (1) HUAC. Research is being done in many law schools with the hope of offering acceptable alternatives to renewal of the Committee's mandate. However, no publicized efforts on this issue will be profitable until after the election.

(2) Becker Amendment. Congressman Becker has announced he will retire from Congress and that he is going to work to promote the Becker Amendment. (3) Wire tapping. There will be an effort to pass wire tapping legislation, though Mr. Speiser commented that he didn't know if there will be new proposals in this area by the new attorney general. (4) Loyalty/security procedures. (5) Immigration laws. President Johnson has accepted the proposals made by President Kennedy regarding the gradual elimination of the restrictive immigration quota system over a five year period. (6) General attacks on the Supreme Court, especially for its due process decisions.

General discussion dwelt on what information could be gleaned from the polls indicating any effect of Goldwater's attack on the Supreme Court, on the subject of loyalty oaths and disclaimer affidavits, and the general attacks on the Supreme Court. Mr. Speiser pointed out that, among political leaders, even the friends of the Supreme Court will vary with the issue of the moment in the extent of their defense of the Court and its independence.

8. Announcements. Mr. Angell announced that he would appoint the members of the Audit Committee as provided for by the Board at its meeting on September 14th, after first consulting intended members. He also pointed out that since the next scheduled meeting of the Board is October 12th, a holiday, that meeting will be cancelled unless an emergency requires a meeting, in which case the meeting will be on October 13th.

9. Southern Regional Office. Mr. Morgan outlined several areas in which he envisages ACLU's activity and participation. He suggested that defense of southern lawyers prosecuted and harassed under cover of law ought to enjoy a first priority claim on the resources of the Union. Such defense would be supportive of the educational job of persuading lawyers to handle civil liberties cases. Mr. Morgan felt that ACLU should chalk out certain fields of operations not being handled by anyone else. These might include the jury selection process, segregation of school teachers, and the free speech issue relating to such things as showing controversial motion pictures. Mr. Maslow suggested that there is so much work in other fields that the ACLU ought to stay out of school desegregation cases. However, Mr. Morgan reminded the Board that in the South many civil liberties questions arise from civil rights.

Mr. Morgan pointed out the uniqueness of ACLU's appeal to lawyers to take on unpaid civil liberties work, in contrast to the fee paid civil rights work done for other organizations. Mrs. Pilpel suggested a regular report to northern lawyers of those southern lawyers willing to take ACLU cases, put on a semi-institutional basis through the overall list of ACLU cooperating attorneys.

10. Proposals to Initiate a Campaign Against State Loyalty Oaths and Anti-Subversion Laws. Mr. Reitman reported that Miss Abigal Mellon, who has done research for us on this subject, has completed her work. Thirty-three states have statutes requiring loyalty oaths for teachers, and Mr. Reitman said that the ACLU hoped to obtain a memorandum on the effect of Baggett v. Bullitt (the Washington loyalty oath case) on these statutes, as a foundation for ACLU affiliate activity. There are two/ situations warranting particular attention: (1) A new, New York state, Feinberg law case, and (2) the Maryland effort to repeal the Ober law. Mr. Reitman also reported that the AAUP has indicated an interest in meeting with the ACLU about this matter.

After discussion, general agreement with the plans was expressed by the members.

11. Civil Liberties Issues in the 1964 Campaign. Mr. Pemberton said that since 1952, the ACLU has asked the two major presidential candidates to submit a statement on civil liberties which is published in the ACLU monthly Civil Liberties. This year, President Johnson submitted such a statement but Senator Goldwater declined, through his staff, to do so. Thus, Johnson's letter and pertinent excerpts from the Republican platform will be printed. This provoked discussion from the floor.

Mr. Maslow suggested that for the 1968 election we begin discussion of this early enough so that the Board may participate more fully in the decision. Mr. Pemberton went on to say that although we face a novel challenge to our interests in Senator Goldwater's political attack on the Supreme Court, such able people as Mr. Kennedy, Senator Dodd and Mr. Katzenbach have made responses, and it is more appropriate for these people to respond in the political context than for ACLU. Nevertheless, we are obtaining speeches on both sides for our affiliates to use, for their own educational work and as ammunition for local attacks. Mr. Jones moved that discussion be limited to current business, and this motion was carried by a majority of ayes.

Mr. Pemberton proposed that a practice in prior Congressional election years of proposing a candidates' questionnaire to affiliates for local use be suspended. He expressed the judgment that its limited past use and the still more limited responses of candidates had tended more to put the friends of civil liberties at a disadvantage than to promote libertarian campaign positions. Board members expressed concurring positions.

12. Progress Report. Mr. Haskell reported that the 1965 expansion drive (to raise one million dollars) was getting underway. On Saturday, September 26th, there was a meeting in New York of the regional representatives from the eastern area to discuss their progress and program. Next Saturday, October 3rd, there will be a similar meeting in Indianapolis. The pledge drive itself will not start until the day after the election, that is, Novermber 4th. Members were requested to inform the office regarding their travel plans so that during the campaign period (Nov. 4 to Dec. 15), if possible, Board members might accept speaking engagements for affiliates.

13. Campaign Against Proposition 14 in California. Mr. Reitman reported on efforts being made to assist the campaign to defeat Proposition 14, by the ACLU in cooperation with other organizations, to raise an additional $135,000 in campaign funds. These efforts are in addition to the matching grants which ACLU has made to its California affiliates to assist their efforts.

14. Warren Commission Report. Mr. Pemberton explained that the Warren Commission report would be studied carefully with view to our elaborating, if necessary, the ACLU statement made last December on the Oswald case.

Office Note: Copies of the speeches of Senator Goldwater and Mr. Katzenbach (entered in the Congressional Record by Congressman Kastenmeier) referred to in Item 11, are being circulated with these minutes.

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION ON THE DEATH OF J. FRANK DOBIE

With the death of J. Frank Dobie the American Civil Liberties Union has lost a long-time friend and Vice-Chairman of its National Committee, and the world has lost a unique character. Frank Dobie was a member of a rapidly disappearing species: he was a true Texas -- or Texian, as he preferred to say -- who was also a citizen of the world. He was born on a Texas ranch, and throughout his life he remained in body and spirit the ideal type of the Texas rancher, not only dressing, walking, and talking like the old-time "Texian" he was, but above all things cherishing the ideals of human dignity and the spirit of freedom not only in big things but also in the little things which are the foundation-base of big things. Clarence Ayres recalls that the first time he ever saw Frank Dobie in a faculty meeting at the University of Texas was when, following a small but dangerous fire in a university building the Administration was proposing to forbid smoking in the "non-residential, non-fireproof" buildings of the University. Frank vigorously (but unsuccessfully) opposed this infringement of individual liberty! It was the same sense of personal integrity that prompted him to mount the hustings and campaign against a governor who had betrayed his trust. Rugged individualism was likewise manifest in his academic career. In his younger days he refused to pursue a Ph.D.; and against the opposition of his Department Chairman (who was an authority on the Anglo-Saxon origins of the English language) he insisted on offering a course in "The life and literature of the Southwest" -- which became the most popular elective in the Department.

The popularity of his second book, Coronado's Children in 1931 made him a national figure, and his year as visiting professor of American History at Cambridge, another year as an "I. and E." lecturer to the United States Army in England, Austria, and Germany, as well as his three years' service with UNESCO, made him a world figure.

Just before his death he received the Freedom Medal. After a series of illnesses aggravated by a serious automobile accident, Frank was too weak to receive it in person, and his wife of nearly half a century journeyed to the White House to receive Frank's medal and a personal kiss from President Johnson. A few days later his heart quietly stopped beating in his sleep.

The Honorable Nicholas de B. Katzenbach
Attorney General

Dear Mr. Katzenbach:

The American Civil Liberties Union is becoming increasingly concerned over the practice of deferring sentences of defendants in criminal cases or against co-defendants in the same case. The recent modification and inclusion of the statute prohibiting bribery of witnesses in the statute dealing with conduct of public officials [Act of October 23, 1962; P.L. 87-849, 18 U.S.C. § 201] makes appropriate a reexamination of the relationship between the prosecutor and the defendant used as a government witness.

Any undue delay in the imposition of sentence is at once open to suspicion unless the delays are explained in open court. The Rules of Criminal Procedure and the Rules of the various Federal District Courts for all practical purposes give the United States Attorney's office virtual control over the Court calendars and, if the sentencing of a defendant is deferred over an unusually long period -- certainly beyond the term of court in which the conviction or plea of guilty occurs -- it would appear that the delay was occasioned by the failure of the U.S. Attorney's office to put the case on the calendar for sentencing.

The testimony of defendants whose sentencing is withheld, unless there are compelling reasons therefor, is suspect. Either the threat or fear of sentence hangs over the defendant's head, or the defendant testifies with the expectation of having his sentence lightened by incurring the favor of Government prosecutors through his testimony. In either case, the fountain of justice may be polluted and justice is miscarried.

The latter view is supported by the record in the United Dye Case where defendant Irving Pasternak was sentenced on June 5, 1963, to 2 1/2 years and fined $50,000 upon the Government prosecutor's contention that the defendant had gained $2,000,000 in the swindle. The same government prosecutor, on July 29, 1963, in an affidavit answering a motion to modify the sentence, claimed that since June 5, 1963, the defendant had cooperated with the government. Pasternak's sentence was then modified to make him eligible for parole after serving 60 days rather than after one third of the 2 1/2 years.

The recent second trial of Roy M. Cohn, which started on June 9, 1964, and resulted in his acquittal of the charges, disclosed that the key government witnesses had not been sentenced even though more than two years had elapsed since their conviction.

These key government witnesses were Samuel S. Garfield, Allard J. Roen, Sidney S. Barkley and Allan K. Swann. The record discloses that these government witnesses entered pleas of guilty in February and March, 1962. While their sentencing was to have occurred in April, 1962, they appeared as witness in the Cohn trial without having been sentenced.

We have no way of knowing how widespread the Federal practice is of deferring sentencing until the defendant testifies in other cases. Therefore, we request information as to the policies of the Attorney General as issued to U.S. Attorneys governing their conduct in such cases, the number of cases in recent years in which sentence is deferred until the defendant can testify in other cases, the policy of deferring sentencing in any case until the defendant testifies, and what the Department does regard as undue delay in the sentencing of defendants.

In our considered judgment the deliberate delay of sentencing of a defendant until he testifies in another case is violative of the second defendant's right to due process and raises the question of whether the delay is not an offer or promise of "... anything of value ..." which is penalized by the Bribery Statute (18 U.S.C. 201h).

We look forward to your reply.

Sincerely yours,

John de J. Pemberton, Jr.
Executive Director

CAMPAIGN SPEECH AT AL LANG FIELD, ST. PETERSBURG, FLA., SEPT. 15, 1964

BY SEN. BARRY GOLDWATER, REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT OF THE U.S.

Let me recall some words I used in accepting my party's nomination for President of the United States. I said then that "nothing prepares the way for tyranny more than the failure of public officials to keep the streets safe from bullies and marauders."

These words bear repeating -- over and over.

This is a serious matter, a tragic matter. And the greatest tragedy of all is that the breakdown of law and order should be an issue in this campaign for the highest office in the land.

But it must be an issue, a major issue. How can a candidate for the Presidency brush aside the fact that there were two and a quarter million serious crimes -- major crimes -- committed in our nation last year? How can he ignore the six thousand or so major crimes committed in the last twenty-four hours?

And even that is not the whole story. Crimes in our country -- and I am still speaking of serious crimes -- rose 10 per cent last year over the year before, and 16 per cent over the year before that. In the last six months alone they have risen 15 per cent!

You know, I sometimes wonder what my opponent means when he purses his lips and calmly says: "Let us continue."

Let us continue what? A crime rate that climbs five times faster than population, as it has over the last four years? A crime rate that rapidly accelerates, as it has over the last four years? A moral decay that can only lead to the ruin of our nation?

In your hearts, you know this is wrong. In your hearts, you know there must be a change. And in your hearts, you know that Bill Miller and I will be that change.

Nothing is more clear from history than that moral decay of a people begins at the top. It seeps down from the highest offices into all walks of life. And what do we see today in those unlighted highest offices?

We see a shadow cast across the White House itself. We see political power used for personal gain. We see a national spectacle in the incredible cases of Bobby Baker -- my opponent's protege -- and of Matt McCloskey, his close associate.

And what do we hear about all this from our highest officials?

We hear official silence -- broken by the scrambling of official cover-up. And we hear more. We hear the Ambassador to the United Nations, a major spokesman for the present Administration, condoning lawlessness and even exhorting our educated youth to break the law.

That's right. Break the law. That was the advice of Adlai Stevenson to an audience at Colby College this year. "In the great struggle to advance civil and human rights", he said, "even a jail sentence is no longer a dishonor but a proud achievement."

It was an American statesman of the last century who said, so briefly and clearly: "He who strikes at A law strikes at THE law." For those blessed, as we are, with a representative republic, that is always true -- no "ifs", "ands", or "buts" about it. Everybody, high and low, is obliged to obey the law. If the law is bad, it should be changed, not defied. And everybody has the right and duty to work toward that change through his lawful representatives in legislative bodies.

Yet our highest executive officers have done more than forget this fundamental principle, this pillar of domestic security. They have openly and knowingly shattered it. And to what end? That I leave for you to decide.

Nothing is more vital to every one of us today than the restoration of domestic security. The founders of our great nation set this as one of the principal duties of government, "to insure domestic tranquility." We have had the good fortune during most of our history to be able to take a stable civil order for granted. All the more reason that we must not underestimate the crisis facing us.

We are headed toward the law of the jungle, where "they shall take who have the power, and they shall keep who can." Unless person and property are secure from the marauder, we have no government worthy of the name.

How, you will rightly ask, will Bill Miller and I restore domestic tranquility to this land? Well, let me tell you how we will do it.

First, by example at the top. It is idle to expect delinquents and thugs to respect the law if those in high office do not act with integrity. And this means more, much more, than merely keeping out of the criminal courts. It means following the highest moral standards in every aspect of conduct. It means that the President and his associates must be, like Caesar's wife, wholly above suspicion. It means that the burden of proof rests squarely on their shoulders when the slightest doubt arises about their conduct.

I hardly need remind you that this is not the case today. There would be little reason for alarm if we were confronted only with occasional minor abuses of power, promptly detected and punished. In all ages there will be some who abuse the trust of power.

But an Administration is sick when it is riddled with abuse -- when those abuses are concealed, swept under the rug because they reach too high or touch too many. It is sick when our highest authorities refuse to ferret out and punish corruption. We can only conclude that there is simply too much scandal to allow any of it to come to light.

Press agents and image makers can do much for a candidate. They can give him many faces, looking many ways, appealing to many interests. But there is one face which press agents can't give a man, and that is the face of integrity. Than a man must give to himself or not have at all.

This, then, is the first thing that must be done -- to put in a new Administration at the top. It must be an Administration whose honesty and integrity speak so loudly that you won't have to hear what it, or its press agents, say.

Bill Miller and I will give you that kind of Administration. In your hearts, you know I'm right.

But example alone is not enough. The President must use the power and influence of his office to strike at the roots of the breakdown in law enforcement.

Now, my opponent in this election would not understand what this means. To him, the way to solve a problem is to appropriate a few hundred million dollars of taxpayers' money, and see if the problem will disappear along with the money. If that doesn't happen, the next thing to do is to create a new bureaucracy in the White House to meddle in the affairs of others.

And while he meddles, the nations's capital is being consumed by crime.

Here is a Federal responsibility -- the domestic tranquility of the District of Columbia. What, you might ask, has my opponent done to fulfill his grave responsibility toward law and order in our capital city?

We have heard of and seen many wars in the time of the present Administration. But have we yet heard of the only needed war -- the war against crime? No, not even in the city whose rule lies in the hands of the federal government.

This I can pledge to you -- that Bill Miller and I will launch that attack. We will first of all use our power and influence to see that law enforcement officers, on the state and local level, get back the power they need to carry out their job.

Let me make this crystal clear: enforcement of the law is a state and local responsibility. There is no room in this country for a federal police force. And there is no need for one.

But there is urgent need to return to state and local authorities the traditional powers to apprehend and punish criminals, powers that have only recently been taken away from those authorities by federal courts -- particularly the Supreme Court.

Now, as I understand it, the Supreme Court has been given only very limited power over state criminal convictions under our Constitution. In order to reverse a judgment of a state court, it must first determine conclusively that a convicted defendant was denied some specific right guaranteed by the Constitution.

There was no problem up to a few years ago. But then the Supreme Court began strectching two phrases in the Fourteenth Amendment, often by five to four decision, until the state courts lost virtually all their powers over judicial process.

The result has been severe restriction of state administration of criminal law -- restriction so severe that thirty-six of the chief justices of our states joined in calling upon the Supreme Court to exercise restraint.

Let me just recall some of the key decisions.

Three years ago, five members of the Supreme Court deicded that state courts must follow federal rules of evidence whether they wanted to or not. Specifically, no evidence could be used if police investigators made some mistake -- any mistake -- in gathering the evidence. This rule must hold even if it means an obviously guilty defendant will go free. It is a rule squarely contrary to common law and to constitutional law -- up to three years ago. As one of our greatest common law judges once said, such a rule means that "the criminal is to go free because the constable has blundered."

In an earlier case, the Supreme Court ordered that a criminal conviction should be reversed, no matter how guilty the defendant, if it were shown that some technical violation of constitutional rights occurred anywhere in the course of investigation and trial. If there is any flaw in one confession, all confessions -- whether challenged or not -- must be thrown out!

The trend has now reached its logical end. Five justices of our Supreme Court have held that a voluntary confession made by a state prisoner was inadmissable because his lawyer was not present when it was made. This was held despite the fact that the prisoner admittedly knew of his right to remain silent.

Let me make this absolutely clear -- there was no question in these cases that confessions were extorted or untrue. Such confessions have long, and rightly, been invalid. This is a new rule. It seems to say that a criminal defendant must be given a sporting chance to go free, even though nobody doubts in the slightest that he is guilty. No wonder our law enforcement officers have been demoralized and rendered ineffective in their job.

Something must be done, and done immeidately, to swing away from this obsessive concern for the rights of the criminal defendant. Of course he is entitled to a fair and speedy trial. Of course he is entitled to protection of his constitutional rights.

But is he to be so needlessly pampered that the rights of law-abiding citizens become hollow claims? Are law and order to be sacrifices just to give criminals a sporting chance to go free?

Barry Goldwater St. Petersburg, Fla. Sept. 15, 1964

I know you will agree with me that something needs to be done. And let me suggest three things that can be done.

First, in making appointments to the federal judiciary, the President must consider the need to redress constitutional interpretation in favor of the public. Here it is important to stress again that the recent decisions open to criticism have been made by a closaly divided Supreme Court.

Second, if the Court's decisions should remain unaltered, the President has the obligation to urge amendment of the Constitution. Such amendment should give back to the states those powers absolutely necessary for fair and efficient administration of criminal law. It should safeguard basic rights of defendants, while giving the states power to enforce law and order.

Third, the President should urge Congress to consider changing some of the rules of judicial procedure in the federal courts. Congress clearly has this power under the Constitution.

I have in mind rules such as the one recently established in a case involving the criminal law of the District of Columbia. That rule, set in the Mallory case, holds that any statement made by a defendant to police officers is inadmissible if arraignment is delayed. It makes no difference whether the delay had any connection with the statement or not.

Let me say that, within five years after this ruling, the robbery rate in the District increased by 115 per cent! Our nation's capital now ranks third out of sixteen comparable cities in robberies -- a place of shame and dishonor that reflects directly on lack of leadership and concern in the White House.

These three proposals are constructive steps in the direction of sounder law enforcement. But they can be advanced only by the right leadership.

To restore public virtue, and thereby law and order, there is no place for the dealership of a clever compromiser, a scheming wire-puller, a master politician. There is instead urgent need for leadership, dedicated to the principle that moral law binds both the high and the low, that public law must and shall be enforced.

With your help and God's blessing, Bill Miller and I will give you that leadership. That is our solemn pledge.

The Committee on Committees (ACLU)

Next Meeting : MONDAY, DECEMBER 14, at the Community Room. Prof. James Vorenberg, director of the Justice Department's newly-established Office of Criminal Justice, will speak.

1965 Clearing House Conference Dates : April 1 and 2, 1965, are the dates set for the 17th annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, which will again be held at the International Inn.

Program : Speaking on "The Election and Its Implications for the Future," political analyst Louis H. Bean traced the history of political developments in the U. S. since President Roosevelt's first term, which indicate, he said, that the Democratic Party is increasingly tending to become the party of the majority. On the basis of this historical trend and of the 1964 election, he concluded that -- barring unforeseeable events -- in 1968 the Democrats, under normal circumstances, are likely to lose no more than 5% of their 1964 vote, and under circumstances most favorable to the Republicans not more than 10%, and thus in either case are likely to win the presidency. He also forecast a Democratic loss of between 25-30 House seats in 1966.

John G. Feild, director of the Community Relations Service of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, discussed "Cities in Transition: Their Community Relations Problems." Among the many serious issues facing the cities today, he cited the question of urban renewal and its concomitant social, economic and political problems; challenges inherent in the utilization of grants under the Poverty Program; improving the quality of education for all students and the need to develop better remedial programs and teaching methods; the increasing need for manpower retraining facilities; the need for expanded police training in human relations and community problems; and the questions implicit for the cities in the Heller proposal that the federal government make large grants to the states with no strings attached. The Civil Rights Act, he said, has already brought vast changes in city attitudes towards social welfare problems, and will bring more.

Current Material : On request to the office, 1637 Massachusetts Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036 -- the Clearing House will send out its remaining copies of material distributed at this meeting :(A) -- A DECADE IN CIVIL LIBERTIES, an interpretive summary by Leo Pfeffer, Director of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress, starting with the decline of Senator McCarth's influence in 1954; (B) THE FEDERAL FAIR EMPLOYMENT LAW -- a summary and analysis of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act by Joseph Robison of the American Jewish Congress; (C) THE CIVIL RIGHTS STORY, by Harry Fleischman of the American Jewish Committee, covering governmental, state and civic developments from October, 1962 to the signing of the Civil Rights Act on July 2, 1964; (D) LABOR LOOKS AT THE 88th CONGRESS -- the AFL-CIO Legislative Department's handbook outlining congressional action on employment and the economy, health, education and welfare, labor legislation, consumer protection, foreign policy, conservation, and moves for reform of the rules of Congress, as well as civil rights and liberties.

Subj: November 19, 1964 meeting, 4:45 P.M., ACLU office.

AGENDA

1. Delayed sentencing of prospective witnesses in the federal courts. The draft letter to Attorney General Katzenbach and item 5 of the October 26th Board minutes, both of which are enclosed, explain the problem to be discussed. *

2. Exclusion of physicians in group practice from hospital staffs. (Sy Bucholz will report orally.)

3. Senator Hart's proposed bill to establish the Commission on Civil Liberties. The bill, which is enclosed, raises again the Hannah v. Larche issue which we rather straddled as it arose in the establishment of the Civil Rights Commission. Our position is set forth in the enclosed minutes of the Due Process Committee of December 10, 1959
We also want your reaction to the Senator's general proposal. *

4. Congressional Investigating Committee Procedures. The enclosed draft report initiates a new look at our position.

5. Arrest Records. The enclosed Dorsen memorandum and its staff addendum, sets forth the questions to be pondered.*

Re: ACLU Policy on Due Process in Legislative Investigations

This is a supplementary statement of ACLU policy on legislative investigations in connection with this Committee's review of the due process aspects of such investigations at its November 19th meeting.

The office report previously mailed to you explains limitations on Congressional investigatory power developed to some extent by court decisions requiring a genuine legislative purpose and the pertinency thereto of a particular inquiry. Extensive testimony of Ernest Angell for ACLU in 1954 before the Senate Rules Subcommittee then considering two proposed Senate Resolutions on fair investigatory procedure contains these additional ACLU suggestions for due process protections:

1. Legislative Purpose. Resolutions authorizing Congressional investigation should state the specific needs and objects of the inquiry so that witnesses directed to answer questions may determine their relevancy.

2. Composition of Committees. In order to protect against brow-beating of witnesses and unfair examinations, no committee or subcommittee conducting an investigation should proceed to question a witness, particularly in executive session, unless a majority of its members is present, and in no case should one-man sub-committees be authorized to take testimony.

3. Adequate Notice of Hearings. At least three days notice of his appearance at a hearing should be given to any subpoenaed witness in order to enable him to secure competent counsel if he so desires.

4. Subpoenas. Subpoenas should be issued only by the authority of the investigating committee and signed by the chairman. In addition, subpoenas should state in detail the subject matter upon which the witness is expected to testify and should be accompanied by a copy of the appropriate Congressional rules governing committee investigations.

5. Right to Counsel. All witnesses should have the right to be accompanied by counsel who in turn should have the right to make brief objections to the relevancy of any question or to committee procedures. Counsel should also have the right to submit to the committee brief legal memoranda in support of his objections.

6. Right to Rebut Adverse Testimony. Any person (or organization) about whom slanderous or libelous testimony is offered, or as to whom crime or misconduct is alleged, or who is subjected to public contempt or disgrace because of testimony presented, should be offered a committee hearing at which he may:

a) testify or offer sworn statements in his behalf;
b) recall for cross-examination by himself or his attorney an adverse witness;

c) obtain the assistance of the committee to compel the production of adverse witnesses and documents.

7. Secret Testimony. Evidence of a non-public nature should be kept secret until its release is authorized by the full committee. In no event should a majority report on secret testimony be issued unless there is a fair opportunity for a minority report. To avoid the harm often done in the past to reputations by a committee or committee staff member's premature disclosure to the press of secret testimony, some kind of internal enforcement procedure for rules of secrecy should be created.

8. Screening of Defamatory Testimony. As far as possible, evidence of a derogatory nature should be screened in executive session before it is made public to determine its probative value. If found unreliable it ought not to be made public, but if otherwise, the person about whom such information is offered should be afforded an opportunity to challenge it in executive session before the committee decides whether or not to make it public.

9. Publicity. Televising, filming and broadcasting of congressional investigations should not be permitted until investigating committees adopt rules of fair procedure.

10. Compelling Witnesses to Answer Questions. Privileged communications recognized in the law should be respected by investigatory bodies. Short opening and closing statements and a concise explanation of the yes or no answer should be allowed the witness, in order to avoid distortion of truth. Rather than subject a witness to a contempt citation and criminal prosecution if he mistakenly believes he has a right not to answer a specific question on the grounds of irrelevancy or Fifth Amendment privilege, a procedure allowing either an application to federal court for an order directing a witness to answer, or a system allowing a broadly based screening committee of Congress to pass on the proposed question, should be established.

11. Transcripts. Transcripts of testimony adversely affecting any person should be furnished him gratis, upon demand.

MINUTES
DUE PROCESS COMMITTEE MEETING
Thursday, November 19, 1964, at 4:45 P.M.
ACLU Office

Present: Mr. Ennis, Presiding; Messrs. Dorsen, Lusky, Frank.
Guests: Messrs. Prashker, Markmann
Staff: Messrs. Wulf, Bucholz.

1. Delayed Sentencing of Prospective Witnesses in the Federal Courts.

The Committee considered the problem and the proposed letter of inquiry and protest to the Attorney General in light of the Board's decision of October 26. All of the members of the Committee felt the problem was a serious one meriting ACLU's concern. After some discussion of whether to join the problem with the general question of "deals" between prosecutors and defendants at all stages of the criminal process, it was moved and carried that the letter previously proposed be discarded and that in its place a short letter be written to the Attorney General with a copy to the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York inquiring as to what, if any, the policies of the Justice Department are with respect to delaying the sentencing of prospective witnesses in federal criminal trials who have been found guilty in related cases. No ACLU position statement is to be included. A draft of the new letter is to be re-submitted to the Board.

Office note: Mr. Ennis reported the matter to the Board at its meeting of November 23, 1964.

2. Exclusion of Physicians in Group Practice from Hospital Staffs.

The Committee discussed a request for financial support and amicus participation from a group of doctors in Bellaire, Ohio who are currently engaged in a federal court test of their exclusion from staff privileges by a non-profit hospital corporation because, they allege, the hospital Board of Trustees is hostile to their group practice of medicine. The complaint in their case is based on the Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. 1983, which the doctors claim forbids discrimination by a private non-profit hospital when that hospital receives federal money under the Hill-Burton program and state funds for the care of indigents. It was urged by some members of the Committee that the discrimination alleged in the case was based on purely economic motives and that ACLU ought not to participate in such cases. Others questioned whether on the facts available we could conclude that the hospital authorities were functioning as state agents in denying access to staff privileges. It was the sense of the Committee that the office communicate to the doctors our probable lack of interest in the suit with the understanding that we will not make any final decision on the case until the hospital's motion to dismiss the complaint on the grounds state action is lacking, is decided. Mr. Ennis asked the staff to report at the next meeting on the motion and on a similar case before the New York Supreme Court in Nassau County.

3. Senator Hart's Bill to Establish a Civil Liberties Commission. After a short discussion it was unanimously agreed that the idea of a Commission functioning in the civil liberties area was a good one and should be strongly supported by ACLU. The major discussion centered in the procedural protections for prospective witnesses contemplated by the bill. Mr. Lusky expressed the sentiment, concurred in by the others, that a Civil Liberties Commission, above all, should provide adequate due process guarantees for any who might be injured as a result of its investigations. It was noted that the bill as it is now proposed fails to provide subpoena powers for the Commission; Mr. Dorsen felt that it was unlikely such a measure would get through the Congress without having subpoena powers added to it, and that it was all the more important therefore to include due process protections for witnesses. Mr. Wulf reminded the Committee that in 1959 the ACLU had declined to enter a suit against the Civil Rights Commission by southern voting registrars who asserted that the right to learn the identity of witnesses against them, the content of their testimony and the right to cross-examine them was part of the due process required of legislative investigating bodies by the Fifth Amendment. The Committee agreed that it would not be bound by its decision not to enter that case (Hannah v. Larche, 363 U.S. 420 (1960)) in deciding what due process protections should be included in the Hart bill. It requested the staff to examine the provisions of the bill and recommend to the next meeting of the Committee specific provisions for inclusion. It was also agreed that the Hart bill would furnish a suitable focus for the Committee's reconsideration of ACLU's position on due process guarantees in all legislative investigations.

Next Committee Meeting: Wednesday, December 9, 1964.

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

TO: Board of Directors

FROM: The Office

RE: PROPOSED ACLU STATEMENT ON FAIRNESS DOCTRINE

The following statement was approved by the Radio-TV Committee at its November 18th meeting for submission to the Board.

"The American Civil Liberties Union's interest in radio and television derives from the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of expression, a guarantee designed to assure citizens a diversity of information and opinion. The premise is that in a marketplace of conflicting ideas, the American public will be exposed to the broadest circulation of contrasting viewpoints which alone makes possible the ultimate exercise of freedom of speech and the press.

"This belief has guided the ACLU's support of measures adopted by the Federal Communications Commission to enlarge diversity of that most important medium of communications, radio and television. Because of the limited number of channels which technically can be developed in the radio and TV spectrum, government regulation is necessary to avoid chaos. Government regulation always carries with it the possibility of censorship, and the ACLU is especially sensitive to this danger. However, each FCC step toward actually increasing diversity -- without interfering with program content -- deserves the backing of civil libertarians eager to have the First Amendment guarantees utilized for the resolution of public issues.

"It is in this spirit that the ACLU endorses in principle the FCC's 'fairness doctrine.' In essence the doctrine says that if broadcasters are to operate their publicly-granted licenses in the 'public interest, convenience and necessity,' they must present different sides of important public issues. Recently the FCC has set forth certain standards to assure that different points of view would be expressed, and the Union fully supports these standards. They provide that: 1) where a licensee permits the use of its facilities for a personal attack upon an individual or organization, the licensee is required to give the person or group attacked time for an adequate response; 2) where a licensee permits the use of its facilties for any person other than a candidate for political office to take a partisan position on the issues involved in an election or to attack one candidate or support another, the station must give each candidate concerned a 'comparable' opportunity to answer. And finally, 3) where a licensee permits the use of its facilities for the presentation of views regarding issues of current importance, there must be similar opportunity for the expression of contrasting views accorded to other responsible groups within the community. (With regard to this third standard, the FCC goes out of its way to emphasize its applicability to the presentation of views regarding racial segregation, integration or discrimination.)

"In its various statements about the 'fairness doctrine,' the FCC has made clear that these standards will be applied on a basis of reasonableness and with a view to the facts of each particular situation. In addition much weight is to be given to the good faith judgments exercised by the licensee in each case. The Union agrees that in order to operate most effectively, the 'fairness doctrine' must and should be applied in this reasonable manner.

"In some of its statements on the 'fairness doctrine', notably its July 26, 1963 statement, the FCC has specified certain procedural requirements which would necessitate, in certain circumstances, the submission of broadcast transcripts by licensees to persons or groups attacked. Although the Union strongly supports the principle of the 'fairness doctrine,' it does not at this time take any position on these procedural requirements. Indeed, it has strong reservations about their advisability and practicality. We suggest that the Commission re-evaluate them in the light of their own experience and the practicalities of the broadcasting industry, especially in the context of this last election campaign.

"With regard to the 'fairness doctrine' itself, the ACLU is not unmindful that when government action even approaches the area of content, dangers arise which may limit freedom of expression on the air. Particularly there is the danger that to avoid involvement with a government agency over interpretation of what is a controversial program, or where a dramatic or other non-discussion format presents an issue, the station management will simply remove the controversy from its programming. The fear is the station will play safe, thus depriving the public of needed exposure to controversy. Such a fear of government involvement with programming on the part of the broadcaster is understandable. But the broadcaster does have a responsibility as a public licensee and a challenging opportunity to acquaint his audience with a variety of points of view — especially when individuals and organizations are under specific attack and thus the particular controversy is very sharp.

"Government regulation not based on reasonableness or which does not consider whether the licensee acts in good faith, must be opposed, and the Union will act to oppose such regulation if and when it occurs.

"Not all problems have been solved in interpreting the 'fairness doctrine,' nor can they be until particular cases arise. For example where one side of a controversial issue is involved in a program other points of view might be presented in another format. The basic criteria is whether the public is exposed not to one but to a diversity of opinions. The way of doing this, consistent with the principle of fairness and reasonableness, should remain with the station. As the FCC stated in its July 1, 1964 'The History of the Fairness Doctrine':

> In determining in an individual case whether or not a licensee has complied with the fairness doctrine, the Commission looks solely to whether, in the circumstances presented, the licensee acted reasonably and in good faith to present a fair cross-section of opinion on the controversial issue presented. In making such a determination, an honest mistake or error in judgment will not be condemned, so long as the licensee demonstrates a reasonable and honest effort to provide a balanced presentation of the controversial issue. The question of whether the licensee generally is operating in the public interest is determined at the time of renewal on an overall basis.

"The successful working of democracy, indeed the exercise of freedom itself, is not always easy or simple. Effort is required, and broadcasters have the responsibility to make this effort, if their industry is to remain true to the democratic ideal that not one viewpoint, but many, are essential if the public is to know and understand the issues it alone must decide."

From: George Soll
Re: Turner vs Robert F. Kennedy and John Edgar Hoover

A William W. Turner was discharged by the F.B.I., pursuant to a letter from J. Edgar Hoover setting forth four reasons: one - that he had repeatedly demonstrated by untrue and unjustified statements that he did not possess the truthfulness, accuracy and responsibility required by a Special Agent of the F.B.I. (This charge was based on the contents of letters written by the F.B.I. agent to Senator Kefauver and Congressman Celler); two - that he was not amenable to discipline; three - that he showed a poor attitude toward the F.B.I. and its Director; four - in letters to Senator Javits, Senator Kefauver and Congressman Celler he made unauthorized disclosures of highly confidential and highly secret information and investigations involving the internal security of the U.S.

On appeal to the Civil Service Commission, the Commission approved the discharge, although they eliminated charges two and four set forth above. Mr. Turner then appealed to the Federal District Court and Judge Burnita Shelton Matthews upheld his discharge without any opinion, stating that "there is no genuine issue of material fact involved herein". Mr. Turner appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. By a two to one decision the Court of Appeals sustained the District Court's judgment. The two judge majority wrote no opinion. The dissent written by Circuit Judge Fahy, who adopted the argument of Mr. Turner's attorneys (who are the Edward E. Bennett & Williams' firm in Washington, D.C.), stated that the discharge, which was based at least in part on the letters written to Congressmen by Mr. Turner, violated the Civil Service Act provision allowing civil servants the right to petition to Congress and also violated the First Amendment by abridging the right of people to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

The Constitutional provision, of course, is the First Amendment prohibition against abridging free speech and allowing the right of assembly. The statutory argument is based on the language of Section 652(d) of Title 5, of the U.S. Code, which reads as follows:

> "The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress, or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to any committee or member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with."

Leaving aside the statutory basis of the argument, except to the extent that it presumably reaffirms a constitutional rights, the question remains whether any action can be maintained for the dismissal of a government employee because he has complained to a Congressman. I think there is a distinction between dismissing someone for having complained to a Congressman and dismissing someone not for the complaint itself but for the form of the complaint, to wit, that it is full of misrepresentations, untruths, etc. Although this distinction is not articulated in any of the briefs that I have seen nor is it mentioned in Judge Fahy's decision in the Circuit Court, I think it is a most important distinction. For example, suppose a civil servant writes a letter to a Congressman which clearly indicates paranoid tendencies or some other unusual mental maladjustment, would not the fact that such letter showed these symptoms be a basis for dismissal even though the mere writing of a letter to a Congressman would not be such a basis? If the Committee agrees that this distinction serves as a basis for determining whether or not we participate in such type of cases then it is necessary to read the letters involved in order to make a factual judgment. If the Committee decides that the F.B.I. man cannot be dismissed regardless of the truth or falsity of that which is set forth in his correspondence, then, of course, the letters sent by him are of no importance.*

Subject: November 24, 1964 meeting, 12:30 P.M., ACLU Office.

AGENDA

1. The Hatch Act. In June 1962, the Committee discussed the Hatch Act as a possible infringement of the political freedom of government employees. The Committee thought then that "limitations upon government employees' political activity was warranted in some cases but that the present scope of the Hatch Act was probably too broad." The office was instructed to examine the Act more particularly so that the Committee would have a better basis for deciding what amendments, if any, may be desirable.

   The fruit of that instruction is the enclosed memorandum by Thomas B. Marvell, of the University of Michigan Law School. Herb Channick's June 1962 memorandum is also enclosed. It will supply you with the details of the provisions of the Hatch Act.

2. Turner v. Kennedy. George Soll's memorandum is enclosed. Though, as you will note, the Supreme Court denied certiorari, the general question involved still survives.

3. Senator Hart's proposed bill to establish a Commission on Civil Liberties. The Biennial Conference recommended ACLU support of this proposal. The Board asks your advice.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1964 - 12:30 P.M.

ACLU OFFICES

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Bierstedt, Black, Brown, Evans, Frank, Hacker, Heckscher, Kunstler, Lacy, Maslow, Miller, Millis, Prashker, Rice, Soll, Vladeck, Waring, Westin; Judge Kenyon; Mesdames Jacobs, Pilpel.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Wulf, Adler, Neier, Haskell; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitors: Mr. Jeffery Fuller, Mrs. Patricia R. Harris, Mr. Charles Markman, Mr. Lloyd Smith.

1. Minutes. The minutes of the September 28 meeting were approved as circulated.

2. Introductions. The following guests were introduced and welcomed: Mr. Jeffery Fuller, Mrs. Patricia R. Harris, Mr. Charles Markman, and Mr. Lloyd Smith. The announcement of Mrs. Leanne Golden Katz's recent marriage was applauded.

3. Financial authorization of the Southern Regional Office. Mr. Pemberton inserted an item in the agenda requesting the Board to authorize the opening of a small bank account for the Southern Regional Office with Mr. Morgan's signature and those of his assistant, Jean Levine, and of Mr. Pemberton being the only valid ones authorized for the account. The motion authorizing such an account passed unanimously.

4. Church-State Committee recommendations. Mr. Pemberton put to the Board the recommendations of his October 15 memorandum deferring consideration of the issues of (1) tax exemption for churches, (2) public aid to church-related colleges and universities, and (3) shared time. Mr. Hacker suggested that the Academic Freedom Committee also be consulted on shared time and that the affiliates be encouraged to consult local educators for specific advice. After further discussion the Board unamiously adopted Mr. Pemberton's recommendations.

5. Due Process Committee recommendation. Mr. Wulf presented the draft of a letter to the Attorney General, prepared on the recommendation of the Due Process Committee, to ask "what the Department of Justice practice is with respect to the use of unsentenced prisoners as government witnesses, particularly where it seems that they remained unsentenced pending their testimony in another case." Mr. Wulf said that in preparing this draft he had asked U.S. District Attorney (Southern District, New York), Robert Morganthau, for further information on the status of defendants named in the draft. To date, no reply from Mr. Morganthau has been received, but an assistant District Attorney had contacted at least two Board members to ask why we were inquiring and to point out that the Department of Justice would like to know directly criticism of it before reading about it in the newspapers. Mr. Soll questioned the conclusion stated in the last paragraph of the draft and felt the letter should be delayed so that the staff might talk with Mr. Morganthau first. Mr. Prashker and Mr. Rice added that they felt the scope of inquiry needs to be enlarged beyond mere delay in sentencing. Judge Waring stated that the inquiry should be broader than to the Justice Department, that it should go to the Judicial Conference of the U.S., as well. He then moved that the issue should be returned to the Due Process Committee for further consideration. This motion was seconded and carried unanimously.

6. Consideration of THE STRANGE TACTICS OF EXTREMISM. Mr. Reitman put the questions raised by his memorandum of October 15, previously circulated. Circulated at the Board meeting was the copy of a letter from National Committee member, Sylvan Meyer, attached to these minutes.

The general feeling of the Board, after much discussion, was that the Overstreet book is not the most competent work in this field but rather compiles and condenses what has already been said better by others. Mr. Bierstedt suggested that the ACLU could review the book in the monthly Civil Liberties without promoting it, though Judge Kenyon reminded the Board that this is a question of editorial policy. Mr. Rice moved that the first alternative presented by Mr. Reitman be adopted; that is, that the ACLU should not purchase or distribute copies of the Overstreets' book at all. The motion passed unanimously. During the discussion Mr. Kunstler suggested that we should perhaps consider eventually distributing a book which the ACLU wholeheartedly supports. The Board did not alter its 1951 position to say that we should never favor a particular book, deciding to examine individual situations as they arise.

Mr. Reitman then asked what guidance the Board could give on the broader questions raised by his March, 1962 memorandum, recirculated with the current one on the Overstreet book, concerning the Union's role in cooperating with other organizations concerned with preservation of the democratic process. The Continuations Committee of the Greenwich Conference (an organizational clearing house) was brought up and Mr. Maslow urged the Union to continue to be represented on the Committee to insure that civil liberties concerns be expressed. Since the Greenwich Conference is not an organization as such, this does not obligate ACLU. Moreover, he pointed out that the Committee's mandate is the entire spectrum of threats to the democratic process and is thus not confined to the prevalent preoccupation with the ultra-right. Mr. Reitman emphasized that regardless of the source of attacks on civil liberties (campaigns to oust teachers, removal of textbooks and censorship of libraries) the Union would continue to press our specific points of interest. Mr. Angell mentioned the newly-organized National Council for Civic Responsibility which has as its announced task the answering of ultra-right attacks in the same media which carry the original attack. The office plans to consult with the Council to determine how we may, within our special civil liberties area, cooperate. Mr. Westin suggested that the Council may also seek to do two things: (1) Put pressure on the FCC to move into the area of content supervision; and (2) Raise the issue of tax exemption of right wing organizations.

7. The Warren Commission Report. Mr. Pemberton said that since the mimeographed draft of a proposed ACLU statement was circulated with the Board material, the staff had reconsidered and felt that Mr. Fraenkel's statement should be treated as follows: Points #1 and #2 should not be made unless the pending policy studies on right to counsel and prejudicial publicity enabled the Union to say something more than the December 6, 1963 statement did. Point #3 should be subjected to more thorough study and should be brought before the Board at a later date, considerably expanded. Mr. Kunstler felt that point #1 (the right to counsel) needs further clarification by the Union, especially in light of the Escobedo v. Illinois decision.

Mr. Vladeck felt that the ACLU should not issue any statement on the Warren Commission Report which does not deal with the defendant's right of counsel and that all three points should be referred back to the appropriate committee. Mrs. Pilpel remarked that to take the word of law enforcement officials (as does the draft in point #1) that all rights of an arrested person had been observed is fundamentally contrary to good civil liberties sense. It was agreed that futher steps be taken in accordance with this discussion, and a further draft be brought to a future Board meeting.

8. The Dan Smoot broadcasts. Mr. Reitman reported that last June, Dan Smoot, a radio commentator based in Texas and syndicated to 133 radio and TV stations, attacked several civil rights and civil liberties organizations: American Jewish Congress, Congress of Racial Equality, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, National Council of Churches, National Urban League, and ACLU. Then in July, Mr. Smoot attacked the ACLU alone. We recently joined the five other organizations in writing to the 133 stations involved asking (1) did the station carry the original program; (2) is the station aware of the FCC fairness doctrine's requirements; and (3) if the station carried the program, will it grant us free time to reply.

9. Radio-TV Committee report. Mrs. Pilpel reported that the Radio-TV Committee had considered the question of whether President Johnson's recent speech dealing with Khrushchev's resignation and Red China's explosion of a nuclear weapon required the granting of equal time under §315 to the opposing candidates. The Committee unanimously approved the FCC's ruling. The Committee, however, anticipates a more fruitful discussion of §315 itself, when the results of a comparison of total candidate broadcast time (and minority party candidate time) in the 1960 campaign (when §315 was suspended by act of Congress) and the current one is completed. Such a study is under way in the FCC and the committees of the two houses of Congress.

10. NYCLU Fund Raising Campaign. Mr. Neier urged Board member participation in a series of NYCLU fund raising receptions scheduled for this month and next. He also said that Mr. Charles Morgan, of the Southern Regional Office, would participate in some of these.

11. Affiliate tours by Mr. Haskell. Mr. Haskell reported on a recent visit to the Florida affiliate which is attempting to strengthen its organization, and to Birmingham, Alabama where he met with fifteen people who are interested in organizaing an Alabama affiliate of ACLU.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1964 - 12:30 P.M.

ACLU OFFICES

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Bierstedt, Black, Brown, Ennis, Evans, Frank, Fraenkel, Hacker, Heckscher, Jones, Miller, Millis, Rice, Soll, Whiteside; Judge Kenyon, Mesdames Jacobs, Pilpel.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Wulf, Adler, Haskell, Morgan, Bucholz, Fuller; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitors: Norman Thomas, Roger Baldwin, Edward Stark, Matthew Stark (Minnesota Branch Board member disignee), Charles Markmann.

1. Minutes. The minutes of the October 26 meeting were approved as circulated.

2. Introductions. Mr. Edward Stark from the Minnesota affiliate, and his father, were welcomed. Mr. Roger Baldwin and Mr. Norman Thomas were given a special welcome as the only survivors of the original 1917 committee which was the predecessor of the ACLU. Mr. Seymour Bucholz was introduced as the new assistant legal director.

3. Norman Thomas's 80th birthday. A birthday cake was presented to Norman Thomas in celebration of his 80th birthday. He responded graciously remarking that of all his associations with various institutions, his with the ACLU has been the most successful.

4. The Ultra-right. Mr. Angell remarked on his observation of the strength of "know-nothingism," to which Mr. Thomas added that in his rather extensive travels in the U.S. during the recent campaign, he had never seen so much persecution of individuals or evidence of extreme bigotry in all parts of the country (e.g. bomb threats, phone calls, hearses and death notices). Many of the participants in such activities are young people which makes it all the more disturbing.

5. Financial report. Mr. Pemberton presented the operating statement of the ACLU from January 1, 1964 through September 30, 1964 as previously circulated to the Board members, and stressed the need to overcome the current excess of expenditure, in relation to income, measured by the year's projections.

6. Radio-TV Committee report. Mrs. Pilpel summarized the proposed "fairness doctrine" statement, previously circulated, stressing the Committee's view that on the whole the fairness doctrine could advance diversity on the air. She noted the Committee's concern with the FCC requirement that broadcast transcripts be submitted by licensees to persons or groups attacked, as such a requirement might prove so onerous to broadcasters that they would seek not to program controversy at all. She said this concern would be expressed to the FCC with the request that the Commission re-evaluate this requirement in the context of actual station experience.

Mrs. Pilpel also presented the case of Lisa Howard who was suspended from her job as a newsbroadcaster for ABC for engaging in political activities during the recent campaign and who was subsequently discharged altogether from that network. Miss Howard has objected through her attorney that she has been blacklisted and the Radio-TV Committee has decided to investigate in the following ways: They will write to ABC asking for the facts in this particular case, and also will write to all the major networks asking for their policy regarding participation in partisan activities by the employees. The Committee has no recommendation at this time concerning the case.

7. Due Process Committee report on use of unsentenced prisoners as government witnesses. Although there is no formal report at this time, Mr. Ennis asked the Board's approval to send a letter to the Attorney General asking what is the Justice Department's position on the use of unsentenced prisoners. This approval was given unanimously.

8. Plans for ACLU membership and plenary Board meetings. Mr. Pemberton proposed to the Board that the issues of shared time and capital punishment (which the affiliate membership will be considering during January and February) be on the agenda for the plenary Board meeting in late March as well as the recommendations of the Free Speech and Association Committee and of the affiliate boards on the subject of libel. The Board approved these additions to the agenda.

9. Academic Freedom Committee report. Mr. Bierstedt asked the Board to approve the addition of the following members to the Academic Freedom Committee: James Gutmann, Samuel Hendel, Robert J. Schaefer, Father James C. Finlay, Donald G. Herzberg, Norman Klein, and Dennis O'Connor. He also requested that permission be given to exceed the set number of the Committee (which is 27 members) by one, bringing the total membership to 28. The Board unanimously gave its approval to Mr. Bierstedt's requests.

10. Illinois affiliate primary membership responsibility. Mr. Haskell reported the recommendation of the National Development Council's Steering Committee that beginning January 1, 1965 the Illinois affiliate be given primary membership responsibility. He explained that though the Illinois affiliate will shortly be without an Executive Director it has hired someone to be responsible for the membership-financial aspect of their program, and its board's assumption of responsibility for the success of the change and the use of it in enhancing development work was viewed with enthusiasm by the Steering Committee. The Board approved the NDC's recommendation unanimously.

11. Florida affiliate. Mr. Wulf asked the Board's approval of a $600.00 Marshall Fund grant to the Florida affiliate for the purpose of doing research into that state's use of the death penalty in rape cases as applied to white and Negro defendents. The money would be used to pay the travel expenses of volunteer law students going into the 67 counties to examine records. The question was raised whether or not this money would be better spent supporting litigation which is often more effective than research as such, but Mr. Wulf explained that this particular research is oriented to litigation for it will be presented as evidence in the next pertinent trial. A motion approving this grant passed unanimously.

12. LCDC grant. Mr. Pemberton proposed that the $15,000 given to LCDC at its inception be allocated equally between the special-purpose Evans fund and the general-purpose Vigilance fund. The Board unanimously approved his proposal.

13. The FBI: Hoover's statement regarding M. L. King. Mr. Pemberton presented a draft response to Mr. Hoover's recent statement characterizing Dr. King as "a notorious liar." Much discussion ensued and the following points were made: Mr. Brown felt that we should make no statement defending Dr. King for enough individuals and groups had already done this quite effectively, as had Dr. King himself. Mr. Ennis agreed that the ACLU would add nothing at this point by characterizing Mr. Hoover's statement as "irresponsible" but should instead examine the way in which the FBI is enforcing civil rights laws and the way in which they investigate civil rights complaints. Mr. Fraenkel raised the question of what percentage of the FBI agents investigating civil rights complaints were sent in from outside FBI offices, the point being that the local FBI worked constantly with local law enforcement officers on other law-enforcement problems. Mr. Morgan emphasized this aspect and pointed out that the fact that there is no separate civil rights department in the FBI compounds the problem. In view of the FBI's responsibility for routine crimes, Mr. Ennis suggested that civil rights problems should be transferred outside of the FBI to another agency or at least be segregated to a separate unit within the FBI, and that we should specifically re-raise with the Attorney General these alternatives. However, Mr. Whiteside questioned Mr. Fraenkel's position, suggesting that we should not tell the FBI how to do its job.

It was moved and passed unanimously that the office write the Attorney General urging a reexamination of the methods of investigating violations of civil rights and that a public statement be made about this.

14. Legal Department report. Mr. Wulf reported that currently the ACLU has 30 cases pending in court (either as counsel or as amicus curiae) and that the legal department would request a Marshall Fund grant to cover the expenses of a very substantial increase in litigation this year.

15. Virgin Islands Constitutional Convention. Mr. Pemberton reported for Mr. Baldwin that the president of the Virgin Islands legislature has asked the ACLU to enlist advisors to the Constitutional Convention set for December 8, and in response Mr. Baldwin has invited several legal authorities to serve at the expense of the legislature: former ambassador Adolf Berle, Judge William Hastie (former governor), and Professor Munoz Amato of the University of Puerto Rico.

16. Constitutional Committee report. Judge Kenyon reported that the Constitutional Committee unanimously recommends a proposal which would authorize a Board of from 25 - 100 members to permit an immediate increase of 33 in the membership of the Board, one additional member to come from each affiliate, to be its executive director or a member of its board designated by that board. This proposal would be acted upon by amendment of the Certificate of Incorporation at a formal meeting of the corporation (at the time of a future board meeting) and amendment of the Union's Constitution and By-Laws to be voted upon in the course of conducting the forthcoming election of directors (for positions among the present 35 directorships). Because the particular enlargement is viewed in the Biennial Conference recommendation calling for it as an experiment, no other constitutional amendment than one enlarging the number would be proposed. Instead, for the period until the next Biennial Conference reviews the experiment, the affiliates' designated representatives will be added to the Board by exercise of the Board's power to fill vacancies. (Judge Kenyon reported that her reference to this being done under a "gentleman's agreement" won her, from one member of the Consitution Committee, a nomination for recognition as "an honorary gentleman.") The Committee will proceed to take the steps outlined.

Minutes
Free Speech and Association Committee Meeting
Tuesday, November 24, 1964, 12:30 P.M.
ACLU Office

Present: Soll, presiding; Millis, Fingerhood, Galantiere, Evans, Channick, Lowenstein.
Guest: Markman
Staff: Bucholz, Pemberton, Reitman, Wulf

1. Senator Hart's Proposed Bill to Establish a Civil Liberties Commission. Mr. Wulf reported the essential provisions of a bill to be introduced by Senator Hart at the next session of Congress to establish a body analogous to the Civil Rights Commission which would concern itself mainly with First Amendment and due process issues. Several members of the Committee expressed the desire to have ACLU support the principle of the proposed commission but voiced reservations about whether the bill contained adequate due process protections for witnesses called before it and for persons whose reputations might be damaged by publicity given to its deliberations, even though the bill provides no subpoena powers in its present form. It was moved, seconded and carried that the Committee recommend to the Board the approval in principle of the Hart proposal, while at the same time taking note of the Due Process Committee's concern with the lack of certain due process protections in the bill (see Due Process minutes of Nov. 19, 1964); it was understood and agreed by Committee members, based on the report of the Staff, that the Due Process Committee planned to recommend to the Board the inclusion in the draft bill of specific due process guarantees for persons affected by the Commission's operations.

2. Turner v. Kennedy. The Committee discussed the policy issue posed by the dismissal of the case of William W. Turner from the F.B.I. As the November 19, 1964 memo from George Soll points out, Turner was originally charged by J. Edgar Hoover with: (1) demonstrating by statements in a letter to several members of Congress that he did not possess the truthfulness and accuracy required of an FBI agent; (2) that he was not amenable to discipline; (3) that he showed a poor attitude toward the F.B.I. and its Director; (4) that his letters to members of Congress disclosed confidential and secret information. The Civil Service Commission sustained the discharge but dropped charges 2 and 4. A Federal District Court and a Court of Appeals upheld the dismissal, and the Supreme Court recently denied certiorari.

One member proposed that the Committee first decide whether Turner's dismissal violated the terms of 5 U.S.C. 652 (d) which forbids denial of or interference with the "right of persons employed in the civil service... to petition Congress... or to furnish information... to any... member thereof". Others felt the ACLU ought not concern itself with statutory construction but should take a broader look at whether the dismissal of Turner violated First Amendment principles. Still a third alternative proposed was that the Committee proceed to look at the large question of what restrictions on public statements by civil service employees, federal, state and local, are justified by considerations of national security, public safety, and efficient operation of governmental agencies. It was generally agreed, since participation in the Turner case had been precluded by the Supreme Court's recent denial of certiorari, to discuss further the general question of the limits on dismissals of civil servants for statements critical of their agency or superiors, especially statements made to members of Congress.

Mr. Millis observed that the basic question he saw before the Committee was whether letters written to Congressmen couldn't be used as evidence that a civil servant was guilty of untruthful statements and a poor attitude toward his work. He posited the example of a man who made statements in letters to legislators exhibiting senility or paranoia and concluded that he could not see why the First Amendment barred using such statements to support a dismissal. (The Soll statement of November 19, 1964, previously distributed, also took this position). Miss Fingerhood advanced the position that statements to legislators should be absolutely privileged in order to insure that the protection for the right of civil servants to criticize agency policies or personnel would not be whittled away by administrative decisions on the content of the criticism.

Several members suggested analogies between the Turner problem and dismissals of school teachers on the local level for criticism of their superintendents or school boards. Messrs. Channick and Lowenstein suggested that the scope of the freedom to make public statements about the nature of agency operations may depend on the extent to which national security is involved; e.g. employees of the F.B.I., Secret Service, and the War Room at the Pentagon may have more restricted freedon to criticize than employees of the Census Bureau. Other members of the Committee recalled that ACLU had debated the problem of public statements critical of current policy made by military officers. Mr. Wulf suggested looking at the dismissals of two civilian employees of a U. S. agency in the Panama Canal Zone based on their alleged public attacks on U. S. policy there during last year's riots. The Committee finally agreed:

1. The Committee's inquiry should be broadened beyond the Turner case;

2. The staff should collect material formerly prepared on the rules and procedures governing public statements by military officers;

3. The Staff should seek to obtain through the Legislative Reference Service in Washington, D. C. information on whether any other dismissals of civil service employees have involved the terms of 5 USC 652 (d).

4. The matter should come back for Committee discussion after the additional information listed above has been assembled and made available.

3. ACLU Policy on the Hatch Act.

Mr. Soll reviewed previous Committee consideration of the Hatch Act (PS/A Minutes June 18, 1962; June 20, 1963), noting that the Union has not taken any position on the Act's restriction in Sec. 9 (a) of political activity for federal employees. In United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75 (1947) a majority of the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of Sec. 9 (a) on the grounds that the First Amendment did not forbid partial restriction of the scope of political activity of federal employees in the interests of an impartial and non-political civil service system.

In previous Committee discussions of the Hatch Act, the view was expressed that the restrictions of the Act are unnecessarily broad and ought to be reviewed carefully in light of the greatly increased number of federal employees and the continual reduction in the number of patronage jobs. Proponents of this view agree with the dissenters in Mitchell that no overriding governmental necessity compells the exclusion from political activity of persons in non-sensitive, non-influential positions, such as lower level clerical, custodial, industrial, etc. They have suggested an ACLU policy that differentiates between the latter and those able to use their positions to manipulate government policy, or coerce inferiors.

The Committee considered previously submitted working papers, including the paper, "Policy Considerations Relevant to Hatch Act Repeal or Modification", prepared for the Committee by Thomas Marvel. After some debate, it was decided to seek further information as to the experience of the British Civil Service, which recognizes distinctions in grade for purposes of a ban on political activity, and to circularize with questionnaires the leaders of national and local civil service associations to ascertain what specific damage is done by current Hatch Act provisions and to solicit suggestions for broadened political freedom under it and comparable local laws. The Committee also authorized the staff to interview, if possible, Civil Service Commission experts with some experience in enforcing the Hatch Act. A question which proved particularly troublesome to the Committee, and which it hoped further research would resolve, was whether, if the absolute ban on political activity were rescinded for lower grade civil servants, the latter could be protected from unauthorized coercion from their superiors aimed at utilizing their off-duty time for political party electioneering.

Pending Business Reports:

1. Mr. Lowenstein reported on his preliminary review of the Foreign Agents Registration Act. He was requested to prepare for the Committee an outline of the free speech issues presented by it and related legislation.

2. Mr. Channick reported on his examination of the problem of newspaper rejection of advertising deemed too objectionable to publish, and stated that the Committee should concern itself with the question of the right of access to newspapers as a non-regulated communications medium.

Mr. Lowenstein and Mr. Channick were asked by the Chair to report fully at the next meeting of the Committee.

3. Mr. Soll called the Committee's attention to two resolutions adopted by the Biennial Conference at the Plenary Session on Civil Liberties and the Cold War:

"1. ACLU should restate its opposition in times of peace or cold war to the continuation of measures, repressive of citizens' rights as guaranteed by the Constitution, which were enacted in times of genuine war emergency.

"2. There should be referred to the National Board for further study, the issue of ACLU defense of disobedience on grounds of conscience, of measures allegedly justified on grounds of military necessity or of danger to the state, where suppression of such right to conscience may or may not be justified by danger to the state."

The second resolution is being discussed by three ACLU affiliates: Michigan, New York and NCACLU. The National Board referred the first to the Free Speech Committee for consideration in light of Mr. Millis' Conference paper and the discussion had at the Plenary session. Copies of Mr. Millis' paper and the report of the session will be distributed to Committee members shortly.

Next meeting: January 8, 1964, 12:30 P.M., at the Union's office.

LEGAL DOCKET - NATIONAL OFFICE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

ACLU Supported Cases:

1. Stanford v. Texas. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 40.
Whether seizure of two thousand publications under a search warrant issued pursuant to the Texas Suppression of Communist Party Act is an unreasonable search and seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Whether the Texas Suppression of Communism Act and Communist Control Law violate the First Amendment and have been superseded by federal legislation. Argued November 12, 1964. Maury Maverick, Jr., San Antonio, Texas; John J. McAvoy, Melvin L. Wulf, and Stephen W. Stein, N.Y.C., for petitioner.

2. Holt and Dawley v. Virginia. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 464.
Constitutionality of summary contempt conviction of two civil rights lawyers because of contents of motion for change of venue, namely, "that the Court is now in effect and/or in fact acting as police officer, chief prosecution witness, adverse witness for defense, grand jury, chief prosecutor and judge." Petition for certiorari filed September 8, 1964. Melvin L. Wulf, Leslie H. Levinson, New York City; Jordan, Dawley and Holt, Norfolk, Va., for petitioners.

3. Pate v. Page. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 426 Misc.
Whether pre-trial television and press coverage denied a fair trial to petitioner who was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. Also raised is the question of the adequacy of the Oklahoma statute which establishes a very limited procedure for determining pre-execution sanity and the question whether the Oklahoma legislature has impliedly repealed capital punishment. Petition for certiorari filed September 1, 1964. Melvin L. Wulf, Leslie H. Levinson, New York; Kenneth Kienzle, Shawnee, Oklahoma, for petitioner. (Cert. denied Nov. 9, 1964)

4. McReynolds and Pappenheim v. Christenberry. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 605
Whether Section 4008, Title 39, United States Code, which regulates the importation and distribution of "foreign political propaganda" is constitutional. Petition for certiorari in advance of decision by Second Circuit filed October 20, 1964. Nanette Dembitz and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for petitioners.

Amicus Curiae Briefs:

5. Calhoon v. Harvey. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 17.
Argues that private suits may be filed under the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 prior to union election in order to challenge validity of election; and that the statute's post-election remedy is not exclusive. Thomas Christiansen, Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU.

6. Dombrowski, et al. v. Pfister, et al. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 52.
Argues that the Louisiana Communist Control Law and Subversive Activities Law are invalid on their face and as applied to the Southern Conference Educational Fund and the National Lawyers Guild. Louis Lusky and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City; and Leonard Dreyfus, New Orleans, Louisiana, for the ACLU and the Louisiana CLU.

7. Freedman v. Maryland. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 69.
Argues the unconstitutionality of Maryland's movie censorship statute which requires review before exhibition. Edward De Grazia, Washington, D.C.; and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU and the Maryland CLU.

8. Beck v. Ohio. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 18.
Argues that a search without warrant is per se unreasonable where there was ample time to secure a warrant; that there was insufficient probable cause to conduct the warrantless search in this case; and that an arresting officer must disclose the identity of an informer in order to permit the Court to determine whether probable cause for a search existed. Bernard Berkman, Cleveland, Ohio; and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU and the Ohio Civil Liberties Union.

9. Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade and the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born v. Subversive Activities Control Board. Oct. Term, 1964, Nos. 65 and 44.
Argues the unconstitutionality on its face of the Communist Front provisions of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950. Marvin M. Karpatkin and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU.

10. United States v. State of Mississippi, et al. Oct. Term, No. 73.
Argues the unconstitutionality of several Mississippi voting statutes including its literacy and constitutional interpretation test, its good moral character test, and the State poll tax requirement. Francis Biddle, Washington, D.C.; Norman Dorsen, Melvin L. Wulf, and Bernard Harvith, New York City, for the ACLU.

11. Seeger v. United States; Jakobson v. United States; and Peter v. United States. Oct. Term, 1964, Nos. 50, 51 and 29.

Argues the unconstitutionality of Section 6(j) of the Universal Military Training and Service Act which provides exemptions only for conscientious objectors who believe in a Supreme Being. Melvin L. Wulf and Alfred Lawrence Toombs, New York City, for the ACLU.

UNITED STATES COURTS OF APPEALS

ACLU Supported Cases:

12. Colliflower v. Garland. Ninth Cir., No. 19170.
This appeal raises the question whether Indian tribal courts are subject to the due process clause of the Fifth and/or Fourteenth Amendments. Francis Conklin, S.J., Spokane, Washington; Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for appellant. To be argued January 1965.

13. Johnson v. United States. Fifth Circuit, No. 21653.
Whether the scope and nature of court-ordered psychiatric examination of defendant were improperly limited; whether defendant intelligently waived counsel; whether summary contempt conviction was invalid and excessive. Melvin L. Wulf and Leslie Howard Levinson, New York City, for appellant. To be argued January 1965.

14. LaBat v. Sigler. Fifth Circuit.
Appeal from dismissal of writ of habeas corpus challenging rape conviction and death sentence on grounds of systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury service. Benjamin E. Smith, New Orleans, Louisiana, for appellant.

Amicus Curiae:

15. Rabinowitz v. United States. Fifth Circuit, No. 2156.
Argues that conviction of appellant was obtained by federal jury from which Negroes were systematically excluded, and that refusal to allow trial without jury was unconstitutional. Melvin L. Wulf, Maurice deG. Ford, New York City; Hugh Gibert, Atlanta, Georgia, for the ACLU and ACLU of Georgia.

16. Ginzburg v. United States. Third Circuit, Nos. 14742-14745.
Brief in support of appeal from conviction of publisher for sending obscene publications through the mail (Housewife's Handbook of Selective Promiscuity, Eros, and Liaison). Morey M. Myers, Scranton, Pa., Murry Powlen, Philadelphia, Pa.; and Melvin L. Wulf, for the ACLU and Pennsylvania CLU.

17. Hoffa v. United States. Sixth Circuit, No. 15876.
Argues the unconstitutionality of a conviction based upon evidence obtained by government informer inserted between the defendant and his attorney. Osmond K. Fraenkel, Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for ACLU.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

ACLU Supported Cases:

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION
156 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10010

December 1, 1964

INSERT TO PAMPHLET: "Academic Freedom and Civil Liberties of Students in Colleges and Universities"
New Section D (to Part V: "Students as Private Citizens")
-- "Arrests for Civil Rights and Other Political Activities"

The arrest and/or conviction of a student for civil rights and other political activities such as those listed in paragraph (A) above should be distinguished by the college from arrests for criminal offenses not involving First Amendment considerations. In screening high school students for admission, college officials should take the position that the existence of an arrest and/or conviction record for civil rights and other political activities is irrelevant to the question of admission. However, even where the practice is to take cognizance of such an arrest, and/or conviction record, this inclusion should not be permitted to affect adversely the student's chances of admission.

An institution should not penalize in any way its own students who have participated in such activities as demonstrations on behalf of civil rights or riding so-called freedom buses. But, in addition, an institution should use its good offices to help students who are arrested for such activities to obtain bail and legal assistance. Ideally, the college itself should provide such assistance. If this is not feasible, then the administration should permit and encourage individual faculty, student, or alumni groups to render the help needed.

In order to protect the interests of students arrested for civil rights and other political activities, a college should separate the records of such arrests from other student records. In other words, such arrest records ought to be given a restricted status in order to obviate intentional or unintentional abuse. In order further to protect the interests of students, an institution should not make the arrest records in question available to prospective employers, graduate and professional schools, or government agencies.

Both the United States Civil Service Commission and all similar state commissions require applicants to answer a question regarding arrests or convictions for any offense other than minor traffic violations. A student should answer such a question fully and accurately. Where the interrogation, arrest and/or conviction occurs as the result of civil rights activities, he should make it a point to specify in detail the circumstances, including the kind of court before which such a hearing took place. In this connection, the philosophy of the United States Civil Service Commission, as expressed in a letter to the ACLU from Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., dated May 12, 1964, is commended for the consideration of state and local commissions:

> "When the information furnished indicates that the arrest was in connection with a peaceful demonstration for civil rights or similar purposes, the arrest is not used by the Commission as a basis for disqualifying the applicant. When the arrest was for a more serious offense than peaceful demonstration for civil rights or similar purposes, it is considered on its individual merits in terms of the specific circumstances involved.
> "The Commission has a sincere concern that civil rights arrests not be used arbitrarily to disqualify applicants. Accordingly we have instructed our regional offices to submit to us for approval any cases in which they consider the circumstances so serious as to warrant adverse action. Our purpose in doing this is to assure review of these cases at the highest level of responsibility."

Mr. Robert Kintner, President

New York 20, New York

Dear Mr. Kintner:

In connection with its overall review of civil liberties' aspects of broadcasting practices, the Radio-Television Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union has recently been asked to consider whether or not, in its opinion, there are any civil liberties' implications in network and station practices and requirements regarding the participation by personnel in political activities or other matters of public controversy. These include news commentators, news analysts, current affairs moderators, entertainers and/or other persons connected with program talent.

We have as yet reached no conclusion regarding this matter. In order to help us evaluate whether civil liberties issues are involved in the network and station practices and requirements described above, it would be most helpful to us if you could supply us with information as to the following.

Do you impose any restrictions upon the personnel listed above with regard to:

1. Active participation in political campaigns (with or without the use of the names of the personnel involved in such campaigns);

2. The mere use of the names of the personnel in political campaigns without active participation by them;

3. The mere donation of money to political parties for use in campaigns;

4. The holding of office in political parties;

5. With respect to participation in matters of public controversy which are not strictly speaking political, such as birth control, civil rights, fluoridation, etc., do the same policies apply as to (1), (2) and (3) above?

6. Are there any restrictions with regard to non-political activities or contributions (financial or otherwise) such as to charities or religious organizations?

7. With regard to any of the above activities, do you make a distinction between performers on programs of news and public affairs and personnel who perform on entertainment programs?

We would be most interested also in any statement you would care to make as to the reasons behind the policy you hold and your views as to whether these policies are in any way involved with civil liberties.

Our Committee meets on December 16 and we would be grateful for a reply by that time.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Alan Reitman

Dear Mr. Reitman:

This is with reference to your letter to me dated December 4, 1964 in connection with your inquiry regarding participation by ABC news personnel in political activities.

The American Broadcasting Company believes it to be in the public interest to maintain the highest possible standards of news coverage, while presenting a diversified cross-section of newscasts, news analysis and news commentary.

In furtherance of this policy, no news broadcaster is asked or permitted to present broadcast material reflecting the editorial opinion of the American Broadcasting Company or that of a sponsor.

For the same reason, the management of the American Broadcasting Company imposes upon its news broadcasters the requirement of complete objectivity in the presentation of news material. Because of its potential effect on such objectivity, we do not allow news personnel to identify themselves with or to advocate publicly any political party or candidate while performing as newscasters.

Cordially,

/S/ Mortimer Weinbach

To: Due Process Committee

From: Sy Bucholz

Subject: Due Process Protections in the Hart Bill and in Congressional Investigations

At its last meeting, minutes of which have already been sent, the Due Process Committee decided to consider recommending specific due process protections for inclusion in Senator Hart's proposed bill to set up a Civil Liberties Commission which would function in much the same way as the Civil Rights Commission.

The Committee has also considered independently over the last two years the possibility of ACLU action aimed at improving and strenthening procedural protections for witnesses and others affected by the activities of all Congressional investigating bodies. (See draft report, "Congressional Investigating Committee Procedures," distributed before the last meeting.)

I urgently request that, prior to this Friday's meeting, Committee members examine carefully the Ellenhorn paper,* my enclosed memo of November 13, 1964, setting out current ACLU policy, and the enclosed "Code of Fair Procedure for Congressional Investigations" proposed by Will Maslow several years ago. Committee members should be prepared to recommend or oppose the specific procedural guarantees discussed in the above mentioned papers for inclusion in the Hart Bill.

The Code proposed by Mr. Maslow differs from ACLU policy in only a few respects:

1. Subpoenas: The Maslow draft permits subpoenas to be signed by anycommittee member and to be served a minimum of 2 days before a hearing. We have suggested they be signed only by Chairmen and served so that prospective witnesses have at least three days notice of their appearance.

2. TV, Radio, Press: The Maslow proposal would permit a witness to insist that he not be photographed by TV, radio, or press photographers while he is testifying. Our suggestion in 1954 was to exclude live and filmed coverage of hearings until fair procedures were adopted by investigating committees. Does blanket prohibition of photographing witnesses raise a First Amendment issue?

3. Composition of Committees: The proposed code permits cross-examination of witnesses by a person whom they have defamed in front of only one committee member. We have come out flatly against one-man subcommittees.

*Previously distributed.

4. Contempt: Refusal to answer a question properly asked by a committee is punishable under the code as a contempt of court, triable by a court without a jury. Most recently, in the Barnett case, we have taken the position that any contempt committed outside the presence of the court must be tried by a jury, if so requested.

As further background for the coming meeting, it should be noted that this Committee and the ACLU Board decided in December, 1959, against entering the case of Hannah v. Larche, 363 U.S. 420 (1960), in which Southern voting registrars unsuccessfully sought to establish a constitutional right to be informed of the nature of charges made about them in information given to the Civil Rights Commission by individual complainants and to cross-examine such complainants. Although it is not easy to tell from the minutes of the Board and the Committee what the precise reasons were for refusing to enter the case,it would seem that the Committee and the Board pinned their decisions on the proposition that a genuine investigatory hearing or proceeding of a body like the Civil Rights Commission is not adjudicatory and does not require the type of due process guarantees needed in proceedings which establish legal rights or in hearings, such as HUAC's, the sole purpose of which is to hold an individual up to public obloquy.

Mr. Alan Reitman
Associate Director

Dear Mr. Reitman:

I have your letter of December 4, asking a number of questions concerning "network and station practices and requirements regarding the participation by personnel in political activities or other matters of public controversy," which the Radio-Television Committee of the ACLU is studying in connection with its "overall review of civil liberties' aspects of broadcasting practices."

CBS has long had a general policy applicable to all news personnel -- whether they do or do not appear on the air -- which provides that while they are free to participate as advocates of one side or another in any public issue of controversy, they do so subject to our policy that they thereby disqualify themselves from any function related to reporting on that issue for CBS News. In other words, if a news broadcaster or a news writer or editor actively participates in a political campaign, or permits his name to be used in such a campaign, we do not permit him to report on or to participate in the reporting on that campaign. There may, indeed, be circumstances where the nature of his job with CBS is such that this disqualification may, during the pendency of the issue or the campaign, make it impractical for him to perform his functions at all for the News Division or the station News Department. For example, a news writer or news editor at the station level may, if he cannot perform his functions in respect of a political campaign, create such difficult assignment problems (since it is impossible to bring in a substitute just for one section of a news broadcast) that we may find it necessary to relieve him of his duties during the campaign.

In essence, in establishing these policies, we have tried to leave the individual free as a citizen, while at the same time we have tried to protect the integrity and credibility of our reporting. And we feel that that credibility and integrity are compromised where an individual seeks to report on an issue in which he has taken a public position as a partisan or an advocate. We have felt that the proper accommodation is to permit him to act as he sees fit, but then to insulate him from dealing in the news area with facts relating to that issue.

In the last analysis, the rationale for this is precisely the same as the rationale underlying our policy which separates our editorial function from our reporting function. As you may know, most of our owned stations frequently editorialize -- some of them on a regular basis. But the editorial function is separated from the News Department, and we do not allow news broadcasters to deliver, or participate in the formulation of, station editorials. The applicable principle is no different from that generally applicable in good journalism -- the separation of the function of editorializing and advocating, on the one hand, from news reporting and news analysis, on the other hand.

With this background, the answers to your specific questions are as follows:

1. If any news person actively participates in a political campaign, with or without the use of his name, we do not use him to report on the campaign.

2. The answer to 2 is the same as the answer to 1: If the person in news permits the use of his name, he has aligned himself with one side, and hence we do not use him for reporting.

3. The question of donation of money by news personnel to a political party is hypothetical; it has not arisen.

4. The same is true on the question of the holding of office in political parties. I would certainly assume, however, that the news person who holds an office in a political party thereby disqualifies him from reporting on facts related to the activities of the party in which he holds office, or relating to opposing parties.

5. The foregoing policies apply not only to purely political issues, but also to other issues of public controversy.

6. There are no restrictions with regard to non-political activities or contributions, although news personnel must recognize that even association with a charitable organization may result in his not being able to handle the news about such a charitable organization if it becomes newsworthy. For example, it is possible to imagine a charitable organization which, for one reason or another, becomes newsworthy because of allegations of excessive administration expenses or the like. If the news person is associated with that charity, we do not believe that it would be proper for him to report the news about it.

7. We draw a sharp distinction between personnel in the News Division, on the one hand, and personnel in entertainment, on the other hand. Since the only purpose of the restrictions which I have described relate to the integrity and credibility of the news, they are inapplicable in the entertainment field. Hence, as far as our policies are concerned, those who perform on entertainment programs are perfectly free to engage in any outside activities involving public issues, without affecting their right to perform on entertainment programs. I should also note that in respect of other personnel, there is similar freedom so long as they have no supervisory role in respect of news. For example, the President of one of our Divisions, the functions of which are entirely unrelated to news, was free to join, and did join, an organization which supported one of the Presidential candidates in the last election and to participate in its activities -- including the use of his name in advertisements in the press.

I trust that this provides you with the information which the Radio-Television Committee of the ACLU seeks.

Sincerely,

/S/ Richard S. Salant

Re: Request for $1000 Allocation from Evans Fund for Printing and Distribution of Appendix to Brief in United States v. State of Mississippi

This 133 page Appendix, prepared by Kenneth Kemper, formerly a student at Brandeis University and now at the Columbia Law School, is an excellent historical survey of the voting discrimination suffered by Negroes in Mississippi from the Reconstruction era to the present. It was enthusiastically endorsed by such an eminent historian as James Silver of the University of Mississippi.

If the Board approves the allocation request, we plan to distribute copies of the Appendix to Political Science and Government Departments at a select number of colleges; to government officials; to law libraries; and most important to educational sources in Mississippi who Professor Silver will advise might best be able to use this information.

Minutes
Due Process Committee Meeting
Friday, December 11, 1964, 4:00 P.M.
ACLU Office

Present: Ennis, presiding
Dorsen, Lusky, McKay, Lasker, Frank.
Guests: Caplan, Maslow.
Staff: Bucholz, Wulf.

1. Senator Hart's Proposal for a Civil Liberties Commission. The Committee had before it a "Code of Fair Procedures for Congressional Investigating Committees" proposed by Will Maslow in his 1954 article in the Columbia Law Review. The Committee also had previously received the November 13, 1964 memorandum on ACLU policy with respect to due process in legislative investigations summarizing 1954 testimony given before the Senate Rules Subcommittee on Fair Procedure by Ernest Angell, and an additional memo comparing the Maslow Code with the testimony.

Continuing its discussion of the Hart Bill (see Due Process Minutes of Nov. 19, 1964), the Committee first considered whether the Maslow Code would be suitable for recommendation to Senator Hart as embodying the kind of due process protections the ACLU would like to see included in the Bill. Mr. Maslow and Mr. Dorsen opposed this on the grounds that it would be inappropriate to include in a bill setting up a Civil Liberties Commission in the Executive Branch the extremely detailed provisions which Mr. Maslow had proposed in his Code for adoption by Congress to regulate all of its investigating committees and subcommittees. After some discussion, the Committee agreed not to send the Maslow Code to Senator Hart and shifted its attention instead to a comparison of the Hart Bill provisions with ACLU policy as outlined in the memorandum of November 19.

The Committee felt that the Hart Bill provisions governing legislative purpose (Sec. 4(a)) and Commission composition (Sec. 5(f)) were adequate. It was pointed out by Mr. Bucholz that the Hart Bill failed to establish a minimum period of notice to be given to any person asked to appear at a Commission hearing. The Committee suggested that a rule of this nature would not be appropriate for inclusion in the legislation creating the Commission but agreed that Senator Hart should be asked whether such a provision could not be included in the Commission's rules of procedure when they are drawn up.

A majority of the Committee felt that the Commission would not be truly effective unless it had subpoena power and recommended that the ACLU suggest the inclusion of such a power in the bill.

The Committee felt that the provisions of the Bill with respect to right to counsel (Sec. 2(c)) were adequate.

Major discussion centered in the right of persons affected by Commission proceedings to rebut adverse testimony, specifically the right of cross-examination. Most members felt that the primary purpose of a Civil Liberties Commission would be to expose and even defame persons who consistently engage in denials of constitutional rights, rather than in investigative activity leading to legislative recommendations or criminal prosecutions, and that therefore it was imperative to give prospective witnesses and others injured by defamatory evidence some opportunity to cross-examine. Mr. Maslow argued that establishing a statutory right of cross-examination would lead to wrangles over the scope of examination, the nature of questions permitted, the number of "impeaching" witnesses called, and would encourage delays in hearings and misuse of the right. He urged the ACLU to support "recognition" of the right of cross-examination without having the statute "confer" such a right. After further discussion, including expressions of concern that we not advocate a right which by its very terms is illusory, the Committee agreed to phrase its suggestion in approximately the following terms:

> "A provision should be added to the Bill requiring that the Commission provide an opportunity, when defamatory testimony is offered in public hearings, for cross-examination in appropriate cases under reasonable limitations to be prescribed by the Commission in its rules."

The Committee felt that the Bill's provisions with regard to the screening of defamatory testimony, executive session hearings, and transcripts were satisfactory, and that any decision with respect to making free transcripts of testimony available to indigents could be left up to the Commission.

The Committee next considered whether there should be any restrictions on the broadcasting of Commission hearings by TV and radio. Three members of the Committee voted to recommend to the Board that ACLU take the position that no TV or radio broadcasting of the Commission's hearings be permitted on the grounds that even with a limited right of cross-examination, they are likely to be one-sided public "trials" of persons accused of systematically violating civil liberties, and that TV and radio coverage tends to distort testimony and disadvantage witnesses who are made nervous by it.

Three other members of the Committee argued that there be no restrictions on TV and radio coverage of Commission proceedings. In their view the major, and practically the only, value the Commission will have is as a means of dramatizing to all Americans the importance of civil liberties protections and the continued existence of civil liberties infringements. Left to newspaper reports alone, these members feel, the Commission will make no substantial impact during its limited term of office. The Board was asked to resolve the conflict in position.

At the conclusion of the meeting, the Chair asked Mr. Bucholz to prepare a draft letter to Senator Hart embodying the recommendations of the Committee for submission to the Board.

WORKING PAPER -- NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION December 11, 1964

DRAFT STATEMENT ON CIVIL LIBERTIES ASPECTS OF POLICE MEMBERSHIP IN JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY

The judgment of people on the basis of their individual ability and competence, not their political beliefs and associations, is a cardinal civil liberties principle. This position, long upheld by the ACLU, supports the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of expression.

In recent weeks this principle has been challenged because of the disclosure that in many local communities members of the police force are also members of the John Birch Society. There has been considerable demand for the dismissal of such police officers, on the ground that the openly-avowed program of the Society is incompatible with this service as public employees, that such membership makes them incapable of dealing calmly and rationally, for example, with violence and racial tension, and to respect the constitutional rights of citizens.

This is not the first time this question has arisen. From time to time membership in other organizations whose philosophy and program are regarded as opposed to democratic values was suggested as a disqualification for public employment -- most notably members of the Communist Party and Catholic nuns who belong to religious orders should not be allowed to teach in public schools.

The ACLU reaffirms now in the John Birch Society case the same civil liberties standard it applied to cases involving members of the Communist Party and Catholic religious orders -- mere membership in any organization is not sufficient grounds for disqualification from employment. The right to associate for lawful purposes is a constitutionally-protected right and no public servant should be barred from exercising it. Public employees, including teachers and members of the police force, should be judged only by their official performance and actions. To do otherwise would not only deny individuals their constitutionally-guaranteed freedoms, but also create a climate of fear and suspicion which can only limit public employees from expressing their personal opinions -- to the detriment of society as a whole which needs the freest exchange of views by citizens.

Certainly public authorities should have discretion to inquire into the suitability of any member of the police force at any time, and especially when he receives any information which he thinks may reflect on the member's capability to perform his duties. Such information might include personal activity as a member of the John Birch Society which reflected adversely upon the impartiality and the attachment to democratic principles we expect law enforcement officers to demonstrate in the exercise of their authority. But the guiding standard for such inquiry should be personal activity, not mere membership in any organization.

Conspiracy on the Right

The National Director of Public Relations for the John Birch Society, former Congressman John H. Rousselot, says that a "substantial number" of the Society's membership are policemen. He may be exaggerating, or not have meant what he said. Nevertheless, it was learned last week that Birchers have tried to gain control of the Santa Ana, California, police department. They are engaged, an investigator reports, in "a power play to get the chief and replace him with someone over whom they could exercise control"; the chief has been the victim of anonymous phone calls before dawn, fire trucks sent to his home on false alarms, unordered flowers sent to him COD, and the theft of his badges. In Philadelphia too, 14 or 15 policemen are known to be members of the Society, and the mayor has said that henceforth they will be given restricted duty.

We are dealing here with a six-year-old, semi-secret society; "a monolithic body," according to its founder, Mr. Robert Welch, who adds that it operates under "completely authoritative control at all levels." Membership dues for men are $24 a year, for women $12. Membership may be revoked at any time by a duly-appointed officer of the society, "without the reason being stated." Directives are passed along through a monthly Bulletin. Members are encouraged to infiltrate such organizations as the PTA, to harass speakers at meetings, to create front organizations (such as the Committee to Impeach Earl Warren or the Committee to Investigate Communist Influences at Vassar College). Membership figures are confidential, but one good estimate is that they have doubled in the past year and are now slightly over 50,000. In 1963 in California, the Society had 300 chapters; today in that state it is believed to have 724. One-hundred-and-sixty people seem to be employed on its national staff. In a report filed in 1962 with the Commission of Charities in Massachusetts, the Society stated that it had that year an income of $826,000; in 1963, it reported income of a little over a million dollars. But in the December, 1963, Bulletin, Mr. Welch said: "At the end of 1963, we are running at the level of expenses of approximately $2 million a year," and that the Society was "pouring printed materials of the very best quality for the purpose out of here at the average rate of $20,000 worth in retail value every week, and getting it sold and read."

Mr. Rousselot's idea that "there is absolutely nothing wrong with police being members of the John Birch Society" deserves scrupulous examination. If the Society were merely an educational association interested in the problems (or evils) of Communism, Mr. Rousselot's view would be hard to refute. But the Society appears to be much more than that. We say "appears," because so much is shadowy. We do know from the Society's literature that it is "political" in quite a different sense than, say, the Republican Party. In spirit and structure it resembles the American Communist Party, though the latter is far smaller, having today a membership in the neighborhood of 10,000.

But it's a free country. Why pick on cops for joining anything? There is a practical and important reason why. When any significant number of citizens lose confidence in the fairness, the impartiality of its police (or military) force, trouble is inevitable. If the public has reason to suspect that guardians of law and order – in New York City or St. Augustine, Florida – are refractory or biased, the public peace itself is put in jeopardy. And can one doubt that a great many citizens suspect the fairness and impartiality of members of an organization whose founder believes that "Milton Eisenhower is a Communist and has been for 30 years"; who thinks it "beyond any reasonable doubt" that "Dwight Eisenhower is a dedicated conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy . . ."; or who could say in 1961 that "Communist influences are now in almost complete control of our federal government"? What place have policemen in a clandestine organization whose head, in outlining how Birchers might take over the Republican Party, wrote in 1961: "We hope to increase our impact tremendously on the political scene, through education of others and dedication of ourselves, in 1962 and especially by 1964. . . . What is not only needed, but is absolutely imperative, is for some hard-boiled, dictatorial and dynamic boss to come along to deliver himself approximately as follows. . . . 'You fellows, over there, all of you, get the heaviest clubs you can find, spread yourselves out no more thinly than you have to along the whole length of this wall, and don't hesitate to break the heads of any saboteurs you find monkeying with it. Don't even hesitate to break the heads of those you find creeping toward the wall, if you are sure of their evil intentions, just as a warning to the rest of the dirty gang'."

When Mr. Rousselot says that "police membership is a private matter," he is in error. It is like the error some liberals made in the 1950's, when they thought it altogether wrong for public authorities ever to inquire into the associations of government employees. It is of concern to constituted authorities if a cadre exists within a law enforcement unit with private aims sharply at variance with those of constituted authority. The fact that there is no constitutional right to be a policeman is, however, an irrelevancy. Everyone, policeman or not, has a constitutional right to be dealt with fairly by government. Because that right is fundamental, no member of any police department ought to be disciplined or discharged without having had a full and fair hearing in which his exact connection with the Society is ascertained. But then what? Membership in or association with a group cannot be grounds for taking away a man's job or demoting him, unless the activities of the group in question are plainly proved to be incompatible with a man's official duties. That has not yet been plainly, and publicly proved. It cannot be unless the full story of the John Birch Society is on the record. We need to know what discipline it imposes, what in practice it does; in brief, we need a responsible investigation of the conspiratorial Right, centering on the John Birch Society, but extending to the Minutemen, whose leader, Robert Bolivar DePugh, announced on November 4 that, "the hopes of millions of Americans that the Communist tide could be stopped with ballots instead of bullets have turned to dust." The Minutemen boast of between 25,000 to 46,000 members; again, no outsider knows how close to the truth these figures are. We do know that no tenet of democracy requires that the state tolerate within its borders paramilitary organizations.

But who has the subpoena power, the standing, the staff – and the objectivity – to carry forward such an inquiry? Representative Charles Joelson (D, N.J.) has proposed a "deep and thorough" investigation of the Minutemen by the House Un-American Activities Committee. But HUAC is a discredited body, incapable of commanding general confidence, unless it receives a massive transfusion of new blood – new members untainted by a reputation for injudicious and arrogant treatment of witnesses. No mayor, or even a state attorney general, has sufficient authority to gather in the necessary evidence on all these national organizations. The Civil Rights Commission could perhaps usefully explore one group – the Ku Klux Klan – with special attention to the role its members have in police work. The Commission at least begins with the advantage of having a model procedural code. It would not publish suspicion as fact, leak private testimony to the press, give no chance for anyone to rebut evidence.

But a broader inquiry is in order, one conducted by a special committee, bipartisan in character, of either the House, the Senate or both. If there are conspiracies on the Right, let's find out how they operate, what they want, and how they are financed. It may be said that The New Republic is calling for a return to snooping and spying by government; in brief to "McCarthyism." If the investigation proposed here were conducted as Joe McCarthy ran his, it ought to be opposed. But that unconscionable performance in the 50's need not be repeated.

Dear Mr. Reitman:

Mr. Kintner had discussed your letter of December 4 with me and asked that I respond directly in his behalf to the questions you raise concerning participation in polictical activities and other matters of public controversy by NBC newsmen and performers featured in NBC entertainment programs.

Since NBC has no specifically defined policies in this area, the practices followed by such newsmen and entertainers have evolved through experience and individual choice, rather than any initiative exercised by NBC.

Performers appearing in NBC entertainment programs have long participated in political activities and been identified with one side or another of public issues in controversy, without interference from NBC. Such activity on their part is considered to be unrelated to their identity as entertainers.

Persons involved in reporting, writing or analyzing the news for NBC are staff employees of NBC News. They have not, in our experience, participated as political partisans in a campaign, run for or held political or public office while employed by NBC News or taken an open and active position on controversial public issues. We believe the reason for this is to be found in the high standards of professional conduct NBC News personnel have set for themselves, recognizing that although partisanship need not in itself damage their professional integrity, it could invite the public's inference that their news reporting and analysis were influenced by personal partisan considerations and, consequently, deficient in fairness, impartiality and even accuracy.

We feel this consideration would not apply with respect to financial contributions to political parties or candidates or personal or financial participation in non-political, non-controversial activities, such as charities and religious organizations. I assume NBC entertainers and newsmen make financial contributions to political parties and candidates and participate in or lend their names to charitable and religious activities, but NBC does not inquire into such matters and does not seek to inform itself with regard to them.

In connection with paid political broadcasts on NBC facilities, the company has a policy that NBC announcers introducing the broadcast must confine their announcement to identification of the program and may not, in the terms of introducing the program, advocate the cause of the speaker or candidate purchasing the time, I believe the soundness of this policy is self-evident.

No occasion has arisen calling for NBC to consider drawing a distinction, as a matter of policy, between entertainers and newsmen with regard to participation in partisan activities relating to politics or controversial public issues. We recognize, however, that there may well be a basis for distinction drawn from the public's legitimate expectation that we will function in its interest. The public, in our view, separates an entertainer's performance from his activities as a private citizen. Newsmen, however, who are professionally engaged in reporting on political candidates and issues and matters in public controversy could invite an adverse reaction from the public -- even though it might be unfair -- if they engage in partisan activity in these fields. I assume this is the reason many major newspapers discourage partisan activity by their news personnel and why NBC newsmen have themselves judged that it would be unsuitable for them to engage in such activity.

Sincerely,

/S/ George H. Fuchs

To: Board of Directors

From: The Office

In accordance with the Board's request of September 14, 1964 the Free Speech and Due Process Committees have reviewed the proposed bill of Senator Philip Hart to establish a Commission on Constitutional Liberties within the Executive Branch.

The two Committees concluded that such a Commission could advance civil liberties but expressed some concern about the due process protections afforded witnesses called before such a Commission. On the basis of the Committee recommendations, the office proposes that the following letter be sent to Senator Hart:

"Dear Senator Hart:

Your proposal for the creation of a Commission on Constitutional Liberties, to be established along the lines of the existing U.S. Civil Rights Commission, was recommended to our Board of Directors for approval by the 1964 Biennial Conference of the ACLU. After full debate, our Board has concluded that such a Commission would focus the attention of all Americans on the importance of the Bill of Rights, to explore the difficult problems which face us in the area of civil liberties, and to expose the continued existence of civil liberties infringements. We therefore warmly endorse your proposal.

During our discussion several questions were raised with respect to the due process protections to be afforded witnesses and others who might be defamed as a result of Commission proceedings. We heartily approve the provisions of the bill, which accomplish long-standing ACLU policy in safeguarding the rights of witnesses involved in congressional investigating committee hearings: (1) the right to counsel; (2) the screening of defamatory testimony in executive session; (3) the specific statement of legislative purpose; and (4) the making of transcripts of testimony available, on payment of costs, to those persons who may feel injured by it. In this last instance we would hope that in the few cases where indigents are involved, Commission rules will provide for free transcripts.

However, there are two other areas of the bill which we believe need strengthening in line with our concern to maintain due process guarantees for those affected by government action. First, we suggest that the bill require the Commission to provide an opportunity for cross-examination in appropriate cases when defamatory testimony is presented in public hearings, under reasonable limitations to be prescribed by the rules of the Commission. In fairness to the individual concerned and the Commission's own function to collect information, we believe that cross-examination is a most effective device for testing defamatory testimony.

Alternative #1:

Second, in order to prevent the distraction of witnesses and exaggeration of testimony inescapably linked to the broadcasting of hearings, the bill should contain a provision barring TV and radio broadcasts of Commission proceedings.

Alternative #2: Strike last paragraph.

Needless to say, a Commission devoted to the protection of basic constitutional guarantees should not itself abrogate these guarantees. The Commission's educational value will be blurred if it opens itself to attack by those who certainly will oppose it on the grounds that the Commission does not practice what it preaches.

Last, in our view the Commission must have the same power to subpoena witnesses possessed by the Civil Rights Commission if it is to function effectively within its limited term of office. Of course, if a subpoena power is included in the bill, we would urge that the Commission adopt rules requiring that subpoenaed witnesses be given fair notice of the date and subject matter of a proposed hearing.

We hope you will see fit to adopt our suggestions which, we believe, will assist in making the Commission a body for fair and effective inquiry in the area of civil liberties.

Sincerely yours,

John de J. Pemberton, Jr.
Executive Director"

Re: House Un-American Activities Committee

A group of Congressmen who oppose the HUAC have been meeting to formulate plans on how to obtain recognition when the House convenes on January 4. They want to make sure that what they do will not endanger efforts at proposed reforms in the House rules when the new session begins.

We urge you now to write your Congressman and the Speaker of the House (John W. McCormack) asking that an opportunity be given at the opening of the 89th Congress, when the rules of the House are adopted, to debate and vote on a separate proposal which would end the HUAC's special status as a standing committee and would also enlarge the mandate of the House Judiciary Committee to cover specific overt acts affecting internal security.

We also urge you to continue (or promptly begin!) other educational efforts in opposition to the Committee. During this period pay personal visits to your Congressman; urge your membership to write him; write letters to-the-editor; try to obtain editorial opposition; ask your radio and TV stations to schedule discussion programs. In addition, ask other organizations with which we have been working* to take similar action, in accord with paragraph 2. The stimulation of general public opinion is very important in backing up our direct Congressional efforts, and these are the organizations which can mobilize potential community interest in and support for action against the Committee.

*The national organizations which publicly support abolition of the Committee are: Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union; American Federation of Teachers; American Jewish Congress; Americans for Democratic Action; Central Conference of American Rabbis; Commission on Social Action of Reform Judaism; Joint Commission on Social Action of United Synagogue of America, Rabbinical Assembly of America and National Women's League; National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union (AFL-CIO); Unitarian-Universalist Association; United Packinghouse Workers (AFL-CIO); United States National Student Association; Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Among other organizations which have been highly critical of the Committee, although they have not called for abolition are: American Ethical Union, National Council of Churches, National Council of Jewish Women, National Federation of Catholic College Students, Young Women's Christian Association.

Our new pamphlet, "The Case Against HUAC," will be ready for distribution during the week of December 28. It discusses in detail (1) the constitutionality of the mandate, (2) the harm done to people exposed or mentioned, (3) the dangerous use made of the Committee's files and "citations," and (4) its impact on education, civil rights, peace activities and religion. We shall rush texts to you just as soon as possible so you may order quanities in advance. The cost will be 35¢ each, 40% off on orders of 50 or more. An order form is attached below.

The importance of our HUAC effort can be seen by this excerpt from the pamphlet concerning the Committee's recent renewed investigation of two leaders of the Women's Strike for Peace (who were represented by Larry Speiser) Dagmar Wilson and Donna Allen. "This time they were interrogated about a 1963 speaking tour by Professor Kaoru Yasui, Chairman of the Japan Council Against A and H Bombs, and Dean of the Law Faculty at Tokyo's Hosai University. The women had visited the State Department and when that agency had at first refused to grant Professor Yasui a visa; the Department subsequently changed its mind and Professor Yasui spoke in 10 American cities to both peace and academic groups. Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Allen challenged the secrecy of the HUAC executive session, asserting that what they did in exercising the First Amendment right of free speech in complaining to the State Department, in no way involved national security or derogated any individual. They refused to answer the HUAC's questions and were cited for contempt of Congress."

Again, we can immediately fill your orders for "Why Should Congress Abolish ...," "Guilt By Subpoena" and "Why the HUAC Should Go."

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ACLU
ON THE DEATH OF PATRICK MURPHY MALIN
ADOPTED DECEMBER 21, 1964

The Board of Directors of the ACLU learns with the greatest regret of the death of its former Executive Director, Patrick Murphy Malin, in New York City, on December 13, 1964. He was the head of our Staff, and our principal spokesman for the 12 years of his service to us, from January, 1950 until February, 1962, when he resigned to become President of The Robert Colleges in Istanbul. We last saw him as an honored guest at our Board Meeting on September 28th last, the eve of his intended return to his post in Turkey.

Pat Malin made a profound impression upon us, individually and collectively, as he did upon all who ever came under the spell of his dynamic personality, his wisdom, and his abiding faith in the liberties of free men. To him, the need in our complex society for the clear voice of the Union in its sole commitment to the strengthening of these liberties, was the driving force of the middle years of his life.

More than any other person, Mr. Malin was responsible for the great growth of the Union during these dozen years of his leadership -- growth in members, in affiliates, in resources, in influence and in the wide respect for its disinterested integrity.

Within our group, he commanded not only respect and admiration, but great affection. He knew and valued highly the bonds of intimate friendship, and he practised this art graciously without effort.

To his widow and his sons, this Board conveys its sense of sorrow and loss, and its sympathy in their greater loss of husband and father.

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ACLU
ON THE DEATH OF ALEXANDER MEIKLEJOHN
ADOPTED DECEMBER 21, 1964

Alexander Meiklejohn was an embodiment of the enduring values and purposes of the American Civil Liberties Union. A member of its National Committee for 37 years until he died last month at the age of 92, he contributed immeasurably to the Union's growth, effectiveness and character. His wisdom, calmness and courage were an unfailing source of strength to his associates. We record his death with love, as well as with sorrow and with gratitude for his fellowship.

No life could have been fuller than Alec Meiklejohn's. Philoscpher, educator, libertarian and polemicist, he was ebulliently engaged in every major intellectual controversy of his time. He relished and cultivated controversy not alone for his own keen pleasure in matching wits with estimable adversaries but because he believed that out of debate, out of the clash of opinion, comes the best assurance of harmony and of wisdom in the determination of public policy. As a teacher, he sought always to foster inquiry, challenge and criticism among his students. As a political philosopher, he sought always to preserve unlimited freedom in the discussion of public affairs.

Thus, he believed unreservedly in the utility of freedom. "Freedom," he put it, "is always expedient....If there are arguments against our theory of government, our policies in war or in peace, we the citizens, the rulers, must hear and consider them for ourselves. That is the way of public safety. It is the program of self-government....No belief or advocacy may be denied freedom if, in the same situation, opposing beliefs or advocacies are granted that freedom."

Alec Meiklejohn exemplified and fought for this philosophy all the years of his long life with an extraordinary combination of sweetness and strength, of tolerance and determination, of gentleness and passion. Last year, at 91, he came to Washington to receive the Presidential Medal of Freedom. No one could have more richly fulfilled its meaning.

He died at his home in Berkeley after an illness of no more than three days, sitting up in a chair with his doctor on one side of him, his wife, Helen, on the other, talking about the disorders on the campus of the University of California -- talking about the twin centers of interest in his life, students and freedom. Suddenly -- with no cry, no suffering, no fear -- he drew a deep breath and was gone.

Re: Right of Privacy v. Free Speech

The dialogue below poses a policy question on which the office requests quidance. Recently, the problem has come up in the case of the movie "John Goldfarb," the showing of which was enjoined on a right to privacy theory.

* * * * * *

WHAT PRICE PRIVACY?
by Harriet Pilpel

Everyone's against sin and for the right of privacy. However, there is little agreement as to the meaning of either. We are too seldom aware of the tyranny of words. What you mean when you say you're all in favor of the right of privacy may be and probably is something quite different from what I mean when I, too, favor that right. Lawyers perhaps more than other people know -- or should know -- that words are, as Judge Learned Hand pointed out, only the skin of the living thoughts underneath -- chameleon-like creatures that take on their meaning and coloration from what is in the mind of the utter-er and the utter-ee. No legal document has ever been drafted containing words so unambiguous that it is not possible to ascribe vastly different and often opposing meanings to the words of which it is composed.

Which brings us back to the right of privacy -- a right not rooted in our centuries old common law like many rights -- such as the right not to be libelled or slandered -- but a relatively new concept which made its first appearance in 1890 in the now famous law review article by Louis D. Brandeis (later Justice of the United States Supreme Court) and Samuel Warren. They envisaged a broad right to be let alone -- to be free from intrusions by others into our personal lives. In the context of 1890, maybe no further refinement of the concept was necessary. Today, in our complex era of mass communications and electronic snoopers, the right of privacy has come to mean many different things to many different people and the courts are struggling in a variety of complex fact situations not conceivable by Brandeis and Warren.

We are concerned here with the right of privacy insofar as the press and other media of expression are concerned. In other words, I am not now discussing the manifold ways in which electronic devices can see through walls, or hear through your telephone and thus intrude into the most intimate areas of your life. Nor am I here talking about that emergent constitutional right of privacy adverted to by Justices Douglas and Harlan in the most recent Connecticut birth control cases to reach the United States Supreme Court -- the right of a married couple to be free in their bedroom from the prying eyes of the state. No -- here we speak only of that vast and ever growing vaster area where speech or writing about a person is alleged or found to invade his privacy. And here we must bear in mind that every time a court holds that a particular instance of speech or the press (which, of course, includes radio, television, the stage and the screen) violates a person's right of privacy, it cuts down on permissible freedom of expression just as drastically -- perhaps even more so -- than if that particular statement had been held to violate the law for some other reason -- some reason like sedition or obscenity which would cause us to cry censorship, some reason like libel where, oddly enough, the trend is in the direction of greater and greater freedom of speech. Because in the privacy field the trend is clearly the other way -- i.e., in the direction of limiting what A can say about B, we should look at the situation very carefully, right this minute -- before we have a kind of Frankenstein privacy doctrine which really cuts down on our First Amendment freedoms -- those freedoms of speech and of the press -- which the United States Supreme Court has correctly characterized as "the matrix, the indispensable condition of every other freedom."

Perhaps it was a vague awareness of the dangers involved in a too expansive doctrine of privacy that led the New York Court of Appeals in 1915(?), in the first major right of privacy case to come before the highest court of a state, to hold that there was no such right at all. The court so held in a case where the strongest possible argument can be made for the existence of such a right -- a case where the picture of a young girl had without her permission been used on box cartons with the caption, "The Flour of the Family." The New York State legislature countered by passing the first right of privacy law in this country (there is still none in England). But the New York law declaring the existence of a right of privacy and granting the remedies of both damages and injunction (injunction vs. the press, mind you) for its violation, defined the right in terms of use of a person's name or picture for advertising or trade purposes. No one can or does argue that such a right is unduly restrictive of freedom of expression -- after all, when the box company used Miss Roberson's ("the Flour of the Family") picture on cartons, its aim was not to disseminate facts but to sell a commodity -- flour. So far, so good. But the right has not been so limited even in New York, and has been less limited in states where it has been recognized by the courts rather than declared by the legislature (what we call "judicial legislation"). And it is in this expanded area that profound questions of policy and freedom arise -- questions which, as I said before, we should face up to squarely before we have a kind of Frankenstein right which strikes at the heart of our fundamental freedom to write and say what we please -- limited only by such recognized but shrinking exceptions as libel, obscenity and sedition.

What has happened to the right of privacy since 1915 when the New York legislature became the first official law-making body to recognize and approve it? Well, first of all, many other states have followed suit by legislation or judicial decision holding that a person's name or picture cannot be used for the purpose of exploiting a commercial commodity. That's fair enough. As a not illogical corollary, the protection of the right was also extended to fictional uses of a person's name or picture -- okay, too -- the communication prohibited being not the communication of facts about a person but rather the recounting of imaginary occurrences rendered more saleable by the use without his consent of those identifying marks of a person, his name or picture.

But the extension of the right of privacy has, alas, not stopped there. There has come to be a belief -- first obvious in a California case referring to the right to the pursuit of happiness rather than to the right of privacy -- that a person has a right not only to prevent the use of his name and likeness to exploit commodities or works of fiction about him, but also a correlative right or ownership or something in the facts of his life -- even though his name and picture is not used. It is true that a libel or slander action always could be brought by a plaintiff who was identified by circumstances as well as by name or picture. But a whole new constellation of problems arise, if in addition to the right to be free of libel or slander, a person also has the right to claim exclusive ownership in the things that have happened to him. An example of an effort to have the right of privacy extended this far was defeated in New York in the "A Bell for Adano" case where the army officer who had in fact been the prototype of the hero of that work by John Hersey lost his case. Another effort to resolve this question was presented by the Compulsion case when Nathan Leopold sued the author, publishers and motion picture producers of "Compulsion," a fictionized presentation of the famous Leopold and Loeb case. Unfortunately, no definitive answer came out of that case for, although the novel and movie did not use Mr. Leopold's name, the advertising did and thus there was even in the conventional context of the right of privacy the use of Leopold's name to sell something other than the facts about him, i.e., works of fiction. There are strong intimations in other cases that maybe a man does own his own life story -- or some story that is part of life even if his name is not mentioned -- in the same manner that he owns his name and likeness. I submit that if ever this should become established law, we will have carved a great chunk out of our precious area of freedom of the press.

But far more alarming even than this trend are two others. One proceeds on the assumption that a person has a right to be free from public scrutiny altogether unless he is a public figure or an actor in an occurrence of public importance. As this trend goes, even if a man is at one time publicly known, he can regain his "right of privacy" and prevent anyone writing the facts about him when, as and if he is no longer "public." This indeed is what a federal court in Chicago held two years ago in a suit for violation of her right of privacy brought by the mother of a murdered girl. The case has aroused great public interest. The court first held for the plaintiff, saying that since the murder trial had been over some months before, the case was no longer news and the plaintiff no longer in the public eye. Therefore, her right of privacy had been violated when she was referred to in a magazine story about her daughter's murder which appeared some months before. So great was the consternation this decision caused that many, including the Chicago Tribune, called for a rehearing. The court granted the rehearing -- and held against the plaintiff but on the ground that it had been mistaken in considering that her daughter's case was no longer news. It was still of public interest, said the court, because an appeal was going on. The result was fine -- but the rationale of the court -- the assumption that there comes a point at which you can no longer write the facts about people because of the passage of time, is dangerously threatening to that freedom to write -- and to read -- which we have traditionally cherished. And equally alarming is the corollary assumption that if a person has not been publicly exposed in one way or another, he can't be written up at all. Can we -- do we -- really mean to develop and live by a doctrine like that?

Then there is another line of cases -- also alarming in implication. These cases hold that even as to public figures -- and certainly as to private ones -- there are some matters so intimate and personal they may not be written or spoken about at all. At first glance, such an extension of the right of privacy has great appeal. But when we recall that we are talking only about non-defamatory material (if it's defamatory, a suit for libel or slander will lie) and that what one of us may regard as too "intimate" or "personal" someone else may regard -- particularly with respect to public figures -- as essential public information (consider the Jenkins case), this broadening of the right of privacy also is seen to have a real potential for repression.

One of the most recent New York privacy cases underlines the hazards that confront us as a nation once we extend the right of privacy doctrine beyond prohibition of commercial advertising and exploitation and fictionization. The case, now on appeal, was brought by the famous baseball pitcher Warren Spahn, clearly a public figure, to enjoin the publication and distribution of a biography about him. He won at the trial court level, the court saying such things as that in its opinion many portions of the book were "untrue," "highly romanticized" and "non-factual." (Whose judgment can or should control here?) The court criticized the fact that "newspaper articles, magazine stories and general background books constituted the sole source of the author's factual bases for his work," although recognizing that this was the "customary practice." In the court's view, the fact that "the book, jacket and pictures were all published without Spahn's consent" also contributed to a violation of his right of privacy, as did the considerations which the court spelled out like this:

"The subject purported biography transgresses the bounds of legitimate public interest by its breadth of reportorial coverage of those areas of plaintiff's life which defy classification as public, i.e., his deeply personal relationships with members of his immediate family and his introspective thoughts. Quantitatively, these trespasses upon plaintiff's private life represent a substantial portion of the book now under scrutiny. Qualitatively, the colorful portrayal of the intimate facets of Mr. Spahn's relationship with his father and his wife and the revelations of his innermost thinking (e.g., the plaintiff's crucial role in the highly emotional and psychological atmosphere enveloping his father's illness, the detailed intimate courtship scenes and difficulties, plaintiff's reaction to his wife's troublesome pregnancy) in many instances place the reader in the uncomfortable position of an embarrassed interloper upon another's private and personal domain. ****

"While untrue statements do not necessarily transform a book into the category of fiction, the all-pervasive distortions, inaccuracies, invented dialog, and the narration of happenings out of context, clearly indicate, at the very least, a careless disregard for the responsibility of the press and within the context of this action, an abuse of the public's limited privilege to inquire into an individual's life."

Surely, if this case stands, it will be only the most intrepid author, publisher or producer who will dare to do an unauthorized biography or factual presentation. The case is, I submit, indicative of where we will end up if we widen the coverage of the right of privacy beyond the commercial and fictional -- as such -- use of anyone's name or picture. If the person is libelled -- well, I'm not suggesting eliminating the law of libel. But I am not only suggesting -- but stating -- that we should not open the door, however slightly and no matter how good our motives, to a doctrine whereby people will speak and write factual narratives at their peril even though the knowledge of the facts they report is legally obtained and even though they avoid defamation, obscenity, fraud and all the other established exceptions to freedom of expression. A rose by any other name and censorship is no less repellent when it is imposed by private individuals under the guise of protecting their right of privacy. In the scales of a free society, the right of the public to be told -- to know -- must outweigh the demands -- however otherwise justifiable -- of outraged sensibilities.

in the essentials of democratic society. No society, if it hopes to be free, can long survive unless it establishes and protects a basic alienation between each individual and his community. It is this alienation which enables a man to see his own outline -- to establish and preserve what is uniquely his, as his. And it is this alienation which is at the basis of all our civil liberties. In a dictatorship, only the dictator has a right of privacy -- and with reason. Indeed, without this alienation "free speech" or "the right to be informed" would be mere fantasy -- since an idea or concept must first have an element of uniqueness, or individuality, before it can have any value when communicated to others.

Those who talk of extensions of the right of privacy should more precisely, it seems to me, be talking of "limitations" on it. To talk of "extension" appears to beg the issue and imply unjustified license.

Certainly, Warren and Brandeis did not conceive of the right in the limited way that Mrs. Pilpel and others seek to describe it. Rather I suggest they sought to have it enforced in just such instances of "human misappropriation" as were involved in the Spahn case. Nor did they treat damage to human sensibilities with the de minimis shrug used by those who seek drastically to curtail the right of privacy. Indeed, their now famous and all important article was born of outrage resulting from just such damage.

Of course, some limitations on the right of privacy are necessary if free speech is to survive. For example, I thoroughly agree with Mrs. Pilpel when she criticizes the Wagner v. Fawcett Publications Illinois lower court decision, which held in effect that magazines violate one's privacy if they publish some time after the event material about an item of public interest in which the person was involved. It is only through the passage of time that thoughtful history can be written, and if we followed the lower court ruling in the Fawcett case, history would probably be reduced to the level of most newspaper reporting -- and save us from that! Nor should privacy, it seems to me, weigh as heavily on our scales as the public's right to be informed about matters of public interest and concern. The scales used by a democracy are, and must be, heavily weighted in favor of the public's right to be informed, without which "free choice" also becomes meaningless and democracy falls.

I suggest, however, that these necessary limitations on privacy do not include those which encourage fictionalization, whether so denominated or not, and distortion of facts about public figures. Clearly the public's right to information is not served by such material for how can it be informative if it is made up or untrue? Whatever minor value these communications might have is, it seems to me, far outweighed by an individual's being able to prevent himself from being transformed against his will into someone he isn't and then being flung into the glare of public scrutiny to be judged by what he seems to be -- but isn't. This, I suggest, is the Frankenstein we have to fear.

Nor do I see why a right of privacy shouldn't protect against the publication and dissemination of extremely intimate details, albeit factual, about public figures which have no relation whatever to their public life or public duties. (Mrs. Pilpel would limit these only to the extent they are libelous.) For example, I fail to see how the disclosure of intimate facts about the sex life of a renowned nuclear scientist, or ballplayer, or of the fact that he may have an abnormal child or a wife with an artificial leg (and so on) can, in any sense, be considered of more value to society than the protection of that person's privacy -- or that of his family. And yet it is just such protection which would be denied him if public nosiness is unbridled.

I hope that these views of mine will not be taken out of context or extended beyond their intended scope. Of course, public figures should not be allowed to stifle unauthorized biographies with the cloak of privacy. Where would history be today if we had to depend only on authorized biographies. Of course, some slight fictionalization should be permitted in biographical writing in order to give it life (usually, I must suggest, it is needed only when the biographer's prose is less than adequate). And, of course, the publication of intimate details about a person should be permitted where they are, by virtue of the public position of the person involved (such as matters of security) or the circumstances within which they occur, legitimate matters of public concern.

But it doesn't seem to me a terrible burden to lay upon the communications media to limit their privacy invasions to matters of public relevance accurately reported. At their disposal are all the men, devices and pressures which money can buy to perfect public nosiness. Against them, the individual can only hide behind the rights we give him. I remain unpersuaded that if the right of privacy is kept free of these unnecessary limitations, there will be a significant diminution in the number of "unauthorized biographies or factual presentations." I am persuaded, however, that these biographies and presentations will, in future, be more factual and more relevant. And what's wrong with that?

Which gets us back to old Warren Spahn. Let him keep his two inches, Harriet, it's all he (and we) has left!

Re: Right of Privacy v. Free Speech

The dialogue below poses a policy question on which the office requests quidance. Recently, the problem has come up in the case of the movie "John Goldfarb," the showing of which was enjoined on a right to privacy theory.

WHAT PRICE PRIVACY?

by Harriet Pilpel

Everyone's against sin and for the right of privacy. However, there is little agreement as to the meaning of either. We are too seldom aware of the tyranny of words. What you mean when you say you're all in favor of the right of privacy may be and probably is something quite different from what I mean when I, too, favor that right. Lawyers perhaps more than other people know -- or should know -- that words are, as Judge Learned Hand pointed out, only the skin of the living thoughts underneath -- chameleon-like creatures that take on their meaning and coloration from what is in the mind of the utter-er and the utter-ee. No legal document has ever been drafted containing words so unambiguous that it is not possible to ascribe vastly different and often opposing meanings to the words of which it is composed.

Which brings us back to the right of privacy -- a right not rooted in our centuries old common law like many rights -- such as the right not to be libelled or slandered -- but a relatively new concept which made its first appearance in 1890 in the now famous law review article by Louis D. Brandeis (later Justice of the United States Supreme Court) and Samuel Warren. They envisaged a broad right to be let alone -- to be free from intrusions by others into our personal lives. In the context of 1890, maybe no further refinement of the concept was necessary. Today, in our complex era of mass communications and electronic snoopers, the right of privacy has come to mean many different things to many different people and the courts are struggling in a variety of complex fact situations not conceivable by Brandeis and Warren.

We are concerned here with the right of privacy insofar as the press and other media of expression are concerned. In other words, I am not now discussing the manifold ways in which electronic devices can see through walls, or hear through your telephone and thus intrude into the most intimate areas of your life. Nor am I here talking about that emergent constitutional right of privacy adverted to by Justices Douglas and Harlan in the most recent Connecticut birth control cases to reach the United States Supreme Court -- the right of a married couple to be free in their bedroom from the prying eyes of the state. No -- here we speak only of that vast and ever growing vaster area where speech or writing about a person is alleged or found to invade his privacy. And here we must bear in mind that every time a court holds that a particular instance of speech or the press (which, of course, includes radio, television, the stage and the screen) violates a person's right of privacy, it cuts down on permissible freedom of expression just as drastically -- perhaps even more so -- than if that particular statement had been held to violate the law for some other reason -- some reason like sedition or obscenity which would cause us to cry censorship, some reason like libel where, oddly enough, the trend is in the direction of greater and greater freedom of speech. Because in the privacy field the trend is clearly the other way -- i.e., in the direction of limiting what A can say about B, we should look at the situation very carefully, right this minute -- before we have a kind of Frankenstein privacy doctrine which really cuts down on our First Amendment freedoms -- those freedoms of speech and of the press -- which the United States Supreme Court has correctly characterized as "the matrix, the indispensable condition of every other freedom."

Perhaps it was a vague awareness of the dangers involved in a too expansive doctrine of privacy that led the New York Court of Appeals in 1915(?), in the first major right of privacy case to come before the highest court of a state, to hold that there was no such right at all. The court so held in a case where the strongest possible argument can be made for the existence of such a right -- a case where the picture of a young girl had without her permission been used on box cartons with the caption, "The Flour of the Family." The New York State legislature countered by passing the first right of privacy law in this country (there is still none in England). But the New York law declaring the existence of a right of privacy and granting the remedies of both damages and injunction (injunction vs. the press, mind you) for its violation, defined the right in terms of use of a person's name or picture for advertising or trade purposes. No one can or does argue that such a right is unduly restrictive of freedom of expression -- after all, when the box company used Miss Roberson's ("the Flour of the Family") picture on cartons, its aim was not to disseminate facts but to sell a commodity -- flour. So far, so good. But the right has not been so limited even in New York, and has been less limited in states where it has been recognized by the courts rather than declared by the legislature (what we call "judicial legislation"). And it is in this expanded area that profound questions of policy and freedom arise -- questions which, as I said before, we should face up to squarely before we have a kind of Frankenstein right which strikes at the heart of our fundamental freedom to write and say what we please -- limited only by such recognized but shrinking exceptions as libel, obscenity and sedition.

What has happened to the right of privacy since 1915 when the New York legislature became the first official law-making body to recognize and approve it? Well, first of all, many other states have followed suit by legislation or judicial decision holding that a person's name or picture cannot be used for the purpose of exploiting a commercial commodity. That's fair enough. As a not illogical corollary, the protection of the right was also extended to fictional uses of a person's name or picture -- okay, too -- the communication prohibited being not the communication of facts about a person but rather the recounting of imaginary occurrences rendered more saleable by the use without his consent of those identifying marks of a person, his name or picture.

But the extension of the right of privacy has, alas, not stopped there. There has come to be a belief -- first obvious in a California case referring to the right to the pursuit of happiness rather than to the right of privacy -- that a person has a right not only to prevent the use of his name and likeness to exploit commodities or works of fiction about him, but also a correlative right or ownership or something in the facts of his life -- even though his name and picture is not used. It is true that a libel or slander action always could be brought by a plaintiff who was identified by circumstances as well as by name or picture. But a whole new constellation of problems arise, if in addition to the right to be free of libel or slander, a person also has the right to claim exclusive ownership in the things that have happened to him. An example of an effort to have the right of privacy extended this far was defeated in New York in the "A Bell for Adano" case where the army officer who had in fact been the prototype of the hero of that work by John Hersey lost his case. Another effort to resolve this question was presented by the Compulsion case when Nathan Leopold sued the author, publishers and motion picture producers of "Compulsion," a fictionized presentation of the famous Leopold and Loeb case. Unfortunately, no definitive answer came out of that case for, although the novel and movie did not use Mr. Leopold's name, the advertising did and thus there was even in the conventional context of the right of privacy the use of Leopold's name to sell something other than the facts about him, i.e., works of fiction. There are strong intimations in other cases that maybe a man does own his own life story -- or some story that is part of life even if his name is not mentioned -- in the same manner that he owns his name and likeness. I submit that if ever this should become established law, we will have carved a great chunk out of our precious area of freedom of the press.

But far more alarming even than this trend are two others. One proceeds on the assumption that a person has a right to be free from public scrutiny altogether unless he is a public figure or an actor in an occurrence of public importance. As this trend goes, even if a man is at one time publicly known, he can regain his "right of privacy" and prevent anyone writing the facts about him when, as and if he is no longer "public." This indeed is what a federal court in Chicago held two years ago in a suit for violation of her right of privacy brought by the mother of a murdered girl. The case has aroused great public interest. The court first held for the plaintiff, saying that since the murder trial had been over some months before, the case was no longer news and the plaintiff no longer in the public eye. Therefore, her right of privacy had been violated when she was referred to in a magazine story about her daughter's murder which appeared some months before. So great was the consternation this decision caused that many, including the Chicago Tribune, called for a rehearing. The court granted the rehearing -- and held against the plaintiff but on the ground that it had been mistaken in considering that her daughter's case was no longer news. It was still of public interest, said the court, because an appeal was going on. The result was fine -- but the rationale of the court -- the assumption that there comes a point at which you can no longer write the facts about people because of the passage of time, is dangerously threatening to that freedom to write -- and to read -- which we have traditionally cherished. And equally alarming is the corollary assumption that if a person has not been publicly exposed in one way or another, he can't be written up at all. Can we -- do we -- really mean to develop and live by a doctrine like that?

Then there is another line of cases -- also alarming in implication. These cases hold that even as to public figures -- and certainly as to private ones -- there are some matters so intimate and personal they may not be written or spoken about at all. At first glance, such an extension of the right of privacy has great appeal. But when we recall that we are talking only about non-defamatory material (if it's defamatory, a suit for libel or slander will lie) and that what one of us may regard as too "intimate" or "personal" someone else may regard -- particularly with respect to public figures -- as essential public information (consider the Jenkins case), this broadening of the right of privacy also is seen to have a real potential for repression.

One of the most recent New York privacy cases underlines the hazards that confront us as a nation once we extend the right of privacy doctrine beyond prohibition of commercial advertising and exploitation and fictionization. The case, now on appeal, was brought by the famous baseball pitcher Warren Spahn, clearly a public figure, to enjoin the publication and distribution of a biography about him. He won at the trial court level, the court saying such things as that in its opinion many portions of the book were "untrue," "highly romanticized" and "non-factual." (Whose judgment can or should control here?) The court criticized the fact that "newspaper articles, magazine stories and general background books constituted the sole source of the author's factual bases for his work," although recognizing that this was the "customary practice." In the court's view, the fact that "the book, jacket and pictures were all published without Spahn's consent" also contributed to a violation of his right of privacy, as did the considerations which the court spelled out like this:

"The subject purported biography transgresses the bounds of legitimate public interest by its breadth of reportorial coverage of those areas of plaintiff's life which defy classification as public, i.e., his deeply personal relationships with members of his immediate family and his introspective thoughts. Quantitatively, these trespasses upon plaintiff's private life represent a substantial portion of the book now under scrutiny, Qualitatively, the colorful portrayal of the intimate facets of Mr. Spahn's relationship with his father and his wife and the revelations of his innermost thinking (e.g., the plaintiff's crucial role in the highly emotional and psychological atmosphere enveloping his father's illness, the detailed intimate courtship scenes and difficulties, plaintiff's reaction to his wife's troublesome pregnancy) in many instances place the reader in the uncomfortable position of an embarrassed interloper upon another's private and personal domain. ****

"While untrue statements do not necessarily transform a book into the category of fiction, the all-pervasive distortions, inaccuracies, invented dialog, and the narration of happenings out of context, clearly indicate, at the very least, a careless disregard for the responsibility of the press and within the context of this action, an abuse of the public's limited privilege to inquire into an individual's life."

Surely, if this case stands, it will be only the most intrepid author, publisher or producer who will dare to do an unauthorized biography or factual presentation. The case is, I submit, indicative of where we will end up if we widen the coverage of the right of privacy beyond the commercial and fictional -- as such --

Enclosed is a proposed letter to the President concerning item 6 on the agenda of the January 4 Board meeting.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

156 FIFTH AVENUE

NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10010

PROPOSED LETTER

The Honorable Lyndon B. Johnson
President of the United States
The White House
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. President:

We take this occasion to raise with you the forthcoming appointment to the vacancy in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit caused by the death of Judge Ben Cameron.

The American Civil Liberties Union, because it is a non-partisan organization, traditionally refrains from supporting or opposing any particular candidate for the federal bench, and we do not intend to depart from that practice. However, because of the singular role played by the Fifth Circuit in the enforcement of constitutional liberties in the South, we think it proper to offer our views on the manner of filling this vacancy.

During the past few years there has been an enormous quantity of litigation spawned by those organizations and individuals who have dramatically asserted that political liberty is not to be denied because of color. Those assertions have frequently taken the form of public protest and demonstration, principally, we think, because the state courts in the deep south refused to enforce the doctrine of equal treatment under the law which is embedded in the Fourteenth Amendment. As long as those courts forfeited their responsibility it was inevitable and just that the people should exercise their rights of speech, assembly and petition in another forum.

At the same time, however, the protestants continued to seek redress in the court, demonstrating their basic attachment to the rule of law. Though the state courts more often than not failed to give recognition to their valid claims, even though they were afforded more than ample opportunity, the federal courts -- with notorious exceptions -- did not fail in their responsibility. Among those courts, the Fifth Circuit's steady concentration upon constitutional principle has won it an enviable reputation for courage and integrity.

In order to insure the continuing strength of the Fifth Circuit, and the undiminished reliance upon the courts as the principal vehicle to achieve racial justice, its vacancy must be filled with a judge who has no doubts about the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment or the supremacy of the United States Constitution. There are, we fear, judges who have been unable to shed their belief in segregation. If such a man or woman is appointed to the vacancy, the whole nation would be the loser. The times demand that the Circuit be reinforced by the appointment of a judge who will reliably enforce the whole Constitution as it has been expounded by the Supreme Court.

We recognize the political obstacles that threaten to impede the appointment of such a man or woman, particularly if it is the Administration's view that the seat must be reserved for a Mississippian. Though the options are not easy, we urge that the search for a successor to Judge Cameron not be confined to Mississippi alone, but that it include all the states within the Circuit.

Although judicial remedies are part of a process which require thoughtful deliberation of principles that by and large are not self-evident, we venture to say that the law concerning racial discrimination, after long years of exposition by the Supreme Court, is more self-evident than most. Since the Fifth Circuit has the duty of applying the law over that part of the nation whose principal problems arise from demands for racial justice, it is of paramount importance that it be composed of judges who are not burdened with a view of the law which is antagonistic to those demands.

Sincerely yours,

/s/

MINUTES

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1964 - 12:30 P.M.

ACLU OFFICES

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Bierstedt, Black, Brown, Crowell, Ennis, Evans, Fraenkel, Frank, Kunstler, Lacy, Maslow, Meserve, Miller, Prashker, Rice, Soll, Waring; Judge Kenyon.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Wulf, Adler, Haskell, Bucholz, Fuller, Neier; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitor: Mr. Markmann.

1. Minutes. The minutes of the November 23 meeting were approved as circulated, subject to a correction by Mr. Baldwin who wrote (with respect to item 2) that in addition to Mr. Thomas and himself, Agnes Brown Leach and Max Eastman (all of the original World War I National Civil Liberties Bureau) still survived.

2. Death of Patrick Murphy Malin. Mr. Angell read a resolution prepared by him on the death of Mr. Malin which was adopted unanimously by the Board. The resolution is attached to these minutes.

3. Death of Alexander Meiklejohn. The Board also approved unanimously a resolution expressing the Union's sense of loss upon the death of Mr. Meiklejohn, a copy of which is attached to these minutes.

4. Financial report. Mr. Haskell reported on the current financial situation stating that although $765,000 was the projected total for membership contributions for 1964, the actual figure will be between $850,000 - $860,000.

5. Budget, 1965. Mr. Lacy, as chairman of the Administrative Committee, presented the budget for 1965, with corrections of the proposed budget which had been circulated with the agenda. He also recommended that the executive salaries of the national staff should be reviewed in an executive session of the Board. A question as to the increasing cost and as to the function of the Annual Report was raised by Mr. Frank, which was referred by Mr. Angell to the Executive Committee. After further discussion, the budget was approved by the Board. As corrected and adopted, this budget is attached to these minutes.

6. Board meeting schedule for 1965. Mr. Pemberton presented the proposed schedule of Board meetings for the coming year and there were no objections. He also informed the Board that for at least the next few months, the Board would meet on the 7th floor instead of the 9th, because of the fact that new office machinery would be put in the current Board meeting room.

7. Senator Hart's proposal for a federal Civil Liberties Commission. Mr. Ennis reported on the Free Speech and Association and the Due Process Committees' recommendations concerning Senator Hart's bill to establish a Committee on Constitutional Liberties and the proposed letter concerning this bill to be sent to Senator Hart. Mr. Ennis pointed out that though much of the language of the bill is patterned after the Act creating the Civil Rights Commission, the section giving the Commission subpoena power has been deliberately omitted. He also pointed out the alternative positions which the Due Process Committee had suggested as a result of divided views within the Committee as to whether or not to recommend that the bill bar radio and TV broadcasts of Committee hearings. A third alternative would be to recommend the bar only when the witness requests it. Mr. Ennis then moved the adoption by the Board of the proposed letter to Senator Hart without, however, the radio-TV provision.

This provoked considerable discussion among Board members. Mr. Soll remarked that investigations without any relation to prosecution or legislation but simply for the sake of information are dangerous, and Mr. Black questioned whether the proposed Commission would turn out to be a booby trap such as HUAC. Mr. Prashker brought up the question of whether education of the public is one of the purposes of the Commission to which Mr. Ennis replied in the affirmative for both investigation and publicizing of civil liberties violations, educational activities in themselves, are purposes of the Commission. Mr. Maslow felt the stated purpose of the Commission in Section 4 (b), making recommendations to the President and the Congress, to be the most important and that the educational function, also significant, should be implemented by published reports of authoritative findings which can then be cited. Mr. Fraenkel stated that the possibility of abuse is inevitable and to safeguard against this the Union should ask that both the purposes and procedures of the Commission be stated as definitely as possible. At this point Mr. Ennis amended his motion to read that the Board approve commendation of Senator Hart's bill, saving the issues of the power to subpoena witnesses, cross-examination, and live broadcasts for subsequent motions. The motion carried as amended.

Mr. Ennis then moved that the Board adopt the Due Process Committee's recommendation regarding cross-examination. Mr. Maslow stated that he opposed it for the proposed Commission on Constitutional Liberties was not a criminal court but an investigatory body and the right of cross-examination deprives the Commission of the right to run its own affairs for control of the hearing passes inevitably to those conducting the cross-examination. Furthermore, nothing in the bill would prevent the Commission from granting the right of cross-examination in its own discretion in appropriate cases. After other comments the motion was voted on and carried 12 to 5.

Mr. Ennis moved that the paragraph recommending the Commission have the power to subpoena witnesses be added to the letter and explained that the operation of the Civil Rights Commission indicated that the Commission on Civil Liberties could operate more effectively if it were not limited to calling only voluntary witnesses. Mr. Fraenkel raised a point of order stating that the power to subpoena, if not sought by the bill's proponents, is not properly of concern to the Union, and the Chair ruled that the motion was out of order.

Mr. Ennis moved that the drafted letter include the suggestion that radio and TV be barred from Commission hearings, and his motion was seconded. Mr. Fraenkel moved to amend the motion to apply the bar only if the witness objects. Mr. Reitman, at the request of the Chair, explained that our last Board action on the subject of broadcasting Congressional hearings was taken in 1953, whereupon Mr. Brown proposed that we should say nothing on this issue without an up-to-date review of this position, and moved to table the motion. This motion was seconded and passed. Mr. Pemberton announced that such a review would be asked of the Free Speech and Association Committee.

8. John Birch Society membership by policemen. Mr. Pemberton presented the draft statement on "Civil Liberties Aspects of Police Membership in the John Birch Society" and pointed out that membership is an exercise of the right of association and should therefore not in and of itself be grounds for discrimination or disqualification from employment. Mr. Frank moved to adopt it after amendment (1) deleting the sentence in the fourth paragraph which reads: "Public employees, including teachers and members of the police force, should be judged only by their official performance and actions."., and (2) changing the last two sentences of the last paragraph to read: "Such information might include personal activity as a member of the John Birch Society which is shown to have interfered with the impartial conduct we expect law enforcement officers to demonstrate in the exercise of their authority. But the guiding standard for such inquiry should be conduct, not mere membership in any organization." The motion was seconded and passed.

9. Items not on the agenda. Mr. Rice asked about the John Goldfarb case and if the Union was doing anything. Mr. Neier stated that the New York Civil Liberties Union is pursuing the case.

Mr. Black inquired about the situation in Berkeley and Mr. Bierstedt described the activities of the ACLU of Northern California and of the national organization and other affiliates acting on the request of the Northern California affiliate. He felt that the action of the Regents last week had left the matter very clouded.

The meeting was adjourned.

MINUTES

Free Speech/Association Committee Meeting
Friday, January 7, 1965, 12:30 P.M.
ACLU Office

PRESENT: Mr. Soll, presiding; Messrs. Channick, Crowell, Evans, Galantiere, Lowenstein, Miss Fingerhood, Mrs. Pilpel

Guest: Mr. Charles Lamb Markman

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Wulf, Bucholz

Because of the necessity for immediate action on several items, Mr. Soll suggested, after consultation with the office, that the agenda previously circulated be taken up out of the order listed.

1. Newspaper Rejection of Advertising. Mr. Channick, whose memo on this issue was previously circulated, reviewed the problem and stated that ordinarily courts find no difficulty in upholding the absolute right of a newspaper to control the advertising it publishes and to reject the ads which it does not like. Some exceptions are made when newspaper control of advertising rises to the dignity of a restraint on trade, such as when newspapers refuse to accept advertising from radio or TV stations.

Mr. Channick proposed the following position for ACLU: In the interests of insuring the greatest diversity of speech, newspapers should not reject non-commercial advertising except on grounds of internal necessity, such as space and cost limitations, and the requirements of the libel laws. He suggested the Committee discuss first, what civil liberties disadvantages would result from such a position, and second, how the ACLU should effectuate such a position. Mr. Soll and Mr. Wulf stated that they opposed ACLU's urging legal enforcement of such a requirement, but that there might be nothing wrong with our urging that the spirit of the First Amendment suggested adherence to such a principle. Mr. Evans questioned whether Mr. Channick's position would require a small socialist paper to carry ads for the meeting of a fascist society, and whether denominationally owned newspapers would be required to accept ads for atheist societies. Mr. Crowell thought that the ACLU should not attempt to abridge "the right of a newspaper owner to be a heel" but that there was nothing wrong in attempts to educate newspaper owners.

Several members stressed the importance of the problem in cities and towns where newspaper ownership was so concentrated that refusal to carry an advertisement effectively cut off the advertiser from contact with the public. Mrs. Pilpel argued that ACLU has traditionally opposed any limitation on what newspaper owners can be required to print or not to print. She felt that if the press was to be made into a public utility, a basic ingredient of our democratic process would be lost. Miss Fingerhood urged the Committee to differentiate in its position between large newspapers, particularly those in areas where newspaper ownership is concentrated, and "house organs," such as those operated by religious and political societies. Mr. Channick suggested that the discussion should not be confined merely to newspapers but should apply to the field of advertising as a whole. Mr. Bucholz and Mr. Wulf urged that any position suggested by us should deal with the problem of newspapers which refuse to carry ads for books thought by them to be obscene or immoral even though books are commercial products. Mr. Soll thought he detected some Committee sentiment for an ACLU position similar to the one proposed by Mr. Channick, provided ACLU attempted only moral persuasion and education, and not legal enforcement of a restriction on the discretion of newspaper owners.

In view of the request from the Philadelphia affiliate for immediate advice, the chair asked Mr. Channick to draw up as quickly as possible a proposed motion stating the ACLU position and defining to some extent the meaning of "non-commercial advertising." After the motion is circulated, and prior to the next Committee meeting, the chair will appoint another Committee member to draft and circulate a counter-motion. At the next meeting votes will be taken on the two motions and a recommendation will be made to the Board.

2. The Right of Privacy v. Free Speech. Mr. Soll reported to the Committee the latest discussion in the national Board of Directors stemming from the case involving the movie, "John Goldfarb, Please Come Home." (See Board minutes of January 4, 1965.) The Committee had before it for consideration previously circulated position papers by Harriet Pilpel and Alan Schwartz.

Mrs. Pilpel reported on a recent decision by a New York Supreme Court Judge in a case involving a purported biography of Warren Spahn. At the instance of Spahn, the court enjoined the sale of the book because, among other things, it found that the biography was not authorized, that it was prepared from secondary sources including newsclippings and magazine stories, that it contained much that was inaccurate and untrue and that its contents entered into areas of Spahn's personal life which had nothing to do with the public interest in him as a ballplayer. Mrs. Pilpel suggested that the court had erred in finding a right of privacy to exist sufficient to merit an injunction against a publication simply because a book presented as a factual biography and not a fictionalization contained much that was untrue or inaccurate. Mrs. Pilpel reviewed several older cases involving the right of privacy which she stated established the proposition that, as to a public figure, if a work was presented as a factual narrative, it was not subject to an action based on the right of privacy, even if it contained some errors. The reasoning of the courts in these cases is that if judges were to allow right of privacy actions because unauthorized biographies contained some untrue material, the writing and publishing of biographies would be severely hampered. (Mr. Hendel and Mr. Crowell interjected that authorized biographies are frequently less accurate than non-authorized biographies in spite of the protestations of the subject.) Mrs. Pilpel suggested to the Committee that ACLU enter the Warren Spahn case as amicus on the side of the defendant publisher.

Mr. Soll differentiated between the right of privacy as to a public figure and the right as to a private citizen. He suggested that the Committee take up first the right as to public figures because in many respects the issues were clearer and easier. He asked whether there was any substantial disagreement with the position that as to a public figure, there is no right of privacy which protects against the public disclosure of information touching on his private life. He noted that if the information was obtained through an illegal physical invasion of privacy, such as wiretapping, or if such information was untrue and maliciously publicized, then criminal and libel laws would protect the public figure to some extent.

Several Committee members questioned whether such a rule would protect against authors who deliberately published nonfactual biographies in a factual form; i.e., authors who attempted to avoid the privacy rule by including an elaborate set of footnotes and reference sources to which they pay no attention. Mr. Crowell suggested that publishers should be required to "label" such biographies to indicate whether they are intended to be factual or fictionalized. Several other members of the Committee analogized the problem to that of ACLU's position on "hard-core pornography" in that the interest of ACLU was in maximumizing the extent of permissible discussion leaving a rather small and clearly defined and necessary area to be protected by the right of privacy.

Mr. Hendel stated that he had no difficulty with the fact situation presented in the Spahn case and urged the Committee to enter it. Mr. Soll thought the Committee might do better to wait until it had a clear position on the entire area of right of privacy, of which the current discussion was only a small part. Miss Fingerhood moved that ACLU enter into the Warren Spahn case as amicus curiae to argue that, when a factual biography of a public figure deals with his private life, no right of privacy exists which can forbid the publication of the book, even though a substantial amount of the information contained in the book is untrue. The vote on the motion was seven in favor, none opposed, and one abstention.

The question of whether we should oppose the use of an injunction rather than an action for damages in a case like that of Warren Spahn was briefly discussed. It was the feeling of the staff, subject to further checking, that ACLU's policy in the past has been to oppose the use of any injunction resulting in prior restraint of a publication based on the material contained in it.

The chairman suggested that a member of the Committee be appointed to prepare a short written memo for the next meeting of the Committee. The memo should explore other areas of the right of privacy, particularly the right of a private citizen and the right of an instituion to challenge the use of their names for apparently commercial purposes.

WORKING PAPER -- NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION January 7, 1965

TO: Members of the Board

FROM: The Office

During recent years, a number of incidents have been reported to the national ACLU office in which non-commercial advertising was rejected by newspapers, magazines and others having advertising space or time for sale. These incidents included the refusal of the two major newspapers in Columbus, Ohio, to accept advertisements dealing with world peace and the Cuban situation from a group of local organizations; the refusal of the SATURDAY REVIEW to accept a classified advertisment from an organization of male homosexuals and the refusal of the Philadelphia Transportation Company to accept car card advertisments from Women's Strike for Peace. Undoubtedly, there have been other unreported incidents of a similar nature.

The cases dealing with such situations have generally held that the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment includes the publisher's right to be free from compulsion to accept advertising. This has also been the position of the ACLU in the past. I suggest that that position be reconsidered. The ultimate goal of the First Amendment is free exchange of political and social thought. Non-commercial advertising is an important method of reaching the public with such thought. Therefore, the goals of the First Amendment would be furthered by requiring those who offer advertising time or space for sale to accept all non-commercial advertising subject to libel and obscenity laws and to reasonable, non-discriminatory conditions.

The prime objection to such a rule is, of course, that it would open the door to government control of the press. But this need not be the case. It is perfectly possible to distinguish the advertising columns of a newspaper from the news columns and to regulate one but not the other. If fact, securities laws, pure food and drug laws and others operate as an indirect regulation of advertising columns at the present time.

TO: Academic Freedom Committee

FROM: Sub-committee on the New College (Members: Dorothy Bromley, Beatrice Konheim [Chairman], Charles Madison, Walter Petry)

SECOND DRAFT -- THE NEW COLLEGE

In the last 10 years _____ new colleges have been established in the United States. Each year will show a further increase. In the past, new colleges grew slowly; there was time for an evolution of the academic spirit. Now maturity must be achieved overnight if the new college is to leave an imprint of intellectual integrity on the thousands of students who will crowd its campuses in the next few years.

The impact of these new institutions on the students and the community will depend to a great extent on the scholarship and teaching skill of the faculty, the competence and zeal of the administrators and faculty in planning curricula and facilities favorable to learning. It will also depend on the climate of freedom for teaching, for research, and for learning which is the mutual concern of administrators, faculty and students. This climate will determine in large part whether the college becomes merely an efficient business organization whose product is degree students or a sensitive, viable institution of higher learning.

Many governing bodies of new institutions have had little or no previous experience with the purposes and problems of higher education. A heavy responsibility therefore rests upon the newly established administrations, their presidents and deans, and on the faculty. They know the new institution will quickly have to pass a series of rigorous tests.

> Will the institution receive accreditation?
> Will students who wish to transfer to other colleges obtain recognition and credit for work done?
> Will there be created a spirit of freedom of inquiry and a testing of beliefs, whether traditional or new, which will attract and hold good students and inspired teachers and productive scholars?

The confidence and support of parents, students, and the academic community can be obtained only if these challenges are met intelligently and forthrightly. Confidence may be shaken if there is unnecessary interference from governing bodies whether or not the institution is supported in whole or in part by public funds. It may also be shaken if the college yields to explosive community pressures particularly in courses of study, the conduct and deportment of students and teachers on campus and their participation as citizens in social and political movements or activities.

The first years are critical. Hasty judgments and ill considered actions may jeapordize the standing of the institution for years to come. The answers to the following questions may indicate whether, in the long run, the independence of the college from pressures from above and without may be withstood and whether the quality of students and faculty may be maintained.

> Is there significant participation of representative faculty in major policy decisions on curriculum and personnel including appointment, promotion, and dismissal?
> May faculty tenure be attained after a limited period of probation?
> Are there specific regulations governing non-reappointment and resignation?

The commitment to freedom of the mind, clearly enunciated, will help to create a college of independence and strength with an ability to withstand explosive community pressures generated by a society in conflict.

Despite the great differences in structure among our institutions of higher learning, the last fifty years have seen the clarification of the roles and responsibilities of the faculty and administration in American colleges. Standards have been set. Concepts of immediate concern to faculties and administrators of newly organized colleges together with procedures for translating these beliefs into policy are presented below through excerpts from published statements of American Association of University Professors, Association of American Colleges, and American Civil Liberties Union.

1. FACULTY PARTICIPATION IN COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY GOVERNMENT

The American Association of University Professors, 1960:

Agencies of faculty representation, chosen in a manner determined by the faculty should be provided at each major organizational level in the institution concerned.

Communication with the governing board should not be confined to the chief administrative officer.

-- The rules governing procedures for faculty representation should be officially adopted and should be available to all concerned.

Decisions as to the area and extent of faculty representation and participation in college and university government should involve the judgment of the faculty. The faculty should have major responsibility for the educational and research policy of the institution. This policy area includes such fundamental matters as standards of admission of students, student affairs, curricula, and the granting of degrees.

-- The allocation of available resources among competing demands has such obvious and important implications for educational and research policy as to call for a direct role by the faculty in the making of budget decisions at all levels.

-- Appointments, promotions, and dismissals of academic personnel should be made only by processes that provide the active faculty participation through established committees and procedures.

The chairman or head of an academic department should be elected by the members of the department or should be appointed after consultation and normally in conformity with the judgment of, the members of the department.

The selection and dismissal of deans, presidents, and other academic administrative officers should involve meaningful participation by the faculty through its elected representatives. (1)

2. TENURE

The American Association of University Professors, 1940:

After the expiration of a probationary period teachers or investigators should have permanent or continuous tenure, and their services should be terminated only for adequate cause, except in the case of retirement for age, or under extraordinary circumstances because of financial exigencies.

In the interpretation of this principle it is understood that the following represents acceptable academic practice:

1. The precise terms and conditions of every appointment should be stated in writing and be in the possession of both institution and teacher before the appointment is consummated.

2. Beginning with appointment to the rank of full-time instructor or a higher rank, the probationary period should not exceed seven years, including within this period full-time service in all institutions of higher education; but subject to the proviso that when, after a term of probationary service of more than three years in one or more institutions, a teacher is called to another institution it may be agreed in writing that his new appointment is for a probationary period of not more than four years, even though thereby the person's total probationary period in the academic profession is extended beyond the normal maximum of seven years. Notice should be given at least one year prior to the expiration of the probationary period if the teacher is not to be continued in service after the expiration of that period.

3. During the probationary period a teacher should have the academic freedom that all other members of the faculty have. (2)

3. NOTICE OF NON-REAPPOINTMENT

American Association of University Professors, 1964:

Because a probationary appointment, even though for a fixed or stated term, carries an expectation of renewal, the faculty member should be explicitly informed of a decision not to renew his appointment---.

Notice of non-reappointment, or intention not to recommend reappointment to the governing board should be given in writing in accordance with the following standards:

1. Not later than March 1 of the first academic year of service, if the appointment expires at the end of that year; or, if a one-year appointment terminates during an academic year, at least three months in advance of its termination.

2. Not later than December 15 of the second academic year of service, if the appointment expires at the end of that year; or, if an initial two-year appointment terminates during an academic year, at least six months in advance of its termination.

3. At least twelve months before the expiration of an appointment after two or more years in the institution. (3)

4. RESIGNATION BY A MEMBER OF THE FACULTY AND RECRUITMENT

The American Association of Colleges, 1961:

1. Negotiations looking to possible appointment for the following fall of persons who are already faculty members in active service -- and not on terminal appointment, should be begun and completed as early as possible in the academic year. It is desirable that, when feasible, the faculty member inform the appropriate officers of his institution when such negotiations are in progress. The conclusion of a binding agreement for the faculty member -- should always be followed by prompt notice to his institution.

2. A faculty member should not resign in order to accept another employment as of the end of the academic year, later than May 15th or 30 days after receiving notification of the terms of his continued employment the following year, whichever date occurs later. -- This obligation will be in effect only if institutions generally observe the time factor set forth in the following paragraph for new offers. --

3. To permit a faculty member to give due consideration of timely notice to his institution -- an offer of appointment for the following fall at another institution should not be made after May 1st. --

4. Except by agreement with his institution, a faculty member should not leave or be solicited to leave his position during an academic year for which he holds an appointment. (4)

5. ACADEMIC DUE PROCESS FOR FACULTY

A statement Adopted by Joint Committee of American Association of University Professors and Association of American Colleges, 1958:

A necessary pre-condition of a strong faculty is that it have first-hand concern with its own membership. This is properly reflected both in appointments and in separations from the faculty body. A well organized institution will reflect sympathetic understanding by trustees and teachers alike of their respective and complimentary roles. These should be spelled out carefully in writing and made available to all. -- One persistent source of difficulty is the definition of adequate cause for dismissal of a faculty member. (5)

American Civil Liberties Union, 1954;

The best academic due process is possible only when the institution and the teacher both believe that justice must be based upon order. The principle embodied in the legal concept of confrontation should govern academic due process.

The teacher should be informed of all the charges and all the evidence against him; he should have full opportunity to deny, refute, and to rebut -- it is a fundamental principle of fairness that charges against a person are to be made when proven, and that the burden of proof rests upon those who bring them --. The responsibility for applying this principle in the world of education rests primarily upon the governing board and administration of the institution. (6)

Recommendations on procedures to safeguard due process are spelled out in both statements (5,6). They cover the following:

Action in Tenure Cases
Preliminary proceedings concerning the fitness of faculty member

Formal Proceedings
- Relevant legislation, board by-laws, etc.
- Presentation of charges
- Procedure to be followed at proceedings
- Setting of date after sufficient time has elapsed for preparation of case
- Selection of hearing committee -- the ACLU advises that whenever possible "a standing committee of full time teaching colleagues democratically chosen and representative of the staff, and selected by pre-established rules."

Suspension of faculty member, the AAC-AAUP advises, "only if immediate harm to himself or others is threatened by his continuance."

Committee proceeding
- Right of teacher to be present accompanied by counsel
- Right of teacher and administration to present and examine witnesses and to cross-examine
- Principle of confrontation
- Full record to be taken and be made available to hearing group, administration and the teacher the AAC-AAUP recommends that the hearing committee "should make explicit findings with respect to each of the grounds of removal presented."
- Consideration of Governing Body (trustees)
  the AAC-AAUP states that, "Acceptance of the committee's decision would normally be expected." Procedures for resubmission to Hearing Committee channels of appeal.

Action in non-tenure cases is suggested by ACLU (6)

6. ACADEMIC FREEDOM AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE FACULTY

The AAUP, 1940:

The common good depends upon free search for truth and its free expression. Academic freedom is essential to these purposes and applies to both teaching and research. Freedom in research is fundamental to the advancement of truth. Academic freedom in its teaching aspect is fundamental for the protection of the rights of the teacher in teaching and of the student to freedom in learning.

The American Civil Liberties Union, 1956:

Academic freedom and responsibility are here defined as the liberty and obligation to study, to investigate, to present and interpret, and to discuss facts and ideas concerning man, human society, and the physical and biological world in all branches and fields of learning. They imply no limitations other than those imposed by generally accepted standards of art, scholarship, and science. They include the right within and without institutions of learning to be free from any special limitations of investigation, expression and discussion. As citizens, students and teachers have the rights accorded all citizens.

Academic freedom and responsibility of teachers embraces two distinct areas: 1) the conduct of the teacher apart from specifically professional responsibilities and 2) his conduct in teaching and other activities directly related to his professional responsibilities.

1. When not engaged in specifically professional activities, the teacher should be able to function with the freedom of any other citizen. In his private capacity the teacher should be as free as any other citizen in political, religious, and social movements and organizations and in any other lawful activity, and to hold and to express publicly his political, religious, economic or other views. The fact of his being a teacher should not debar him from any activities open to other citizens.

   Teachers should not be requested to take any special oath of loyalty to the government. -- No one should be subjected, as a condition of holding a teaching position, to any test of religious belief or of political belief other than his pledge to support the Constitution of his state and of the United States.

   Like any other professional or non-professional worker, the teacher should be free to organize with others to protect group interests or to join existing unions or other organizations for such purposes.

2. The criteria of performance for a teacher should be those associated with personal and professional integrity in a democratic society. -- A teacher should be appointed on the basis of his teaching ability and his competence in his professional field, not on the basis of his race, nationality, creed, religious belief or affiliation; a proper exception exists in the right of a private institution of publicly declared faith, denomination or special function to select teachers on a basis harmonious with its public declaration.

   The central issue in considering a teacher's fitness, is his own performance in his subject and his relationship with his students. The ACLU opposes as contrary to democratic liberties any ban or regulation which would prohibit the employment as a teacher of any person because of his views or associations, such as Communist or Fascist. The ACLU does not oppose ouster of any teacher found lacking in professional integrity.

The community has the right to demand that the educational institution shall be competently staffed and capably administered. Matters of curricula properly are the responsibility of the professional staff who are under obligation to be guided by high professional standards of scholarship and of teaching methods and by full awareness of the community's educational needs. (The community) -- has neither the right to, nor indeed any social justification for, insistence that a discussion of deviations from accepted principles be excluded from the curriculum. (7)

7. ACADEMIC FREEDOM AND CIVIL LIBERTIES OF STUDENTS

The American Civil Liberties Union, 1956:

The democratic way of life depends for its very existence upon the free contest of ideas. This is as true on the campus as in the community at large. If our students are to grow to political and social maturity, no step should be neglected which will habituate them to the free interchange of ideas -- unpopular and strange ideas as well as those which are favored and familiar. ... A democracy encourages to the highest degree possible the participation of the governed in the governing process. ... A democracy combats possible abuses not by a system of precensorship but by definite fixing of responsibility for such abuses and the application of disciplinary measures when necessary. (8)

The ACLU, 1961:

The student government, student organization, and individual students should be free to discuss, pass resolution upon, distribute leaflets, petitions, and take other lawful action respecting any matter which directly or indirectly concerns or affects them....

... Students should be free to organize and join associations for educational, political, social, religious and cultural purposes.

... The administration should not discriminate against a student because of membership in any such organization.

... Organizations should not be required to file a list of members ---. All student publications -- should enjoy full freedom of the press.

... When a student organization wishes to invite an outside speaker -- permission should not be withheld because the speaker is a controversial figure. (9)

8. STUDENT DUE PROCESS

The American Civil Liberties Union, 1961:

The Student as Citizen.

No disciplinary action should be taken by the college against a student for engaging in such off campus activities as political campaigning, picketing or participation in public demonstrations, providing the student does not claim without authorization to speak or act in the name of the college or one of its student organizations.

When students run into police difficulties off the campus in connection with what they regard as their political rights -- as for example taking part in sit-ins, picket lines, demonstrations, riding in freedom buses -- the college authorities should take every step practical to assure themselves that such students are protected in their full legal rights.

c) Due Process for Students: -

No student should be expelled or suffer major disciplinary action for any offense other than failure to meet required academic standards, without having been advised explicitly of the charges against him which at his request should be in writing.

He should be free to seek the counsel of a faculty member of his choice or other adviser.

Should (the student) admit guilt but consider the penalty excessive, or should he claim to be innocent, he may ask for a hearing before a review board.

The hearing committee should examine the evidence, hear witnesses as to facts and student's character, and weigh extenuating circumstances.

The student should be permitted to call witnesses on his own behalf and confront and cross-examine those who appear against him.

A final appeal should be allowed.

America's commitment to the great expansion of higher education is one of the exciting developments of our time. As a people, we have dedicated ourselves to the principle that all young people of capacity and ambition will find a place to continue their education -- regardless of family financial ability, race, color, national origin or religion.

The new institutions will play a major role in the fulfilling of our commitment. The first years are the most difficult; the battle will be won or lost then. It will be won if the dedication to the principles of a free institution are clearly expressed and courageously defended.

The Academic Freedom Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union comprised for the most part of university teachers, department heads and administrators, offers its services and will endeavor to be of assistance whenever the occasion arises.

Dear Alan:

Thanks for your good letter of January 6.

You ask me to clarify the general rule that when news personnel become public advocates on one side or another of any public issue or controversy they disqualify themselves from any function related to reporting on that issue. You ask if that means that we assign them to a different position during the course of the controversy and that after the particular controversy is over, the individual is returned to his job.

The issue hasn't come up often enough to state what we have done. But your statement pretty well covers what I believe we would do. For example, if one of our correspondents becomes the leading spokesman on one side or another of the Fire Island controversy (not a hypothetical case), we would not let him report on that particular issue. Obviously he could report on all other news and issues--and he undoubtedly would be able fully to perform all his existing functions. The problem really comes up when it becomes impractical to take a man with broad duties off the coverage of a single continuing issue, and provide a substitute just for that issue. Let me take as an example a news writer on the radio side who is the sole editor of the night shift or who has the responsibility for five or six ten-minute broadcasts on the hour during the day. Let us suppose (although it has never happened) that this news writer, during the election campaign, took a strong public position for the Republican or the Democratic candidate. There, it may not as a practical matter be feasible to let him supervise all other news in the broadcasts but bring in a substitute for the coverage of the political campaign, so that the two in effect work in tandem. In those circumstances, we may have to suspend him from his job for the duration of the pendency of the issue on which he has taken a position.

I hope this clarifies things.

Sincerely,

Richard S. Salant

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

Re: Biennial Conference Recommendation on Wartime Measures Affecting Civil Liberties

The following statement has just been submitted to the national office by the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts. We hope committee members will read it in time to discuss it as part of the general consideration of civil liberties and national security at this Thursday's meeting.

POSITION PAPER ON CONSCRIPTION

Civil Liberites Union of Massachusetts

Historically, the American Civil Liberties Union has taken the position that government conscription of individual lives is a complete denial of what ought to be a basic civil liberty. Conscription for war or preparation for war raises special problems because it constrains some men to do that to which they are opposed by religious or philosophic conviction. Despite this, the Union has at times felt compelled to recognize the imperative claims imposed by the necessity to maintain national security. Hence, in 1940 the Union did not oppose the draft law, but in 1945 it felt that the case for compulsory military training was by no means strong enough to override the grave objections to conscription in the name of liberty.

Most would agree that the nature of modern war and the pace of the arms race present continuing and urgent problems in reconciling individual rights and liberties and the democratic process with the claims of the common defense. Particularly pertinent are the problems of civilian authority over the military and the restriction of dissent in relation to matters of "clear and present danger."

The Union acknowledges that some restrictions on freedom are required even in a democratic society, when there is general consensus that the limitation is not only in the public interest and constitutional, but also that the danger is real, the proposed measures effective and necessary, and the execution equitable and non-discriminatory. Still, in our society, the burden of proof must be overcome by those who propose restrictions, whether on an assertion of military necessity or other grounds. The military case for continuing the draft must be fully persuasive and open to full and free debate by citizens and the Congress. No cloak of secrecy or "security" should be permitted to justify retaining or imposing so weighty a limitation on individual liberty as conscription.

Finally, the continuing vigilance of the Union should be exercised to see that under whatever provisions for military service and recruitment there is generous protection of the rights of conscience. We reaffirm that the sincerity of conscientious objection should not be judged by the test of a religious formula so narrow as to exclude ethical or humanistic beliefs.

January 10, 1965

The January Board Meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia was held January 10 at the home of Edward Ladd. The following members were present: Ladd, Morris, Broiles, Dunbar, Glustrom, Hocking, Pauley, with committee chairmen Moran, Johnston, Parker, Pratt, McPhedran, Gibert. Richardson, Bullard and Boaz had notified regrets.

J. Glustrom moved and P. Morris seconded that the minutes of the December 1 Meeting be corrected to change the date on line 2 to read "December 1", and that they then be approved as distributed. Motion carried.

The resignation of Maurice Maloof from the Board was accepted. It was the concensus of the Board to leave the position vacant until the Annual Meeting in April.

The December 4 General Meeting of the ACLU of Georgia was deemed valuable, in spite of the inability, due to flying conditions, of Charles Morgan to be present. Members of the Board who were present are urged to pay their own expenses at the rate of $1.00 per drink, and to send their remittance to the treasurer, John Glustrom, 1286 West Peachtree Street, N.W. as soon as possible. F. Pauley moved and D. Broiles seconded that the treasurer be authorized to pay the bill in full. Motion carried.

E. Ladd noted that he had sent letters to various members in response to criticism that the General Meeting was held on a Friday night which is a Jewish holiday.

F. Pauley moved and D. Broiles seconded that the committee who planned the General Meeting be thanked. Motion carried. P. Morris moved and D. Broiles seconded that Frances Pauley, the chairman, be especially thanked. Motion carried..

C. Moran, Membership Chairman, was authorized to obtain copies of the new "What is the ACLU?" and the pamphlet on the Civil Rights Act.

John Glustrom, treasurer, is authorized to investigate and report on the financial needs of the ACLU of Georgia.

L. Dunbar moved and J. Glustrom seconded that the Board instruct the Chairman to appoint a Nominating Committee to prepare a slate of officers and Board Members to be presented at the Annual Meeting. Motion carried.

H. Gibert, Chairman of the Lawyers Committee, reported that a sub-committee studying the state loyalty oath believes it can easily be declared unconstitutional.

A discussion was held concerning the role and relationship to the Board of the new standing committees, namely, should the Board or the committee itself determine the direction and emphasis of the committee's work. Mrs. Parker, Chairman of the Implementation of the Civil Rights Act Committee requested clarification of the work of this committee. It was suggested that one area of concern should be to be alert to civil liberties threats resulting from the enforcement of the Act.

Mr. Johnston, of the Academic Freedom Committee, reported that his group felt that the Loyalty Oath was of prime importance and should be dealt with first.

Mr. Pratt, of the Ad-Hoc Committee on ACLU Libel Policy, reported on the work of his group. The Board will consider the statement of this committee which will be sent to National at its next meeting.

E. Ladd was requested to instruct committee chairmen concerning board policy and other information at the request of the committees.

The February Board Meeting will be held on February 8th at 8:00 P.M. at the home of John Glustrom.

Respectfully submitted,

Patsy Morris, for E. Richardson

Dear Lolis:

This is to confirm the Elie - Dreyfus - Rubin telephone conference of last night.

I would appreciate your looking into the following matter at your earliest convenience:

(1) The enclosed KKK letter contains a clear threat ("Those who do attend this meeting will be tagged as intergrationists and will be delt with accordingly by the Knights of the KU KLUX KLAN."); is it actionable? Can we connect the rights guaranteed under the First Amendment (Peaceable Assembly) and those under the Fourteenth (as Leonard said, what is liberty if not freedom from this sort of intimidation?)? Can we bring suit under any of the Civil Rights provisions?

(2) Can we bring suit as an organization, LCLU vs. KKK? New York will want a voice in this.

I may be able to produce an LCLU member who (a) lives in Bogalusa, (b) had the enclosed left on his lawn at night by parties unknown, and (b) had planned to attend the Brooks Hayes meeting which was called off. (I'm in touch with him at present, but we've got to make sure that anyone who approaches him, including by mail, uses the utmost discretion. He's confined to a wheelchair and is, in Bogalusa, pathetically vulnerable to KKK reprisals. He's also a very courageous man, and has gone up against the Klan publicly.)

The enclosed KKK letter is the one which was left on his lawn.

If it is feasible, I should like this to be an LCLU case -- for selfish, organizational reasons. In addition, I should not like to have our member bring the action; it will be bad enoughh producing him as a witness.

Best,

Re: Academic Freedom Committee's Report on "The New College."

The Committee at its January 12 meeting approved this report, previously circulated to the Board, with editorial changes in the first two and one-half pages of the report. The new text which follows replaces pages 1, 1a, and the first half of page 2 of the text previously sent to you. Would you please substitute the following for the textual material prior to FACULTY PARTICIPATION IN COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY GOVERNMENT.

THE NEW COLLEGE

In the last 10 years _____ new colleges have been established in the United States. Each year will show a further increase. In the past, new colleges grew slowly; there was time for an evolution of the academic spirit. Now maturity must be achieved overnight if the new college is to leave an imprint of intellectual integrity on the thousands of students who will crowd its campuses in the next few years.

The impact of these new institutions on the students and the community will depend to a great extent on the scholarship and teaching skill of the faculty, the competence and zeal of the administrators and faculty in planning curricula and facilities favorable to learning. It will also depend on the climate of freedom for teaching, for research, and for learning which is the mutual concern of administrators, faculty and students. This climate will determine in large part whether the college becomes merely an efficient business organization whose product is degree students or a sensitive, viable institution of higher learning.

Many governing bodies of new institutions have had little or no previous experience with the purposes and problems of higher education. A heavy responsibility therefore rests upon the newly established administrations, their presidents and deans, and on the faculty. They know the new institution will quickly have to pass a series of rigorous tests.

Will the institution receive accreditation?

Will students who wish to transfer to other colleges obtain recognition and credit for work done?

Will there be created a spirit of freedom of inquiry and a testing of beliefs, whether traditional or new, which will attract and hold good students and inspired teachers and productive scholars?

Confidence and support of parents, students, and the academic community can be obtained only if these challenges are met intelligently and forthrightly. Confidence may be shaken if there are unwarranted pressures either from governing bodies or the community. These pressures may be exerted on such matters as courses of study, selection of personnel, the conduct and deportment of students and teachers on campus and their participation as citizens in social and political movements or activities.

The first years are critical. Hasty judgments and ill considered actions may jeapordize the standing of the institution for years to come. The answers to the following questions may indicate whether, in the long run, the independence of the college from pressures from above and without may be withstood and whether the quality of students and faculty may be maintained.

Is there significant participation of faculty in major policy decisions on curriculum and personnel including appointment, promotion, and dismissal?

May faculty tenure be attained after a limited period of probation?

Are there specific regulations governing non-reappointment and resignation?

Is academic freedom for students and faculty scrupulously guarded?

Is due process guaranteed for the faculty member whose fitness is questionned and for a student brought up on charges of misconduct?

On these vital matters of policy members of the academic profession have crystalized their opinion during the past 50 years. The standards they have arrived at are applicable to all institutions -- junior, senior or community colleges, urban, rural or commuting colleges. They are set forth in the excerpts printed below from published statements of the American Association of University Professors, Association of American Colleges, and American Civil Liberties Union.

Re: Action on the President's Aid to Education Program

On January 12 President Johnson proposed to Congress a $1.5 billion federal aid to education program. Several sections of the program are of special interest to the Union because of their implications for the principle of separation of church and state. These include financial assistance ($100 million) for grants for textbooks and library books for both public and parochial schools; financial aid ($45 million for the first year) to regional educational labortories and other facilities to train public and private non-profit school teachers; financial assistance ($100 million) for creation of special educational centers to be shared by public, religious and other schools, and other programs involving shared time; and federal aid to church-related colleges.

The text of the bill will be analyzed by Jack Pemberton who will report on the substantive issues at this Monday's (January 18) meeting.

Senator Wayne Morse, chairman of the Senate Education and Welfare Committee, and his House counter-part, Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, have said that congressional hearings on the program will be promptly held. Congressman Powell has been reported as saying he plans to have an education bill ready for House action by March 1. Senator Morse announced that his Committee would commence hearings next week. Larry Speiser believes that such speedy action will be taken.

The President's proposals -- and the fast congressional timetable -- present operational problems on which we request your advice.

The basic problem is that -- while we have clear policy opposing public aid to parochial school teachers and purchase of textbooks for parochial schools -- the issues of shared time, shared facilities and aid to church-related colleges have not been finally decided by the Union. The aid to church-related college question is scheduled for Board debate in late February or early March, and the Church-State Committee's recommendation on shared time is now being discussed by affiliate boards and at local membership meetings and is on the agenda of the Board's April 3-4 plenary meeting for policy determination. The question of shared facilities, while related to shared time, is not currently being considered as such within the Union's councils.

These questions arise:

1. Should we issue a public statement now, opposing those parts of the President's program on which we do have policy, and at the same time presenting the pro and con arguments regarding the civil liberties questions surrounding shared time and aid to church-related colleges (while we acknowledge that we are in the process of resolving our own policy on these issues).

Such a statement may be necessary because (a) the importance of the President's program, and its church-state implications, requires the Union to offer comment on constitutional issues, and (b) there is need to stimulate public and congressional discussion on the church-state hazards implicit in shared time and aid to church-related colleges. Such a statement would also assist our educational activity, especially in our relations with other organizations and through affiliate-initiated action.

However, we may find that (a) any such comment from the Union will only further stimulate support for the President's program as a "package" in hostile reaction to the strong separation stand for which we are known, and (b), since major interest is focussed on the shared time issue, our separation comment on other parts of the program may be misread by the press and public to mean either comparably outright opposition to shared time and higher education aid or, coversely, as implied endorsement of them -- despite the care with which we prepare our statement.

2. Since it appears that hearings may be concluded before the Board's April 3-4 plenary meetings, should we (a) decline to testify during the hearings and hope to make our views known later when our policy is decided; (b) testify at the hearings, in the manner described above with respect to a public statement; (c) seek an earlier Board decision, sacrificing the value of the careful corporate decision now in process, and rely on affiliate expression of opinion already received

The staff recommends an affirmative answer to Question 1 and the choice of alternative (b) in answer to Question 2.

MINUTES

PAY-TV SUBCOMMITTEE MEETING

JANUARY 14, 1965

OFFICES OF MR. RICHARD HEFFNER, TIME-LIFE BUILDING, NEW YORK CITY

Present: Mr. Heffner, chairman; Messrs. Barnow, Evans, Hirschmann

From the Office: Mr. Reitman

The Subcommittee first considered the motion referred to it by the Radio-TV Committee at its December 16 meeting, that the California referendum prohibiting Pay-TV is "in principle, a violation of the First Amendment and has the effect of restraining an open market place of information, and urging that the California affiliates attempt to enjoin enforcement of Proposition 15 passed in this referendum."

Mr. Reitman reported that he had contacted both our Northern and Southern California affiliates concerning their action with respect to the Proposition 15 vote. Our Northern California affiliate replied that they had taken no action to intervene in the suit brought to challenge the referendum vote. No answer was received from our Southern California affiliate, but this statement from its January "The Open Forum" makes clear that it plans to support the suit contesting the Proposition 15 vote: "It is also the purpose of the ACLU to serve as a friend of the court in a constitutional challenge of not only Proposition 14, but, of Proposition 15 as well. We will argue that the outlawing of Pay-TV abridges not only personal rights protected by the First Amendment -- the right of the public to LISTEN to TV programs of their choice, but property rights assured by the Fifth Amendment -- the right to own and manage property for a profit free from arbitrary confiscation or destruction by the State."

The Subcommittee then turned attention to the Committee minutes of May 20, 1964 which discussed the pros and cons of pay-TV, and the Union's present position as adopted on May 16, 1955. This position states: "The ACLU has carefully considered STV because of the possibility that it would increase diversity in TV programming. While the ACLU is concerned that the present STV plans may not increase diversity, we favor its trial, but only upon the following conditions: 1) that there be no sponsors of STV programs, 2) that STV should not be allowed in any city unless there are at least two other free channels broadcasting; 3) the experiment should be limited in time, whatever period is agreed upon; 4) STV programmers must give ample guarantees that the program content will add something not now available, if asked by the FCC. The ACLU should state it is opposed to the various STV plans as they now stand, because of the absence of these safeguards -- and perhaps other safeguards which have not occurred to us. However, we would approve of STV on an experimental basis if these safeguards are adopted together with any others that might seem appropriate in the public interest, as the public hearings may develop, or which may later occur to us."

After considerable discussion which focussed on the ACLU's interest in diversity, the Subcommittee concluded that pay-TV should be vigorously endorsed by the Union as a new form of communication and allowed the fullest freedom within the framework of existing laws governing radio-TV communication. The Subcommittee emphasized that the conditions qualifying the Union's support in 1955 should no longer apply, for these reasons:

1. No Sponsors of TV Programs. This condition does not foster civil liberties, indeed might limit the right of competition among different franchises, and diversity.

2. Pay-TV Should Not Be Allowed In Cities Unless Two Other Free Channels Are Operating. The same reasoning as applied to 1. should govern here.

3. Experiment Limited In Time. Since Pay-TV is no longer in the experimental stage, the condition no longer applies.

4. Pay-TV Must Give Guarantees To Add Program Content Not Now Seen, If Asked by The FCC. There is no basis for such a requirement as it discriminates against Pay-TV.

The Subcommittee also discussed the specific forms of pay-TV, such as community antennae TV, but did not come to any conclusion because of the various technical questions raised. For example, if one form of CATV utilizes the spectrum, then it would come under FCC regulation; if another form uses wires for transmission, it might not. It was agreed that further study of these technical questions is necessary.

(Mr. Dean, a member of the Subcommittee, was detained at a New York City hearing concerning regulation of a community antennae TV service, and asked that the following statement represent his view: "I would like the Committee to consider my private convictions that the objectives of freedom and diversity in communications demand that the entirety of our television channels including broadcasts, micro-wave, and cable be opened up on a non-discriminatory basis to all types of sponsorship and both audience and sponsor payments. And that in my opinion, it should be a positive goal of the ACLU to support converting all channels of television communication to a common carry basis.")

Dear Mr. Pemberton:

I am a bit distrubed by the apparent strength among us of the notion that the function of the ACLU is limited to the enforcement of existing legal rights. In fact the views of Mr. Redfield, counsel to the New York Civil Liberties Union, seem to take an even narrower approach, seemingly taking the position that no civil liberties issue is involved unless there is a violation of the bill of rights in the federal constitution.

My concern is aroused by Mr. Redfield's views as discussed in Mr. Dorsen's excellent memorandum on capital punishment (revision of January 2, 1964), in which he shows that Mr. Redfield's position is not supported by the history of the ACLU. Mr. Dorsen urges, properly it seems to me, that our basic interest is with the spirit of civil liberties.

What is consistent with the spirit of civil liberties is often a policy question. It seems to me that the ACLU's concern is with the proper carrying out of our Anglo-American heritage of freedom and its adaptation to changing times. We ought to see to it that this is accomplished, not only through federal and state constitutions but through legislation and administrative action. This means that we ought to be concerned with amendments to federal and state constitutions that might improve them from our standpoint, and also with the policy of legislation and administration that might be admittedly constitutional but still undesirable from our basic standpoint. If I am right in this, the civil libertarian needs not only the tools of the lawyer but -- contrary to Mr. Redfield -- those of "the sociologist, the social worker, the psychiatrist or others who are equipped to determine what means will serve the state best for the solution of the problem." The non-lawyer members of our boards are there to contribute much more broadly than Mr. Redfield seems to envision.

As for legislation and administrative action, we should be concerned not only with its constitutionality but also with its wisdom. The constitutional standard is necessarily and properly a low standard. As Mr. Justice Stewart has pointed out, "the Supreme Court of the United States is ultimately concerned only with deciding the absolute minimum standards that the Constitution will tolerate." While we may disagree with him and with the courts as to what those minimum standards should be, we certainly agree that a wide range of discretion ought to be left to legislators and administrative officials. They ought to do better than follow merely the constitutional standard. We ought to be greatly concerned with how their discretion is exercised.

Inasmuch as my point goes far beyond the issue of capital punishment and seems central to the whole function of the ACLU, I would be glad to have this letter brought to the attention of the National Board.

Very truly yours,

/s/ Walter T. Fisher

Re: Capital Punishment

For what it's worth, I offer the following suggestion to you concerning our position on the death penalty as a matter of principle:

Considering that the death penalty precludes any correction of convictions later found to be cankered by doubt; and considering further that it has in fact been unjustly imposed under pressure of public excitement or prejudice and often for crimes not involving murder;

And bearing in mind that it has been abolished in 8 states* and many foreign countries as repugnant to moral principles and as inefficient in deterring crime,

The American Civil Liberties Union, while not regarding abolition as coming within the terms of the Bill of Rights nevertheless opposes it because it places beyond remedy any possible miscarriage of justice and thus denies basic rights, and because it violates at least the spirit of the guarantee against cruel and unusual punishments, particularly as applied to lesser crimes than murder.

MINUTES

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, JANUARY 4, 1965 -- 12:30 P.M.

PRESENT: Mr. Millis, presiding; Messrs, Bierstedt, Black, Crowell, Ennis, Frank, Maslow, Meserve, Rice, Soll, Waring; Judge Kenyon; Mrs. Pilpel.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Wulf, Adler, Haskell, Bucholz; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitors: Mr. and Mrs. Edward Allen (Iowa Civil Liberties Union), Mr. Aryeh Neier (New York Civil Liberties Union).

1. Minutes. Mr. Soll corrected the minutes of December 21, 1964 at item 7 (the second sentence of the second paragraph) to read: "Mr. Soll remarked that, generally speaking, investigations by executive agencies without any relation to prosecution or by congressional committees without any relation to legislation but simply for the sake of publicizing information about individuals or groups are dangerous, and Mr. Black questioned whether the proposed Commission would turn out to be a booby trap such as HUAC." Mr. Pemberton corrected the last sentence of item 7 to read that not only would a review of the 1953 ACLU position on broadcasting Congressional hearings be asked of the Free Speech and Association Committee but also of the Due Process Committee. The minutes were approved as corrected.

2. Death of William Woolston. The Board unanimously passed a resolution expressing its sympathy to Mrs. Woolston and noting the energetic and invaluable contribution Mr. Woolston made to the cause of civil liberties as a member of the Greater Philadelphia Branch Board of Directors.

3. Financial report. Mr. Haskell reported that the total membership contributions for 1964 will probably be between $870,000 - $875,000, uncertainty being due to the normal lapse of time required to receive reports from affiliates having primary membership responsibility. He added that it will be another month before these figures are final.

4. Plenary Board meeting. Mr. Pemberton pointed out that the Plenary Board meeting scheduled for April 10 and 11 conflicts with the annual meeting of the American Association of University Professors and that many of the same people are involved in the two meetings. Moreover, the National Civil Liberties Clearing House has scheduled its annual conference in Washington for April 1 and 2, and many ACLU Board members (including affiliate representatives) may want to attend both. He proposed therefore to advance the ACLU Plenary Board meeting to April 3 and 4, thus allowing those who wish to attend both meetings (and perhaps travel a considerable distance in the process) to do so more conveniently. A motion to adopt this proposal was passed, and it was agreed that the office would reschedule the regular Board meetings if necessary.

5. Recommendation of the Academic Freedom Committee. Mr. Bierstedt recommended that the statement of December 1, 1964 entitled "Academic Freedom and Civil Liberties of Students in Colleges and Universities" (previously circulated to the Board) be accepted and included in the academic freedom pamphlet. Mr. Soll questioned whether this statement was consistent with the Berkeley Academic Senate's 5 point program for student civil liberties at Berkeley which the Union had supported. Mr. Crowell questioned whether this statement could be interpreted to mean that we support even violent demonstrations in conjunction with civil disobedience, to which Mr. Reitman responded by saying that Ernest Besig (Exeuctive Director of the ACLU of Northern California) has made it clear that the Northern California affiliate, in defending the students, is not supporting civil disobedience. Mr. Frank moved that the statement be referred back to the Academic Freedom Committee so that it could be reconsidered in light of the broader issues raised by the events at Berkeley. After further discussion this motion was voted on and carried unanimously.

6. Evans Fund Grant. Mr. Reitman asked the Board to approve a grant of $1,000.00 in order to distribute 1,000 copies of the appendix to the ACLU brief in U.S. v. Mississippi to appropriate individuals and institutions. He added that an additional 1,000 copies would also be available for sale. A motion to approve this grant carried unanimously.

7. Letter to President Johnson. Mr. Pemberton presented the draft of a proposed letter to President Johnson regarding the vacancy in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, adding that since the letter was written there have been two pertinent developments: (1) Judge Hutchenson has resigned thereby leaving another vacancy to be filled, and (2) it has been proposed that, because of the extremely heavy load on the Fifth Circuit, four more judges be added to the Court. Mr. Pemberton then asked the Board's advice on both the substance and the strategy of the letter. Mrs. Pilpel stated that she very definitely felt the letter should be sent for she understands that the President would appreciate more pressure from liberal elements. However, she felt that the letter should be modified and shortened considerably. Judge Waring agreed that a letter should go as soon as possible and also that it should be shorter and more frank, and that the office should make this of primary importance. If necessary, officers of the Union should go to Washington personally to emphasize the letter's importance. Mr. Rice expressed an opposing opinion stating that any deviation from our policy of non-support or opposition to candidates sets a dangerous precedent for interfering in political affairs; this puts the ACLU in a position we have never taken and never should take. Mr. Soll agreed saying that it will be hard to dissuade the public that we aren't saying in effect, "if you're not on our side, we don't want you." After further discussion, Mrs. Pilpel moved that a letter be sent to the President and that the Chairman appoint a committee of three persons to confer with the office regarding the revised letter. The motion carried by voice vote with two negative votes.

8. Memorial service for Alexander Meiklejohn. Mr. Pemberton announced that a memorial service for Mr. Meiklejohn is planned for January 19, 1965, at 5 P.M. at the Community Church located at Park Avenue and 35th Street.

9. Aryeh Neier's move to the NYCLU. Mr. Pemberton announced that Mr. Neier has assumed the duties of Deputy Executive Director of the New York Civil Liberties Union and that upon next spring's retirement of Mr. Rundquist, presently Executive Director, he will assume that post. Mrs. Pilpel moved that the Board express its warm appreciation to Mr. Neier for the extraordinarily effective work he has done. Her motion passed unanimously.

10. Letter to Speaker McCormack. Mr. Pemberton presented the letter sent to Speaker John McCormack regarding the seating of the Mississippi congressional delegation. The Board expressed general approval of the letter.

11. Referral to Due Process Committee of policy question relating to "probable cause" standards required for arrest warrants, etc. Mr. Wulf stated that the office was seeking the Due Process Committee's advice concerning the standards required for establishing "probable cause." He described a recent article in the Village Voice expressing the opinion that the Commissioner's action in dismissing the charges against 21 Mississippians was valid and legitimate, given the evidence submitted by the government. Mrs. Pilpel suggested that the inquiry be broadened to encompass changes necessary on behalf of the prosecution to provide better for southern justice. Mr. Wulf reported that there is an ACLU action in preparation in Mississippi to challenge the composition of both grand and petit juries generally.

12. Report on HUAC abolition effort. Mr. Reitman reported that the ACLU's new pamphlet, "The Case Against HUAC," had been sent to all the members of the House of Representatives and would also be distributed to the affiliates and members. He further reported that, because of liberal Congressional concensus, the issue of the abolition of HUAC would not be pressed on the opening day of Congress, but rather that Congressman Edwards will speak on the floor of the need for debate about HUAC at the time of appropriations. Mr. Reitman pointed out that currently three new HUAC cases are being handled by ACLU: Donna Allen, Dagmar Wilson and Russell Nixon were subpoened to appear before the Committee and then cited for contempt when they refused to testify in an executive session. In response to Mr. Maslow's comment that there is a broader need for a code of fair procedures to be applied to both House and Senate Committees, Mr. Pemberton pointed out that the Due Process Committee is presently considering an extensive policy memorandum by David Ellenhorn on this subject.

13. "Come Home John Goldfarb." Mr. Soll reported that the Free Speech and Association Committee intended to examine the right of privacy issue involved in the court injunction against the showing of the movie, "Come Home John Goldfarb," and the claim of Father Hesburg that his name was used for commercial purposes without his consent. Mrs. Pilpel commented that the Goldfarb case was not a clear case of the conflict between free expression and the right of privacy for commercialization was indeed involved, and a better case is the one involving Warren Spahn who secured an injunction against the distribution of his (unauthorized) biography because -- in part -- it probed into his feelings regarding his father and his wife and thereby, he claims, invaded his right of privacy. The Free Speech and Association Committee hopes to make a recommendation to the Board in sufficient time for action in the Spahn case, if action is voted.

After further discussion, the meeting was adjourned.

Dear colleagues in the ACLU:

Among the nominations for the National Board is that of Professor Norman Dorsen, Director of the Civil Liberties Center at New York University Law School.

Although I have never before suggested the election of any candidate, Mr. Dorsen's exceptional value as a prospective member of the Board prompts me to commend him. I have been closely associated with him in the development of the Arthur Garfield Hays Center, and know his enthusiasm for our purposes, his ability, tested by his record, and his good judgment. Only because others may not appreciate his qualifications, do I venture this endorsement. I trust he may have your favorable consideration.

Sincerely yours,

Roger Baldwin

TO: Board of Directors, Illinois Division, ACLU

FROM: Marc Galanter and Bernard Weisberg

RE: Response of Illinois Division to "Proposed Policy Recommendation on the Issue of Shared Time" dated May 29, 1964, prepared by the ACLU National Church-State Committee.

BELOW IS A PROPOSED RESPONSE: REFERENCES ARE TO PARAGRAPHS IN THE NATIONAL STATEMENT.

1. In view of the lack of decisive precedent and the 'infinite variety' of factual situations that may be involved in shared time arrangements, we believe that it is not presently useful or desirable to make pronouncements on thepossible constitutionality of such schemes in the abstract.

2. We believe that it is desirable to sketch some minimal standards or constitutional guidelines, as is done in paragraphs 3-6, along the lines that such programs be non-discriminatory, involve no relinquishment of public school authority, etc. We would strongly emphasize the necessity of retention by public school authorities of full control over all aspects of any shred time program (e.g., subjects to be covered, grading, student discipline, choice of teaching materials). Public schools should not enter arrangements in which they act as mere agents of private schools or in which public andprivate school administrations are so entangled that the latter make policy for public schools.

3. However some of the applications inferred from the suggested guidelines seem less than obviously correct and require further consideration in the light of more detailed information about particular schemes, e. g., the permissability of taking shared time into account in determining the size of schools, but not in determining their location (end of paragraph 5); and the impermissability of busing (end of paragraph 6).

4. In view of the potential impact of shared time on the quality of education and eventually of civic life, we believe that ACLU should not hesitate to address itself to the 'policy' elements of shared time that seem likely to affect civil liberties in the long run. In particular, we are concerned with the possible weakening of civic eduation through the proliferation of private schools and with the possible impairment of the independence of the public schools by arrangements in which they would be subject to pressures from private school administrators. On the other hand, we are not unaware of the policy arguments favoring shared time as providing broader educational opportunities, a wider constituency for public schools, etc.

5. Because of the many uncertainties, both of constitutionality and of practical effect that beset shared time, it would be appropriate for the Union to urge that where such programs are undertaken it should be on a truly experimental basis. The Union should urge that such schemes be designed to avoid any commitment beyond the time necessary to determine (a) its educational and social effects, and (b) the feasability of administering it with a proper regard to constitutional limitations. The Union should urge that experimental programs not be conducted in a fashionthat would make them difficult to discard or modify (e. g., by large investment in otherwise unusable plant).

6. The Union should urge that, in order to reap the benefit of the experimental character of such arrangements, some provision should be made for continuous and systematic observation of such schemes by qualified persons. This might, for example, take the form of a committee of educations, social scientists and lawyers, unconnected to the school systems involved but given full access to all pertinent information. The purpose of such a committee would be to report to al public on the educational problems and achievements of the share time scheme and on the extent and problems of compliance to constitutional limitations. Such reporting would inform and promote public discussion before there is any irrevocable commitment to extensive shared time programs.

7. In view of the paucity of information about the actual operation and effects of shared time programs, particularly their "church-state" aspects, it is recommended that the Union consider it a matter of high priority to gather reliable information about this, either independently or in cooperation with other bodies. A careful and impartial empirical survey would be a service to all concerned with this issue and would facilitate the formation of Union policy on this matter.

8. The Union should actively seek opportunities to discuss the planning of shared time programs with public school authorities and other interested groups with the goal of insuring the observance of constitutional guidelines, imparting an awareness of those policy aspects which may have an impact on civil liberties and insuring that the programs have a genuinely experimental character.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE MINUTES OF THE SPECIAL ILLINOIS ACLU BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING ON TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 26, 1965 CALLED BY THE BOARD AT ITS OCTOBER 22, 1964 MEETING TO FURTHER CONSIDER SHARED TIME.

SHARED TIME - A special open meeting of the Illinois ACLU Board of Directors and Advisory Committee was held to consider Illinois ACLU's position on National ACLU's proposed policy statement regarding shared time. The general membership was invited to attend this meeting and was requested to notify the Chairman in advance if they desired to present testimony. Three people advised the office of their desire to address the meeting; one later withdrew his request because of the inclement weather.

Byron S. Miller briefly summarized the proposed policy statement of the National Church-State Committee; the Illinois ACLU Board recommendation (see minutes of 6/4/64), and the recommendation of the Illinois Church-State Committee dated 8/11/64.

Mr. Miller then moved that the Illinois Church-State Committee statement be adopted. The motion was seconded.

Testimony was taken from the floor. Mr. Gerald Adler, an ACLU member from Evanston and Mr. Raymond Mostek read their statements.

A position paper, prepared by Messrs. Marc Galanter and Bernard Weisberg, which differs from the Illinois Church-State Committee's response and the National proposal was summarized by Mr. Galanter. (Complete text of the Galanter and Weisberg statement appears on the reverse side of these minutes.)

After lengthy discussion, Mr. Brackett moved that the response of the Illinois Church-State Committee be amended by elevating the portion thereof which deals with financial aid to a flat statement that this makes shared time unconstitutional, followed by a definition of shared time. The motion was seconded, voted upon and defeated.

The meeting then proceeded to consider the original motion. The motion was defeated by a 7-6 vote. It was then m/s/c that the Illinois Division adopt, as a response to the National ACLU statement, the statement prepared by Messrs. Galanter and Weisberg. The motion was carried by a 7 to 5 vote. Dr. Haiman then asked for a show of hands of those who supported the National statement. Four Board members indicated support.

MEMORANDUM:

TO: Board Members, and Others

At the ACLU Board Meeting on January 10, 1965, I was instructed to act in the Board's name to appoint a Nominating Committee, which is to nominate officers and Board Members for consideration by the membership at the Annual Meeting in April.

I hereby appoint the following:

From the Board: Mrs. M. E. Richardson, Chairman, 755 Park Lane, Decatur
Mrs. Frances Pauley, 943 Clifton Road, N.E., Atlanta 30307

From the Membership:
Mr. David Comer, III, 210 North Avenue, N.W., Atlanta
Mr. Howard Moore, Jr., 859½ Hunter Street, N.W., Atlanta
Mrs. Neal C. Moran, 1802 East Clifton Road, N.E., Atlanta

Will the Committee please bear the following in mind:

1. Nominations are needed for six officerships for 1965-66:

   President
   1st Vice President
   2nd Vice-President
   Secretary
   Corresponding Secretary
   Treasurer

2. Nominations are also needed for members of the Board of Directors. If the Board is to remain at its present size (14 members), the following nominations are needed:

   Three candidates for terms expiring in 1968
   One candidate for an unexpired term, ending 1966 (replace Maurice Maloof
   One candidate for an enexpired term, ending 1967 (replace James Holloway, filled pro-tem by the Board, which named Frances Pauley)

3. "At least two months before the (April) annual meeting the membership shall be notified by mail of the nominees proposed by the nominating committee" (Section VIII, Constitution). This will be done in the issue of the affiliate's newsletter scheduled to be mailed about February 12th.

4 Subsequently, "additional nominations may be made by petition of any two members, provided there is attached to such petition a signed statement expressing the nominee's willingness to serve if elected; any such petition to be filed with the Secretary (Mrs. Richardson) not later than one month before the annual meeting." (Section VIII, Constitution.)

The Committee Chairman, Mrs. Richardson, has copies of the Constitution and statements of all affiliate policies and the names of all incumbents. She will be given a list of members as up-to-date as possible and other relevant information.

Although the Nominating Committee will begin its deliberations immediately, it will delay for a number of days before making final decisions. I hope Board Members not on the Nominating Committee will send or telephone suggestions to Mrs. Richardson or other members right away.

Edging Away from Capital Punishment

As Britain prepares to outlaw the death penalty this year and Canada seems ready to follow suit, new attempts are being made to sack the executioner here.

Among states that will be considering bills to abolish or limit capital punishment are California, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Tennessee. Kentucky, whose legislature is not in regular session this year, will be asked to take up an abolition bill next year. In the last decade more than half the states have studied measures to remove or modify the death penalty. Legislative hearings on the subject in California, which has executed 500 persons, have become as ritualistic as an execution itself. In 31 years the state's Senate and Assembly have dealt with death penalty bills 20 times. The penalty remains, but California, which used to be called bloodthirsty, has not dropped a cyanide pellet in two years.

Six years ago the American Civil Liberties Union's national board took the position that "capital punishment is not at this time a civil liberties issue, but in particular cases the character of the punishment combined with the surrounding circumstances of the case might raise a civil liberties issue." Now the ACLU is re-examining its position and debating whether capital punishment per se violates constitutional guarantees of due process and against cruel punishments.

Emanuel Redfield, counsel to the New York Civil Liberties Union, contends it does not. "Argument that a greater proportion of a certain race is convicted of a capital crime does not by itself call for its abolition, for logically this argument would call equally for the abolition of any other penalty when it can be shown that a higher percentage of a certain race is punished," he says. "Nor is lack of counsel an adequate ground. Abolition of capital punishment can be justified on many grounds, but not because of procedural problems arising in the administration of the criminal law. The errors and abuses found in a capital case should be corrected, as should those in trials for other crimes." Redfield feels that abolition is not a cause which ought to be espoused by the ACLU.

Norman Dorsen, associate professor of law at New York University Law School, insists that it is. Dorsen, a member of the ACLU's due process committee, says that because it is capriciously applied, the death penalty discriminates against the poor, the uneducated and the Negro. Since 1930, 53.7 percent of those executed in the US have been Negroes. In the Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, 72 percent were Negroes. A study of Ohio showed that in the 1950's, 78 percent of Negroes and 51 percent of whites found guilty of capital offenses were executed.

"Jury selection also operates unfairly in capital cases because panels are chosen partly on the basis of a belief in the death penalty," Dorsen says. "The result seems to be that the state is protected from a jury biased against a capital conviction, but the defendant is not protected from a jury biased in favor of it."

Until recently no one thought the Supreme Court would declare capital punishment unconstitutional. In October, 1963, Justices Arthur J. Goldberg, William O. Douglas and William J. Brennan suggested the death penalty might violate the cruel and unusual punishment clause when imposed on a rapist who neither took nor endangered the life of his victim. They dissented when the Court refused to review convictions of two men under death sentence for rape in Virginia and Alabama. The Court may reconsider what constitutes cruel and unusual punishment.

The death penalty is in fact being abolished gradually in the US.* Forty-one states, the federal government and the District of Columbia retain it, but Oregon outlawed it after a referendum last November, following the example of Alaska, Hawaii, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, Rhode Island and Wisconsin. Not all of these have abolished the penalty outright. Michigan and North Dakota prescribe it for treason. North Dakota also permits it for first-degree murder committed by a prisoner who is already serving a life sentence for first-degree murder; Rhode Island makes it mandatory for murder committed by a prisoner serving a life sentence.

* ACLU Office Note: The following information is from the New York Committee to Abolish Capital Punishment: In 1963, national execution figures were the lowest ever recorded -- only 21. This is less than half the number (47) executed in 1962. However, the number of prisoners under sentence of death as of January 1, 1964, was 275, a figure that has been rising steadily in recent years. Thus the low number of executions is not so much a reflection of growing unwillingness to convict as it is a result of an increasing period of "elapsed time" between imposition of death sentence and execution.

The number of executions in the US has fallen from an annual average of more than 165, during the 1930's, to a score or two each year. Many jurisdictions that retain the death penalty have not used it in years – at least 30 years in New Hampshire, 20 years in Wyoming and Montana and 18 years in Massachusetts. In the District of Columbia the last execution was in 1957 and the US Attorney's office's policy is not to ask for the death penalty.

Most penologists favor abolition of capital punishment; most policemen do not. Myrl Alexander, director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, says, "There is a growing recognition among judges and juries that the death penalty is a remnant of barbarism. People are more interested in getting at the causes of crime." FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover says capital punishment is a deterrent to crime, and adds: "The savagely mutilated bodies and mentally ravaged victims of murderers, rapists and other criminal beasts beg consideration when the evidence is weighed on both sides of the scales of justice." But in fact there is no significant difference between homicide rates in states that have the death penalty and those that do not.

Richard A. McGee, administrator of the California Youth and Adult Corrections Agency, says of retribution: "Punishment for punishment's sake is and should be repugnant to modern civilized man." James V. Bennett, who just retired as Bureau of Prisons director, advocates abolition of capital punishment for such crimes as rape and armed robbery, but its retention for treason and desertion of the military in war, and for "atrocious" crimes – bombing an airplane or assassinating a President. In the "atrocious" cases Bennett would require the defendant to be examined by a psychiatrist before trial. If a jury found him guilty, he would then be given a second jury trial to determine punishment and, if the death penalty were recommended, the judge would have to concur.

In Europe only France and Spain actually execute people. The Soviet Union abolished the death penalty in 1947 but reintroduced it three years later for traitors, spies and saboteurs and since then has extended it to terrorism, some cases of murder and various economic crimes – embezzlement of state property, bribery, speculation and counterfeiting. The British House of Commons voted 355 to 170 in December to end the death penalty for murder; the abolition bill did not, however, cover military capital punishment in such cases as treason, mutiny and aiding the enemy, but only three persons have been executed under these wartime laws in the last 100 years. The third reading of the British abolition bill probably will be in February, and the House of Lords, which has twice blocked such measures, is expected to approve the bill.

Britain's example should aid abolition efforts in the United States, but Howard B. Gill, director of the Institute of Correctional Administration at American University, says the death penalty will not be abolished completely for a long time. "The public fears that the mad murderer will be released from prison only to strike again," he says. "No matter how much penologists, psychiatrists and judges talk about rehabilitating prisoners, we have to admit we are just at the beginning of professional treatment for them. Until we can assure the public that we can distinguish between the untractable criminal and the one who can be rehabilitated, we won't see the end of the executioner."

MINUTES

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, JANUARY 18, 1965 -- 12:30 P.M.

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Bierstedt, Black, Crowell, Ennis, Evans Fraenkel, Hacker, Jones, Lacy, Millis, Soll, Westin; Mesdames Jacobs, Pilpel; Judge Kenyon.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Haskell, Bucholz, Adler; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitor: Mr. Alan Schwartz.

1. Minutes. Mr. Pemberton corrected the minutes of January 4, 1965, regarding the Evans Fund Grant (item 6), stating that 500 rather than 1,000 copies of the appendix to the ACLU brief in United States v. Mississippi could be printed with the alloted $1,000.00, and that an additional 500 copies would be printed and offerred for sale. Mrs. Jacobs pointed out that she was present at the meeting of January 4, though the minutes do not show it. The minutes were approved as corrected.

2. LCDC request for loan. Mr. Pemberton presented the request of the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee for a loan of $10,000.00. He pointed out the fact that in the South and especially in the state of Mississippi there is a serious need for legal aid which is not being met, and stated that LCDC hopes to send at least one staff person to Mississippi on a permanent basis, and also to recruit some volunteer lawyers to spend substantial time in the South during the winter just as they did last summer. LCDC has applied to foundations for grants, but Mr. Pemberton explained that there has been a delay in receiving any such aid because of the foundations' concern that there not be an overlap of function between LCDC and the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law. Mr. Pemberton expressed his judgment that this conflict would be revolved either by an agreed-upon coordination or the withdrawal of LCCRUL from competition for these foundation grants and he recommended granting the loan for a period of no longer than four months. The purpose of the loan would be to close a dangerous gap in legal representation. A motion approving this recommendation carried unanimously.

3. Administrator of the staff group insurance plan. Mr. Pemberton explained the need - for purposes of government regulation - of an officially designated administrator of the group insurance plan recently adopted for the employees of the national office, both executive and clerical, and proposed that he be designated to this position. The Board so designated Mr. Pemberton.

4. New Kansas affiliate. Mr. Lacy reported the recommendation of the Administration Committee to approve the formation of a new affiliate in Kansas, with the status of the Greater Kansas City (Mo.) affiliate remaining as it is. The status of members in Kansas City, Kansas, and the Kansas suburbs would be worked out with the consent of the Greater Kansas City Civil Liberties Union, and by-laws of this affiliate would be amended to this effect. The Board unanimously adopted this recommendation.

5. Academic Freedom Committee recommendations. Mr. Bierstedt introduced Mr. Hacker who presented the revised text of Section V of the pamphlet, "Academic Freedom and Civil Liberties of Students in Colleges and Universities." Mr. Hacker pointed out that it does not refer specifically to the Berkeley situation but instead was purposely made to apply to all academic communities. Mr. Westin felt that paragraph V C should be more explicit regarding the privacy of students' non-academic activity, for many government officials and even private agencies often make inquiries concerning what a student has said in a classroom or to a teacher. No one, he asserted, considering a student for employment - or for any reason - should ever permit its investigators to ask these questions. Mr. Ennis, agreeing that such inquiries are improper, moved that the revised pamphlet reflect this view. His motion carried unanimously. Mr. Fraenkel stated that the common practice of requiring individuals to divulge all arrests including those not followed by convictions, as in the case of the United States Civil Service application, is equally improper. He pointed out that the Due Process Committee was studying this practice and suggested that a caveat negating implied approval of the practice in the case of arrests for other than political activity should be included in the Academic Freedom pamphlet. The Board adopted his suggestion.

Mr. Bierstedt presented a motion to send the Board's atatement on New Colleges to the administrators of new colleges, and Mr. Hacker pointed out that there is a need to educate the governing bodies of these institutions as well as the community leaders. After further discussion, the motion carried unanimously.

6. Pat Malin Commerative Meeting. Mr. Angell announced that the ACLU had been working in conjunction with Swarthmore College and the Board of Directors of the Robert Colleges to plan a commerative meeting for Patrick Murphy Malin. Permission from his family has been received, and plans are underway for a service to be held at the 15th Street Quaker Meeting House in March or early April.

7. Recommendations of the Free Speech and Association Committee. Mrs. Pilpel presented the recommendation of her committee that the ACLU enter the Warren Spahn case. She explained that in this case there was no allegation of libel or of illegal conduct invading privacy (as distinguished from publication), but that there are charges, inter alia, that the material presented in the book is factually incorrect. The Supreme Court of New York ruled that the biography violated Spahn's right of privacy, and the case is now on appeal in the Appellate Division. The FSA Committee recommended that our brief present two positions: (1) that a non-libellous factual biography of a public figure dealing with his private life does not violate his right of privacy, and (2) that no injunction should ever prevent a book from being published. Mrs. Pilpel then introduced her partner, Mr. Alan Schwartz, who presented the argument against entering the case. He pointed out that the facts are unclear from the opinion of the judge, and there is no clear indication of what holding the decision is based upon -- whether upon the invasion of private life, the factual errors, or a determination that the book as a whole was a fictionalization (and hence a commercial exploitation of Spahn's name). Mr. Schwartz suggested that the Spahn case may well involve a fictionalization with no relevance to the public interest in free expression. Moreover, the individual should have some protection for that part of his life which is purely personal. Mr. Soll pointed out that the FSA Committee is looking into broader questions of the free expression implications of the right of privacy, but that since the Spahn case is currently being argued in the Appellate Division it would be necessary to authorize an ACLU amicus brief now, if one is to be filed. A lot of error and speculative representation of the subject's introspective thoughts, he asserted, does not necessarily make a book a "fictionalized biography."

Mr. Fraenkel stated that he did not feel that the FSA recommendation was responsive to the need, and that an amicus brief should not be filed unless the issues are more sharply defined. Mr. Westin concurred with this view saying that the Union's expertise could contribute importantly to the unfolding development of the law on this collision of values, but that this would be sacrificed if a Spahn brief now foreclosed any of the result of the careful work being done in the FSA Committee. Mrs. Pilpel sought to clarify the issue by stating that anything presented as factual material -- either in a magazine, paper or book -- even if in error, should be protected. Mr. Schwartz remarked that there seemed to be a difference between factual error -- which should be allowed -- and imaginary dialogues over incidents related to these errors. Mr. Lacy agreed that this was an exceptionally murky case in which to try to clarify the issues and suggested that the ACLU view on the injunctive remedy could better be presented in a case in which the facts permitted us to be clearer as to what the substantive issues are. Mr. Hacker pointed out that modern taste suggests that nothing about a private life in a biography is any longer irrelevant to the public interest, while Mr. Crowell doubted whether the law ever would or could impose good taste and good research as a requirement of biographies. Mr. Fraenkel thereupon moved to lay on the table the Committee's recommendation as to the first (the substantive) position to be taken, and his motion carried by a voice vote.

Mr. Fraenkel then asked if the FSA Committee felt it important to file a brief on the injunction aspect alone? Mrs. Pilpel and Mr. Soll expressed differing views on this and, accordingly, Mr. Fraenkel moved to table the remainder of the recommendation and this motion likewise carried.

(At this point, several of the Board members left so that there was no longer a quorum.)

8. President's Bill on Aid to Education. Mr. Pemberton presented the staff's recommendations on the President's Bill on aid to elementary and secondary education and the members present expressed agreement with the staff recommendations.

Office Note: The office earlier reported that our Washington director, Lawrence Speiser, would represent Mrs. Dagmar Wilson, Mrs. Donna Allen and Russell Nixon who were cited and indicted for contempt of Congress in refusing to answer questions of the House Un-American Activities Committee. The incident arose when the HUAC began an investigation last month of protests made to the State Department in 1963 against the Department's original refusal to allow Professor Kaoru Yasui of Japan to enter the United States for a series of peace meetings. The three witnesses refused to testify in an executive session, asking HUAC for an open hearing. Differences have developed in the handling of the cases and it was mutually agreed that private counsel should be regained in place of ACLU attorneys who have been representing the defendants until now. This decision reflects no diminution of interest on the part of the ACLU in the civil liberties issues involved and ACLU intends to participate amicus at an appropriate stage in the proceedings.

Re: Excerpts from January 20, 1965 Radio-TV Committee Minutes -- Items 2a and b of February 1 Board Agenda

3. ACLU policy on participation by broadcasting personnel in political activity:

The Committee had before it replies from the networks regarding their policy on this issue. Mrs. Pilpel stated three possible ACLU positions:
1) Free-time activity has no relevance to a broadcasting employee's job. The only relevant criterion is performance on the job; therefore, free-time activity would be relevant only if the employee allowed it to color his performance on the job. This position is analagous to the one taken by the ACLU in regard to teachers, lawyers, and entertainers.
2) A broadcasting employee who is identified with a cause has the right to retain his position and not be fired; but as long as he is identified with a controversial issue, he should not be permitted to function in any part of his job related to that issue. This is the position described by Richard Salant, CBS, in his reply.
3) A broadcasting employee should not remain in employ if he is prominently identified with a controversial issue because the viewer would feel that objectivity was impaired; the public interest requires this.

The broadcasting employees referred to are news reporters and news analysts, not news commentators.

Mrs. Pilpel indicated that the discussion of this issue was not solely for the purpose of deciding a position on the Lisa Howard case; the Committee has aroused the interest of the networks, as shown by their careful replies, and a position would be helpful.

Mr. Dean contended that a broadcasting station is unique in providing an audience for its employees and for that reason has the right to restrict the employee in his political activity.

Dr. Evans contended that political affiliation disables a person in the performance of his function because of his identification with the political activity; the public will not accept him as neutral or objective. As example, he gave a hypothetical case of hiring Barry Goldwater as a newscaster.

A motion was passed to reformulate the Committee's position according to the policy of CBS (item 2) above). The issue presents a conflict between the employee's right to participate in a political party or cause and the obligation of the employer to broadcast in the public interest by being seen as objective by the public.

The Committee further agreed that due process required that any restriction, including those the Committee thought proper, be clearly set forth in the contract at the time of original hiring.

Additional background on the Radio-TV Committee's discussion is contained in the following minute of its December 16 meeting.

The discussion included the following points of view:

An employee should be judged on his performance and should not be fired unless he demonstrates a bias in performance.

A news reporter is being provided with the opportunity to establish a reputation by his employer; therefore, the employer can assume the right to restrict the reporter's private associations.

There is a distinction between reporters and commentators -- reporters are reading news which has been written for them. However, we cannot assume the public knows the reporter is presenting news prepared by others; the public may regard it as personal opinion.

An employee publicly and prominently identified with a political or controversial group could be damaging to a station, even though he performed his duties objectively, by causing a loss of the public's interest, or through automatic association of the individual's position with that of the station.

Dissemination of information is in the public interest; if, in the public's view, the reporter is biased, and his presentation is as a result considered biased, information is distorted by implication; i.e., creditability is doubted.

7. Progress report of Pay-TV Subcommittee:

Dr. Evans reported on the Subcommittee's meeting. (Its minutes have been circulated previously.) The Committee approved the Subcommittee's recommended position on Proposition 15: that the California referendum prohibiting pay-TV is "in principle, a violation of the First Amendment and has the effect of restraining an open market place of information, and urging that the California affiliates attempt to enjoin enforcement of Proposition 15 passed in this referendum." Furthermore, the Committee urged that the national office associate with the Southern California affiliate in its attack on Proposition 15.*

The Subcommittee recommended that the ACLU revise its 1955 policy position on pay-TV by striking out the conditional clauses. It views pay-TV as an asset to the ACLU philosophy of diversity, on the ground that pay-TV would lead to greater opportunity for diversity of programming.

* Dr. Evans urged, and the Committee agreed, that the Fifth Amendment grounds for the attack should be more precise than the language of the Open Forum (that is, reference to "profit", etc., should be deleted).

Mrs. Pilpel suggested that it had been argued in arriving at the original position that pay-TV would not necessarily increase diversity, but would merely add to profit. Mr. Carskadon thought the condition of requiring the operation of two free channels in a community before allowing pay-TV should be retained. There was considerable discussion concerning the recommendation that approval of pay-TV should be unconditional; in replies to questions, members of the Subcommittee asserted that if pay-TV should have a deleterious effect, the Committee should meet that problem when it arose.

The Committee approved the Subcommittee's report for submission to the Board -- eight members in favor, two opposed.

Re: Clemency as a Civil Liberties Issue (Item No. 3 on agenda for February 10th meeting.)

Without any exceptions which I know of at least over the past fifteen years, the national ACLU has declined to initiate or support applications for clemency (pardon, parole, etc.) in any case. The last time we refused to support such an application was in 1962 when there was a successful campaign to have Junius Scales released from jail where he was serving a six year sentence under the membership provision of the Smith Act. He is the only person who was ever imprisoned under that provision.

At that time it was my view that we should support the application because the conviction was based on a statute we believed to be unconstitutional.

It was Ed Ennis' view that:

> "In further reply to yours of April 18th to Osmond and me I believe you were advised that Osmond and I felt that the Union should not make a plea to the President for executive clemency for Junius Scales in view of the impressive petition by numerous very prominent persons which has been made. A separate petition by the Union would add nothing.
> "For myself, however, I do not wish to support a general policy of the Union not participating in clemency appeals. The Union's function is to protest denial of civil rights and to protect individuals in the assertion of their civil rights and liberties. In doing so we state our position to the courts, to legislatures, to executive and administrative departments of the Government and to the public in letters to editors, press releases, etc. The various Constitutions give the President and Governors the power to exercise executive clemency in cases where the result of applying the letter of the law appears too strict. As a matter of policy I do not think we should eliminate the appeal for executive clemency from the means we use in our special field. I think each case should be examined on the merits and in the Scales case we should make no appeal for executive clemency because of the satisfactory appeal already made which I believe will have more effect on the President than any appeal we could make."

Rowland Watts' view was that:

"I agree in principle with Ennis, particularly if we incorporate Mel's 'particular application' as a general (but not absolute) limitation. And we should always act on principle. But if we are going to adopt a new policy position on this it should be prefaced by a clear statement that we are predominantly concerned with constitutional issues and cannot support a clemency appeal merely because we all individually believe that an injustice has been done. Otherwise, we will be flooded with appeals -- mostly in 'political' cases, and we will be hard put to find a plausible excuse for not supporting a case even though none of us believes it is worthy of our support. The statement should say we rarely will support a clemency appeal and then only when we believe that such appeal will materially contribute to an understanding of the issue, not the person. I would, however, take a more liberal approach to all capital cases."

Alan Reitman's view was that:

> "Rowland's comment underscores what has been our position over the past 12 years, concentration on constitutional rights -- the civil liberties principle -- rather than the injustice in a particular case. This policy has enabled us to educate people as to what civil liberties are -- and are not --, and to the degree that we have done this, to strengthen civil liberties itself. In a field as complex as civil liberties, our effort should be to make as clear as we can what civil liberties are. Clemency and pardon, as we have discussed, involve other factors and our endorsing such appeals will tend to blur the civil liberties issue. Rowland's caution about the practical problem of opening the flood gates also raises a special organizational problem. In short, I think we should not take on clemency-pardon appeals, but should fight as hard as we can to oppose laws that violate civil liberties before they are passed, in court test cases if passed, and to press for their repeal."

Though there is no particular case before us now, we bring this issue to the Committee as one piece of unresolved ACLU business which will predictably arise in the future. For example, there has been a federal obscenity conviction in the mid-west in which the defendants were sentenced to 25 years. Ralph Ginzburg, publisher of Eros, has been sentenced to 5 years in a federal obscenity prosecution in Philadelphia. His conviction was affirmed by the 3rd Circuit and a petition for certiorari is pending. There are three prosecutions pending for contempt of the House Un-American Activities Committee. If there are convictions which are affirmed on appeal, we can predictably expect campaigns for clemency.

This is a pure ACLU policy question on which we would like your guidance.

Re: Arrest Records (Item No. 1 on agenda for February 10th meeting.)

The working papers which you previously received included a general survey of the arrest records problem by Norman Dorsen, and a memorandum by Nanette Dembitz to the NYCLU Board reporting the conclusions of the NYCLU Committee on Effect of Arrest Records.

In order to focus the Committee's discussion, we think the following questions (drawn largely from Miss Dembitz' memorandum) raise the basic issues. The questions assume what the Dorsen and Dembitz memoranda make explicit -- that a person's involvement in the criminal process, even if charges are dropped if he is acquitted, prejudices his opportunities for public and private employment, public licensing, and education.

1. Is it tenable to propose that, given the presumption of innocence as the basis of our system of criminal justice, all arrests and all prosecutions which do not result in conviction (and affirmance on appeal, if any) should be nullified for all purposes?

2. Is it reasonable to permit records of arrest and prosecution which do not result in conviction to be retained in police files to facilitate subsequent investigations?

3. Is it reasonable to permit the same records to be retained in the court's files to assist in determining length of sentence in future convictions, if any?

4. With respect to employment applications, are there particular types of employment to which arrests and prosecutions not resulting in conviction are relevant? E.g., are three acquittals or unprosecuted arrests for embezzlement relevant to bank employment? Are three acquittals or unprosecuted arrests for child molestation relevant to employment as an apartment-house superintendent? As a playground supervisor? As a teacher?

5. Are there relevant distinctions between dismissal or acquittal on the merits compared to dismissal or acquittal for procedural reasons? Compare acquittal in a narcotics prosecution because of misidentification to dismissal because of illegal seizure of plainly relevant evidence.

6. Is there a useful distinction to be drawn, as to questions 1 through 5, between misdemeanor and felony charges?

[7. Norman Dorsen's memorandum (p. 1) raises the question of possible treatment of convictions based on acts of conscience. We suggest this be taken up separately.]

Re: Public Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Education

In 1961, the national Board adopted criteria for defining those institutions of higher learning which it believed might constitutionally receive public aid. Its rationale is contained in the following two paragraphs from testimony given by Pat Malin:

> As compared with church-controlled elementary and secondary schools, church-related colleges and universities may in some instances be sufficiently different in degree to be different in kind. Institutions of higher education may be distinguished from the typical church-controlled lower school if a) students and faculty members are not required to be adherents of the religious group with which the institution is linked; b) indoctrination in the tenets of a particular faith is not a required part of the curriculum; and c) determination of the instructional program is committed to the hands of those charged with educational rather than religious responsibilities. An institution that unconditionally meets those minimal standards may properly be characterized as educational, whether or not it was founded by or is now governed or financed (in whole or in part) by a religious group.
> It is the Union's view that Federal aid to institutions of higher education which truly meet the above criteria, even though conducted by religious groups, would not be contrary to the separation mandate of the First Amendment, whereas Federal aid to institutions which place the inculcation of religious doctrine over and above the demands and standards of higher education should clearly be denied such aid on constitutional grounds.

Following discussion at the 1962 Biennial Conference, the Board, on September 10, 1962, directed reconsideration; since that time we have not stated the 1961 decision to be the Union's position.

In 1962-63 the Church-State Committee attempted to recommend a reformulation. At its June 1963 meeting a majority of the Committee members present adopted a proposed statement, designated "majority position" in the enclosed papers. A mail ballot was then taken of the entire Committee, through circulation of all the alternatives which had been proposed. The "majority" position and alternatives are enclosed.

In the mail ballot, the "majority" position was defeated 8-6, and no alternate proposal carried. However, the "majority" position would have received a tie vote if it had been amended by a) the Greenawalt motion, or b) the Bierstedt motion, or c) both.

Affiliate Opinion

ACLU of Northern California - The Board "endorsed the position of Greenawalt, with the understanding, however, that programs 1 to 4 (not 5) listed [in II. B. of the majority position] are not the type of use of public funds prohibited by the First Amendment."

ACLU of Southern California - The chairman of the affiliate's Church and State Committee has resubmitted the 1962 statement adopted by the affiliate Board in opposition to the national Board's 1961 position. Supplementing that statement, he says: "When a school (of whatever level) declares itself to have a religious purpose, such a statement should be taken at face value. A statement of religious purpose made by an institution is self-disqualifying for public support. This avoids the absurdity of an institution's receiving a tax exemption because it is a religious institution and getting public tax support because it is not sufficiently religious to be disqualified. (Though a contention might be made that the exemption was made because of its being an educational institution, nevertheless a statement of religious purpose makes it a religious one.)

The ACLU "amicus" brief filed for the appellant in the Torcaso case states in I.A. that the "framers of the Constitution and Bill of Rights were wise ... in not attempting to define religion." The 1962 So. Calif. statement would agree. But the criteria proposed from time to time by the National ACLU attempt to define what is not sufficiently religious to disqualify a given religious school for public support. By suggesting such criteria for the Government to adopt, the ACLU seems to be suggesting that Congress can make some laws respecting an establishment of (in the sense of support of) institutions which are religious in part.

In the Engel case the ACLU brief stated in I. (a): "The Establishment Clause... prohibits any such acts respecting an establishment of religion, and not merely an establishment of a church or sect. 'Religion' within the meaning of the Establishment Clause may be nothing more nor less than a single belief, such as the belief in the existence of God." (emphasis added)

Any institution, even though not operated by an organized religious organization, which has some such belief is, according to this brief, a religious institution; public support would thus constitute an establishment.

STATEMENT OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA ON SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE AS A LIMITATION ON FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

The principle of separation of church and state is one of the fundamental guide-lines in our American system. The authors of the Bill of Rights gave it priority. The first clause of the First Amendment reads:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

Over the years this prohibition, along with other elements of the Bill of Rights, has acquired added force. By the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, to cite one instance, it has been made applicable to the states as well as to Congress.

The Supreme Court on some points has been most explicit:

"The 'establishment of religion' clause of the First Amendment means at least this: neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church.

Neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another. Neither can force nor influence a person to go to or to remain away from church against his will or force him to profess a belief or disbelief in any religion. No person can be punished for entertaining or professing religious beliefs or disbeliefs, for church attendance or non-attendance. No tax in any amount, large or small, can be levied to support any religious organization or groups and vice versa. In the words of Jefferson, the clause against establishment of religion by law was intended to erect 'a wall of separation between church and State.'"

Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S.1 (1947)

"We are all agreed that the First and Fourteenth Amendments have a secular reach far more penetrating in the conduct of government than merely to forbid an 'established church'.... We renew our conviction that 'we have staked the very existence of our country on the faith that complete separation between state and religion is best for the state and best for religion.'"

People ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education 333 U.S. 201 (1948)

"...the First Congress proposed and the states very shortly thereafter adopted our Bill of Rights, including the First Amendment...What was said in our prior cases we think controls our decision here....We repeat and again reaffirm that neither a State nor the Federal Government... can constitutionally pass laws nor impose requirements which aid all religions as against non-believers, and neither, can aid those religions based on a belief in the existence of God as against those religions founded on different beliefs."

Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488 (1961)

As a civil liberties organization the American Civil Liberties Union does not pass upon the propriety of federal aid to public elementary and secondary education or to public institutions of higher education.

On the matter of federal aid to church-related and religion-oriented schools, because of the constitutional question involved, it must take a stand.

As concerns federal aid, the crucial distinction is between the secular institutions and the church-related or religion-oriented institutions.

Proposals have been made for federal grants or advantageous loans to elementary and secondary church-related or religion-oriented schools, to church-related and religion-oriented institutions of higher learning, for buildings and equipment, and for stipends to accompany federally granted tuition scholarships. On these and comparable proposals we are concerned because of possible trespass of the principle of separation of church and state as embodied in the First Amendment.

It can be clearly asserted, we believe, that an advantageous loan may differ in degree but is not different in kind from a grant, each being, in effect, a form of aid. If there exists a constitutional barrier against a grant, it must operate also against an advantageous loan.

Although not universally conceded, there appears to be general recognition that the Constitution precludes federal support of elementary and secondary church-related schools. By definition, such schools have a sectarian purpose, and they, to some extent, are arms and agencies of particular churches. As such, in the face of the First Amendment, they are ineligible for federal support.

A contention is offered that church-related colleges are different because attendance at institutions of higher education is optional.

The Fifth Amendment draws no distinction between religion for children, religion for those of college age, and religion for adults; its ban against federal support of religion applies to all indiscriminately. Furthermore, if a school, whether collegiate or lower, functions as an agency of sectarian religion, support of its educational program is not separable from support of its religion, and federal appropriations to it will be violative of the First Amendment.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California, therefore, opposes any federal support of such schools, calls on the Congress and President not to enact any financial contribution to them, and counts on the courts to uphold the constitutional provision on separation of church and state.

Iowa CLU - "It was decided [at a Board meeting] that we have nothing specific to add to the ideas of the national office but will endorse the position of the national office as generally set forth in the various pamphlets."

Kentucky CLU - "The KCLU Board endorses the June 1, 1963 statement of the ACLU Church-State Committee except for #5 [on page 1] re presence of pictures or religious symbols in the classroom."

Maryland Branch - The views of the affiliate Board were transmitted by the Church and State Committee chairman.

"We feel that the statement needs to be re-drafted to guard more closely against the use of tax funds for religious purposes in programs administered under the auspices of church-related institutions.

"For example, we feel that it is important to know whether the great majority of faculty members of an institution are, in fact, members of a religious order. Whether or not membership is required is not as important as whether or not, in practice, membership seems to be a condition of employment.

"We feel that it is meaningless to prohibit religious symbols in the classrooms if symbols appear in lobbies and hallways. We feel that the "flavor" of an institution should be considered. For example, is Catholic Book Week observed? Do classes begin and end with prayers? Without going more into detail, we feel that there are many subtle influences that should be taken into consideration in the re-drafting of the statement.

"Under the section B1, we would like to see specified that such grants could not be used to release school funds for sectarian purposes. We would like to defer comment on B2, but agree readily on B3 and B4.

"It is our feeling that no public position should be taken on the subject covered in B5 until comprehensive statement is agreed upon which will cover the whole issue of tax exemption for religious institutions.

"Please consider this a confidential statement to the Board. Because of an impending court case in this area, some of our members felt that this precautionary statement should be included in this letter."

CLU of Massachusetts - The positions adopted by the affiliate's Executive Committee are:

1. To oppose grants and loans to church-related primary and secondary schools.

2. Not to oppose loans for dormitories and educational facilities if the college purpose is educational, not religious.

3. Not to oppose college scholarships assigned on a competitive basis as long as there is an objective merit test and that scholarships be given only to those going to colleges whose purpose is educational and not religious.

4. That institutional stipends be given only to colleges whose purpose is educational, not religious.

Greater Kansas City CLU - The Church-State committee of the American Civil Liberties Union [Kansas City] at the November 28, 1962 meeting had before it the following statement drafted by a Joint Church-State --- Academic Freedom subcommittee.

A. The governing body of any institution of higher education seeking public financial assistance should file a declaration that it subscribes to the two following conditions:

1. Neither faculty members nor students are required to be adherents of any religious faith.

2. No student is required to attend religious services or classes in religion or register for courses in religion or participate in religious programs of any kind or pass any type of religious test; nor is any student subject to disciplinary measures based on religious criteria.

At the November 28 meeting changes were made so that at the conclusion of the meeting the following had been tentatively approved although further amendments (not reported) were still pending.

B. The governing body of any institution of higher education seeking public financial assistance should file a declaration that it subscribes to the following conditions:

1. Neither faculty members nor students are required to be adherents of any religious faith.

2. No student is required to attend religious services or participate in religious programs of any kind or pass any type of religious test; nor is any student subject to disciplinary measures based on religious criteria.

3. The institution is not under the direction, control, or support of any church, denomination, sect, or religious body, society, or authority; and

4. It is not designed principally to provide or promote religion in the form of instruction in creeds, doctrines, or tenets, or in the form of worship and devotional exercises, or in the form of sectarian purposes.

We oppose the modification of point A.2 which was made at the November 28 meeting because we believe that no student should be compelled to attend classes in religion or register for classes in religion. We have noted that your subcomittee justified the revision on the following grounds (a) It is an unreasonble invasion of a faculty's freedom to choose its curriculum if federal aid is denied to schools having required courses in religion, (b) It is conceivable to have courses in religion as a general education requirement, and (c) Courses in religion may be non-sectarian such as comparative religion or philosophy of religion.

In response to these our Kansas City Church-State committee points out that (a) If it is an invasion of a faculty freedom to choose curriculum by the same token it is an invasion of a student's religious liberty to require him to take courses in religion prescribed by and taught by persons of a faith other than his own. If it can be validly argued that withholding of aid to schools that require classes in religion is an invasion of faculty freedom then the whole concept of not aiding religion via the public treasury is called into question, (b) There is no reason why faculty cannot offer a curriculum in which there are elective or voluntary courses in religion. Such courses could be used by a student to meet general education requirements so long as he could just as easily meet such requirements by courses not in the field of religion, (c) The issue is not whether courses in religion can be taught in a non-sectarian way but whether they are compulsory. Any religion course that can be taught in a non-sectarian way can be taught in a sectarian way and in all but the exceptional school is likely to reflect the bias of the teacher. Philosophy of Religion taught by an atheist would be quite different from the same course taught by a Roman Catholic. Similarly a course taught by an Episcopalian might be quite different from that taught by a Unitarian.

In addition, we list these reasons:

1. Any school which is not technically under church control may nevertheless be controlled by a board of trustees whose members may reflect the position of a church or may be motivated by a desire to have a non-sectarian "American" religion taught. In so far as such a school requires courses in religion, religion has become central to its purpose and to that degree it is an establishment of religion.

2. The exercise of religion is a voluntary matter whether such exercise is religious worship or religious education. There is no point in requiring a course that students want voluntarily to take. Insofar as students are compelled to take courses in religion in order to get an education they have been deprived of religious freedom.

3. So long as the State is not prohibited from aiding non-sectarian schools that have elective courses in religion it cannot be said that the State is hostile to religion. But State aid to schools that require religion presumably puts government in the position of sharing in the compelling of students to take courses in religion.

We recommend that you delete the points B. 3 and 4. We recommend these deletions for these reasons. (a) Objectively any school which meets the conditions listed in A. 1, 2, 3, can not be said to be religious, (b) Some schools such as Northwestern University have a charter provision that there must be on the board of trustees certain specified members of a certain church. Such a traditional and nominal relationship would disqualify a number of colleges and universities that in fact are not religious and are not under religious direction or control. (c) Item B. 4 is unnecessary. It is also unwise because the word "principally" seems to imply that if it does promote religion but is not principally designed to do so there would be no objection.

The Kansas City affiliate recommends that the Church-State Committee of the National American Civil Liberties Union retain A.1 and 2. In addition we propose the following:

3. Any classes or courses concerned with religion provide information about religion as opposed to religious indoctrination. All other courses are free from influence of dogma or creed of any religion.

St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee - The affiliate's Executive Board moved, and it was passed with one dissent, to "advise National that church-related institutions of higher learning should be given the same consideration as other institutions of higher learning in receiving grants or aid except that the grants should not be used for religious education."

Upstate New York Division - "These opinions represent 3/4 of the UNYD Board.... There is general agreement with the majority position of the Church-State Committee from its June 1, 1963 meeting.

1) One in agreement adds 'with full awareness that future federal aid to higher education bills may have to be scrutinized in civil libertarian terms.' If certain institutions which ACLU classifies as 'religious' are already receiving some federal or state loans for dormitory construction this would not be the time for ACLU to upset the apple cart.
2) One feels this aid is not unconstitutional under ACLU established criteria of who may teach, attend, etc., and that no other restrictions should be put upon such aid.
3) The Central N.Y. Chapter would add to the criteria [of the 'majority' position] as follows:
   a) The word 'religious' before belief, in criterion no. 1.
   b) Incorporate into criterion no. 1 that the test for selection of faculty is properly their academic competence alone.
   c) Add to the list of criteria, censorship or the use of an index of proscribed books."

Re: Cancellation of February 10th meeting and additional agenda item

Because Mel Wulf will be out of town during the forthcoming Committee meeting and because the Chairman of the Committee will be in Europe at the same time, we are cancelling the February 10th meeting. The next meeting of the Committee will take place exactly one month later, March 10, 1965 in the ACLU offices at 4:45 p.m.

We inadvertently left out of the agenda previously circulated an item which we agreed at the last meeting to bring to a vote at the first opportunity: ACLU policy on radio and TV broadcasting of legislative committee hearings. Enclosed is a draft recommendation prepared by Sy Bucholz from previous Committee discussions of the subject. Before the next meeting, members of the Committee should review the text of the recommendation and should be prepared to propose specific changes in language or content if necessary. At the March 10 meeting, this matter will be voted on.

Re: Radio and TV broadcasting of legislative hearings

The enclosed draft recommendation, prepared by the office from recent Due Process Committee discussions, is submitted for consideration and action to the members of the Free Speech/Association Committee. The Due Process Committee will not have voted on this draft by the time the FS/A Committee meets on February 11, 1965. Nevertheless, the office hopes that the members of the FS/A Committee will come to the February 11 meeting prepared to vote on the recommendation as is or to make specific changes in language or content.

When the Due Process Committee has had an opportunity to vote on the draft, the actions of both Committees will be reported to the Board.

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

To: Due Process and Free Speech/Association Committees

From: The office

Re: Draft Recommendation of the Due Process Committee on Radio and TV Broadcasting of Legislative Hearings

The Due Process Committee recommends to the Board of Directors that the ACLU support an absolute ban on radio and TV broadcasting of legislative hearings.

The last consideration of the question of radio or TV broadcasting of legislative hearings took place in 1953 and 1954 when the Union, after extended debate, adopted a position urging that radio and TV broadcasting of legislative committee hearings should be prohibited until rules of procedure designed to protect subpoenaed witnesses and persons defamed in the course of testimony were adopted.

The Committee has reviewed the Union's position on this matter in connection with the recent proposal by Senator Hart to create a Civil Liberties Commission similar to the existing Civil Rights Commission. In connection with the proposal, the Committee took the position that a Civil Liberties Commission should not permit broadcasting of its hearings, but the Board tabled the recommendation pending further review by the Committee. After further consideration, the Committee now believes that the ACLU should insist on total exclusion of radio and TV from legislative hearings.

1. The Committee feels that radio and TV broadcasting of legislative hearings results in the creation of a "circus" atmosphere. Legislators and attorneys, who should function as fact gatherers and advocates, are converted by radio and TV coverage into showmen. Witnesses who might be able to present testimony in a dignified hearing atmosphere, are intimidated by the supercharged surroundings and by the knowledge that millions of people are watching them perform.

2. Given the past history of the broadcasting of legislative hearings, particularly the Kefauver gambling investigations of the early fifties, the Army-McCarthy hearings, and other televised hearings before legislative bodies investigating charges of disloyalty, the Committee feels that such hearings give members of the public the impression that the witness they are observing is on trial or accused of wrong-doing in some way. The very fact of being subpoenaed to appear before a legislative investigating committee whose hearings are being broadcast now raises some inference in the public mind that the witness is "charged" with misconduct. This identification by the public of a televised hearing with a kind of trial may be based partially on the kinds of investigations undertaken by legislative committees, and only to a limited extent on the failure of the broadcasting media to make clear the difference between a legislative hearing and a trial. Nevertheless, this identification exists and must be reckoned with. It will not be dissipated by continuing to permit hearings to be broadcast, since the broadcasting itself contributes to the distortion of the atmosphere and purpose of such hearings.

3. The Committee rejects any notion that it is the function of legislative investigations to expose misconduct or alert the public to a supposed danger to society. The only legitimate function of a legislative investigation is to inform Congress of the operation of existing legislation and of the potential need for new legislation.

4. When a witness is subpoenaed to appear before an investigating committee, his right to be let alone by government is infringed. Of course, that right may be invaded for a legitimate governmental purpose, such as informing Congress of the need for legislation. It cannot be abridged in this context for reasons not relevant to the purpose of the governmental inquiry, such as exposing the individual's misconduct. This can and should be accomplished by the traditional methods of the criminal law. Radio and TV broadcasting of legislative hearings is not a necessary part of the information-gathering purpose which those hearings serve and, since it is not related to the purpose of such hearings, broadcasting may not justify an invasion of privacy. Even less may the right to privacy be abridged, through radio and TV transmission of a witness' voice and image, in the name of entertainment, for the existence of a right to privacy presupposes that the public's desire for entertainment is subordinate to the individual's need to remain anonymous and to keep the details of his private life to himself.

4. It may be argued that radio and TV coverage of legislative hearings informs the public, as does newspaper coverage, and that, since newspaper reporters are permitted to attend hearings, there is no basis for excluding the broadcasting media. The Committee's answer is that the broadcasting of legislative hearings does not inform the public of governmental operations. Rather, such broadcasting typically focuses on an individual accused of wrong-doing instead of on those who testify in order to impart information about government operations. Particularly when television films and radio tapes are edited, much of the pertinent informational parts of such hearings are omitted, and the "charges" against a particular individual are highlighted. Previous radio and TV coverage of such hearings were intended, and received, primarily as entertainment. Also the Committee feels that the presence of newspaper reporters at public hearings does not create a "circus" atmosphere and does not tend to distort testimony and behavior as much as radio and TV coverage. Last, the impact of newspaper reporting of a legislative hearing on the private life of an individual summoned to testify, or on the reputation of one named in testimony, is not as great and direct as when such testimony is beamed by radio and TV directly into the homes of millions of Americans.

Re: Biennial Conference Recommendation on Wartime Measures Affecting Civil Liberties

The following statement has just been submitted to the national office by the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts. We hope committee members will read it in time to discuss it as part of the general consideration of civil liberties and national security at this Thursday's meeting.

POSITION PAPER ON CONSCRIPTION

Civil Liberites Union of Massachusetts

Historically, the American Civil Liberties Union has taken the position that government conscription of individual lives is a complete denial of what ought to be a basic civil liberty. Conscription for war or preparation for war raises special problems because it constrains some men to do that to which they are opposed by religious or philosophic conviction. Despite this, the Union has at times felt compelled to recognize the imperative claims imposed by the necessity to maintain national security. Hence, in 1940 the Union did not oppose the draft law, but in 1945 it felt that the case for compulsory military training was by no means strong enough to override the grave objections to conscription in the name of liberty.

Most would agree that the nature of modern war and the pace of the arms race present continuing and urgent problems in reconciling individual rights and liberties and the democratic process with the claims of the common defense. Particularly pertinent are the problems of civilian authority over the military and the restriction of dissent in relation to matters of "clear and present danger."

The Union acknowledges that some restrictions on freedom are required even in a democratic society, when there is general consensus that the limitation is not only in the public interest and constitutional, but also that the danger is real, the proposed measures effective and necessary, and the execution equitable and non-discriminatory. Still, in our society, the burden of proof must be overcome by those who propose restrictions, whether on an assertion of military necessity or other grounds. The military case for continuing the draft must be fully persuasive and open to full and free debate by citizens and the Congress. No cloak of secrecy or "security" should be permitted to justify retaining or imposing so weighty a limitation on individual liberty as conscription.

Finally, the continuing vigilance of the Union should be exercised to see that under whatever provisions for military service and recruitment there is generous protection of the rights of conscience. We reaffirm that the sincerity of conscientious objection should not be judged by the test of a religious formula so narrow as to exclude ethical or humanistic beliefs.

MINUTES
Free Speech/Association Committee Meeting
Thursday, February 11, 1965, 12:30 p.m.
ACLU Office

Present: Mr. Soll, presiding; Messrs. Channick, Crowell, Evans, Galantiere, Lowenstein
Staff: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Bucholz

Approval of Minutes: Mr. Bucholz asked that the minutes of the previous meeting be corrected to show that Mr. Millis was present.

*Committee Meetings: Mr. Soll announced that a special dinner meeting of the Free Speech Committee would be held on Wednesday evening, March 24, 1965 at 6:15 p.m. at the Union's offices to consider more fully the difficult questions posed by the clash of the right to free speech and the right of privacy.

*The Committee decided that the regularly scheduled luncheon meeting on Friday, March 12, 1965 should be held, because of the pressure of Committee business.

1. Newspaper Rejection of Advertising: Mr. Channick summarized briefly and moved the adoption of his draft recommendation of January 26, 1965 (previously circulated) on newspaper rejection of advertising and stated that he thought it would be quite impossible for ACLU to adopt a stronger position than one of merely encouraging and urging media executives to meet their responsibilities to present all viewpoints to the public.

*Committee members who were not present, please take note.

In discussing the Channick recommendation, these changes were adopted by the Committee:

(a) The statement should differentiate between publications of general circulation, such as the New York Times, and publications meant to appeal to specialized audiences or to private groups. Mr. Lowenstein and Mr. Evans thought it would be unfortunate if we took the position that a magazine such as Commonweal or a newspaper published by a Catholic archdiocese were forced or even urged to carry advertisements for atheist groups or the Planned Parenthood Association. The Committee felt that some language should be incorporated in the Channick statement recognizing the difference between media of general circulation and such special interest publications, and making clear the distinction was not based on the size of the circulation but on its type. The wording of the suggested change was left to Mr. Channick and the staff.

(b) It is important to make absolutely clear that the ACLU was not attempting to create a legal principle requiring media to accept unpalatable advertising. Mr. Channick thought that changing "their" to "an" in line 6 of the second paragraph of his statement would achieve this. This change, and the insertion of the phrase "at least in part" after "is found" in the next-to-last sentence of the first paragraph, were approved.

(c) With respect to whether advertisements for books, motion pictures, magazines and other media and art forms should be included within the definition of non-commercial advertising, the Committee voted three to one to include this statement:

"Advertisements for informational and cultural works such as books, newspapers, magazines, and motion pictures, should be treated substantially as non-commercial advertising, since these items, even though they are advertised for sale, may themselves be the means of exposing controversial viewpoints to the public."

Mr. Galantiere remarked that he did not think the problem with respect to books was serious since he recalled seeing advertisements in the same newspaper for books with diametrically opposed viewpoints.

The Committee then approved by a 4-1 vote the Channick statement as amended. Mr. Crowell, opposed the motion, stating the entire matter should be left to the responsibility of the publishers.

As long as publishers are to function as more than mere printers, they should not be subjected to rules and edicts, even though these may not carry legally binding force. The promulgation of rules about what publishers should or should not accept tends to encourage laziness and discourage creative judgment on the part of publishers. He suggested that if ACLU take any action at all, it do so only by urging and educating in specific and flagrant instances of rejection of advertising, without the adoption of an overall policy statement.

Mr. Galantiere suggested that the office implement the Committee's recommendtion -- provided the Board approves it -- by writing a letter to the American Newspaper Publishers Association urging that this question be placed on the agenda for its next annual meeting. Mr. Reitman thought we should also ask ACLU affiliates to compile a record of incidents in which the news media refused controversial advertisements or those not in keeping with editorial policy. Both suggestions were endorsed. Mr. Reitman inquired whether the Committee would apply the Channick recommendation not only to newspaper advertising but also to those situations in which newspapers refused to print critical or controversial letters in the letters-to-the-editor column. The Committee unanimously agreed that any expression of opinion in respect to newspaper advertising was a completely separate matter from letters to the editor, the selection of which involved editorial judgment and viewpoint in the same way as news and features. It was suggested that the Committee might take this up as a separate matter at a future time.

The amended text of the Committee recommendation is attached.

2. Biennial Conference Recommendation on Wartime Measures Affecting Civil Liberties: At the last Biennial Conference, Walter Millis presented a paper to the Workshop on Civil Liberties and the Cold War, which resulted in the adoption by the Conference of this resolution:

> "The ACLU should restate its opposition in times of peace or cold war to the continuation of measures, repressive of citizens' rights as guaranteed by the Constitution, which were enacted in times of genuine war emergencies."

The Board referred this resolution to the Committee for its consideration. After the Millis paper had been distributed, Mr. Millis prepared this proposed recommendation for the Board:

"The Sixth Biennial Conference recommended [the above resolution.] This no doubt grew out of the paper on cold war problems which I presented at the Conference and to the Workshop which considered it. Since my paper presented no clarion call to further action, but tended rather to emphasize the necessity for moving only slowly and tangentially in this field, the discussion was not well focussed; and the resultant recommendation has seemed to the Free Speech Committee little more than a kind of lame compromise calling for a restatement of the obvious. In view of the constitutional relationships within the ACLU it cannot, however, simply be ignored. My own view is that the Board should adopt it out of respect for the Conference, but that it cannot effect any significant policy change and need not be publicized."

After some discussion it was agreed that the sense of the recommendation was that ACLU should reaffirm and repeat its opposition, and that there remained only the question of the advisability of making a public statement at the present time without any clear issue or case to which such a statement would relate. The Committee recommended the adoption of the resolution without any public statement by the Board at the present time. It was understood that the recommendation of the Conference did not include the questions of peace-time conscription or matters of conscience relating to civil disobedience. These will be separately presented to the Committee.

3. Draft Recommendation of Due Process Committee on Broadcasting of Legislative Hearings: Mr. Bucholz reported that this recommendation stemmed from the Due Process Committee's discussion of radio and TV broadcasting of legislative investigations. In proposing a letter to be sent to Senator Hart supporting his idea for a U.S. Civil Liberties Commission, the Due Process Committee suggested to the Board that Senator Hart's legislation include a ban on all radio and TV broadcasting of commission hearings. The Board tabled that proposal pending further review of the entire problem of fair legislative investigatory procedures by the Due Process Committee. After further consideration and discussion by that Committee, the draft recommendation favoring an absolute ban on broadcasting of legislative investigations was prepared. (As of the date of this meeting, the Due Process Committee had not had an opportunity to vote on the text of the recommendation.)

Mr. Lowenstein expressed dissatisfaction with some of the philosophy underlying the statement, stating that it was possible to draw a distinction between those legislative hearings which are of general informational value -- the great majority of congressional hearings on bills and appropriations -- and those hearings which are like trials and which focus on an individual accused of wrong-doing. He said that because there was misconduct in connection with the latter, it does not follow that broadcasting of the former should be absolutely barred.

Mr. Pemberton called the Committee's attention to ACLU's own precedent for making a distinction between different kinds of hearings. We previously proposed that executive sessions be required to test whether defamatory information about a particular individual is sufficiently dependable to be aired in public committee hearings. However, no one has suggested that such executive sessions be used for ordinary legislative hearings dealing with specific bills or appropriations.

Mr. Galantiere declared that we could not keep radio and TV from performing an information function even though we might regard it as entertainment. He stated that banning radio and TV absolutely was regression not progress in the opening of new channels of communication.

Mr. Reitman stated that realistically TV and radio, although they claim to be performing a general educational function in broadcasting congressional hearings, focus on the most sensational incidents in which charges of wrong-doing are raised -- charges which persons are at a great disadvantage to rebut -- and fail to cover the mundane but possibly more important matters such as the recent hearings on a liberalized bail statute for the federal courts.

Mr. Galantiere responded that congressional hearings do not only perform the function of informing Congress but also inform the public about what Congress is doing and how it operates, even though most people may not be concerned with the more routine hearings.

Mr. Soll strongly opposed the Due Process Committee's statement, arguing that its adoption would tend to put ACLU in the position of deciding what the rest of the population of the country can or cannot see. He also felt that with a few minor changes, the position advanced by the Committee applies equally well to newspaper and magazine reporting of legislative hearings and even to non-published statements made to individuals about such hearings. He noted that persons could lose their jobs from whispered reports about hearings as easily as they might lose them as a result of reports broadcast by TV.

Mr. Channick commented that the core of ACLU's objection to TV and radio coverage is not to the broadcasting itself but to the method of running certain committee investigations. He reminded members of the Committee that the Army-McCarthy hearings performed a tremendous educational function.

Mr. Soll added that the trial of human beings in a judicial framework based upon an indictment is a separate matter. Other "trials" in a figurative and literary sense may be a necessary result of living in a complex society and it may not be completely undesirable that society should witness these. In this connection Mr. Galantiere stated, "We have to take some risks in order to achieve the dignified status of living in a democratic society. We are not philosopher kings and we cannot remove all of the risks of democracy. You can remove many kinds of risks in an authoritarian state and you may achieve a kind of temporary dignity in removing publicity from investigations. But the highest purposes of a democratic society will not be served thereby."

Mr. Lowenstein moved that the Committee reject the Due Process Committee's draft recommendation, expressing the Committee's position in this statement:

> "While the members of the Free Speech Committee are very sympathetic to some of the arguments advanced by the Due Process Committee as to individual dignity and privacy and the need to minimize harm to persons summoned before an investigation committee, it is opposed to an absolute ban on radio and TV broadcasting of legislative hearings. Members of the Committee feel that ACLU must focus on the misconduct of those whose duty it is to run fair committee hearings and to provide adequate safeguards to individuals."

Mr. Lowenstein's motion was unanimously carried.

Next meeting: Friday, March 12, 1965 at 12:30 p.m., ACLU offices.

Special meeting on Right of Privacy: Wednesday evening, March 24, 1965 at 6:15 p.m. at ACLU offices. (Catered dinner.)

Re: Further Affiliate Opinion on Public Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Learning

Position Statement of Colorado Membership on Public Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Education

by William F. Reynard
Colorado Branch ACLU

The following remarks are addressed to the majority position of the Church-State Committee of the national organization at its meeting June 1, 1963. We are generally in accord with the preamble and statement of criteria included in I, and the statement of principle in II A of the majority position.

We do oppose sub-section 1, 3 and 4 of paragraph B under part II of the position statement. Sub-sections 3 and 4 provide for scholarships and loans to qualified students on the basis of academic ability, achievement and aptitude, and we will discuss these two sub-sections together since we believe they involve the same basic principles:

1. The ACLU has traditionally taken a position which is critical of the child-benefit theory. In the Everson case in 1946 (involving the question of public transportation of parochial school students), the Union took the position that, "The child-benefit theory is not only unsound and devious, but it is extremely dangerous because it provides a ready excuse for all sorts of violations of basic principle." In the McCollum case in 1947, the Union was sustained in its position that the furnishing of public school facilities for sectarian instruction was in violation of the First Amendment. It would be an almost impossible task to prove that a student who was attending a sectarian school, falling within the definitions in part I of the policy statement, was not actually receiving sectarian instruction through the use of public funds. The use of public funds for transportation of parochial school students has been ruled unconstitutional by the Attorney General of the State of Colorado under the State Constitution. It must be remembered that the Everson case was decided by a five-to-four decision in which Justice Douglas joined the majority, but that in the Regents' Prayer case, Douglas apparently repudiates his position in Everson by saying, "The Everson case seems in retrospect, to be out of line with the First Amendment."

2. Another facet of the child-benefit theory is the furnishing of textbooks for school children in private schools through public funds. Five states have chosen to provide such textbooks, and the United States Supreme Court upheld the practice in 1929. There have been at least three court challenges to the practice of purchasing textbooks, constitutionality being upheld in the state of Mississippi and being rejected in the states of New Mexico and Oregon. It must be remembered that State Constitutions were likewise being interpreted in these cases, but nonetheless they do reflect the general attitude with respect to the furnishing of benefits through the individual student.

3. The grant of public funds through contracts for specific projects of research of non-religious import, is very analogous to the granting of scholarships to individual students, since in both instances it is argued that the benefit does not go to the institution, but goes to the student for his education or is received by the government. Whether it be "child-benefit" or "government-benefit" it can be strongly argued that the same principle is at work. Again it would be very difficult to show that a sectarian college under such a contract did not benefit, both directly and indirectly, in staff, equipment, and even possibly buildings, all at public expense.

MINUTES OF THE STEERING COMMITTEE, NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL

FEBRUARY 12, 1965

Present: Leonard Schroeter, Chairman; Herbert Prashker, Vice Chairman; Robert Barnes, Secretary; Sophia Yarnall Jacobs; Robert Risk; Eason Monroe; Ernest Mazey. Visitors: Aryeh Neier, Ramona Kaplan, Steve Rubin, Lynn S. Castner, Ralph Brown, Fred Barbaro, Brandoch Lovely, David B. Mayer. Staff: John Pemberton, Gordon Haskell, Charles Morgan, Ted Mote, Mel Wulf.

Mr. Haskell stated that the January 1965 income report is not as yet completed, but that the membership and development program looks favorable. The comparison with January 1964 is not realistic as the renewal program started later this year. Mr. Haskell and Mr. Neier reviewed affiliate participation in the 1965 Expansion Drive.

Arizona: Mr. Haskell said they have a vigorous development program under way. Very successful banquets were held in both Phoenix and Tuscon.

Colorado: They ended 1964 with a good membership drive. Their fund-raising event, held when Chuck Morgan was in Colorado, was quite successful.

Georgia: In 1964, they did much better than anticipated.

Kansas: This is our newest affiliate. It has a vigorous board which is working on establishing a Topeka chapter. Greater Kansas City remains a separate affiliate.

There was general discussion of whether the Development Council should concentrate efforts on small new affiliates or on larger, older affiliates. The general feeling was that more growth was possible in the larger affiliates at this time. Mr. Haskell reviewed the importance of inter-affiliate contact to get inspiration and develop more meaningful programs.

Maryland: Mr. Neier stated that they have made substantial efforts in influencing legislation, community education and litigation. While still in its earliest stages, they are now making a good development effort.

Massachusetts: Mr. Haskell stated that they have done effective substantive work through other organizations and community leaders. They have launched a significant special gifts program. At present, they do not desire PMR.

National Capital Area: Haskell said there were some problems in that some D.C. suburban members live in Maryland and Virginia. Maryland and the Capital Area now split the income from the members in two Maryland counties. The Capital Area has a large and very imaginative litigation program. They now have an executive secretary, but not an executive director. They are thinking of adding a staff counsel.

New York: Mr. Neier reported that the national projection for the affiliate new membership is $9,000. He estimated that they will reach $20,000. Mr. Neier said that one of their problems is insufficient membership identification with the affiliate organization. They plan to apply for PMR in 1966.

Upstate New York: Neier reported that negotiations are under way to explore the possibility of a state-wide affiliate. Some areas of New York are now unaffiliated. The Upstate New York affiliate is doing a first-rate job on up-grading contributions and membership.

Oklahoma: Neier said that while their membership is small, they have great resources in the quality of the membership. He felt that they would do a very good substantive job.

Utah: Haskell reported that they have in the past six months shown promise of becoming a much more active affiliate. Rev. Gillilan is their new chairman and is inaugurating a good program.

Southern California: Mr. Monroe reported that the $175,000 projected shared and new membership income is a good estimate. However, they did hope to achieve $180,000 plus. He stated that for many months the Proposition #14 campaign took nearly all of the affiliate's efforts. The campaign did result in considerable new community involvement and support for the Southern California CLU.

Illinois: Neier reported that the $84,000 projected income is a conservative estimate. They now have an active board and are seeking a new executive director. They are one of the few affiliates capable of carrying on a quality substantive and massive development program even without a director.

Michigan: Mr. Mazey reported that the $58,000 projected income is a big increase. They believe it can be achieved. He noted that as a result of a vigorous campaign, Michigan has a very large ratio of dollars per member in comparison with other affiliates.

Pennsylvania: Mr. Barnes reported that the $60,000 projected income figure is their board's estimate. He believes that the goal is a conservative estimate. They have now added a half-time Development Director to promote membership.

Washington: Mr. Schroeter reported that in January they had 1,300 renewals. The projected estimate for the year is 1,500. He therefore is looking toward reaching 2,100 members. His hope is to at least go $3,000 to $4,000 over the projected goal. Washington now has a dramatic issue involving the police which is creating considerable community interest.

Indiana: Mr. Risk reported that the projected $16,000 income is a conservative estimate. His hope is they may be able to reach $20,000. Many renewals have doubled the amounts. They are holding membership meetings throughout the state and are beginning an active substantive program. They now have an executive secretary and, if their growth warrants it, they may consider an executive director later in the year.

Ohio: Neier reported that they assumed PMR on January 1, 1965. Most of their chapters are doing a good job. Their projected estimate of $37,000 will double their income over a two-year period. He stated that while this is a high figure, he believes it is conservative. They are now seeking an executive director.

Iowa: Haskell reported that their program at the moment is not too encouraging. It was necessary to cancel the scheduled regional meeting.

Missouri:

Kansas City. Haskell reported that as a result of a good phone campaign, a large number of pledge cards were received, but there was little increase in the pledges.

St. Louis. Haskell reported that this is our oldest affiliate and it predates the national ACLU. The question of the possibility of forming a Missouri state-wide affiliate has not been discussed with the affiliates but it could be raised to see if there is interest.

New Mexico: Haskell reported that the national ACLU has received little information concerning the affiliate. At present, we receive no minutes.

Oregon: Neier reported that they were able to abolish capital punishment, and have done good substantive work in other areas. At present, however, there seems to be no substantial development program.

Wisconsin: Neier reported that there should be a greater development program than they have at present. In the past there has been a problem concerning Madison-Milwaukee communications. They have recently amend their by-laws so that the Milwaukee chapter now has representation on the State Board.

Connecticut: Haskell reported they have a healthy substantive program. They are now the largest Fund B contributor. If a substitute for Fund B can be provided, growth in Connecticut should be encouraged.

Mr. Brown was asked to report concerning Connecticut. They think they now have two young attorneys who are willing, together, to do the job of an executive secretary. He believes that the situation looks good for membership growth. Brown stated that they expect to be put in the 40% status, and that failure to do so would prove very disappointing to them.

Northern California: The separate status of the Northern California ACLU was explained. National expects to raise from $40,000 to $45,000 from Northern California members in 1965.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Minnesota: Mr. Castner reported that their '65 goals are very high. Since becoming fully staffed, they have shown rapid gains. Castner requested that Minnesota be granted Primary Membership Responsibility. They have already taken over much of the physical work for PMR, i.e. processing mailings, checking off payments, etc. Neier spoke in opposition to the Minnesota application for PMR as being premature. He felt that the growth in the past few months and the short experience of the staff has not yet proved Minnesota's capabilities to handle a total membership and development program. Haskell stated that applications for PMR to begin in January should be acted on before the end of the summer, and that ample advance notice should be given the Steering Committee of any such request. This much time is needed for an affiliate to prepare a total development program. Castner stated that if Minnesota is going to make the effort for a substantial development program, they will need to do the PMR work.

Fund B Requests

Texas: Mr. Lovely said that the chapters in Dallas, Houston and elsewhere in Texas are eager to upgrade their programs, and will support a state-wide program. They have a highly competent executive director. Lovely requested a Fund B grant of over $5,000 to help them meet an "adequate budget" of $11,000. Under questioning, he conceded that they could just get by on a $8,000 budget.

Louisiana: Mr. Rubin stated that labels of "communist" and "integrationist", and indictments of leading attorneys under the state Subversive Law, have hurt ACLU. Some cooperating attorneys and many members have been frightened. The general situation in Louisiana is highly explosive concerning the civil rights program next summer. Rubin requested $16,000 to staff the Louisiana affiliate. There was general discussion of the serious need for funds in the South to support civil liberties programs and provide legal protection. Rubin stated that, if all financial support for civil liberties work in the South were to be considered as a package, in his opinion support for the Lawyers' Constitutional Defense Committee should be the top item.

New Jersey: Mr. Mayer stated that the affiliate expense budget was $22,540. The national projected income for the affiliate was $15,000. Therefore, it was necessary that they ask for a Fund B grant of $7,400. Mr. Schroeter commented that their budget did not provide for a fund-raising campaign. Mr. Barbaro said that they plan a number of special fund-raising events, but don't know just how successful they will be, as the affiliate has no past experience in such matters. The affiliate is now operating in the red. They were asking for increased monthly allotments. At present they do not have funds to launch their fund-raising campaigns.

Monroe suggested that affiliates should sponsor special unshared fund-raising projects. Pemberton said that the fund-raising policy set by the old Joint Finance Committee provides for separate unshared affiliate fund-raising projects so long as they do not ask for a contribution, but are a price for a commodity, i.e. cocktail party, theater party, etc. Mazey said that Michigan sponsors a variety of unshared programs, theater parties, concerts, etc. to meet its expenses.

Florida: Schroeter pointed out that their budget indicates that they will raise $26,000. He suggested the possibility of their raising $30,000 and receiving no Fund B grant. Mazey stated that he had just returned from a visit to Florida. They now have a vigorous program, he stated, after coming out of a bad situation as a result of hiring a staff person last year who did not work out well. He felt that the $3,750 Fund B request from Florida was very reasonable.

Georgia: Mr. Morgan asked for a Fund B grant for Georgia of $415 per month or $5,000 for the year. This would pay for an executive secretary and other expenses. Morgan said that Georgia had done little on development in the past year, and had not shown a very vigorous litigation program, but that with such aid they hope to up-grade their activity.

Ohio : Haskell said that the commitment was made last year to grant them $1,500 "if needed." Schroeter said that he assumed that the lack of a letter requesting such grant would indicate that it was not needed.

Colorado: Haskell stated that they have had a new executive secretary for some months, and a vigorous development program. The $2,000 Fund B grant is needed to keep their office going. Schroeter said that they should be able to raise more in special fund drives. He also suggested that the expense items for part-time investigators and lobbyists were unnecessary. Neier said the committee had set a policy last year that Fund B requests should be granted only to affiliates that were inaugurating boot-strap programs in an effort to move to the fully-staffed executive director status. In his opinion this is not the situation in Colorado and their request should be denied. Haskell felt that Colorado needed assistance to move ahead.

Kentucky: Haskell stated that the affiliate was doing a worthy job in the light of their resources. He felt that Fund B support was necessary for Kentucky to continue with its present program. Neier stated that he did not feel that Kentucky qualified for the same reasons as stated for Colorado.

Arizona: Haskell said that the affiliate had expended considerable funds to upgrade their development program. Fund B support was needed to reimburse the affiliate for these additional expenses. Schroeter suggested that if they really spent too much and now did not have sufficient operating income, a loan might be needed. Mr. Mote stated that the Southern Arizona chapter was hard-pressed for money but not, to the best of his knowledge, the Northern Arizona chapter nor the State Treasury.

Action on Fund B Requests

Having heard reports on the development programs, and affiliate requests for assistance, the Committee then voted as follows:

Rhode Island: The Committee voted to move Rhode Island to the 60% category.

Connecticut: Neier spoke in opposition to moving Connecticut to the 40% category. He suggested that we wait and see what kind of a development program they undertake. Mazey stated that on the basis of Mr. Brown's presentation, it appeared that Connecticut had a program under way, and that the Steering Committee should encourage them. The Committee voted to move Connecticut to the 40% category.

Florida: The Committee voted to confirm the second year matching grant of $3,750 from Fund B.

Ohio: The Committee tabled the question of $1,500 from Fund B for 1965.

Minnesota: The Committee denied the request for PMR at this time. The Committee approved a grant to Minnesota of $3,500 from Fund B to assist them in their massive development effort.

Colorado: Their request for $2,000 from Fund B was denied. The Committee voted to urge Colorado to reexamine its budget in an effort to bring expenses within income, and to engage in more unshared special event fund-raising.

Kentucky: The Committee denied their request for $700 from Fund B. The Committee voted to urge Kentucky to up-grade fund-raising efforts.

New Jersey: The Committee granted $575 from Fund B per month for the first six months of 1965.

Texas: The Committee approved the Fund B request for $3,000.

Arizona: The Committee deined their request for $500 from Fund B to reimburse them for development expenses.

EVENING SESSION

Use of Lists for New Membership Promotion. Haskell stated that some problems had arisen out of the new formula on new membership funds. There had been some question as to when the formula went into effect. He stated that January 1st was the effective date and therefore new memberships received by National prior to this time were shared, and new memberships received by affiliates should have been shared. Haskell discussed the problem of direct mail promotion for new members and how such lists might be divided between National and the affiliates to avoid duplication. He proposed that if a mailing list is 50% or more a local mailing list, then the affiliate would have the first option on its use. If the mailing list has less than 50% of its names in an affiliate area, then the National has first option on its use. Both the National and affiliates must communicate with one another concerning the use of such lists and the exercise of their options, except for small 3,000-and-under lists. The chairman ruled that by the sense of the body, this proposal was approved.

Fiscal Responsibility For PMR Affiliates. Haskell pointed out that some PMR affiliates are from time to time financially embarrassed. He felt that such affiliates should never be allowed to simply withhold from National for several months its proper share of income. It was stated that neither the affiliates nor the national organization should be allowed to withhold their respective shares of income. If either entity foresees a period of financial stringency, it must make proper arrangements with its opposite number, but not solve the problem by unilateral action. Passed.

Vigilance Fund Equipment Loans. The Committee approved National's request for $9,400 from the Vigilance Fund for this purpose, to be repaid over a five-year period.

New Jersey: The Committee approved a $500 equipment loan to be repaid over a three-year period.

Minnesota: Minnesota requested that it be granted a $600 equipment loan to be repaid the year Minnesota is granted PMR.

General discussion considered the possibility that many affiliates might request similar equipment loans. Mazey stated that Michigan had paid for its equipment on an installment basis, and felt that other affiliates might do likewise. Haskell read from the past minutes the policy concerning the Vigilance Funds which provided that money could be loaned for capital equipment for National or affiliate organizations so long as such amounts were repaid to the Vigilance Fund.

A motion was made to reconsider the loan to New Jersey from the Vigilance Fund. The motion granting the loan to New Jersey was revoted and the request was denied, as was the Minnesota request.

The Committee voted to have the national organization establish a revolving fund of $2,500 to be used for two-year loans to affiliates for capital equipment purchases, this fund to be established out of the general fund with loans administered and approved by the National staff.

Southern Problem. Pemberton stated that the National ACLU does, to a substantial extent, attempt to influence legislation. Thus, it is not eligible as a tax deductible organization. New York Civil Liberties Union did set up an education foundation which attempted to use tax-deductible dollars. This has since turned into the National Assembly for Teaching the Principles of the Bill of Rights.

Pemberton reviewed the establishment of Lawyers' Committee for Defense of the Constitution. The board of LCDC is representative of a variety of civil rights groups. The organization received a $15,000 grant from the Vigilance Fund and received contributions from other groups and individuals to a total of about $60,000. Last summer, LCDC sent 125 lawyers into the South. Their expenses were paid, but no salaries. For the three month period, the LCDC attorneys were extremely active in the Southern states. At the end of the summer, LCDC made application for foundation support. No positive answers were received to their requests. With the announcement of the formation of the President's Lawyers' Committee, the foundations encouraged LCDC to negotiate for joint efforts in providing legal assistance in the South. The President's Committee (LCRUL) vetoed these negotiations, and, in effect, attempted to preempt the field. The claim of the President's Committee that it will defend rights under law, at least in Mississippi, has greatly reduced the possibility that LCDC will receive any substantial foundation support. Pemberton raised the question as to whether the ACLU should support LCDC as an experiment in the area of tax deductible fund-raising. Neier stated that New York CLU is now being helped by additional cooperating attorneys as a result of the LCDC program. He said that volunteer attorneys have returned from their summer weeks in the South eager to take on additional civil liberties work.

There was general discussion of the LCDC situation. It was stated that there will be obvious need for additional attorneys in Louisiana this summer. The question was raised concerning the LCDC Board's possible reaction to the Pemberton suggestion, and possible LCDC conflict with the functions of the Southern Regional Office. Schroeter proposed (1) that the ACLU assume responsibility for LCDC as a tax-deductible foundation; (2) that $16,000 be appropriated for the Louisiana CLU out of the Vigilance Fund; (3) that the Southern Regional Office take organizational responsibility for Georgia, Alabama and unaffiliated southern areas, such responsibility to be staffed out of the Southern Regional Office.

The Committee approved Mr. Schroeter's proposal #1 on the condition that LCDC acquire proper ACLU identification and control, as a tax-deductible foundation. It was further stated that promotion of tax-deductible funds for LCDC should not be at any sacrifice to the support of the S.R.O.

The Committee approved a "one-shot" Vigilance Fund grant of $15,600 to the Louisiana affiliate, with subsequent support to come from some substitute for Fund B in 1966.

The Committee voted to give the Southern Regional Office the responsibility as suggested in the Schroeter proposal #3, and to provide one additional staff person for the S.R.O. - this to be done if affiliate income goes over the projected 1965 goals and thus provides increased funds to the S.R.O.

There was general discussion of the future of Fund B. Mazey suggested that the 10% affiliate contributions now going to the S.R.O. continue, but in the future be put into a development budget. Schroeter suggested that affiliates submit yearly budgets and a percentage of what income exceeds these budgets go to the support of needy affiliates. Neier felt that the straight 10% affiliate contribution was not sufficiently glamorous or creative. There was a discussion of the possibility of the adoption of the underdeveloped areas by the rich and powerful affiliates. Schroeter suggested (1) that the Fund B cease as of 1966; (2) January 1, 1966 would find us with a need for a new large fund for underdeveloped areas; (3) that this fund should be the responsibility of National and affiliate contributions.

It was agreed that the Steering Committee would next meet on Friday, April 2, the day before the Plenary Meeting of the National Board. It was agreed that the National Development Committee in its entirety should meet early in the summer to map out a general program.

Schroeter suggested that on the next agenda there should be an item concerning professionalization of the staff of the affiliates. This item should consider staff criteria, pay, pensions, and job descriptions. There should also be included similar items concerning the National staff. He suggested that the National staff work up a chart describing these items.

Schroeter suggested that following his field trips, Haskell should provide written reports to the Steering Committee members concerning the development efforts of the visited affiliates.

NATIONAL PLANNING COMMITTEE

FEBRUARY 12, 1965

PRESENT: Ralph Brown (Nat'l Board), chairman; Ralph Fuchs (Nat'l Committee, Indiana); Will Maslow (Nat'l Board); Spencer Coxe (Greater Philadelphia Branch); Leonard Stein (St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee); Brandoch Lovely (Texas Civil Liberties Union); Jack Pemberton, Sy Bucholz, Alan Reitman, Leanne Katz, Anne Strickland (Staff).

The Committee accepted Mr. Brown's system of classification in evaluating each item on the Agenda, previously circulated.

A. Proposals that are clearly worth doing.

1. Highest priority, should be launched in 1965 or 1966.
2. Medium priority, must await substantially increased resources.
3. Low priority, execution not foreseeable in the next five years.

B. Proposals of promise that can only be tested by trial. In every case, we must ask how can experiments be set up, either in time or space (local or regional experiments where possible).

1. ....
2. ....
3. ....

C. Proposals that we think should be discarded.

LEGISLATION

Mr. Pemberton commented that the ACLU is primarily a reactive organization rather than one which plans active programs to achieve our objectives. For example, the ACLU reacted to President Johnson's education bill after its introduction in Congress rather than anticipating the bill and its civil liberties dangers. Mr. Brown, in agreeing with this analysis, remarked that there is a dichotomy between reacting to civil liberties violations and advance programming. Mr. Reitman said that the problem is deeper because of the lack of resources to implement program; for example, even if the ACLU announced and planned a program supporting a certain bill, adequate resources would be needed to carry the plans through.

Mr. Maslow pointed out that the Union has neglected legislation in favor of litigation. This ignores, he stated, one of the Union's greatest assets: it is not tax-exempt and therefore is free to engage in activities that other organizations with this privilege cannot. Furthermore, legislative work necessarily involves the members of an organization and thus we could mobilize the total resources of the ACLU: our members as well as the professional staff and leadership. He cautioned, however, that a legislative program must be limited to items that can realistically be handled, emphasizing that he was vigorously in favor of the Union giving top priority to legislative work.

Mr. Reitman noted that legislative work was going on, involving not only the Washington, D.C. office but also our affiliates. Mr. Coxe commented that the affiliates are so overwhelmed with paper work and details that they tend to emphasize the immediate issues and problems rather than dealing with long range goals (such as a model piece of legislation). He suggested the addition of a staff member in Washington, D.C. to send material directly to a designated person in the affiliate responsible for legislative action in that area instead of going through an overworked affiliate office. Mr. Maslow felt this method would be ineffective, for there must be an organizational decision giving legislation top priority, and ignoring everything else. Mr. Stein suggested drafting a piece of model legislation and putting it on the agenda for the next ten years on the assumption that it will take that long for the affiliates to adopt it at each one's individual speed. Mr. Coxe stated that substantive policy issues aren't decided quickly enough at the national level and that the affiliates don't do more on legislative matters partly because of lack of funds but also because the affiliate heads are not field directors but heads of local autonomous organizations.

Mr. Maslow stated that a major prioirty should be given to the addition to the national staff or a legislative director, not merely for Washington lobbying which is Mr. Speiser's special function. He further moved that section II(3) dealing with a National Legislative Committee, be given a "C" rating. There was general agreement on the second part of the Maslow motion. Regarding item II(1), Mr. Stein recommended the national Board establish, in consultation with the affiliates, a continuing agenda of national legislative concerns or prioirties, i.e., a continuing docket of legislative aims. This was amended by Mr. Maslow to include the legislative concerns of affiliates, and the motion carried with an "A-1" priority.

With respect to the addition of a legislative director, Mr. Lovely moved that it be given a rating of "A-2"; it was pointed out that such an addition did not have to be included in the 1965 budget. Mr. Lovely's motion carried unanimously.

Mr. Brown's motion that no recommendation be made concerning item II(2) (staffing of affiliate legislative offices) was adopted, and item II(4) (using membership energies in lobbying) was tabled to be taken up with the discussion on membership.

EDUCATION

After considerable discussion of educational needs in the civil liberties field, Mr. Maslow suggested that the Union hire a national education director and also that the Board designate a subcommittee to implement the educational programs including publications, in view of the need for long-range educational work.

Item III(1) (special attention to be given the 175th anniversary of the Bill of Rights in 1966) was labelled "C".

The following comments were offered and action taken with regard to the other items under III(2):

(a) With respect to the Annual Report which is produced at a total cost of approximately $19,000 annually, the opinion was expressed that perhaps a shorter version, which would require revision of the present approach, would cut costs. There was discussion of the value of polling the affiliates for advice regarding the Report including alternatives of what could be done with the money now spent on the Report, although Mr. Stein felt this should be decided by the national Board. Mr. Lovely moved that a general investigation of the value of the Report be conducted by the national staff among affiliates, members and other readers, and this motion passed unanimously.

(b) The recent changes in carrying depth articles in the Civil Liberties monthly were praised and there were no recommendations for further changes.

(c) With respect to the idea of a civil liberties magazine, Mr. Maslow stated that it was much easier and less costly to contribute civil liberties articles to other journals than to start your own. There was general agreement with this approach and no recommendation was made on the magazine idea.

(d) Mr. Coxe felt that money saved on publishing the Annual Report should be used to publish a series of pamphlets setting forth the ACLU position on various topics. Mr. Maslow favored mimeographed materials for this purpose, for they are low in cost and can deal with a subject in depth since such materials are generally for a specialized audience; pamphlets, on the other hand, tend to be over-simplified, though he mentioned that the one on HUAC recently printed by the Union was a notable exception. Mr. Maslow further suggested that the money saved on the Annual Report could be used to produce a textbook on civil liberties which would hopefully encourage courses on the subject in high schools. (Mr. Reitman pointed out that the Crowell Publishing Company was considering such an idea and the office was working with them.)

(e) With respect to the Speaker's Manual, Mr. Reitman reported that Mr. Baldwin was now working on a draft which would be accelerated by the policy manual which is almost completed. On the subject of speakers, Mr. Stein suggested that the national office compile a list of 20 - 30 persons who are good speakers and send it to various organizations, especially those with regular conventions, and not merely civil liberties groups. After general discussion, it was decided this would not be feasible.

Item III(4) (an annual meeting or institute on a civil liberties topic) was discussed with emphasis given to the question of whether such an educational and publicity program would be wise. Mr. Coxe felt that this should be given low priority, and the Committee decided to rate it "B-2".

LITIGATION

Item I(1) (a national legal docket) was discussed, and it was felt that such a docket would be helpful.

Mr. Wulf reported that the policy adopted by the Biennial Conference and Board with respect to the affiliates checking with the national Legal Department on all Supreme Court briefs was now being practiced and the Committee affirmed the value of this procedure. Mr. Coxe raised the point about not identifying the ACLU's name on briefs for which it paid in cases going to the Supreme Court. Mr. Wulf strongly emphasized that the national office should approve all briefs filed in the Supreme Court if they are either paid for by the ACLU or bear the ACLU's name. The Committee affirmed this position, too.

The issue of local damage suits [I(3)] was discussed, and Mr. Stein remarked that this seemed to be an effective way of dealing with police brutality, an injustice which rarely receives national attention. Mr. Wulf agreed that damage suits were indeed effective in controlling police malpractices and, as such, were being encouraged.

The question of a legal librarian [I(4)] was not considered important enough to discuss at this time.

MEMBERSHIP INVOLVEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT

There were no recommendations concerning items IV(1) (a through e) for the Committee regarded these items to be of local affiliate concern. These dealt with legislative action groups, workshops on civil liberties issues, distribution of literature, speaker's bureaus, and contacts with special organizations (labor, teachers, churches).

Item IV(1)(f) (having non-lawyers serve on subject matter committees) was felt to be a good experiment and should be encouraged when feasible and useful.

The value of local membership meetings to obtain members' thinking on policy issues [IV(1)(g)] was considered, and Mr. Maslow said that if the meetings were interesting enough, people would come. However, Mr. Coxe stated that, unlike many organizations, people do not join the ACLU for social reasons, and thus do not depend on such meetings or even want them. This led to discussion of a membership poll to determine exactly what kinds of people make up the ACLU membership, and the Committee agreed that this was a good suggestion and should be discussed at the joint meeting on Saturday (see minutes of joint meeting attached).

BASIC ORGANIZATIONAL MATTERS

With respect to problems of policy coordination, Mr. Reitman announced what the policy manual was being written and would soon be available; this should help solve some of the problems of policy coordination. Mr. Maslow commented that no affiliate should be allowed -- without the Board's permission -- to take a position contrary to existing policy. This led to discussion and interpretation of the pertinent provision in the ACLU Constitution, Section 6 which reads:

> "An affiliate shall act in accordance with the policies of the Union, with the understanding that the purpose of this requirement is to obtain general unity rather than absolute uniformity."

There was general feeling that unless a serious problem arose there was no need for such a prohibitive rule as that proposed by Mr. Maslow. Mr. Brown and Mr. Stein suggested that the policy manual have a short preface which would include (1) the above quotation from the ACLU Constitution; (2) an exhortation to avoid unnecessary differences by consultation with the national office; and (3) the Board's Executive Committee statement of December 16, 1963 and January 6, 1964 which reads as follows:

> "It appeared to be the sense of the Committee that more effective prior consultation (not involving mandatory conformity) between affiliates and the national office could be achieved where novel federal issues are being raised, Acts of Congress of federal officials are being challenged, or problems having national significance and novel import arise. For this purpose, Mr. Fraenkel pointed out, highest priority should be given to the collection of a useable national policy guide, in order that questions on which the Union has taken a national position can be readily identified and questions which are novel can be distinguished. At the same time, Mr. Pemberton pointed out, greater emphasis should be given to the agenda of policy issues which are being considered at any time by the subject matter committees of the national Board, both to encourage participation in national policy formation and to discourage pre-commitment of the organization to a position on policy issues which are under consideration."

There was unanimous agreement on this recommendation. It was also agreed that the affiliates could not be urged to refrain from taking positions on undecided issues of national policy simply because there might be undesirable publicity. However, Mr. Maslow pointed out that the affiliates can make it clear in such a situation that their consideration of the issue is simply one step in the formulation of national policy and that the national Board has not yet made a decision.

The Committee then turned to item V(2) concerning our need to obtain research help on policy issues.

No recommendation was made concerning item V(2)(a) (farming out problems to affiliates for working papers), as this system is just being tried.

It was emphasized that with respect to item (2)(b), sometimes topical research -- both short and long-range -- is needed, and the example of the $1,000 expended in 1954 to have Allen Raymond write our report on government news suppression was cited.

With respect to the question of setting up a separate research department, it was agreed that this would not be useful at this time, and accordingly item V(2)(c) was given an "A-3" priority.

The Committee took up the question of whether ACLU should adopt, as within its scope of activity, such forms of social action as picketing, sit-ins and marches [item V(3)]. After discussion, it was agreed to endorse this position taken by the Board's Executive Committee on December 16, 1963, and January 6, 1964:

> "4. One particular area of potential membership activity did not seem to the Executive Committee to merit the encouragement given other suggestions. This area was that of picketing and taking part in other direct action techniques of the primary civil rights organizations. Members pointed out that the Executive Committee had endorsed the Union's participation in the March on Washington on August 28 last, and that ACLU leaders had participated in the 1930's in the Jersey City challenge to the public meetings ordinance of that city. The Committee agreed with Mr. Reitman's cautions on broadening the scope of the Union's activities to include such participation (pages 15-16 of the paper, "The ACLU -- Today and Tomorrow") and were satisfied to have such participation continue to be regarded as exceptional."

With respect to the question of our policy regarding cooperation and non-cooperation with other organizations, the Committee after discussion agreed to endorse this position taken by the Board's Executive Committee on December 16, 1963 and January 6, 1964:

"2. Cooperation with other organizations. Mr. Reitman pointed out that two considerations tend to discourage our cooperation with many other organizations in many circumstances: (a) the differences between their purposes and ours, and the essential function performed by the singleness of our organization's purpose, and (b) the burdensomeness, in terms of our markedly limited staff and resources, of having to undertake additional responsibility for the public defense of our organization occasioned by its public association with other organizations who may be subjected to attack, legitimately or illegitimately, for circumstances not otherwise applying to the Union. Discussion noted that these policies had not kept us from cooperating with other organizations in the civil rights movement as an exceptional instance, and even encouraging our affiliates to so cooperate, despite the frequent combination in other civil rights organizations of economic objectives with the civil rights goals we endorse. Nor have these policies kept us from seeking cooperation with other organizations and stimulating their interest in our objectives through the National Civil Liberties Clearing House and in the conduct of such campaigns as that to abolish the HUAC. (In the latter instance, however, our efforts have been aimed at organizations whose reputations have been such that the association did not impose an additional defense burden upon our resources). The Executive Committee did not propose that the Union change its policies, neither those which tend to discourage cooperation with other organizations, nor those which encourage it in the special circumstances described."

After a short discussion of item V(5), Mr. Lovely suggested that the whole matter of the professionalization of the staff be given an "A-1" priority and that a position paper be prepared on this subject. The Committee accepted his recommendation and decided that the issue should be considered in greater depth at a later date. The question of possible staff enlargement, needs and resources was postponed until the joint meeting on Saturday.

The meeting was adjourned.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10010

MINUTES
NATIONAL PLANNING COMMITTEE AND NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL-STEERING COMMITTEE -- JOINT SESSION
FEBRUARY 13, 1965

Present: Ralph S. Brown, presiding; Robert D. Barnes, Spencer Coxe, Ralph Fucns, Sophia Yarnell Jacobs, Brandoch Lovely, Will Maslow, Ernest Mazey, Eason Monroe, Robert Risk, Leonard Schroeter, and Leonard Stein.

Staff: Messrs. Reitman, Haskell, Mote, Morgan, Wulf, Pemberton, Bucholz; Mrs. Katz.
Visitors from affiliate areas: Lynn Castner, Mrs. Ramona Kaplin, Aryeh Neier, Mrs. Vivian Monroe.

I. Litigation

Mr. Schroeter emphasized two significant advantages to be gained from the legal committee and regional lawyer's conference proposals set forth in the outline: (1) for frontier legal issues -- e.g. if the Board adopts a new position on capital punishment and ACLU attorneys become charged with developing new strategies for carrying out that policy, such conferences ought to be called to enable good lawyers to fertilize each others minds; moreover the valuable insights of constitutional law professors from the law schools, not now adequately employed by ACLU, should be sought in these conferences. (2) When issues common to several affiliate areas appear, conference on a common strategy is needed to avoid setting bad legal precedents. After considerable discussion Mr. Schroeter moved to recommend that a National Lawyer's Panel be established to list persons who can be involved in national and regional conferences as needed to serve either of these purposes, and that this recommendation be assigned a "B(1)" priority.

II. Legislation

Mr. Brown reported the deliberations of the Friday meeting of the Planning Committee on the subject of legislation and Mr. Barnes moved adoption of the recommendations of that session. After discussion Mr. Barnes's motion carried.

III. Education

1. Focus of Educational Activity.

Mr. Reitman posed the questions stated in the agenda concerning the focus of our education activity:

A. Leadership groups or the man in the street?
B. Concentration on ACLU action or broader civil liberties education?
C. Emphasis on our watch-dog role or improving enforcement?

At this point Mr. Monroe expressed disagreement with the approach embodied in the tentative agenda and the posing of these questions. We should, he said, decide first what we are to be in 1975 -- what needs to be done or created in our nation and what our part of doing and creating it should be. Our watch-dog role has not been enough; a civil liberties engineering operation is needed. Thus, if we decide that capital punishment as an institution is inconsistent with liberty, we can mount a sustained offensive which will eliminate it. By contrast we shall steadily lose ground by maintaining a constant defensive posture. Discussion of Mr. Monroe's statements revealed challenges to his assumption that we really have been losing ground. But Mr. Schroeter suggested that the growth of the far right reflected a new polarization of public thinking into liberation and anti-liberation forces. The far right has perceived -- more correctly than we have, he said -- that its counterpoise is the ACLU. We shall face in the near future a political role that we have not yet recognized -- or there will be a vacuum.

Professor Fuchs suggested, however, a need to distinquish substantive issues which do bear upon civil liberties -- capital punishment, reapportionment, juvenile procedures and welfare, administrative procedures -- that have enormous policy implications that we may well doubt they properly belong to us. To this Mr. Stein suggested that, though he disagreed that liberty is in any danger than it always has been, we do face a new and difficult climate of opinion. In it the problem for us is to find the points of decision-making-- the points where we can more effectively make our points.

Mr. Schroeter brought the topic back to civil liberties education with his suggestion that both sides of the alternatives posed by Mr. Reitman's dichotomies are an ACLU responsibility -- and that everything the Union does, in the courts and in government media as well as in the mass media, is a form of public education. What we have got to accept is that we have a major responsibility for the libertarian concerns of our society; for it we need 500,000 members and ten million dollars by 1975. Dr. Risk expressed a concern about the quality of our organization if we proceed toward such a quantitative goal. He suggested that ACLU's experience with legislation to abolish capital punishment in Indiana underscored the opportunities for effectiveness through society's pressure points rather than by frontal assault.

At this point Mr. Barnes moved that the Reitman questions be answered by a recommendation that we assume the broader alternative in each case and that we assign an "A(2)" priority to adding an Educational Director in the national office. Ensuing discussion developed a concensus that both a sub-committee to fulfill the challange of the Monroe memorandum and describe our goals for 1975, and a sub-committee to specify an ACLU program of education, be formed. After discussion, and with some dissent, the Barnes motions carried.

2. Role of Civil Liberties Educational Foundations.

Mr. Pemberton, after calling attention to the responses received to his memorandom to the Committee on Tax-Deductability (previously circulated), summarized the facts outlined in that memorandum. Mrs. Monroe elaborated upon the experience of the California Constitutional Rights Foundation, which she serves as Executive Director, in obtaining a commitment of the State Board of Education to achieve a satisfactory program of civil liberties education in the elementary and secondary schools, and of the state Board and of school districts within the system to commit resources to teacher- training and preparation of curricular materials.

Mr. Neier then elaborated the thinking of the NYCLU executive committee concerning its civil liberties defense and education fund (wholly controlled by the board of directors of NYCLU). He explained that NYCLU hopes to acquire some additional funds through this mechanism that would not be available to the organization because of non-deductability, strictly without impairment of the advance of regular membership income. Such funds might be committed to specific educational projects, and might as well be committed to some types of legal defense work. However, he emphasized that NYCLU sought to delay implementation of its plans untill a truly corporate decision on the part of the entire organization could be achieved with respect to the employment of devices of this kind.

Mr. Maslow, pointing out that he was the Executive Director of an organization that did enjoy donor tax deductability, emphasized the dangers of government scrutiny implicit in a favorable tax ruling. Offsetting it, of course, are the advantages of substantial foundation gifts for specific projects. But a special concern must be given by ACLU to the danger of fostering competition for funds by the proliferation of such tax-favored units -- competition with each other and competition with the regular source of ACLU income, and Mr. Prashker expressed opposition to any tax deductable educational fund for the danger of its diversion of our energies from more critically needed work. He felt that the combination of a legal defense and educational fund would stand on a different footing.

Mr. Schroeter at this point reported the action of the NDC Steering Committee favoring ACLU support, through solicitation of its own sources of financial support, of the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee-- if need be -- on condition that its name and structure be modified sufficiently to achieve an identification with ACLU. He moved that we adopt a three part recommendation: (1) that the LCDC experience be observed and, if successful, used as a legal arm (enjoying donor tax deductability) controlled by ACLU, seeking large (including foundation) gifts only. (2) That we seek to create a separate educational fund, controlled and staffed by the educational department of ACLU, but with a board separate from ACLU's. (3) That we encourage affiliates to seek a separate educational and legal defense fund, comparable to that of NYCLU, employing it only to obtain the money that could not be had on a non-tax- deductable basis. Mrs. Monroe pointed out, from her own experience on behalf of CRF, that a national ACLU educational fund could obtain support from foundation sources that would not be available to local efforts such as her's. Mr. Haskell, while advocating a structure of national and affiliate funds such as that contemplated in the Schroeter motion, emphasized the need for guarding against two dangers: (1) interference with the continuing advance of regular membership income, and (2) the danger of disproportionate financial success with such funds in affiliates located in large metropolitan areas (the rich affiliates will become richer while the poor ones will become poorer). Mr. Schroeter suggested that his motion contemplated the adoption of: (1) a minimum gifts requirment for the tax deductable entity (to avoid interference with regular membership income), and (2) a sharing formula to protect the capacity of the national fund to aid affiliates unable to attract large gifts themselves. He suggested a $1,000.00 minimum limitation on gifts. Mr. Neier suggested that if a national foundation were created, there would not be need for affiliate funds generally, since the national foundation could conduct specific projects desired by an affiliate in its area. With this in mind, it should be governed by a management body comparable to the Steering Committee. Mr. Schroeter emphasized that the legal work of a tax deductable legal arm such as LCDC should be specialized.

Mr. Mazey offered a substitute motion that endorsed the concept of setting up such a donor tax deductable fund and that details be worked out in the near future. Then Mr. Prashker moved that the Chairman appoint a committee of this body to propose in full detail a concrete proposal, directly to the Board (that is, without awaiting another meeting of this body), at its April 3rd meeting, after circulating its recommendations to the remaining members of this body. Mr. Schroeter and Mr. Mazey accepted the Prashker substitute motion and, after an expression of urgency on the part of Mr. Neier, the motion carried.

IV. Membership Involvement.

Mr. Maslow proposed that a new sampling of our membership be made, to disclose a profile as to sex, education, income, professions and occupation, involvement in other voluntary organizations, and government employment. Such a sampling had been done in 1957, with assistance from the Roper firm. Mr. Monroe and Mr. Reitman reported on two pending studies, pertaining in part to the character of our membership, and involving considerably greater depth of inquiry and description. However, after discussion, the group agreed assigned to the expenditure of ACLU money and energies in such surveys a "C" priority.

With respect to chapter development, Mr. Schroeter moved that wherever groups of ACLU members live in manageable contiguity, affiliates be encouraged to organize chapters with emphasis on participation in state and national legislative activity, educational activity and duplication of the national subject matter committee structure. This recommendation was adopted by the body.

V.Basic Organizational Matters.

Mr. Fuchs proposed that an additional question be added to the agenda: How can we determine the proper substantive scope of the Union's concerns? (What frontier civil liberties issues should be taken on by the Union? What receding ones should perhaps be dropped?) After considerable discussion of the dangers and merits of adding additional structure and adopting guidelines for determining proper civil liberties issues, Mr. Stein proposed a three part recommendation: (1) that the policy manuel (now under preparation) be concluded with all deliberate speed. (2) That the national Board adopt a docket of current concerns, consisting of, perhaps, ten or fifteen of the major items of civil liberties concern, viewed in two parts: (a) those as to which existing policy is established, and (b) frontier issues as to which policy is in the making. (3) That selected items from this docket be agended for consideration in depth at each Biennal Conference, items from part (a) for programatic review and from (b) for policy making. Mr. Coxe commented that this kind of long range program planning, with its implication for national provision of additional resources to affiliates, must be assumed as a responsibility of the national organization. To achieve it we must make the national office grow faster, somewhat reversing the emphasis of the preceding decade upon affiliate growth. Mr. Brown pointed out the need he felt for greater depth in the national staff, to provide more effective service to the Board and subject matter committees. Mr. Monroe suggested that our long range planning requires a completion of our compilation of policy, a programatic study designed to identify the major gaps between the principles embodied in our policy positions and the practices of society, in the development of a program to deal with these gaps.

Mr. Schroeter undertook to summarize the discussion so far with the statement that long range planning should be the responsibility of the national Board as the result of work of expanded subject matter committees (including representatives of affiliate subject matter committees), aided by more adquate staff and by volunteer expertise recruited by staff, with basic new policy and program being made by the enlarged Board (at plenary Board meetings) or by the Biennial Conference. In response to an expression of the danger of depriving the Board of our power to react, Mr. Schroeter emphasized that his view of the policy making responsibility of the Board and Beinnial Conference did not contemplate that the smaller, regular Board-- or even the staff in between meetings of that Board -- would not act and react as rapidly to new situations as was necessary to be operationally effective. The smaller Board would serve as a kind of executive committee.

Discussion of Mr. Schroeter's summary turned the body's attention to proposals that the Biennial Conference be expanded into a truly national convention. Advocates of the convention system suggested that the three to five thousand ACLU members who are active in carrying out our program should be given the opportunity to meet with each other. But much concern was expressed for the effect upon ACLU policy of giving a convention policy-making responsibilities. Mr. Stein suggested that the value sought in this discussion of conventions was that of human contact and cross stimulation. For this purpose a large convention is really ineffective; activities such as Washington's neighborhood meeting far better serve that purpose. Mr. Brown pointed out that present policy making authority is vested in the national Board, subject to very major powers in the Biennial Conference. He doubted that comparable powers could be given to a convention.

Discussion did not resolve the several views expressed concerning a convention, though some expansion of the Biennal Conference seemed to be consistent with the sense of the meeting. Mr. Schroeter's summary, however, was deemed adopted. In addition, the suggestion of a national conference of national and affiliate staff personnel, each affiliate assuming financial responsibility for its own staff perhaps in conjunction with plenary meeting of the Board, received favorable consideration.

Mr. Schroeter reported, for the NDC Steering Committee, on its discussion of development in the Northern California area and moved that the joint body recommend to the national Board that it undertake to repoen with the board of the affiliate in Northern California the question of integration under the provisions of the ACLU consititution, with view to encouraging its becoming an integrated affiliate. Mr. Monroe encouraged this motion with a report of materially enlarged cooperation between the two California affiliates over development of a legislative program, and the Schroeter motion was adopted.

Mr. Stein called attention to his earlier motion, from which discussion had departed, and his motion was adopted.

Discussion of the regional conference's question on the agenda focused upon the several regions in which ACLU lacks affiliates. It was suggested that outside of the southeastern region, now being dealt with by the Southern Regional Office, development responsibilities should be assigned to strong affiliate offices in neighboring states. However, Mr. Stein doubted that a national responsibility should be assumed for encouraging this development. And consensus concluded that such "affiliate imperialism" should be approved where a strong affiliate took the initiative and was willing to accept the responsibility, without adoption of national policy.

Mr. Brown then called attention to the several recommendations that had been approved concerning additions to national staff and called for discussion as to the priorties among them. These recommendations were for (1) deepening of the existing staff, (2) addition of a legislative director, and (3) an educational director. After discussion the body approved recommending such an enlargment, with priorities assigned in the order named.

At the conclusion of the February 13th session, sub-committees were appointed to deal with the Monroe call for a statement of ten-year goals, the development of an educational program, and the making of concrete recommendations concerning tax deductable funds. Assigned to these committees were: 1975 (Monroe, Lovely, Schroeter, and Pemberton); Education Program (Mazey, Reitman, and Coxe); Tax Deductable Funds (Jacobs, Neier, Haskell). It was agreed that the first two sub-committees would meet on Sunday and report back later to the combined body; the tax deductable sub-committee would meet the following week and report to the April plenary Board meeting.

MINUTES

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1965 --- 12:30 P.M.

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Black, Brown, Ennis, Evans, Galantiere, Hacker, Heckscher, Maslow, Miller, Prashker, Rice; Mrs. Pilpel; Judge Kenyon.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Haskell, Mote, Wulf, Reitman, Bucholz; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitors: Messrs. Aubrey Golden, Henry Schwarzschild, Frank Sutherland.

1. Minutes. The minutes of the January 18 meeting were approved as circulated.

2. Introductions. Mr. Ted Mote, the newly appointed Assistant Director of Membership and Development was introduced and welcomed, as was Mr. Frank Sutherland, a long-time volunteer. Mr. Aubrey Golden, a civil liberties lawyer from Toronto, and Mr. Henry Schwarzschild, Executive Secretary of the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee, were also welcomed.

3. Louisiana Civil Liberties Union. Mr. Wulf presented a letter from Steven Rubin of the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union regarding the threat of the Ku Klux Klan "to deal with" any who attended the Brooks Hays meeting in Bogalusa on January 7th, and informed the Board of the Klan's consequent success in cancelling this meeting. He then asked the Board's advice concerning the affiliate's contemplated legal action against the Klan for threatening those who would exercise First Amendment rights. After some discussion, Mr. Ennis moved that the information warranted seeking judicial protection in light of the Klan's record of using violence to carry out their threats. This factor makes the Klan handbill distinctly different from "offensive" tracts and speakers (e.g. Rockwell) whose lawful expressions may provoke others to violence. His motion carried unanimously.

4. Political Activity of Broadcasting Personnel. Mrs. Pilpel presented the recommendation of the Radio-TV Committee regarding outside political activity of broadcasting personnel and said that the Committee had voted to adopt position #2 of the alternatives listed in the Committee's January 20 minutes, previously circulated to the Board (which was also the position of Richard Salant of CBS), i.e., "a broadcasting employee who is identified with a cause has the right to retain his position and not be fired; but as long as he is identified with a controversial issue, he should not be permitted to function in any part of his job related to that issue." Mr. Prashker objected, for it appeared to him from the reproduced correspondence with Mr. Salant that Mr. Salant, in a continuing issue would relieve a newscaster of all news responsibility; if this happened, the station could understandably not keep the newscaster in a position comparable to the one formerly held. Moreover, he felt that ACLU should not be telling a broadcaster how to determine the fitness of its news personnel; the broadcaster should be free to determine what was necessary, for instance, for it to project the impression of objectivity in reporting that it sought to achieve.

However, Mr. Heckscher criticized the recommendation for its failure to look simply to whether the newsman's performance of his primary responsibility was affected; if not, he saw no reason for the transfer of responsibility contemplated by Mr. Salant. Agreeing, Mr. Hacker pointed to the Union's analogous position with respect to a teacher's outside political activities. And Mr. Galantiere, pointing to our recent statement on police membership in the John Birch Society, criticized the lack of indication, in the CBS position, that controversial affairs were considered important. Mr. Prashker urged that a difference between the newsman's responsibilities and that of a teacher lay in the freedom of the broadcaster to take positions in controversy -- which the Union encourages -- and to contribute to public awareness of it through reporting. Mrs. Pilpel reported that the Committee did not believe that the newsman must be removed from reporting on a controversy in which he was engaged -- only that it would view anything more than such removal as wrong. After further discussion the Committee's recommendation was revised to comport with Mrs. Pilpel's statement and adopted 8 - 4.

5. Pay Television. Mr. Evans presented the report of the Sub-committee of the Radio-TV Committee dealing with pay television, stating that the Subcommittee has discussed the Californian Proposition 15 (banning pay TV) and recommended endorsement of the Southern CAlifornia ACLU effort to enjoin enforcement of the Proposition (qualified, as the minutes report, with respect to the need for greater precision in stating the due process grounds). The adoption of this recommendation was moved, and discussion followed. The recommendation was grounded on the inadvisability of prohibiting any means of communication. After discussion, the motion was adopted 12 - 1.

Mr. Evans then reported the recommendation of the Sub-committee on Pay Television that the conditions (#1, 2, 3, and 4) enbodied in the Union's May 16, 1955 position be eliminated from the statement and that the Board "vigorously endorse" pay TV on the grounds of diversity. He then moved the adoption of the recommendation. Mr. Brown moved to eliminate the "plug for STV", and his amendment was accepted by Mr. Evans. Mrs. Pilpel, expressing opposition to the motion, felt that at least minimal guidelines were needed to keep from driving free TV out of existence -- hence, if not the insistance on two free TV channels before allowing pay TV, there ought to at least be serious consideration of the effect on free TV, since our concern here is the attainment of maximum diversity. At this point, Mr. Evans restated his motion to read: "Since licenses to broadcast should be judged in terms of the public interest, convenience and necessity, and since the ACLU believes diversity is an essential element of this field, we resolve that one way of promoting such diversity is to remove all restrictions on pay TV other than those falling within the framework of existing laws governing radio-TV communication." The motion passed as restated.

6. Federal Aid to Education Bill. Mr. Pemberton presented for the Board's information the testimony of the ACLU prepared for presentation before the Subcommittee of General Education of the House Committee on Education and Labor in consideration of H.R. 2362, and pointed out that the ACLU is one of the few groups voicing opposition to the proposed bill on constitutional grounds. Mr. Maslow suggested that the Board reaffirm its position on free textbooks and also urged speed in deciding the Union's position on shared time. It is very important, he emphasized, to get this issue into the public press and compared the present situation to the one of the Becker amendment which also began with a great deal of support and little opposition, but which - with a program of public information - was finally defeated. Mr. Pemberton stated that, in his opinion, the shared time debate now occurring within the Union was far too important for the advantages of affiliate and membership participation to be sacrificed by a precipitate Board resolution of the issue. This was especially so because the patterns of practice in this area were likely to be as much determined by decisions of local boards of education as by the provisions of an act of Congress and affiliate implementation of ACLU policy would be essential to the protection of civil liberties interests. He did suggest, however, three positions put forth in the Union's testimony on the pending bill that represented staff application or extension of previous positions of the Board and invited Board modification or approval of them. They were:

1. That no part of the authority and responsibility for administering public funds, property or services ... should vest in persons or agencies not solely responsible to the public for their exercise of such authority and responsibility.

2. That no instruction or equipment provided by public funds should take place or be installed in a building or location owned by a religious body or an institution devoted to sectarian instruction.

3. That status as a taxpayer should, by legislation, be made to afford a plaintiff standing to challenge acts and expenditure of the federal government as being in violation of the First Amendment.

After discussion, all three of these positions were adopted by the Board.

The meeting was adjourned.

February 15, 1965 Revision

MEMORANDUM
From : Illinois Division, ACLU, Board of Directors
To: National Board of Directors
Re: Capital Punishment

It is the recommendation of the Illinois Division, Board of Directors, to the National Board of ACLU:

1. That the Union take the position that capital punishment is a civil liberties issue and

2. That the Union adopt a resolution opposing capital punishment and calling for its abolition in the United States.

Capital punishment must be examined not as if it were one among many punishments society chooses to impose upon its offenders but rather as one awful in contemplation and irrevocable in result. Indeed, it is this special factor of irrevocability that immediately sets it apart from all others and it is in light of this fact that all arguments here presented must be weighed.

Before stating the reasons for the foregoing recommendation let us state first, that many of the arguments advanced in favor of abolition of the death penalty are not presented as civil liberties arguments and thus appear to fall without the traditional scope of ACLU concern. Thus, for example, it is frequently argued that capital punishment is inherently wrongful or that it is a violation of our common Judaic-Christian ethic. Many contend that the State should in all instances be deprived of the power to take human life. Others argue that the death penalty has a deleterious effect on the administration of justice, that it is a perversion of the rehabilitative goals of our penal system, that it imposes a particularly cruel form of punishment, that it is a brutalizing factor in society, and that society can be adequately protected by imprisonment of the offender without resort to the supreme penalty. Another argument of force is that there is no demonstratable good to society resulting from the taking of life. It is an unproved assertion that cpaital punishment deters would be murderers, and in fact, there is substantial evidence that it has no deterrent effect. Yet, we are not willing to say that these arguments necessarily fall without the orbit of constitutional claim. An evolving society, one which has become more keenly aware of the manifold complexity of crime and punishment may well delcare constitutional abhorrent practices which appear today to be without the Constitution's sweep.

The arguments here advanced are made with full awareness of the fact that the death penalty appears to be sanctioned by the Constitution. It appears that the death penalty is a penalty contemplated by the Constitution which may be imposed provided constitutional standards are met. Both the Fifth Amendment applicable generally to the federal government and the Fourteenth Amendment applicable to the states, provide that no person shall be deprived of"life, liberty or property without due process of law". One might infer that if an individual is accorded due process he may be deprived of life. True, there is the prohibition against "cruel and unusual punishment" contained in the Eighth Amendment applicable generally to the federal government and perhaps to the states. There is also a restriction on state action which is part of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibiting a denial to any person of "the equal protection of the law". Since the Eighth Amendment was adopted at the same time as the Fifth, it amy prove a problem to argue that a punishment which appears to be specifically contemplated by the Fifth is outlawed by the Eighth. Similarly since the due process clause and equal protection clause applicable to the states are both part of the Fourteenth Amendment, it may prove a problem to argue that a punishment specifically contemplated by one portion of the Fourteenth Amendment is barred by another portion of the same amendment. It may be of course that constitutional law will take a turn such that it may be possible to argue with success that the death penalty should not be imposed for certain types of crimes for which it is now imposed by some states, or that it may be otherwise restricted. If such opportunities develop they should, of course, be seized upon by ACLU. Yet we should not write off the hope that constitutional law will take a turn hostile to the death penalty. The arguments here advanced, however, do not require ACLU to leap far beyond existing precedent.

The grounds we wish to advance for the position stated at the outset of this memorandum grows out of an examination of captial cases in Illinois from 1950 to 1963. While we cite Illinois cases and Illinois law, we do not believe that our argument necessarily suffered from lack of generality on this account. So far as we are aware, Illinois law is solidly within the main stream of the common law and it is unlikely that Illinois experience with capital punishment differs significantly from experience elsewhere in the United States.

We advance two arguments and they are interrelated. The first may be stated as follows: The realities of criminal law and procedure are such that a human being should not be deprived of life through their processes. Such a statement may seem strange to some. For centuries, Anglo-American law has prided itself upon its concern for the rights of those accused of crime. They are customed to the long list of constitutional guarantees for those accused of crimes embodied not only in the federal Constitution but in the constitutions of our states as well. We have a requirement for indictment by a grand jury; the right to trial by jury, the right to counsel, the right to a speedy and public trial, the right to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, the right to be confronted with witnesses against him, the right to compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor and other rights won after centuries of struggle and now jealously guarded, both in England where they have their origin, and in the United States.

Yet those familiar with the processes of criminal law and those who have looked into the cases of those sentenced to death in Illinois in recent years can scarcely feel easy.

From 1950 through 1963, Illinois executed 10 men, 1 man died in prison after affirmation of his death sentence and the fate of six men sentenced to death in this period has not yet been determined.

We shall look at the criminal process generally and shall consider individually some of the seventeen cases just mentioned.

First: The death penalty is too often not a punishment for muder but for refusing to plead guilty to murder.

At the outset we must inquire as to the manner in which candidates for the death penalty are initially selected. This task falls initially to the State's Attorney or in the populous counties where there is a large volume of business, perhaps to an assistant state's attorney. This task is not a mechanical one. Homicide is no simple matter. Illinois recognizes the crimes of murder, voluntary manslaughter, involuntary manslaughter and reckless homicide. In a close case, the prosecution may seek an indictment for voluntary manslaughter rather than murder. This is a decision of fundamental importance for the defendant because it means that his life will not be in jeopardy and if he is convicted he will not face a mandatory minimum 14 year sentence. If this decision were made solely on the basis of the state's attorneys judgment as to the nature of the crime we might accept it as inescapable. But there is another aspect to the matter which merits attention. The prosecutor's decision as to the indictment he will seek may depend not only as to his view of the crime but may be dictated also by the strength of his case. But the decision depends not only on the crime, but also on the strength of the evidence available. Two men may commit substantially the same crime. But as to one, the chief witness has a good reputation, while as to the other, a poor reputation. If the facts warrant, the prosecution may seek death for one and only prison for the other because he thinks it may be possible to secure such a punishment but not a death sentence in the latter case. This result follows, not because of the crime, but because of the reputation of the person who saw the crime.

These considerations lead to another aspect of the criminal process which goes virtually unmentioned in motion pictures and T.V. portrayals and indeed have not received a great deal of attention in the literature on capital punishment. That subject is the negotiating process frequently carried on between the prosecution and the defense. Both the prosecution and the defense can and do take these negotiations seriously for the stakes are high. When they are "successful" they mean generally that there will be a plea of guilty by the defendant and a recommendation by the prosecution to the court of a previously agreed upon sentence. The defendant must view these negotiations "realistically". The defense cannot know exactly what the Prosecutor's evidence is and rarely does it know precisely the strengths or the weaknessess of the prosecution's case. Consequently the defense must enter these negotiations lacking full knowledge of all facts necessary for making an immediate decision. It is true, also that the prosecution generally lacks full knowledge of the case of the defense. Moreover, even if we had a discovery process in criminal proceedings similar to that in civil proceedings, whereby both prosecution and defense would be fully apprised of the other's case, neither would be in a position to predict with precision the outcome of the trial. Neither the prosecution nor the defense would be able to guess in advance exactly what impact each witness will make upon the court and the jury. The weight to be given the various bits and pieces of evidence by the court and jury remains unknown as does the impact that the entire case will have upon the triers of fact. Then too, there are frequently issues of law which are in doubt, e.g. whether certain evidence will be suppressed, whether a witness is competent to testify etc. Overhanging all is the knowledge that the prosecution, no matter how strong it believes its case to be, may lose, and the defense must recognize that no matter how strong it believes its case to be, it too may lose.

Upon an indictment for murder all of the factors mentioned above must come into play in accentuated form for life itself is the stake.

For the defendant to make a "rational" decison when he bargains with the prosecution, the issue is not whether he is in fact "innocent" or "guilty" but rather what is the probability that he will be found guilty or not guilty. Thus, the innocent defendant cannot afford to dismiss the negotiating process without taking a cold and calculating look at the strength and weakness of his case as it will be viewed by the court and jury. The defendant who is "guilty" must do the same. And so must the defendant who knows not whether he is "innocent" or "guilty". Thus suppose we have a case where the defense may or may not have a defense of mental incompetency. The defendant may be called upon to make a crucial decision even though he may be woefully ill-equipped to decide the crucial issues before him.

Where more than one individual is accused of a crime special circumstances come into play. It is a common practice for the prosecution to offer one of the prospective defendants the prospect of leniency provided he will testify against other individuals involved in the crime.

Nor should we over look the frequently untrustworthy character of the evidence thus to be offered by the prosecution. The one who turns state's evidence does so in order to obtain the best possible deal for himself and to obtain the best possible deal has every incentive to do all he can to cast the onuse of guilt as heavily as possible upon his erstwhile alleged colleague and to shed as much as he can from his own shoulders.

We come to an important consequence of the forgoing: almost every defendant indicted for murder has it within his power to save himself from the electric chair by making a deal with the prosecution. If he will plead guilty the prosecution will recommend an agreed upon sentence to the court. Indeed, so far as we know, there has only been a single case in the State of Illinois where a defendant entered a plea of guilty to murder and then received the death penalty. (See People v. George Wilson, 29 Ill. 2d 82, 193 N.E. 2d, 449 (1963) (Wilson's case is still pending in the Courts)

Thus we may sum up our observations upon the negotiatory process as follows: frequently a defendant must choose between going to trial on a plea of not guilty or entering a plea of guilty. If he goes to trial he may be acquitted, found guilty of a lesser offense or convicted and sentenced to death, or to a lengthy term of imprisonment. If he elects to enter a plea of guilty he will know generally in advance what sentence the prosecution will recommend to the court and under law now in force he will know that no matter for what term he is sent to prison he will be eligible for parole (although not necessarily paroled) after he has served 20 years less time off for good behaviour, that is, he will be eligible for parole after a little over 11 years.

2. Adventitious circumstances Sometimes send men to their death. Sometimes it happens that what is essentially a single criminal act will give rise to several violations of the criminal code for which the defendant could be indicted, tried and convicted on several counts resulting in an exceptionally long prison sentence. Another kind of anti-social behavior, basically no more serious may be denounced under only a single section of the criminal code so that the possible maximum sentence which the defendant faces is substantially less than in the first case. The first set of circumstances grant to the prosecution a substantial advantage in the negotiations with the defense even though there is no real difference in the nature or character of the anti-social conduct charged to the defendant. Again, there are cases where anti-social conduct can be viewed as a violation of section A of the criminal code, or of another section of the criminal code, B, carrying a substantially less penalty. Sometimes Section B will represent a "lesser included offense" under A. Thus, for example, the offense of voluntary manslaughter is a lesser included offense under murder. If the facts appear to fit within the framework of a lesser included offense this circumstance may be of help to the prosecution and defense in agreeing upon the offense to which the defendant will plead guilty. Consider the case of Vincent Ciucci (See Ciucci v. Illinois, 356 U. S. 571 (1958)). The state alleged that Ciucci shot his wife and three children and then set their home on fire in order to make their deaths appear as if caused by the blaze. The motive was to enable Cuicci to marry a girl named, by Fate's irony, Carol Amora. The State elected not to try Ciucci for all four murders simultaneously Instead he was first tried for the murder of his wife for which he received a sentence of twenty years. He was then tried for the murder of one child for which he received a sentence of forty-five years. Not until he was tried for the murder of the second child did he receive the death penalty, the goal sought at the beginning by the State. If the State had not succeeded on the third trial, no doubt Ciucci would have been tried again for the murder of the third child with the hope that in the fourth trial he would receive the death penalty. The Supreme Court of the United States was asked to consider the constitutionality of subjecting Ciucci to this series of trials. In a five to four decision, the court declared that under Illinois law each murder was a separate crime for which the accused constitutionally could be indicted and tried separately. Ultimately Ciucci was executed. It can hardly be denied (assuming Ciucci's guilt) that Ciucci had formulated a single plan to murder all four persons. Because under Illinois law the murders represented four separate crimes it was therefor possible to try him separately for each murder, thus giving the state four opportunities rather than one opportunity to obtain the goal it sought.

The Ciucci case is important in another aspect: Ciucci claimed that the State had widely proclaimed its decision to continue to try him until a jury was obtained which would impose the death sentence. Therefor, he claimed, by the time of the third trial the jury chosen to try him had been subjected to a barrage of unfavorable prosecutor engendered newspaper publicity which made it impossible for him to have a fair trial. The Supreme Court permitted Ciucci to institute appropriate proceedings in the state court for resolution of this claim. The matter ultimately reached the Supreme Court of Illinois which held that this was an issue which could have been raised at Ciucci's trial and since it had not been asserted at that time, it was waived. The conviction was therefore reaffirmed, and on this occasion, when review was sought in the Supreme Court of the United States, certiorari was denied.

Undoubtedly it is a sound and necessary rule that a defendant must raise his defenses at the time of his trial or be deemed to have waived them. Clearly we cannot tolerate a situation where a defendant holds back his defenses and thus may insist upon an indefinite series of trials. Yet it is conceivable that had this defense been raised at the trial the result might have been otherwise. It seems to us that we can rest more easily if we know that this rule results at most in a sentence to imprisonment rather than depriving the defendant of his life.

Consider another aspect of the problem. A criminal trial is a search for the truth but it is a stylized search for the truth. It is a search for the truth conducted pursuant to a formal set of rules which in theory at least apply with equal force to the prosecution and the defense. In the generality of cases these rules operate to secure, in so far as possible, reliable, trustworthy evidence. But the very rule that operates to the advantage of Defendant A can work to the disadvantage of Defendant B, and if Defendant B is on trial for his life it is no doubt small consolation for him to know that the rule which in the majority of cases protects the innocent, in his case has the effect of sending him to his death. Let us illustrate. As a general rule heresay evidence is inadmissible. Hence if the defense has evidence which it regards as crucial, such evidence must be presented by means of a witness who has personal knowledge of the facts and who therefore can be subjected to cross-examination. But let us suppose that in a particular case the defense is an alibi (in the technical rather than in the derogatory sense) and the alibi witness is a bishop with whom the defendant was playing a game of chess on the night of the murder. Suppse that the bishop dies before the trial. What happens then to the defense? If the defense is an alibi and if the alibi witness is a bishop and if the bishop lives to testify at the trial, he doubtless will be believed and the defendant may well be acquitted. If, however, the defendant is so unwise as to play the very same game of chess with a friend who has served time in the penitentiary, that witness's credibility can be impeached and no doubt the defense alibi will fail. It is for reasons such as these that we insist that the question of capital punishment cannot be viewed in the abstract. Much may depend upon whether the crucial evidence has been preserved and whether it is still available to counsel for the defense. This in turn may depend upon how soon after the crime counsel was obtained or it may depend upon sheer matters of chance. Thus we see that in the fairest of trials fortune plays a large role, favoring now the prosecution and now the defense. Given the most skilled and diligent attorney, the most learned and fairest of judges, the most able of juries, the outcome of a criminal trial may none the less be determined by the fall of chance. We said earlier in this memorandum that to speak of judicial error was to oversimplify the problem. We think that the fore oing explains the reason for this statement.

3. The Defense is Seriously Handicapped by lack of pre-trial discovery in criminal trial.

In civil litigation the parties have full opportunity to explore, in advance of trial the opposing party's case. Through pre-trial depositions and discovery, one may examine witnesses under oath, inspect documents and in general, be protected against surprise at trial. In the main, these protections are inapplicable in criminal trials. In Illinois, the defendant is informed of the witnesses who may be called, but has no way to compel them to reveal in advance what their testimoney may be. True, there is a growing body of law requiring the prosecution not to suppress evidence favorable to the accused. But unless the defendant learns of the suppressed evidence by fortuitious events, these rules do not help him. In the case of Lloyd Miller, mentioned below, the lack of such discovery procedures nearly led to the execution of a man, even though the State had in its files its own expert's statement containing facts highly inconsistent with guilt.

4. In the battle, the State has a full range of technical and scientific resources. The defendant is granted no such assistance. Frequently he must depend on volunteer counsel, working free and even paying all or part of the expenses.

Few Susannas of today are saved by the perspicacity of their Daniels. She was wrongfully accused of adultery by the elders who had spied upon her while she was bathing in her garden. According to the Revised Standard Version, (v. 41), the assembly believed (the elders) because they were elders of the people and judges, and they condemned her to death." But Daniel, as she was being led to execution, insisted upon cross-examining the elders while they were separated from each other. One claimed the act was committed under a mastic tree, the other under an evergreen oak. "Thus innocent blood was saved that day." (v. 62).

Today skilled cross examination is rarely enough. It takes not only skilled counsel, but also a corps of pathologists, chemists, physicians and other experts if a crime is to be thoroughly explained and a full defense presented. Yet the State provides none of this for the accused. Whatever defense may be advanced in a criminal trial the fact is that the defense does not prepare itself. The facts must be dug out by a difficult and laborous process by counsel. Yet the life of the defendant in a shocking number of cases depends upon the volunteer assistance of unpaid counsel. Many of the defendants are penniless. They are locked in prison. Many owe their lives to members of the bar of this state who take it upon themselves to exhaust every legal resource to aid these men. In some some of these cases counsel have not only have served without fee but also have expended a substantial sum of their own. Thus in the case of Richard Carpenter,[1] counsel spent over $1,500.00 in a futile effort to save his life. The life of Paul Crump[2] was saved because Crump was lodged in the Cook County Jail in Chicago whose warden Jack Johnson had abolished death row and permitted capital prisoners to participate generally in prison life. Because of this, and the years that elapsed in the courts, counsel were able to argue successfully that Crump had been rehabilitated. But for this circumstance and the extraordinary efforts of energetic counsel there is little question that Crump would have been executed.

In the case of Lloyd Eldon Miller, Jr.[3], years after the conviction, the chief witness against him admitted she committed perjury. Further, at a clemency hearing, it was established that the prosecution had discouraged witnesses from talking to the defense before trial and that the prosecution had concealed evidence inconsistent with guilt. These facts were divulged only through the efforts of a large corps of volunteer counsel, backed by the funds and advice of another attorney who did not participate in court. Seven hours before the execution a stay was obtained in the Federal courts. Miller's attorneys were fortunate to secure the volunteer services of a chemist who devoted hours to the study of the evidence. During a subsequent trial, this chemist established that a pair of shorts, a crucial piece of prosecution's evidence supposedly blood stained, was actually stained with paint.

5. The extensive appellate procedures are largely confined to questions of law. On disputed fact questions, the findings of a single judge or jury in general are decisive.

Another aspect of the criminal process that is ill understood by non-lawyers is the significant and sometimes crucial role of the jury (or the findings of the court in cases which are not tried before a jury.) On the crucial question of guilt or innocence the findings of the jury may well be determinative. All else, including appellate proceedings and habeas corpus actions in the federal court may prove to be commentary. It is a common but mistaken view of non-lawyers, accustomed to hear of the numerous reviews received by capital prisoners to think that each court has before it the crucial question of guilt or innocence and is free to determine for itself where truth lies. Every lawyer knows such is far from the truth. In general, only questions of law may be reviewed in the appellate courts, e.g. questions such as whether a witness was competent to testify, whether certain evidence was properly admitted, whether the instructions to the jury were correct, etc. Of course, constitutional questions are open for review. But as to a significant range of questions, e. g. whether a witness should or should not have been believed, whether the fatal weapon was or was not the defendant's, it is the verdict of the jury which controls. It is only in exceptional cases that it is possible to overcome the verdict of the jury with respect to questions of fact. The case of Charles Townsend (See Townsend v. Sain, 372 U.S. 293 (1963)) will serve to illustrate our point. We are reluctant to discuss individual cases in detail but we feel that only by so doing can we convey to the non-lawyer the full scope of the point we are trying to make. Townsend was convicted of murder and sentenced to death by the Criminal Court of Cook County. The conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Illinois despite the fact that an expert witness for the prosecution testified that he was a near mental defective and "just a little above moron". Townsend was arrested one evening and soon began to suffer withdrawal symptoms. A prison physician administered scopolamine, a drug commonly known as "truth serum". Within an hour and a half after the administration of this drug Townsend confessed to four murders and two robberies. He was tried for one murder and acquitted. He was then tried for the second murder and sentenced to death. The evidence of his guilt, apart from the confession, was simply that one Campbell testified that about the middle of December (the murder took place on December 18, 1953) he saw Townsend walking down the street in the vicinity of the murder with a brick in his hand. A pathologist testified that death was caused by a severe blow to the head of the deceased. The Supreme Court of Illinois affirmed the conviction despite the fact that it characterized the evidence as meager. Two dissenting justices declared the testimony inherently incredible. Townsend through Counsel serving without fee, then sought relief in the federal court charging that the state suppressed the fact that the drug scopolamine which its witnesses referred to as hyoscine was known as truth serum. The petition was summarily dismissed in the Federal District Court and the dismissal affirmed by the Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court reversed, directing a preliminary hearing as to whether a full hearing on the merits should be held. The District Court again dismissed the petition. Again the Court of Appeals affirmed, the Supreme Court granted certiorari, the case was argued twice, and by a five to four decision the Supreme Court directed that the District Court give Townsend a full hearing. The case was remanded to the District Court, a full hearing was held and on this occasion the court held that he had been erroneously convicted and in effect ordered a new trial. The state appealed to the Court of Appeals which reversed the decision of the District Court, thus in effect permitting the conviction to stand. The Court of Appeals held in essence that issues raised by Townsend to the Federal Courts were or could have been considered at the time of his trial "The failure of the defendant to bring them to the jury's attention is a mere tactical mistake on his part and does not give rise to the constitutional claim cognizable in habeas corpus proceedings".[1] On January 18, 1965

1. United States ex tel Townsend v. Ogilvie, 334 F 2d 837, 841 (1964).

the Supreme Court of the United States denied certiorari. The State of Illinois is now free to execute Charles Townsend. Thus we see that despite years of effort, it has proved impossible, ultimately, to set aside the initial jury determination that the confession was voluntary and not induced by the administration of the drug. This, despite the fact that the chief surgeon for the Chicago Police Department testified in the Federal District Court that an injection of hyoscine (which is a narcotic) makes a person giddy, induces sleep and the person is not responsible for what he says.

We do not question the fact that disputed questions of fact must be resolved. Even close questions must be resolved, one way or the other. But if we assume that in the close case, society is entitled to protection against a man deemed a murderer does it follow that we must deprive that man of his life? We think not. In past years, with unconscious irony, but in light of what we have said, not without justification, the Government used to classify those executed among the accidental deaths.[1]

Some may answer to the arguments here advanced that the remedy is not the abolition of capital punishment - or that the remedy for which ACLU should work is not the abolition of capital punishment - but rather the abolition of the specific evils here complained of. To seek such a solution is to seek a chimera. We have seen already in the cases of Vincent Ciucci, Charles Townsend and Lloyd Eldon Miller, Jr. practices upheld by the courts and rules of law accepted by the courts as constitutionsl which to us at least seemed clearly wrong. We cannot hope in the foreseeable future to reshape the criminal law and criminal practices. It follows therefore it seems to us that the proper solution is the abolition of the death penalty.

We turn now to our second ground for stating that capital punishment is a civil liberties question:

Every trial for murder requires a determination on the subjective mental state of the accused, sometimes as to several issues. We know so little of the service (or art) of making such determination that life should not stand forfeit through them. We can protect society adequately through imprisonment. There is a double aspect to a trial for murder. For want of better terms we shall refer to them as the objective and the subjective aspects. The objective aspect we may dispose of quickly. The question there is whether the defendant was responsible for the death of the deceased. Was he the man who fired the fatal shot, or who inflicted the fatal stab wound? But not everyone responsible for the death of a human being is guilty of murder. Under the law of Illinois, which represents a rephrasing of the traditional common law concepts, one is guilty of murder who kills an individual without lawful justification if either he intends to kill or do great bodily harm, or knows that such acts will cause death to that individual or another. This is not all of the definition but for our purposes the foregoing will suffice. Significantly, our law for generations has recognized three major types of homicide: murder, voluntary manslaughter and involuntary manslaughter. Voluntary manslaughter is the killing under a sudden and intense passion resulting from serious provocation. Involuntary manslaughter is killing where one acts in such a manner as is likely to cause death or great bodily harm to an individual and the acts are performed recklessly. Let us illustrate briefly the kinds of problems that arise.

1. See Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1951, Table 74, p. 69, footnote 12 for 1900, 1910 and 1920.

Let us consider the voluntary manslaughter requirement of a "sudden and intense passion resulting from serious provocation". The classic case, of course, is that of the husband who surprises his wife in the very act of adultery. No doubt he will be adjudged guilty of voluntary manslaughter and not murder if indeed he does not escape conviction altogether. If convicted of voluntary manslaughter the maximum penalty is from one to 20 years. If, however, he is convicted of murder, then the punishment may be death or improisonment for an indeterminate term with a minimum of not less than 14 years.

Few wives are indiscreet enough to be caught in the very act, and therefore the cases which arise frequently involve surprise during conduct of a less serious nature. Let us consider a case which went to the Supreme Court of the United States, Alcorta v. Texas, 355 U. S. 28 (1957). Alcorta came upon his wife one evening in a parked car embracing Castilleja. Alcorta put Castilleja forever beyond his wife's embraces. The case came up under the law of Texas, but suppose it had come up under the law of Illinois. Did Alcorta commit voluntary manslaughter or murder? Much depends upon the answer. No one can doubt that Alcorta suffered a sudden and intense passion. The question is whether it resulted from serious provocation. The Illinois statute is ready to help us in our difficulty with a definition of "serious provocation". Serious provocation is "conduct sufficient to excite an intense passion in a reasonable person". Hence the question before the court of jury would be [1] whether the conduct of Mrs. Alcorta and Castilleja was sufficient to excite an intense passion in a reasonable person.

Here again we are not creating artificial situations for family disputes and tiffs among lovers form a sizeable portion of all homicide cases, and it is in the family disputes and lovers quarrels that issues of this character are likely to arise. In resolving questions of this character we must remember that much depends upon the social group within which the parties moved. Conduct which in one society might be regarded as wanton in another could be viewed merely as customary social greeting.

Let us return to the case of Alcorta. There is another element not yet mentioned: at the trial Alcorta testified that he has reason to believe that his wife had been intimate with Castilleja. Such testimony of course injects a whole new area of inquiry into the case. How "reasonable" were Alcorta's suspicions? In the actual case it turned out that Castilleja had informed the prosecution that he had in fact been intimate with Mrs. Alcorta and accordingly Alcorta's suspicions were well founded. This fact was not presented to the court and jury and indeed Castilleja denied having any more than a casual relation with Mrs. Alcorta. Because of this act of deception Alcorta's conviction was upset in the Supreme Court.

Here we see that the jury was asked not to make a determination of an objective act but rather to make a determination of a man's state of mind. We have picked at random only a single state of mind determination to be made by a jury. In fact, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case, state of mind issues may arise in a myriad of forms. Suppse, for example, that the defense is justification, that is, the defense says that the defendant really believed that force was necessary to defend himself against another's imminent use of unlawful force. What is a "reasonable belief" is a question which frequently arises in murders resulting from tavern brawls. Suppse the deceased put his hand in his pocket and the accused testifies that he stabbed the deceased because he thought the deceased was about to pull a gun on him. Suppose the deceased in fact had a gun in his pockets? Suppose the deceased in fact did not have a gun in his pocket?

1. And was under Texas law essentially the same.

The question of the voluntary character of a confession, of course, is a state of mind issue. Here a jury is asked to judge in the quiet of a court room the effect of a given interrogation upon a man whom they do not know, they learn of him as a person only through the test mony of partisan witnesses, given under the stress of trial relating to events which almost invariably are hotly disputed. Similarly where the defense is mental illness or mental defect we have a state of mind issue. It seems scarcely necessary to belabor this point. Illinois, in its new crminal code in basic essentials has adhered to the M'Naughten rules first formulated in 1843. The question of the competency of the accused to stand trial is a state of mind issue. Again, under Illinois law, under some circumstances, intoxication or the use of narcotics may render a person incapable of forming the intent which is an element of an offense.

We do not wish to rule out state of mind determinations in criminal trials. There is a difference recognized by the law and recognized by mankind generally between a homicide committed, as the law used to say, "with malice aforethought" and a homicide committed innocently or negligently or even recklessly. Surely different punishments are in order for these various crimes. We do not dispute this fact. But we do say, however: questions of human motivation, responsibility, ability to withstand interrogation, effects of narcotics and alcohol upon the human system, etc. are matters of extraordinary complexity. Medicine generally, and psychiatry in particular, has been able to supply only a feeble light in some areas of these problems. We can, it seems to us, in good conscience reconcile ourselves to the necessity for the resolution of these questions as best they cen be resolved by a court or by a jury. Such resolution is ncessary as part of the price of human society. But we are tragically in error when we rest decisions of life and death upon these fallible judgments. We exact a price from the individual which society does not need for its protection.

For the reasons advanced above it seems to us that the question of capital punishment is a civil liberties issue with which ACLU ought to be concerned. We recommend further that ACLU work for the abolition of the death penalty.

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

Re: Recommendation on Rejection of Non-commerical Advertising

Factual Background:

During recent years, a number of incidents have been reported to the national ACLU office in which non-commercial advertising was rejected by newspapers, magazines and other communications media having advertising space or time for sale. These incidents included: the refusal of two major newspapers in Columbus, Ohio to accept advertisements dealing with world peace and the Cuban situation from a group of local organizations; the refusal of the Saturday Review to accept a classified advertisement from an organization of male homosexuals; and the refusal of the Philadelphia Transportation Company to accept car card advertisements from Women's Strike for Peace. Undoubtedly there have been other unreported incidents of a similar nature.

The cases dealing with such situations have generally held that the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment includes the publishers' right to be free from compulsion to accept advertising. This has also been the position of the ACLU in the past.

Recommended Policy Statement:

The ultimate purpose of the freedom of speech provision of the First Amendment is to promote the public circulation of diverse thought on political and social issues. In simpler times than our own, it was possible to reach the public with such thought by methods which are relatively ineffective in our complex society. Thus, the speech on a street corner or in a public park and the printed pamphlet or handbill reach a very small portion of the public and are too often regarded as the province of the "lunatic fringe." Today's market place of ideas is found for the most part in books, magazines, newspapers, radio and television. The idea which is denied access to this market place is unlikely to be given serious consideration by any substantial part of the public.

A significant method by which individuals and organizations can gain access to the public is the purchase of advertising space or time from newspapers, magazines, radio and television stations, and other important advertising media. The American Civil Liberties Union encourages those who control such space or time in mass communications for generalized audiences to recognize an obligation to allow all points of view to be expressed through their facilities, although that obligation may be different for those who control media appealing to specialized audiences such as labor unions and religious groups. The public interest in freedom of speech would be well served if communications media were publicly to declare and adhere to an "open" policy with respect to acceptance of non-commercial advertising. For this purpose non-commercial advertising may be defined as advertising which expresses opinion or recommends action on political or social issues as distinguished from commercial advertising which offers goods and services for sale. Non-commercial advertising does not lose its character as such because it solicits contributions to, or membership in, a nonprofit organization concerned with political or social issues. Advertisements for informational and cultural works such as books, newspapers, magazines, and motion pictures, should be treated substantially as non-commercial advertising, since these items, even though they are advertised for sale, may themselves be the means of exposing controversial viewpoints to the public. Of course, the publisher or radio-TV station owner is entitled to require compliance with existing law and with reasonable non-discriminatory regulations applied to all who seek to advertise through his facilities.

Re: ACLU of Michigan's Comment on Unfinished Portions of Board Discussion Re Church-Related Institutions of Higher Learning

Sections of the ACLU of Michigan statement pertaining to the first page and one half of the Church-State Committee's majority report of June 1, 1963 were reported to the Board at the February 15 meeting. The following represents the ACLU of Michigan's statement and comment concerning the uncompleted items of the majority report which will be before the Board on March 1.

B3. There is no objection, from a civil liberties point of view, to scholarships and fellowships to students attending accredited colleges or universities of their choice, including sectarian institutions, provided that the scholarships or fellowships

a) Are awarded in public competition on the basis of academic ability, scholarly achievement, or professional aptitude (but not to include attendance at a seminary or divinity school), or

b) Are granted in reward for specified services to the country which may have affected the recipient's educational opportunities.

B4. There is no objection, from a civil liberties point of view, to public loans to aid qualified students to attend accredited colleges or universities for scholarly or professional purposes (but not to include attendance at a seminary or divinity school) provided the loans are based on academic ability, scholarly achievement or professional aptitude. There is, similarly, no objection to tax deductions for the educational expenses of such students.

B5. There is no objection, from a civil liberties point of view, to tax exemption on properties or income where the income of property is used for non-religious educational purposes.

Comment

[There] was close division on the question of whether or not there was any objection, from a civil liberties point of view, to "tax exemption on properties or income where the income or property are used for non-religious educational purposes." The position of the [National Church-State Committee] majority on that occasion, i.e., that there can be no such objection, is a little difficult to square with the position taken at a different meeting by a different majority on the general subject of tax exemption for church-related institutions.

Subject: Recommendations of the Steering Committee of the National Development Council at its meeting February 12, 1965.

Recommendations of the Steering Committee requiring Board action at this time were as follows:

(1) Louisiana. The Louisiana Civil Liberties Union has been under legal attack through indictment of some of its leading attorneys under the state anti-subversive law and has been exposed to intense harrassment because of its vigorous litigation program.

In the face of a highly explosive civil rights situation expected through the rest of the year, the LCLU finds itself hampered by the defection of some cooperating attorneys. Despite these factors, they are carrying a heavy load of litigation, of across-the-board ACLU concerns. The Steering Committee voted to recommend to the Board that a grant of $15,600 be made to the Louisiana affiliate from the Vigilance Fund for 1965. The Steering Committee regards this as an integral part of the ACLU's whole program of defense of civil liberties in the South and recommends that an alternate method of financing the Louisiana affiliate in 1966 be a major concern of the National Development Council at its Plenary Meeting in June.

(2) Equipment Loans. The Steering Committee recommends that equipment loans totaling $19,400 be made to the National ACLU from the Vigilance Fund to be repaid over a five-year period.

At the same time, the Committee turned down requests from affiliates for small loans for the same purpose (under $1,000 each), and recommends that the national organization seek to establish a revolving fund of $2,500 to be used for two year loans to affiliates for capital equipment purchases.

NEW YORK CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

New York, New York 10010

STATEMENT ADOPTED BY THE NYCLU BOARD, FEBRUARY 16, 1965
ON "SHARED TIME"

The NYCLU finds the following features of "shared time" proposals objectionable on constitutional grounds when schools sponsored by religious institutions are included in the plan.

(1) The provision of laboratories, equipment, classrooms, and other facilities at public expense for use by parochial school students is prohibited by the First Amendment.

The defect is the same as that found in the provision of textbooks and other teaching aids to parochial schools at public expense. The fact that the facilities and equipment are used by parochial school students on public property does not alter the relationship so far as the constitutional objection is concerned—and may in fact be more objectionable. While the proponents of shared time argue that the program is one organized to help the student rather than schools (child welfare theory), the pupils are clearly being aided as registered students of the parochial schools.

(2) Shared control of the facilities and programs involved is unconstitutional to the extent that it puts religious authorities in positions of authority in public education.

Shared time necessarily involves shared programs, and such programs would be impossible without joint planning and shared administration. This is recognized, e.g., in the President's message to Congress of January 13, 1965, recommending such programs:

> "Within each community public and private nonprofit schools and agencies will cooperate to devise the plan and administer the programs for these supplementary centers."

Such an arrangement allows the officials of private schools some responsibility for planning and administering public educational projects. Where parochial schools and their officials are involved this aspect of the plan is unconstitutional because it gives partial control of the public schools administration to religious officials. In taking this stand, we are not suggesting that any restrictions should be imposed upon participation by those same individuals as citizens in the affairs of the public schools.

(3) The above features of the plan are essential to it; shared time would not exist without them. The constitutional objections to these features therefore apply to any form the plan may take. There are many additional dangers in the plan, dangers that can be expected to follow from the difficulties of administering a shared-time program. These are not, however, integral or essential parts of the shared-time concept; it is hoped there will not be occasion to call attention to them.

SHARED TIME LETTER - FINAL DRAFT

September 4th., 1964

John J. O'Connell,
Attorney General,
Olympia, Washington

Dear Mr. O'Connell:

As you undoubtedly know, our interest in the fundamental guarantees of the Bill of Rights involves us frequently in the difficult problems of separation of Church and State. Because of this, we herewith offer our comments on the "Shared Time" concept, which is presently before you for an opinion, on the request of State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Louis Bruno.

I. Since no formal plan has been presented, we address this communication to a definition of "Shared Time" which is fairly broad:

> "Shared Time" is a voluntary sharing of the pupil's school day between courses taught in the facilities of the public school and those taught in facilities of a parochial school.

We understand that the purpose and effect of "Shared Time" is to relieve church-supported schools of the financial burden of some of the more expensive courses such as manual training, domestic arts, physical education and physical sciences, which in turn permits them to concentrate on courses which are amenable to being taught with a religious orientation.

II. With this general understanding of "Shared Time" we offer the opinion that such a program in Washington need not violate either the federal or state constitutions.

Relevant to the problems posed by "Shared Time" are three established constitutional criteria:

1. All children may attend public school as a matter of right without regard to race, color, religion or other arbitrary factors: 14th Amendment, equal protection clause; also, by implication, Brown v. Board of Education 349 US 294, (1954).

2. All children may elect to attned private schools run by religious organizations as long as minimum standards set by the state are met. 1st Amendment, free exercise clause; also, Pierce v. Society of Sisters 268 US 510 (1925), (although the holding rests on an improper use of the police power rather than religious freedom).

3. Compulsory school attendance may not be used to require children to attend religious exercises. 1st Amendment, establishment and free exercise clause; Illinois ex rel, McCollum v. Board of Education 333 US 203 (1948) and Zorach v. Clauson 343 US 306 (1951).

Since it is settled that a child or his parents may choose either a public school, regardless of race or religion, or a religiously oriented school meeting minimum state requirements, the issue narrows down to this: Is part time attendance at each school under a "Shared Time" program unconstitutional?

The United States Supreme Court has never ruled on this question and no decisions of inferior courts have been found. The cases of McCollum and Zorach, supra which deal with the "Released Time" programs are in some ways similar to "Shared Time". Without undertaking a review of the fact patterns in those cases we indicate our agreement with the majority opinion in McCollum. We agree with the minority opinions in Zorach, that coercion was present and relevant and that the court should have found that the practice offended the free exercise clause of the 1st Amendment.

A similar coercive pattern is not necessary for a "Shared Time" program, and indeed, because of the Parochial School tuition to be paid by the parents of participating children, is far less likely.

The "Released Time" cases also involved argument over the applicability of the establishment clause. In McCollum, the court held that there was a clear violation of the establishment prohibition because religious exercises and instructions were held on public school property. With this element absent in Zorach the majority found no violation. The dissenting minority, however, urged that the "Released Time" program was unconstitutional because the state was thereby encouraging attendance at sectarian religious classes, a benefit not obtainable otherwise.

It is obvious that "Shared Time" would be an aid to church-schools. If it were not, there would be no request for the new program. However, there is an additional question to be asked: Is this a benefit which is prohibited under the constitution? As was pointed out in Everson v. Board of Education 330 US 1 (1946), not all benefits to religion are forbidden.. For example, law and order, the 1st Amendment, fire regulations and similar fruits of organized society benefit religion.

The argument that "Shared Time" aids religion may be stated as follows:

> To the extent that the educational function is transferred to the public school, it becomes a public expense and makes available to the church for religious purposes the money previously spent on education.

The greatest savings and benefit possible to a religion would be for it to close its schools entirely, transfer the educational responsibility to the state, and use all resourses for wholly religious purposes. While such a closure might have tidal wave ramifications on public schools, no one could argue that it would be unconstitutional. As long as a child's parents pay taxes without exemption to support the public schools, and as long as it is their right to send their child to parochial schools, a sharing of time between the two systems is that type of benefit to religion which is not forbidden by the establishment clause. To hold otherwise would be to say that the Pierce decision itself is a benefit to religion and therefore unconstitutional.

It has been noted by the State Supreme Court that the Washington Constitution's requirements on separation of church and state are more restrictive than those of any other in the nation. State ex rel Dearle v. Frazier 102 Wash 369 (1918).

Art. I, Section 11 states in part:

> ... No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise or instruction, or the support of any religious establishment.....

This section has an application to expenditures of public money, but could hardly be said to throw any new light on the subtle issue of aid to religion raised by "Shared Time".

Art. IX, Section 4, provides as follows:

> Sectarian Control or Influence Prohibited. All schools maintained or supported wholly or in part by the public funds shall be forever free from sectarian control or influence.

The "Shared Time" concept in its face would seem to violate no part of this standard. Sectarian influence would have to be evaluated once a plan were in operation.

In Perry v. School District 54 Wash 2d 886 (1959), the Washington Supreme Court had a "Released Time" program before it. It found the essence of the plan to be constitutional but struck down various details as violations of both of the provisions cited above. It should follow that this decision points to the constitutionality of "Shared Time" in the abstract but also to a close perusal of the details of any plan which is put into operation.

We find the concept of "Shared Time" to be consistent with the letter and spirit o separation of church and state. We neither recommend nor endorse this concept as a solution to the difficulties posed by the needs of religious education and the stringent requirements of the Bill of Rights.

III. Because "Shared Time" has been seriously proposed in this state, and becau it is being tried extensively elsewhere, we conclude our comments by mention of some difficulties which might arise.

In Zorach, supra, Justice Douglas noted that the school district did no more than adjust its schedules to a program of outside religious instruction, 343 US at 315. From the literature available on "Shared Time" programs presently in existence, i is clear that one of the biggest problems facing such a program is the scheduling of classes. The adjustment of schedules in a "Released Time" situation referred t by Douglas would be a very minor matter compared with the scheduling of classes under "Shared Time" in a modern high school. There would have to be a substantial and sustained communication between the two school systems to acheive the smooth transfer of pupils from one school building to another. Such communication in and of itself is not taboo, and it might have the happy result of breaking down false prejudices and ignorance. It should not, however, be permitted to introduce violations of church-state separation no matter how minor in the course of co-operation. For example, as in Perry, supra, the public school classrooms must not be used as vehicles for recruitment of participants in the program.

School bus transportation cannot legally be afforded to parochial school pupils. Mitchell v. Consolidated School District No. 201 17 Wash 2d 61 (1943), Visser v. Nooksack Valley School District 33 Wash 2d 699 (1949). Under a "Shared Time" program it would seem that if a pupil spends part of the day at the public school and the remainder of the day at the church school, transportation at public expe should be allowed only in the morning incident to the public school attendance a Transportation between schools could probably not be publicly supported.

Since the "Shared Time" proposal is yet untried in this state, the various and subtle ways in which sectarian influence could enter the public school is simply conjecture. The examples given above cannot be exhaustive. The fact that any such plan which is educationally successful necessitates coordination and cooperation between church and state, means that the warning given here is not an idle one. By the same token, the possibility should not be treated as a foregone conclusion.

In summary, we find the "Shared Time" concept to be consistent with strict separation of church and state, but we point to real dangers which could render the application unconstitutional.

HARTFORD CHAPTER
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION
Adopted by Hartford Chapter, Which also Adopted Larry Speiser's Congressional Testimony

Report of Church-State Committee on Shared Time

This committee has considered the question of policy with respect to proposals for use of the public schools by students of non-public schools for non-sectarian subjects, commonly referred to as "Shared time." This concept was the subject of legislation in the last congress (H.R. 6074) and will presumably be the subject of a similar bill in the new session since it represents an effort to provide a form of financial assistance to non-public schools in an indirect manner which its sponsors feel does not run afoul of the Constitutional prohibition against aid to sectarian institutions.

The Committee considered the statement published by the National Church-State Committee and is generally in agreement with all that is said therein and particularly the problem areas insofar as such a program might become tainted by segregated classes, loss of control over the classes by the public school system, etc. If properly administered and controlled by the public school system so that the school system was given the private school child for some period of the day to schedule as it saw fit, there would appear to be no violation of the Constitutional prohibition. This is predicated upon the fact that the aid here is being rendered directly to the child under conditions controlled by the public school system.

In reviewing the testimony before the Congressional Subcommittee, Dr. Leo Pfeffer pointed out a number of dangers in the proposed program but basically criticized the philosophical approach to the whole question. Members of the Committee raised questions as to whether such a program might not weaken the public school system as suggested by Dr. Pfeffer in that it would increase the load without allowing the school system to teach courses wherein a non-sectarian attitude could be extremely beneficial in avoiding possible divisiveness resultant from sectarian educational programs. As pointed out in the testimony before the House Subcommittee by Theodore Powell, shared time has been employed in the Hartford School System for more than 30 years in the teaching of sewing, cooking and industrial arts. Similar programs are currently in effect in a number of other communities for a variety of subjects.

The Committee raised the question as to whether the terminology "local educational agency" was limited to a public school system since this term was not defined in the proposed Bill. The Act which the Bill would amend does define "local educational agency" as a public school system.

The Committee's feeling that the concept itself did not violate the Constitution was based largely upon the fact that the assistance here provided was directed to the child in furtherance of the obligation of the community to provide educational facilities for all children in its area. Since this is the case, the Bill is objectionable in that it limits the concept to those enrolled in "nonpublic school" which is defined as a school "which is owned and operated by one or more nonpublic, nonprofit corporations or associations no part of the net earnings of which inures, or may lawfully inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

This would then discriminate against students who might not be attending a "nonpublic school," such as a private school student at a school which incidentally did produce some revenue from its activities and even students who were being privately tutored for some of their subjects. This would appear improper if the basis of constitutionality is that the aid is directed to the child per se since some children are to be discriminated against. This factor should be called to the attention of the National Committee.

One further aspect which must be considered is the relationship of such a program to students of nonpublic schools who are not residents of the community served by the public school system. Thus, if the policy of the community is to exclude nonresidents from the school system, the shared time program should not discriminate in favor of the students of the nonpublic school. If the community admits non-residents but charges a tuition fee, then this program must be applied equally here.

It was also felt that the American Civil Liberties Union should support the inclusion in any legislation a provision which would enable a taxpayer to challenge the Constitutionality of the Act.

January 1965

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF MASSACHUSETTS

Position on "Shared Time" adopted at the meeting of the Executive Committee on September 11, 1964

Under the "shared-time" concept, children would be accepted as part-time students in a public school, meeting the balance of their educational requirements by simultaneously attending a private school. This proposal poses three distinct questions:

First: Is it wise educational or social policy to accept students on a part-time basis? While this is obviously an important question, it is not a civil liberties issue and is therefore beyond the scope of this pamphlet.

Second: Is a public school required to admit part-time students on the theory that refusal would violate the religious liberty of those who attend private schools for reasons of religion? Certainly, provision for all children to attend either public or private schools, at their election, adequately protects their religious liberty. Therefore, the state is under no constitutional obligation to accept students part-time.

Third: If a public school does accept part-time pupils who also attend religious schools, does this constitute an establishment of religion? We do not believe that it does. The mere act of accepting and educating a child cannot constitute an aid to religion. The fact that such an arrangement may make it possible for the child to obtain religious schooling does not put the state in the position of fostering religion. If that were so, then permitting children to attend religious schools on a full-time basis would constitute an aid to religion.

There are obviously enormous practical problems involved in accepting part-time students and it has been suggested that in burdening itself to accept students from religious schools, this constitutes an aid to religion. However, it does not seem to us relevant how much cost or expense is involved, if the act itself is proper.

Of course, in accepting part-time students, if a school should discriminate between those attending religious private schools and those attending non-religious private schools, then such a program would constitute an aid to religion.

GREATER PHILADELPHIA BRANCH, ACLU

Shared Time: In a recent memorandum you solicited the advice of the affiliates on shared time. It is the view of the Philadelphia ACLU that shared time per se does not constitute a violation of the separation principle, but that ACLU should remain alert to the possibility of such a violation arising out of distortion of the public school curriculum to academic scholars from non-public institutions.

STATEMENT ADOPTED AT THE SEPTEMBER 11, 1964
MEETING OF THE GREATER KANSAS CITY CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

The Kansas City affiliate of the ACLU after a full discussion of the "shared time" proposal has come to the following conclusion.

1. In theory "shared time" is not necessarily a violation of the First Amendment. In practice, however, it may pose a constitutional issue. We believe that the ACLU and its affiliates should carefully examine the various pilot projects of Shared Time throughout the United States with the intention of noting abuses and calling them to the attention of responsible school authorities. The pilot project phase is most important because it will tend to set regional or national patterns.

2. Since Shared Time is in our judgment a matter of public policy rather than a constitutional issue we confine our critical comments to its probable effect upon the public schools.

   a. We have grave questions about the divisiveness that may result from children receiving part of their education in public schools and part in one or more nearby sectarian schools.

   b. We have grave questions also about the public school being the educational center for technical subjects while social sciences, English and other courses are taught in sectarian schools often from the standpoint of religious dogma. While such teaching in private sectarian schools is a present fact and right we believe the program of shared time may lead to large increases of students taking "value" subjects in the newly organized church schools and technical subjects in the public schools.

   c. We fear that the public school curriculum in some communities may be fragmented to such a degree as to render it less and less useful and influential in American life. In other communities where one church or denomination is influential there may be a gradual merging of teachers and functions as is the case even now with "captive schools" so that there is little distinction between a public school and a religious one. If this should happen constitutional issues would necessarily be raised. But this fact of numerous small town communities where there are public schools now under the control of Roman Catholic authorities with nuns as teachers raises questions as to the ability or willingness of minorities to challenge such abuses.

   d. We fear also that the increased stake of sectarian school authorities in the practices, policies and programs of the cooperating public school will lead to pressures upon public school officials and teachers that do not always expose themselves in ways that invite the remedial action of civil libertarians and the courts.

Re: Shared Time

My views on the issue as I understand it are these:

1. The use of public money for private schools and private school children registered in them, whether or not under religious auspices, cannot be defended in law or policy where the State offers free public education to all children. It could be attacked as an expenditure of public funds for a private purpose. The fact that no private schools of whatever character seek public funds (save for various Catholic proposals) or get them indicates accepted law and policy.

2. Shared time seeks to escape this restriction by making private school children part-time students in public schools. But they still remain private school children whose parents reject public school education. Can public funds be lawfully used to relieve private schools of part of their burden, especially if those schools are religious? Is this not aid to a private purpose and to religion?

3. The ACLU has always opposed aid to children of religious (and presumably other private) schools, whether by bus transportation, furnishing text-books or using public school time for children released to get religious instruction. It would seem consistent with that stand to oppose aiding private schools by relieving them of part of the expense of education. Parents are always free to choose a public school, but they cannot choose both a public and private school at the same time, nor can the schools so provide, without facing the obstacle of the expenditure of public funds for a private (and practically, religious) institution. The State has no obligation to educate other than public school children registered in its schools.

Adopted by Kentucky Civil Liberties Union, 10/64

Resolution on Shared Time (Adopted by ACLU - Illinois Division
Board of Directors, June 4, 1964*)

Upon mature consideration, the Illinois Division of the ACLU has determined to oppose the introduction of a shared time program in the Chicago public schools, including particularly but not limited to the Kinzie High School, for the following reasons:

1. We believe that over a period of time it is likely to lead to a marked decline in the proportion of children attending public schools on a full-time basis, partly through increased enrollment in existing private schools and partly through the proliferation of additional part-time private schools, most of which are likely to be sectarian, but many of which may be formed for other purposes such as racial segregation, or Black Muslim or John Birch Society doctrinal training.

2. We believe that, without derogation of the right to elect a private school education at private expense, over a period of time the teaching of basic democratic values in history, civics, and other courses in the humanities and social sciences is more safely entrusted to schools subject to public control, however benevolent or enlightened particular private schools may be.

3. We believe that shared time programs will multiply divisiveness within the public schools and among children of school age; and that the cementing influence of the common school and common education will be dissipated.

4. We believe that in actual practice the role of public school boards and school administrations in determining educational policy and program in the public school will be subjected to powerful influences from private school administrations, likely to result in widespread instances of a lessened freedom of inquiry, avoidance of "controversial" subject matter and an undermining of the separation of church and state in the public school.

5. We believe it likely that unconstitutional distinctions will in practice be drawn between "part-time" pupils and "full-time" pupils, and that remedial judicial action is likely to be too slow and too late.

6. We believe that the very real financial relief given to sectarian schools by shared time programs (whether or not accompanied by a questionable public educational purpose) creates grave doubts as to the constitutionality of such programs.

7. We believe that shared time programs will open the door to expanded federal and state financial aid to private and sectarian primary and secondary schools, further depleting the strength of the public school system.

The foregoing policy statement shall be forwarded to the ACLU national Board for its consideration in determining its policy on this question and shall not be publicly released without further board action, although specific action re the Illinois scene may be considered and taken subject to board or executive committee approval at any time in accordance with customary practices.

SHARED TIME -- REPORT FROM MICHIGAN

Because of the existence of a very large shared time program in the Cherry Hill School District in a Detroit suburb, the Detroit unit's Executive Board dealt extensively with the question of shared time throughout the middle portion of 1963. In July of that year, at a special meeting of the Board devoted exclusively to that subject, the Board adopted, by a vote of 8-6 (with the vice chairman presiding and not voting), the position set forth in a paper written by its chairman. (It also agreed at that time not to release any unsolicited statement to the press until the national office had been consulted.) Excerpts from the document which the Detroit Board adopted are attached.

At its meeting in September, 1964, the Michigan Board of Directors dealt with the subject and adopted two motions.

First, that "ACLU of Michigan opposes shared time as a violation of the equal protection clauses and of the concept of separation of church and state". The vote was fourteen to eleven (not including the chairman, who asked to be recorded as opposed).

Second, that "ACLU of Michigan opposes shared time arrangements between public and parochial schools as a matter of public policy and because such arrangements constitute a substantial threat to continuing a viable system of democratic, secular, public education." The second motion was adopted by a vote of sixteen to seven (not including the chairman, who asked to be recorded as opposed).

The arguments which prevailed with a majority of the State Board may be summed up, in part, as follows. Shared time is but a form of released time. It is a device by which the compulsory attendance laws and direct and important financial benefits from the general revenues are used to promote and advance the teaching of religion. Some felt that the emphasis on "accommodation" by some of those holding the minority position was a camouflage behind which a substantial breach in the wall of separation could be made. It was argued that, by having the public schools provide the facilities and teachers for the more expensive science, art, music, and other courses, public monies were being used to encourage students to enroll in sectarian institutions to receive instruction in the "value courses" and the humanities under religious auspices. The position set forth by Charles Ares in his paper of March 24, 1964 had substantial support among those who voted for the two motions which were passed.

Neither the action of the Detroit Board nor the contrary action of the State Board has been publicized outside of the organization.

EXCERPTS FROM

SOME THOUGHTS ON CHERRY HILL SHARED TIME PROPOSAL

By Rollo O'Hare

. . . . . .

[T]hree recognized positions in ACLU policy emerge: (1) All children may attend public schools as a matter of right without regard to race, religion, or other such factors, (2) All children may abstain from attending public schools and attend private schools, even though religiously oriented, so long as those schools meet the same minimum standards established by the state as are met by the public schools, and (3) The mechanism of compulsory school attendance may not be used to require students to attend religious exercises under any form of released time program. So far as the Constitution is concerned, the first position rests on equal protection and the free exercise clause, the second on free exercise, and third on the non-establishment clause.

II

How does the interplay of these three positions affect our outlook on shared time?

Let us assume that the States in establishing the public schools for students on a fulltime basis do not incur a constitutional obligation to provide facilities and personnel for teaching students who desire to attend on less than a fulltime basis and that the ordinary Fourteenth Amendment principles would apply so that any facilities and personnel provided on less than a fulltime basis would have to be provided to all who desired them on that basis equally. There may, as Leo Pfeffer has said, be policy objections to shared time as a proposition, but at least in the present state of the law, sharing time, even with a parochial school, is probably not unconstitutional.

At least not per se.

It is sometimes argued, I think with considerable merit, that the effect of a shared time program is to save the parochial school authorities money on the courses and materials which are now being dealt with in the public school so that they will have more available for a larger group of parochial school students in the remaining subjects....But our first principle is that all children may as a matter of right attend public schools....Unless the whole is greater than the sum of its parts, it is not easy to see how a partial transfer and a partial saving accords less well with the Constitution than a total transfer and a total saving.

III

On the other hand, the State's compulsory attendance machinery operates, as with released time, on a shared time pupil both while he is at the public school and while he is at the parochial school. If the portion of the day spent in the public school increases and the portion in the parochial school lessens, a point will eventually be reached at which "shared time" will become "released time" -- and "released time", ACLU has properly said, is, in any of its forms, violative of separation of church and state.

Our three principles applied to shared time appear to lead to a dilemma....

. . . . . .

The problem then, is to reconcile the apparent contradiction.

IV

I suggest that a possible reconciliation lies in recognizing the wholly religious nature of the exercises ordinarily involved in released time programs. ACLU has opposed the use of state mechanisms to compel (or, indeed, encourage) attendance at such purely religious functions. It has been willing to allow (in fact, has held that "free exercise of religion" requires allowance of) that same mechanism to compel attendance at private schools, as substitutes for public schools, even though the private school may mix religion with the teaching of ordinary subjects in a manner which would be clearly impermissible in a public school.

If that is a satisfactory statement of ACLU's position, a shared time program would then get closer to the frightful line as displacement of the parochial school by the public school in ordinary academic subjects approached 100%, but would not go over the line into the forbidden realm of released time until the subjects being taught in the parochial school were either purely religious or wholly in excess of the required public school curriculum.

The program proposed in the Cherry Hill School District is far removed from that point.

. . . . . .

... [A]ny program, shared or full time, would become objectionable on church-state grounds if preference, discrimination or differentiation by religion in the public schools were involved. Students, on a fulltime or parttime basis, must be treated in the use of public facilities equally. Requiring Catholic students to be segregated into all-Catholic classes or to wear specific uniforms or to be taught by an instructional staff approved by the church hierarchy or to read or study from different text books would be clearly unconstitutional. But so long as the shared time pupil is treated in the public school as a public school pupil, so long as public school personnel are not used to enforce church school discipline, so long as the full control, direction and decisional authority with respect to the public schools remains in the hands of public officials, the fact that the pupil is attending part time raises policy, not constitutional, problems.

VI

I believe the Board should adopt a policy statement with respect to the Cherry Hill proposal embodying these points:

1. Shared time proposals are not per se unconstitutional.
2. No public school has any constitutional obligation to augment or dilute its fulltime educational program by participation in a shared time program.
3. No person has a constitutional right to attend the public school parttime if the school authorities determine to offer only fulltime instruction.
4. The crucial factors in determining the constitutional acceptability under the First and Fourteenth Amendments are:
   a. Is the shared time student a public school pupil in all respects while attending the public school?
   b. Do the programs, personnel, text book selection systems and other ordinary procedures of the public school remain, without dilution, subject to the exclusive control of the public and its agencies?
   c. Are shared time facilities in the public school equally available to all similarly situated who might wish to use them?
5. The Cherry Hill proposal, while it has some shortcomings which should be dealt with, appears designed to meet the tests of constitutionality and bespeaks a sensitive awareness of the difficult problems of Church-State relationships involved.

FACTUAL REPORT ON THE CHERRY HILL SHARED TIME PROPOSAL (1963)

by Maynard Gordon and Rolland R. O'Hare of the ACLU of Michigan

The Cherry Hill School District takes in roughly the top portion of Inkster (that part which lies between Cherry Hill and Avondale), a portion of North Dearborn Township lying above the eastern extremity of the Inkster part of the district, and a section of Nankin Township between Cherry Hill and Avondale to the west of the Inkster portion of the district. There are six elementary schools in which approximately twenty-five hundred children are enrolled, handling the grades from kindergarten through the sixth grade. There is one high school in which approximately 1100 people are enrolled, handling grades 7 through 12. In roughly the same area, there are two Catholic schools. One is St. Norbert, which has approximately 1000 students and handles grades 1 through 8. The second school is St. Kevin which handles only grades 1 through 3 and is not involved in the shared time experiment.

St. Norbert is located about 3/4 of a mile from Cherry Hill High School.

It is estimated that at least 80% of the children who attend St. Norbert came to Cherry Hill for the last four years of their education. There is apparently no Catholic high school near enough to be very convenient and it is indicated that the bulk of the remaining 20% of St. Norbert graduates likely went to some other public high school. (St. Norbert's district is, of course, not conterminal with the Cherry Hill School District.)

The suggestion for a shared time experiment came from the public school authorities, not the parochial school authorities. The Cherry Hill School Superintendent pointed out that there had been a long history of community support for schools in the Cherry Hill District, but the public had rejected a bond issue for the acquisition of new sites about three years ago and had rejected a millage increase proposal for ordinary operation about two years ago. He indicated that these were among the reasons that he started thinking about methods for dramatizing (or even, perhaps, increasing) the benefits of the public schools to all elements of the community, including families committed to the parochial school concept. (He estimated that the number of children from Catholic homes attending the public elementary schools in the Cherry Hill district approximated 50%.) Other reasons for the proposal being made, of a more serious policy nature, were set forth in a statement to the press. The Board of Education adopted a resolution to implement this initiative on March 8.

With or without shared time, the Cherry Hill School District intends to use about 1.6 million dollars (which is apparently already available) on some remodeling which will eventually transmute the elementary school location adjacent to the high school into a junior high. It is also intended, with or without shared time, that the present seven period day in the high school will be expanded to an eight period day. The present day runs from 8:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. and it is anticipated that the addition of an extra period will require a day running from 8:15 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. It should be mentioned that the high school is rather new, having graduated its first class last year. Prior to that time, high school students from the District were bussed to Dearborn High. There are no regular operating programs at present which involve the use of busses.

The high school has 52 of what are called "teaching stations" equipped to handle 1,560 students.

The shared time program would affect only the 7th and 8th grades. There are presently 193 students enrolled in these two grades at St. Norbert. One hundred three students are in the seventh grade and ninety are in the eight grade. It is anticipated that the seventh grade students would spend the first three periods of their day each day at Cherry Hill High School and the eighth grade students would spend three periods in the afternoon there. In each case they would be broken up into three units and would rotate among the three classes so that each unit would spend an hour each day in each of the three classes. The teacher-student ratio would, in the case of the seventh graders, be 34-1 and, in the case of the eighth graders, 30-1, as compared to the ratio of 28-1, or less, currently in the high school. In each case, two of the classes which the students from St. Norbert would take would be mathematics and science. In these two classes, they would not be mingled in any way with the fulltime public school students. The third class hour would be filled by a rotation class which operates during the forty week school year, on the following schedule: Art and Music - ten weeks, Shop and Home Economics - ten weeks, Physical Education - ten weeks, and "Personality Development" - ten weeks. In these classes, it is expected that the students from St. Norbert would be integrated to some extent with students from the regular student body. It is expected that the seventh graders will report into Cherry Hill High School first thing in the morning and will be dismissed for lunch after three periods. After lunch they will proceed to St. Norbert to spend the remainder of their school day studying language, social studies and, it is presumed, religion.

Three new teachers will be hired by the public school to accomodate the increased class load. The text books, subject matter and course of study will be the same as it is for the ordinary public school students. Texts are recommended by the professional staff and approved by the Board of Education. The students will be marked, for the classes that they take in the public school, by the public school teachers and the individual report cards will be sent to the parochial school. The particular report card in use at Cherry Hill High School does not require return with the parents' signature. The marks for the public school courses will be recorded by the public school in its records. The purpose given for forwarding the individual report cards to the parochial school is to allow the parochial school authorities to record those marks on their records if they care to do so. The question was not specifically asked, but the impression was gained that graduation would be from St. Norbert.

We talked about a few other things. Details, for example, are still to be worked out on the possible conflict in holidays and days off. The high school already takes off the Thursday and Friday before Easter so that there will be no conflict resulting from the parochial school excusing the students for Holy Thursday and Good Friday. The high school now dismisses all classes on one day a month at 2:00 p.m. and Mr. Titus indicated that this practice will not be altered. In addition, holidays aside, the high school takes two and one-half days off at the end of twelve weeks and another two and one-half days at the end of twenty-four weeks. These times are used for certain curricular and teacher counseling matters The procedure will not be altered.

We talked about the matter of dress. The high school already enforces certain regulations with respect to dress for the female students. The Catholic girls, who wear uniforms to St. Norbert, will not be required to wear the uniforms at the high school and will, under the schedule proposed, have the lunch hour in which to change if they desire. The uniforms, of course, safeguard all of the elements of feminine modesty at which the high school's own regulations are directed. They would be acceptable, though not encouraged, attire.

We talked about present specialized small scale "shared time". The parochial school students are already, on both the primary and high school level, allowed to participate in speech correction and psychological services offered at the public schools. We did not ask for or receive any data with respect to the use of these facilities, but it was clear that they were used in the public schools by the parochial school students.

We talked about other things. Spontaneously, in the course of answering a couple of questions, the Superintendent said firmly, "From the moment they enter the public school until they leave, they will be public school students." He inquired about the ACLU's participation in court proceedings in the matters surrounding Church and State and appeared to be rather well informed in and concerned about the area. He told us that he was the person responsible for the introduction by a legislator of the bill which is now Michigan's Permissive School Bus Law. All in all, we felt that there could be no question about his awareness of the Church-State problems involved in shared time. We say this without intending to express any opinion about the fruit of that awareness.

In October, 1964, Ernest Mazey, executive director of the ACLU of Michigan, reported: "Our recent inquiry has established that the segregated classes of parochial students in the Cherry Hill Public High School have continued into the second year, although our fact-finding committee a year ago had been lead to believe that such segregated classes resulted from administrative difficulties originally."

In 1960 the Union opposed a bill introduced by Senator Mundt to establish a Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials on the ground that, in effect, it might establish a national censorship board (see text of September 1, 1960 statement attached.) Our statement noted that the Union has always supported the need for research to determine whether there is a causal relationship between the reading of alleged obscene material and anti-social behavior; legislation advancing this research had been proposed in the House bill in 1960, but was deleted from the Mundt bill at that time. Now, in 1965, Senator Mundt has introduced S. 309, creating a similar Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials (the text of the bill is attached). Senator Ernest Gruening, a friend of Ernest Angell, wrote to Ernest early in January suggesting that the issue is an important one and that he planned to recommend to Senator Mundt the appointment of an ACLU representative to the Commission.

The attached exchange of letters between Ernest, the office and Senator Gruening describes this development further. We asked the Board opinion on (a) our position on S.309; (b) ACLU representation on the Commission; and (c) the general question of ACLU participation in local decent literature commissions; from time to time it has been suggested that one way of educating our censorship opponents and curbing abuses is to work "on the inside" through such local commissions.

Dear Ernest:

Jack Pemberton asked me to look into the enclosed carbon letter you received from Senator Gruening concerning the bill introduced by Senator Mundt to set up a federal commission to study noxious and obscene materials. Larry Speiser and I checked this out and found that the bill is the same as the one we opposed in the late 1950's, on the grounds that it would actually lead to federal censorship. I am enclosing a copy of our statement opposing the original Mundt bill which describes our position in further detail.

In view of this, unless you wish us to reconsider, our opinion is that we ought to continue our strong anit-censorship position and not accept Senator Gruening's invitation, even if Senator Mundt adopts the suggestion.

Cordially yours,

Dear Ernest:

I was amused - if that is the right word - by the copy of your letter of January 11th to Senator Mundt, thinking how happily he would jump at your suggestion to add to his proposed commission some representative of the ACLU! I am sure we are one of his favorite organizations.

Actually I don't think we would want to accept a position on that commission - assuming the almost totally improbable. To do so would be an implied commitment in advance to some form of official censorship. As you can imagine, this does not sit well with us as a group.

I enclose a copy of a statement we put out on a similar proposal in September 1960.

My best to you as always,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ernest:

Replying to your letter of January 29th, you will be interested to know that Senator Mundt was entirely agreeable to have a member of the Civil Liberties Union added to his committee. He suggested that as long as the bill had been drafted it be not revised before introduction to make this change, but he will be entirely agreeable to accept an amendment which I intend to propose.

I doubt very much whether acceptance on the committee carries with it any implied commitment to advance some form of official censorship. While I can understand your apprehension -- or that of anyone else -- I think it might be really useful to have some sort of a definition after hearings as to what is obscene and what goes under the head of "freedom of expression." I hope under those circumstances you may be persuaded to modify your view.

With best wishes, I remain,

Dear Mr. Speiser:

I am interested in your letter of February 3rd and your statement that you "noted with some dismay" that I am one of the sponsors of S. 309, to establish a Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials.

The whole point of this Commission is to draw a line between what is obscene and what constitutes freedom of speech. I told Senator Mundt that I would sponsor the bill only on condition that he added a representative of the Civil Liberties Union to his list of Commission members, and he agreed to accept the amendment which I would introduce to that effect.

In these circumstances, I see no reason why this matter should not be thoroughly discussed. The hearings would certainly bring out whether this legislation is going to be useful or not.

Dear Senator Gruening:

Thank you for your letter of February 10 concerning the proposed Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials. In reading the bill I do not find as one of its stated purposes the drawing of the line between what is obscene and what constitutes freedom of speech. Perhaps that is what was intended by the bill, but, if so, it certainly is not clear. However, even if it were, this seems to me to be a peculiarly judicial function rather than one for a commission.

Originally, the proposal to establish a commission of this kind intended as its major purpose a scientific study to determine whether there was a causal relationship between obscenity and anti-social conduct. As I indicated, we were in favor of such a commission. However, subsequent drafts of the bill for the commission have eliminate that purpose.

I would very much like to talk with you about this because I know of your long devotion to civil liberties and to the protection of First Amendment rights.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

January 7, 1965

Mr. Mundt (for himself, Mr. Allott, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Bible, Mr. Carlson, Mr. Case, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Dirksen, Mr. Eastland, Mr. Fannin, Mr. Gruening, Mr. Hickenlooper, Mr. Holland, Mr. Jordan of Idaho, Mr. Lausche, Mr. Prouty, Mr. Randolph, Mr. Scott, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Smathers, Mr. Sparkman, Mr. Thurmond, Mr. Tower, and Mr. Young of North Dakota) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Government Operations

---

A BILL

Creating a commission to be known as the Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

FINDINGS OF FACT AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

Section 1. The Congress finds that traffic in obscene matters and materials is a matter of grave national concern. The problem, however, is not one which can be solved at any one level of government. The Federal Government has a responsibility to find more effective ways of preventing the transmission of such matters and materials through the instrumentalities which, under the Constitution, are subject to Federal regulation. The State and local governments have perhaps an even greater responsibility in the exercise of their police powers to protect the public, and particularly minors, from the morally corrosive effects of such matters and materials. Governmental action to be effective needs the support and cooperation of an informed public. It is the purpose of this Act to bring about a coordinated effort at the various governmental levels, and by public and private groups, to combat by all constitutional means this pernicious traffic.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMMISSION ON NOXIOUS AND OBSCENE MATTERS AND MATERIALS

Sec. 2. (a) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, there is hereby created a Commission to be known as the Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b) Service of an individual as a member of the Commission or employment of an individual by the Commission as an attorney or expert in any business or professional field, on a part-time or full-time basis, with or without compensation, shall not be considered as service or employment bringing such individual within the provisions of section 281, 283, 284, 434, or 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code, or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U.S.C. 99).

MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 3. (a) NUMBER AND APPOINTMENT. - The Commission shall be composed of twenty members, appointed by the President, as follows:

(1) One from the Senate;
(2) One from the House of Representatives;
(3) Two from the Post Office Department;
(4) Two from the Department of Justice, one of whom shall be from the Federal Bureau of Investigation;
(5) One from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare;
(6) Three from the clergy;
(7) One who shall be a prominent educator in the field of secondary education;
(8) One who shall be a prominent educator in the field of higher education;
(9) One who shall be a prominent librarian;
(10) One who shall be a prominent representative of the book publishing industry;
(11) One who shall be a prominent representative of the newspaper, magazine, and periodical publishing industry;
(12) One who shall be a prominent representative of the motion picture industry;
(13) One who shall be a prominent representative of the radio and television industries;
(14) One from among the attorneys general of the several States;
(15) One who shall be a chief prosecutor of a city or county government; and
(16) One who shall be a chief law enforcing officer of a city or county government.

(b) VACANCIES. - Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(c) CONTINUATION OF MEMBERSHIP UPON CHANGE OF STATUS. - A change in the status or employment of any person appointed to the Commission pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall not affect his membership upon the Commission.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 4. The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members.

QUORUM

Sec. 5. Eleven members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 6. (a) MEMBERS OF CONGRESS. - Members of Congress who are members of the Commission shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of Congress; but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission.

(b) MEMBERS FROM THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH. - The members of the Commission who are in the executive branch of the Government shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services in the executive branch, but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission.

(c) MEMBERS FROM PRIVATE LIFE. - The members from private life shall each receive $100 per diem when engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Commission, plus reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of such duties.

STAFF OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 7. The Commission shall have power to appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as it deems advisable, without regard to the provisions of the civil service laws and the Classification Act of 1949, as amended.

EXPENSES OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 9. (a) INVESTIGATION, ANALYSIS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS . - It shall be the duty of the Commission -

(1) to explore methods of combating the traffic in obscene matters and materials at the various levels of governmental responsibility;

(2) to provide for the development of a plan for improved coordination between Federal, State, and local officials in the suppression of such traffic;

(3) to determine ways and means of informing the public as to the origin, scope, and effects of such traffic, and of obtaining public support in its suppression;

(4) to secure the active cooperation of leaders in the field of mass media for the accomplishment of the objectives and purposes of this Act;

(5) to formulate recommendations for such legislative, administrative, or other forms of action as may be deemed necessary to combat such traffic, and

(6) to analyze the laws pertaining to traffic in noxious and obscene matters and materials, and to make such recommendations to the Congress for appropriate revisions of Federal laws as the Commission may deem necessary in order to effectively regulate the flow of such traffic.

(b) REPORT. - The Commission shall report to the President and the Congress its findings and recommendations as soon as practicable and in no event later than January 31, 1967. The Commission shall cease to exist sixty days following the submission of its final report.

POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 10. (a) HEARINGS AND SESSIONS. - The Commission or, on the authorization of the Commission, any subcommittee or member thereof, may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, hold such hearings and sit and act at such times and places, administer such oaths, and require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as the Commission or such subcommittee or member may deem advisable. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the Chairman of the Commission, of such subcommittee, or any duly designated members, and may be served by any person designated by such Chairman or member. The provisions of sections 102 through 104 of the Revised Statues of the United States (2 U.S.C. 192-194) shall apply in the case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this section.

(b) ADVISORY COMMITTEES. - In carrying out its duties under this Act, The Commission (1) may constitute such advisory committees within States composed of citizens of that State, and (2) may consult with Governors, attorneys general, and other representatives of State and local government and private organizations, as it deems advisable. Any advisory committee constituted pursuant to this subsection shall carry out its duties without expense to the United States.

(c) OBTAINING OFFICIAL DATA. - The Commission is authorized to secure directly from an executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality, information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics for the purpose of this Act, and each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Commission, upon request made by the Chairman or Vice Chairman.

STATEMENT OF AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION ON S. 3736 TO ESTABLISH A COMMISSION ON NOXIOUS AND OBSCENE MATTERS AND MATERIALS

Members of the American Civil Liberties Union -- like other Americans -- are deeply aware of the problem of obscenity in our modern society. In the common desire to meet the challenge posed by the high incidence of juvenile delinquency, the desire for a simple cause and a quick solution is understandable. The emotions of pity and indignation lead to the plausible conclusion that, if we can give some public official or officials broad powers to stop the flow of "smut," we shall then have gone a long way to insulate our children from pernicious influences which, unrestrained, may lead them into degradation and crime.

But such an easy solution, attractive as it seems, does not solve the complex and difficult question of obscenity, or the constitutional problems raised by enlarging governmental authority in this area. To begin with, we should recall that the Supreme Court has already ruled that we cannot constitutionally reduce all of our literature to a level fit for consumption by children. (Butler v. Michigan, 352 U.S., 380, 1957). Beyond that, we hold the constitutional guarantees of free speech and press apply to all expression, and that there is no special category of "obscenity" or "pornography" to which different constitutional tests apply. To be consistent with our view of civil liberties and constitutional freedoms, an obscenity statute must at least be definite enough to guide the average man, and also require that, before any material can be held to be obscene, it must be found to present beyond a reasonable doubt a clear and present danger of normally inducing behavior which has been made criminal by a valid statute.

We wish to make it clear that we do not profess to be experts on the issue of whether there is a causal relationsip between the reading or viewing of books and films and the commission of an illegal act, but we do know there is a great different of expert judgment on this question. As we said in 1955, in a pamphlet which discussed the relationship between crime comics and juvenile delinquency: "The ACLU believes that comic books, like other mass media, may play an important part in the development of children's minds and behavior. But, in view of the divergent - even contradictory - opinions expressed by responsible and qualified persons, it believes that there is lacking the assurance that crime comics are a signficant cause of delinquency."

The need for further research on this basic question was forcefully expressed in the final report of the Senate Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency in the first session of the 85th Congress, issued on March 4, 1957. That subcommittee was headed by Senator Kefauver of Tennessee. Under the heading (p. 127) "More Basic Research is Needed in Behavioral Problems," the report states:

"The insistent demands for immediate action programs to prevent and treat juvenile deliquency should not obscure the equally important need for long-range, fundamental research on the nature of man and society. Research provides the necessary basic knowledge concerning human social behavior upon which rational effective action programs must be based. In the course of its deliberations, the subcommittee was impressed time and time again with the serious gaps in our knowledge of the fundamental mechanisms of human behavior in our society. Such knowledge is as essential for a far-reaching solution of juvenile delinquency as it is to other pressing social problems. The subcommittee, therefore, believes that the encouragement of basic research in the social sciences must be an essential feature of any systematic program designed to meet the problems created by delinquent behavior.

"Many expert witnesses before this subcommittee have reported on various phases of research findings to date. In the testimony some solid facts have been combined with interesting speculations and revealing insights. But much remains to be known. The intricate web of inter-relationships among home environment, parent-child relationships, community facilities, personality structure, broken homes, inter-group relations, school curricula, religious and spiritual values, and the contents of the mass media of communication has been noted. The exact nature and deeper meaning of these relationships, however, still remains to be unraveled.

"Do disturbed children tend to watch television more than non-disturbed children? What does this mean in terms of the future behavior of the child? What are the basic personality characteristics and family environments of non-delinquent children brought up in disorganized and undesirable neighborhoods? Do comic books reinforce, discourage, or encourage anti-social behavior? Before we can begin to probe thoroughly such questions, we must know a great more about the nature of human beings, the course of personality development, and the social and cultural processes that shape and direct human behavior. Basic research can do much in helping us discover and define the general patterns of human social behavior, and thus establish the larger contents in terms of which the mosaic of questions arising from specific social problems will be seen in proper perspective.

"Research plays a particularly important role in the attack upon social problems. It permits the formulation of hypotheses that can be tested and verified by experiments and systematic observations. It leads to the removal of a body of knowledge from the realm of assured and demonstrated fact. It substitutes proof for unwarranted assertions. For example, only well-designed research can provide a sound basis for evaluating the controversial allegations about the impact of television and comic books and other mass media upon the study habits and behavior of children and youths."

Supreme Court Justice Douglas says in his book, The Right of the People at p. 65, "Certainly the common test suggested by the courts -- whether the publication arouses sexual thoughts -- cannot be squared with the First Amendment. A state of mind is not enough; it is the relationship of that state of mind to overt action that would seem to be critical." He continues by stating that "(The First Amendment) should be respected even when we come to offensive material, unless there is such a close nexus between the words and anti-social action that the two can be said to be brigaded. The excesses that must be tolerated will bring less evil than the institution of a regime of censors looking for material that is offensive." We agree wholeheartedly with Justice Douglas.

S. 3736, a bill introduced by Senator Karl Mundt of South Dakota, would create a Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials - to explore methods of combatting the traffic in such books and publications; to develop a plan coordinating federal, state, and local efforts to suppress such traffic; to determine ways of obtaining public support in its suppression; and to secure the active cooperation of the mass media in accomplishing this objective.

ACLU POSITION

The Union originally favored the establishment of a properly-selected Commission under a prior bill, H.R. 11454, to make a scientific study to determine whether there is a causal relationship between printed material and anti-social behavior. The ACLU does not argue that there may not be a causal relationship, but that in the absence of clearly demonstrable proof, there is no real basis for the assumption that such a relationship exists. The purpose of H. R. 11454 has been completely eliminated from S. 3736. S. 3736 proceeds on the assumption that there is such a causal relationship, and that certain printed matter has a "morally corrosive effect." We have pointed out before that this statement of fact is not supported by reliable scientific studies of this problem and that, on the contrary, there is a great deal of confusion as to whether such a causal relationship exists or not. The conclusion that there is a causal connection between obscene matters and juvenile delinquency and crime will undoubtedly satisfy great numbers of people, but will not necessarily solve the basic problem or dismiss the constitutional objections to S. 3736.

It should be noted that the word "noxious" does not appear in the findings of fact and declaration of policy in S. 3736, although the word "noxious" does appear in the title of the Commission itself. The omission of this word is important as an indication of the loose thinking which was used in the drafting of this bill. It is obvious that "noxious" and "obscene" are not identical in meaning or scope, yet the drafters of this bill, either by design or inadvertence, have not included the word "noxious" in the findings of fact. Perhaps more important this word has never been judicially defined in the free press field. What effect it will have on the operation of the Commission if this bill passes is difficult to determine, but certainly such an ambiguity should be resolved before proceeding further.

The Commission to be created by S. 3736 is aimed at suppressing some printed matter -- in violation of the First Amendment. Yet the bill fails to define specifically what is to be suppressed. It provides no judicial procedure to determine what comes within the purview of the Commission. S. 3736 may, in effect, establish a national censorship board.

Until it has been conclusively established that there is a causal relationship between obscene materials and matters and crime and other types of anti-social conduct, the American Civil Liberties Union will oppose this type of act and urge that it not be adopted.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION of Washington NEWS

Vol. 2 February 20, 1965 8[illegible]9 No. 3

Sullivan explains our stand on abolishing death penalty

The State Board of Directors has adopted a policy in opposition to capital punishment.

At the February 4th meeting, Douglas Shaw Palmer introduced a resolution calling upon the State Legislature to abolish the death penalty.

The question had been scheduled for debate, and chapters and members had been asked to relay their feelings to the board. At the start of the discussion, communications from three chapter areas were read. The Benton-Franklin Chapter had decided the imposition of the death sentence is not a civil liberties question, and so informed the Board. The Tacoma Chapter at its January meeting had reached the opposite conclusion. A group of 12 members in Walla Walla sent a petition to the Board urging abolition of the death penalty on due process grounds.

After intensive consideration of the issue, it was voted that the State affiliate opposes capital punishment, and President John J. Sullivan was authorized to testify as to our position at the hearings in Olympia.

The text of his remarks is published below in order to inform members of the basis for our opposition to capital punishment.

(Before the Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives in the State of Washington, February 8, 1965.)

As chairman of the Washington State Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, I'm speaking in favor of House Bill No. 8, which provides for complete abolition of capital punishment in Washington. Because of the limited time available, I will address myself only to the Civil Liberties problems raised by the death penalty.

The first objections from the Civil Liberties standpoint relate to the way capital cases are administered in Washington and in most other states in the country. Historically these objections cannot be practically resolved without abolishing the death penalty itself.

A. THE DEATH PENALTY AS ACTUALLY ADMINISTERED IS UNFAIR AND RESULTS IN BIASED CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

1. The defendant in the capital case does not have a jury made up of a cross section of society. It is only in capital cases that the jury not only passes on the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but also fixes the penalty to be imposed. Under Washington law, all prospective jurors in such cases who would be reluctant to impose a punishment of death are summarily disqualified from serving. Thus the jury is not made up of the defendant's peers, but rather, this jury—which must pass on all issues of the case—consists only of those members of society who favor capital punishment. Such jurors are likely to be more vindicitive and less compassionate than the rest of the population. In fact—as was recently demonstrated in Oregon—they make up only a minority of the general population.

2. It has been clearly demonstrated that the poor are much more likely to be executed than persons of means. Warden Louis E. Lawes, the long-time warden at Sing-Sing Penitentiary in New York State, had the following to say in his book 20,000 Years at Sing-Sing:

> In all of my years as Warden of Sing-Sing prison, I have never seen anyone wealthy or educated go to the electric chair.

and James V. Bennett, Director of the United States Bureau of Prisons, upon his retirement in 1961 stated:

> "With a few isolated exceptions, the persons put to death each year are penniless and friendless."

3. Historically, it has been established that members of racial minority groups are far more likely to be executed than others. More than 50 per cent of all persons executed in the United States since 1930 have been non-whites.

4. It is far more difficult to obtain an impartial jury in a capital case because of the lurid press coverage and the highly emotional atmosphere that often accompanies capital cases. This of course increases the likelihood of an injustice. Justice Felix Frankfurter of the United States Supreme Court commenting on this problem stated:

> Can fallible men and women possibly reach a disinterested verdict based exclusively on what they hear in a courtroom when before they enter the jury-box their minds are saturated by press and radio?

All of these factors increase the likelihood of an unjust verdict. Because of the frailities of men, an unjust verdict may occur in any criminal trial. However, in other cases there is always some chance that an injustice, if it has occurred, can be corrected. In capital cases, once the extreme penalty has been imposed nothing can be done.

B. THE DEATH PENALTY IS IRREVOCABLE.

It creates a complete denial of any opportunity for the exercise of post-conviction remedies, if an injustice is discovered after the sentence is carried out.

In every other type of punishment the defendant still has the right to continue to establish his innocence through new evidence, or by showing that his trial was infected with constitutional error, and often this has been done. Between 1936 and 1961, for example, the United States Supreme Court reversed 16 capital cases solely upon the ground that the defendant's confession had been produced by corecion. No one can tell how many meritorious cases never reached the United States Supreme Court in this period.

Some of the previous speakers who are in favor of retaining capital punishment have paraded before you stories of defendants who have committed brutal and vicious crimes. They have climaxed their appeal to your emotions by saying these men deserve to die.

THE HORROR OF SUCH CRIMES is indeed shocking, and provokes in the most stable man a desire for vengence. But the administration of justice must not be based upon vengence. Reasonable men will recall Sacco and Vanzetti, Tom Mooney, Jerome Frank, and others. There is a clear and documented record that since 1890 more than one person every year who has been condemned to death in America has later been proven innocent. For countless others, whose convictions were not later examined because of the fruitlessness of attempting to clear a man who has already been executed—the case is closed.

The position of the American Civil Liberties Union and all thinking people in this state may be summed up in the words of Thomas Jefferson, who stated:

> I shall continue to ask for the abolition of the Punishment of death until I have the infallibility of human judgment clearly demonstrated to me.

This is not a time for compromise. We must abolish this barbaric institution and restore the dignity of man.

Capital Punishment

The existence of capital punishment in New York affects civil liberties in two aspects, both of which impel us to recommend that abolition be called for and supported by the Civil Liberties Union.

1. Capital Punishment is a Violation of the Constitutional Prohibition of Cruel and Unusual Punishment.

Although the Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the death penalty as being not in violation of the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment, its rulings do not foreclose the Civil Liberties Union from urging that the Court should hold differently. If it urges this position, it should similarly support and urge legislative abolition, as another way of achieving the goal of abolishing a cruel punishment.

The question that calls for examination, therefore, is whether capital punishment, in our opinion, constitutes cruel and unusual punishment within the Eighth Amendment. A recent work, The Law of Criminal Correction[1] takes the position that it does. It reads as follows:

> . . . Thus far the courts have upheld its validity against the charge that it violates this provision. As we shall see, the test of what is "cruel and unusual" varies with the times and popular moods; interpretations reflect the contemporary judiciary's notions of cruelty and singularity. Two specific tests are applied; first, whether the punishment is repugnant to the conscience of civilized men; second, whether the punishment is out of all proportion to the offense.

The failure of the courts to apply the cruel and unusual punishment test to strike down the death penalty demonstrates the poverty of application of the noble constitutional pillar. In a country where taking a life feloniously is considered the gravest crime, taking a life as a punishment is not considered cruel, whether the method of execution is shooting, hanging, electrocution or any other device the states have chosen. The legislatures in several states have determined that the penalty is not suitable for our civilization, and at least one was led to abolishing it through the cruelty of a hanging. The courts, however, led by the United States Supreme Court, have refused to acknowledge that execution is a cruel punishment. Their words reveal that they are governed by precedent rather than reason. In a case in which a man survived electrocution through faulty mechanism and then was subjected to it a second time, the Supreme Court said: "The cruelty against which the Constitution protects a convicted man is cruelty inherent in the method of punishment, not the necessary suffering involved in any method humanely employed to extinguish life humanely." The sections quoted from The Law of Criminal Correction are extensively footnoted in the original. As an office economy, the footnotes are not reproduced here.

American law forbids the infliction of unnecessary pain in carrying out the death sentence. The Court was able to recognize pain in the incidental procedure, but not in the fatal act itself. Thus, according to this view, slapping a man needlessly before execution is cruel and unusual punishment, but killing him is not.

Tradition governs, not humanity or logic. Seventy-five years ago a New York governor who sought and obtained passage of a bill to substitute electrocution for hanging said: "The present mode of executing criminals by hanging has come down to us from the dark ages, and it may well be questioned whether the science of the present day cannot provide a means of taking the life of such as are condemned to die in a less barbarous manner." But despite these words, which the Supreme Court quoted two years later, the Court upheld hanging, as it still upholds the other forms of execution.

The Constitution does not say, "Punishments shall not be cruelly imposed"; it says, "Cruel and unusual punishments shall not be imposed." It does not appear that the Court has ever examined the ingredients that might make the death penalty inherently cruel, physically and psychologically. It has not considered the mental cruelty imposed not only on the one who is being executed but also on many other persons who are under sentence of death but will not be executed because of innocence or legal error or clemency. Reprieves are granted only minutes before an execution is scheduled to occur, and often, apparently as regular practice, commutations are granted only shortly before the scheduled time of execution. The mode of action but not the deed itself is condemned; in the history of the Supreme Court it would be hard to find an instance of illogic to equal it. It is as though one said he abhorred the needless cruelties of war but did not abhor war itself.

The Court has not examined the death penalty to see whether it is at variance with the times and the popular temper. The test is not satisfactory if it merely asserts that the legislatures have declared themselves, for then the constitutional provision would be a futility; and it does not consist of taking a poll, official or unofficial. Without exhausting the signs, one can point to the steady decline of the application of the death penalty in our country; to the difficulty of filling death case juries; the obvious shame that accompanies application of the death penalty, as shown not only by the abandonment of public executions, but also by protection against disclosure of the identity of the persons who perform the act of execution in private. Death itself is obviously a harsher penalty than any of the incidental procedures the court condemns, and the penalty may well be said to be in conflict with the temper of the times. If the court is to uphold the death penalty on sound legal grounds, it must assert that the death penalty is a necessary public policy; it must hold that the pain imposed on the defendant, though regrettable, is unavoidable because the public good is supported by killing him. Thus the court must consider whether the death penalty is justified as a deterrent to others, and whether vengeance as a policy can sustain the death penalty. We refer to both of these questions later in this chapter.[2]

What should be added to the foregoing is what it says the Court has not examined—the cruelty of the application of the death penalty, physical and psychological. As to psychological cruelty, Musselwhite v. State, 215 Miss. 363, 60 So. 2d 807 (1952) involved an application for stay of execution of a death sentence on the ground that insanity had supervened. The argument revolved around whether the prisoner's condition existed at the time of the trial or came after. There was no doubt, however, as to the post-trial insanity, diagnosed as schizophrenia, catatonic type.

Said the Mississippi Supreme Court: "There is agreement among the examining physicians that at the time of the hearing the petitioner had lost awareness of his precarious situation . . . . If he were taken to the electric chair, he would not quail or take account of its significance. There is reaction neither to audible nor physical stimuli. He takes no nourishment voluntarily . . . . We accept therefore the finding that the petitioner is insane and that such insanity has befallen him since his conviction nearly two years ago."

The U. S. Supreme Court in one case did recognize a certain cruelty in the process of keeping a man for execution. "When a prisoner sentenced by a court to death is confined in the penitentiary awaiting the execution of the sentence, one of the most horrible feelings to which he can be subjected during the whole of it, which may exist for the period of four weeks, is the precise time when his execution shall take place. (Ex parte Medley, 134 U.S. 160, 33 L. Ed. 835, 10 S. Ct. 384 (1889).

The physical cruelty of the actual execution has also been described. Alabama uses the electric chair in its executions. In articles in the Montgomery Advertiser, Danielle Harris described what happens, as told to her by officer McDaniel, who had witnessed about 20 executions, and Lt. W. L. Traywick, who had witnessed eight.

The final switch is thrown and the electricity strikes the body which stiffens violently.

The clenched fists whiten and turn slowly upward as the current builds up to a maximum 2,500 volts. This is a reflex action. A blister begins to rise on the lower left leg beneath the electrode.

The noise is loud. The dying man fights the straps with amazing strength. Unusually, some smoke rises up from the chair.

"It is a most violent death but it's over in 40 seconds," said Traywick. (October 23, 1961)

Rex Thomas, Associated Press writer here, has probably witnessed more electrocutions than anyone in Alabama. He describes unforgettable death chamber scenes:

Years ago, a Negro boy and his brother were sentenced to die one week apart. After the first was electrocuted, his brother was so emotionally upset that during the death walk, he broke away from guards and lunged into the electric chair. Thomas commented, "the boy just couldn't wait to meet his maker".

Thomas has seen bodies catch on fire in the chair, filling the death chamber with smoke and the smell of burning human flesh.

"That's something you just don't forget", he said.

The body will burn if it requires a second or third jolt or if the condemned perspires excessively.

One guard said the worst part of an electrocution is removing the hood from the head of a man who is badly burned.

Ordinarily, however, the body requires only one jolt of electricity and does not burn, or burns only slightly where the electrodes are attached to the head and lower left leg.

The jolt caused a man's eyeball to fall from its socket in one case.

Another time the waist strap broke while a big, powerful Negro was being electrocuted. "He darn near came out of that chair", said Thomas.

The black hood has been known to drop down, revealing the face of the dying man.

False starts are uncommon but have occurred.

"One of the worst cases I've ever seen", said officer Alford, was a Negro from Troy convicted of murder. He fought us all the way to the death chamber. Several of us had to overpower him to get him strapped in the chair".

Guards have been known to "go all to pieces" during episodes such as these. "Some just can't take it". "Their nerves just don't hold up".

"The guards are always nervous before and during an electrocution", said Alford. "In my opinion it's something you never become accustomed to. It's the most gruesome job I've come in contact with during my 35 years with the department".

2. The Administration of Justice Becomes Distorted in Capital Cases to the Prejudice of the Defendants.

Quoting once more from The Law of Criminal Correction:

(1) Effect on Law Enforcement. The existence of the death penalty in a jurisdiction has a curious effect on law enforcement. It is obvious that the consequences of illegal police work to the prejudice of a defendant are fatally conclusive in death penalty states, in comparison with abolition states, where error can be corrected while the defendant lives on in prison or on parole. One might think that the gravity of a capital charge would be sufficient to deter the police from certain practices that make it easier to obtain a conviction—but at the cost of illegal police action and at the risk of convicting the innocent. The contrary is often observed however: The "third degree" and other forms of coercion are used in capital cases in order to obtain confessions or testimony for the prosecution. Frequently the police efforts are incredibly dirty.

What is it that causes this behavior by the police? We suggest that it is the gravity of the penalty, the melodramatic treatment of a capital case under law and in the newspapers, that stimulates the police to settle this kind of case "at any cost."

(2) Effect on Prosecution. Just as the zealousness of the police for a solution to a capital crime produces police lawlessness (to which prosecutors are often privy), so does the death penalty in the penal code of a jurisdiction—unlike the corresponding case in a non-death penalty state—tend to bring the prosecutor not merely to argue the evidence of guilt and innocence, but to advocate the need to exterminate the defendant, hardly a circumstance supportive of objectivity.

"Frequently, in order to sway a jury toward the fatal verdict —and possibly to reassure his own conscience—a prosecutor will inflame the jurors against the accused by playing upon every prejudice and ghastly detail. It is generally recognized that some prosecutors, because of political ambition or simple vanity, are not above deliberately seeking the headlines." These efforts are sometimes condemned, sometimes upheld. The source of the prosecutor's pattern—and that of the appellate court's—is clearly the death penalty. The same source of the prosecutor's prejudicial statements results in reversals.

(3) Effect on Coercion of Defendants. The points made above on the impact of the death penalty on law enforcement and prosecution, focus on the activities of police and prosecutors in influencing juries to convict and to punish by death, or to achieve the same goals by coercing the defendant into making a death-justifying confession. The death penalty on the books of a jurisdiction coerces the defendant in other ways also, sometimes with and sometimes without the participation of these officials.

Obviously an innocent defendant charged with an offense punishable by death is placed in a grave position: unlike the innocent defendant in any other case, he risks his life if his defense of innocence fails. In the light of frequent unscrupulousness and lawlessness by police and prosecution in capital cases, the chances of unsuccessful defense are high. The result is that pleading guilty to a lesser charge occurs frequently in capital cases, and it is far more suspect than it is in other cases, for here the danger of convicting the innocent is markedly increased. Similarly, a defendant who might have been sentenced to death but is found guilty and given a lesser sentence is in the position of staking his life on an appeal, if he contends for a reversal and new trial.

In most instances the prosecutor is actively engaged in negotiating the plea. The process is delicate and dangerous where the death penalty is involved. If he overplays his hand with the press, he may have to demand a death conviction, although he he might originally have intended to accept a plea of guilty to a lesser crime. The initiative of the prosecutor in Stroble v. California may be repugnant to him, but the press may make the climate too hot for him to accept a lesser plea where he had intended to do so. Aside from these eventualities and aside from whatever one thinks in general of the process of negotiating pleas of guilty, the fact is the negotiation process in cases where death is a possible penalty is inherently suspect because it is potentially contaminated by coercion.

(4) Effect on Quality of Defense. Provision of counsel by the state without charge to indigent defendants, especially in death cases, is a strong point in our jurisprudence. However, it should not obscure the fact that assigned counsel, on the average, is not likely to provide the same quality of defense as that afforded capital defendants who employ their own counsel. Sometimes this is due to the political nature of the appointments; but even where counsel are quite able, the compensation is not sufficient to enable them to make all necessary investigations or devote enough time to the case. The result is that, in capital cases, defendants represented by assigned counsel are more likely to be executed than are defendants who have privately retained counsel.

(5) Effect on the Climate of Justice. The death penalty has an influence on the way the press deals with cases of capital crime. The coverage that death cases receive in most of the press is uniquely blatant, detailed and emotional. A fair trial may become impossible. The outstanding mark of such reporting is not that an individual was murdered but rather that the defendant may himself be killed by the state. If a sex angle is added, the trial achieves national attention, with reporters, photographers, and feature writers competing to sustain the excitement.

One of the most ancient principles of correctional law is that any punishment may be relieved after the defendant has begun to serve it—and, indeed, after he has completed serving it. The death penalty is the only punishment that does violence to this principle of humanity.

(6) Effect on Correctional Philosophy. The existence of the death penalty obscures and confuses the responsibility of the state to treat criminals and deter crime. It seems unnecessary to state that correctional treatment requires that the convicted person be alive to receive it. However, the concept of a death penalty state is that certain persons are beyond hope of rehabilitation and are too dangerous to be permitted to live. But the chief crime to which the death penalty is applied is murder, and murderers who are not executed do redeem themselves as human beings.

The retention of capital punishment also has implications for a philosophy of correctional treatment; it means that the state rejects any attempt at rehabilitating the criminal. In contrast, in most states where the death penalty has been abolished, the offender is eligible for parole. In emphasizing the crime, not the criminal, the death penalty states ignore the basic tenets of modern criminology and public protection. Reversing the emphasis, putting it on the criminal rather than the crime, teaches and alerts the community (public, police, prosecutors) to detect dangerous individuals whether or not they appear to be seriously disturbed and whether or not their crime is a serious one.

A trial judge sentenced to death (and was upheld by the state supreme court) on this rationale: "The defendant, having been befriended by decedent, given money, a job, a place to live and taken in the household as a member of the family, to then lie in wait and brutally beat her on the head with a pistol and fire eight shots into her body, can only depict a depraved, cruel, and ruthless and brutal individual." It was unquestionably true that the victim was generous and the defendant depraved. In sentencing to death, the judge was aware that (as is generally true in a crime of depravity) the defendant was mentally ill, though legally responsible. The psychiatrists had reported that the only treatment for such a defendant was "a protective environment such as institutional care." This is true of sociopathic offenders, who are, in fact, at times cured by imprisonment, even without treatment. But both this possibility and even the alternative of life imprisonment were rejected. The trial judge was not interested in the possibility of rehabilitation; he rejected imprisonment because parole was legally possible. A sentence thus formulated has one motivation only: revenge.[3]

Especially prejudiced are the poor and members of minority racial and national groups. From 1930 to 1961, 3,766 persons were executed in the United States. Of these, 1,695 (45 per cent) were whites and 2,030 (53.9 per cent) were Negroes, who constitute only 10.5 per cent of the population. The presumption is that bias operates in this aspect of criminal law administration as it does in others. In refutation it has been suggested that Negroes actually commit an equally disproportionate number of capital crimes, and the arrest figures of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are cited to support this correlation. However, these are figures of arrest, not of crimes committed —and numerous studies give evidence of bias against Negroes in liability to arrest and related police lawlessness.

> "Negroes are more liable to be suspected of crime than are whites. They are also more liable to be arrested. If the perpetrator of a crime is known to be a Negro the police may arrest all Negroes who were near the scene—a procedure they would rarely dare to follow with whites. After arrest Negroes are less likely to secure bail, and so are more liable to be counted in jail statistics. They are more liable than whites to be indicted and less likely to have their cases nol prossed or otherwise dismissed. If tried, Negroes are more likely to be convicted. If convicted they are less likely to be given probation. For this reason they are more likely to be included in the count of prisoners. Negroes are also more liable than whites to be kept in prison for the full term of their commitment and correspondingly less likely to be paroled." Taft, Criminology, a Cultural Interpretation 95 (1950). Increased liability of Negroes to be arrested—Warner & Lunt, Social Life of a Modern Community 374 (1941). Increased liability of Negroes to be the victims of third degree and other police lawlessness—Civil Rights in the United States in 1949 (American Jewish Congress, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People). "Police brutality by some state and local officers presents a serious and continuing problem in many parts of the United States. Both whites and Negroes are the victims, but Negroes are the victims of such brutality far more, proportionately, than any other group in American society." 5 United States Commission on Civil Rights, Justice 109 (1961). Robert S. Vogel, chairman, Board of Directors, American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California, states, "Instances of police malpractice reported to us involve almost invariably Negroes and Mexican-Americans in the ratio of at least 50 to 1. That is a fairly conservative estimate." (Hearings before the United States Commission on Civil Rights, held in Los Angeles and San Francisco, January 1960, at 297.) In a study of 439 persons sentenced to death in Pennsylvania from 1914 through 1958, it was found that 88.4 per cent of Negroes were executed, compared with 79.8 per cent of whites, and the researchers concluded: "Thus, although differences in the disposition of capital offenders probably function to the greatest extent before sentencing, differences may be found even after offenders have been committed to death." Wolfgang, Kelly & Nolde, Comparison of the Executed and the Commuted among Admissions to Death Row, 53 J.Crim.L., C. & P.S. 301 (1962).[4]

There are other prejudicial elements in capital cases:

The selection of jurors in capital cases poses additional civil liberties problems. Murder is the crime which receives the most lurid press coverage, resulting in a climate of opinion least conducive to the selection of an impartial jury. It is, therefore, not surprising that virtually every Supreme Court case dealing with the effect of newspaper publicity on a state trial has involved a capital offense. This problem impelled Justice

4. Ibid, The Law of Criminal Correction, p. 332.

Frankfurter to ask whether "fallible men and women (can) reach a disinterested verdict based exclusively on what they heard in court when, before they entered the jury box, their minds were saturated by press and radio."

Of even greater significance, however, is our method of jury selection. This operates to select a jury in part because of its belief in the death penalty. The Code of Criminal Procedure allows a challenge upon a showing in a capital case that the juror has "such conscientious opinion as would preclude his finding the defendant guilty." Under this provision a juror can be challenged even though he states that, despite his personal objection to capital punishment, he could find the defendants guilty of a capital crime.

Following trial and appeal, the death penalty operates to limit post-appellate review in the class of cases where it is needed most. When the Supreme Court adopted the rule in Powell v. Alabama (requiring free transcripts on appeal) the defendants who could never take advantage of the retroactive application of these rules were the ones who had been executed. Similarly, if the Supreme Court were to rule that Mapp v. Ohio applies to pre-Mapp trials, a defendant who had been executed on the basis of unconstitutionally obtained evidence could never secure relief. Moreover, New York has failed to acknowledge the constitutional right of a prisoner in a capital case to the assignment of post-appellate counsel. The failure to assign counsel during the post-appellate stage of a capital case frequently precludes the indigent prisoner under sentence of death from pursuing those remedies available to a prisoner convicted of a less serious crime.[5]

Conviction of the innocent is always a civil liberties issue. But no other sentence of an innocent person has the quality of a death sentence, namely the impossibility of correction.

. . . Often years are required before innocence is established; but in capital cases, execution is rarely delayed more than a year following sentence. It has been estimated that 10 per cent of the persons in several groups studied who were executed or imprisoned for life were later found to be innocent. Pollak points out that the errors that occur in life imprisonment cases are equally likely to occur in death sentence cases. The points we have made above suggest that errors are more likely to occur in death sentence cases.

Erle Stanley Gardner's Court of Last Resort demonstrates that once a person is convicted, it becomes extremely difficult for him to obtain his freedom. At that point the test becomes not a matter of reasonable doubt, enough to avert conviction on the original trial, but rather the establishment of innocence. The author of another study goes farther, concluding that "it is virtually impossible to get an innocent man released from prison." He describes the case of one man convicted of murder and (because the state was one that had abolished capital punishment) sentenced to life imprisonment. It took twenty years to obtain his release through executive clemency on the grounds of innocence even then. Twelve other cases of releases for innocence are cited, including three prisoners who served more than twenty years and four others who served nine years or more before release.[6]

MINUTES

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1965 --- 12:30 P.M.

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Bierstedt, Black, Crowell, Evans, Fraenkel, Frank, Galantiere, Hacker, Heckscher, Jones, Kunstler, Maslow, Millis, Prashker, Rice, Soll, Westin; Mrs. Jacobs; Judge Kenyon.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Haskell, Wulf, Mote, Bucholz, Adler; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitors: Mr. and Mrs. Eason Monroe, Mr. Lynn Castner.

1. Minutes. Mr. Pemberton reported that Mr. Lacy had written to say that the minutes of the January 18 Board meeting (page 3, item 8 relating to the President's Bill on Aid to Education) erroneously stated that "the members present expressed agreement with the staff recommendations," as Mr. Lacy did not agree with the staff recommendations. The minutes of the February 1 meeting were then approved as circulated.

2. Visitors. Mr. Eason Monroe, executive director of the ACLU of Southern California, his wife, Mrs. Vivian Monroe, executive director of the Constitutional Rights Foundation, and Mr. Lynn Castner, executive director of the Minnesota Branch, ACLU, were welcomed.

3. Death of Ray Briman. Mr. Pemberton read a telegram informing the Board that Mr. Ray Briman, state correspondent in Kansas before it became an affiliate, died February 12. The Board expressed both its deep regret at Mr. Briman's death and gratitude for all the service he rendered the ACLU.

4. Leave of absence. The Board approved Mr. Jones' request for a leave of absence through April due to an extended trip, including visits to affiliate areas.

5. Report of the National Planning Committee and the National Development Council - Steering Committee. Mr. Pemberton reported briefly on the discussions of the two Committees which met separately and jointly on February 12-14, stating that the Board would receive specific recommendations at a later meeting. Special attention in the Steering Committee was given to applications from the affiliates for grants, and particularly the problem of strengthing the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union and the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee. The National Planning Committee reviewed the overall activities of the Union, and appointed several subcommittees to deal with such issues as long-range growth, education and a tax exempt arm for the Union.

6. Legal Activity in the South. Mr. Kunstler noted the New York Times story announcing the decision of the President's Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law to send attorneys to Mississippi, and said because of the failure to mention the work of the LCDC the story gave the impression that the National Lawyers' Guild has a monopoly in Mississippi. Also, the Mississippi

Bar was quoted as referring to all the lawyers in Mississippi until the present time as "rabble rousers", which would seem to include, of course, the LCDC lawyers. Furthermore, though the LCCRUL has conscientiously sought the approval of the Mississippi Bar for its project it has made no attempt to coordinate its activities with the Council of Federated Organization, the coordinating council of civil rights groups. Mr. Pemberton then recounted the LCDC experiences in seeking to cooperating with the LCCRUL, particularly in the search for foundation support, noting that the LCCRUL has not only rejected the LCDC plans but seemingly has closed all lines of communication between the two groups. This attitude, he stated, not only pertains to the LCDC representatives who met with LCCRUL attorneys, but is an affront to the civil rights movement.

7. Federal Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Education. Mr. Soll reviewed the background of this issue, as described in the previously circulated papers, focussing on the majority position approved by the national Church-State Committee on June 1, 1963, comments made thereon by members of the Committee, and comments and suggestion from many ACLU affiliates. Among the affiliate comments, Mr. Soll and staff members pointed out these: the Maryland CLU felt item B (1)(page 2) would permit discrimination as preference could be given to secular institutions, and item 5 (page 1) omits other elements of religious pervasiveness; the ACLU of Southern California believes that if an institution holds itself out as having a religious purpose, then for purposes of public aid it should be considered a religious institution; the Greater Kansas City CLU would reword item 3 (page 1) because it believes no distinction can be made between teaching about religion and indoctrination in religion; the ACLU of Michigan would amend item 5 (page 1) to add "which are displayed for religious rather than historical or artistic purposes", and eliminate items B (1 & 2)(page 2).

The Board then proceeded to discuss the specific sections of the Church-State Committee's majority report. With respect to item 1 (page 1) Mr. Maslow stated if any institution gives preference to either students or faculty of a particular denomination, this should disqualify that institution from receiving public aid. However, if the institution merely requires that one or even a majority of the members of its board of trustees or directors be members of any one denomination, that should not effect its status. Also, if a university includes a divinity school which gives preference to both faculty and students of a certain denomination, this should not disqualify the other schools in the University from receiving aid. Mr. Maslow summed up his objection by moving to bar any preferences or practices that discriminated between religious denominations among faculty or students, but not including the divinity school of a university nor the board of directors or trustees of that institution. The Board approved, with one dissenting vote, Mr. Maslow's motion to amend item 1.

Mr. Rice moved and the Board unanimously accepted the addition of "or any observances" at the end of item 2 (page 1), to meet the objection that in some schools the students are "reminded" at the beginning of the class that they are "in the presence of God." After discussing changes in item 5 (page 1) suggested by affiliates, the Board adopted Mr. Soll's motion to add "regular" at the beginning of the sentence, and at the end, "or in school areas which are pervaded by such symbols, pictures or objects which have the intent of fostering religion." A suggestion was made that paragraph 1 (page 1) should contain the Supreme Court's language in the Everson case instead of the First Amendment, mainly because the word "control" as used is ambiguous. However, the Board voted unanimously to adopt paragraph 1 as presently worded, and then approved the entire first page as amended.

The Board then unanimously approved paragraph A (1-4)(page 2). Paragraph B was discussed and after amending item 1 by replacing "Grants" with "Use" so that the phrase reads, "Use of public funds...." the Board unanimously adopted item B (1). Discussion then turned to item B (2) which, it was felt, mixed both civil liberties and non-civil liberties issues, and the Board agreed by a 7 to 3 vote to delete this item. Because of the lateness of the hour, items B (3, 4 & 5) were put off until the March 1 meeting.

The meeting was adjourned.

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ACLU
ON THE DEATH OF RAYMOND BRIMAN,
ADOPTED FEBRUARY 15, 1965

The Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union learned with deep sorrow of the death on February 12, 1965, of Raymond Briman, Esq., long-time ACLU correspondent in the state of Kansas. Active both as spokesman for the Union in legislative and public matters in the state of Kansas, and as a cooperating attorney in the litigational work of the Union, the Board expresses its keen sense of loss at the departure of an active and trusted member and friend.

The fruition of Mr. Briman's active representation of the Union in the formation of a new state-wide affiliate occurred just prior to Mr. Briman's death. It is to us doubly tragic that he was taken from us before it became an active one and before he could participate.

To his widow, this Board conveys its sense of sorrow and loss, and its deep sympathy in her greater loss of husband.

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ACLU
ON THE DEATH OF FELIX FRANKFURTER
ADOPTED March 1, 1965

Felix Frankfurter, one of the founding members of this association, was a lifelong warrior in the cause of a free and open society. Inspired and shaped as an immigrant boy by the democracy of the New York public schools, trained as a law enforcement officer to the austere standards of his chief, Henry L. Stimson, taught indelibly by Justices Holmes and Brandeis how the Constitution can contribute to a more spacious and civilized fellowship, he served the common cause as teacher, counsellor, administrator, and judge. He looked on the law as a sacred calling, and he viewed a miscarriage of justice not simply as a misfortune to be borne but as an impiety to be cleansed away. In that spirit he gave himself bravely and forthrightly to the defense of Sacco and Vanzetti in Massachusetts and to the relief of Mooney and Billings in California. In the end, he liked to say, the most important office in our republic is that of citizen. His efforts and example have notably advanced our progress toward a self-reliant, morally sensitive and responsive citizenery. The American Civil Liberties Union records its deep gratitude for his enduring contributions to the quality of American life.

Re: Position on Rejection of Advertising

The Committee's policy recommendation on rejection of advertising by communications media was not reached for action at the last Board meeting. In the meantime, two additional points have been raised which the Committee may want to consider at its coming meeting, prior to Board action on the recommendation.

1. The Philadelphia affiliate of ACLU has been concerned with the rejection of advertising by communications media for some time. Its Freedom of Expression Committee has considered this Committee's recommendation of February 17, 1965, and proposed two amendments:

> "The Committee endorsed the formulation of policy recommended by the Free Speech-Association Committee of the national ACLU, with the following two amendments:
> 1. In the last sentence, substitute 'criteria and standards' for 'regulations.' (This would constitute ACLU's recognition that a publication could reject advertising that would not comport with the aesthetic or artistic standards that the medium seeks to maintain.)
> 2. Add a sentence to the effect that media which enjoy a monopoly or quasi-monopoly status, such as common carriers (taxicabs, transit companies) are, by virtue of the franchise conferred upon them by government, under an especial obligation to maintain the 'open' policy, quite apart from any legal or constitutional issue."

2. In 1963, our Radio/TV Committee considered a complaint made by the Committee for Morton Sobell. The Sobell Committee had prepared a documentary film giving its version of the history of the Sobell case. It offered the film free to several TV stations, and even offered to purchase time for running the film. Its requests were refused.

The Radio/TV Committee treated the problem of the barring of the film as one of whether TV stations were exercising reasonable discretion in determining program content. The Committee concluded that, since the Sobell case had been the subject of a great deal of radio and TV discussion in which members of the Sobell Committee had participated, the networks were not exercising unreasonable editorial judgment in refusing air time for Sobell material, particularly in view of the networks' policy of producing their own documentaries. The Committee took no position on the broader issue of propaganda groups having the right to buy time for special pleadings -- other than to suggest the criterion of whether significant issues received adequate coverage on the air.

Jack Pemberton raises the question of whether the Sobell documentary should be considered as an "advertisement" under the proposed policy statement. If so, should there be an obligation on the part of radio and TV stations -- in addition to the current FCC requirement that important segments of opinion be fairly represented by broadcast media -- that stations not refuse to sell air time to groups who want to present their views through films, "documentaries," or other audio-visual materials. Is this any different from seeking to publish a full-page ad in the New York Times criticizing our policy in Viet Nam? Should the proposed statement deal with this problem?

To: Board of Directors

From: The Office

In connection with item 2 of the March 22 Board meeting agenda, enclosed are excerpts from a letter from Dr. William Landau, chairman of the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee who serves as a member of the St. Louis County Decent Literature Commission. We solicited Dr. Landau's comments on his local experience to help the Board evaluate the suggestion made by Senator Ernest Gruening that a bill proposed by Senator Mundt to establish a federal Commission on Noxious and Obscene Matters and Materials should be amended to include an ACLU representative on the Commission. The newspaper clippings attached to Dr. Landau's letter reflect some of his activity in the local Commission.

Mr. Alan Reitman

Dear Mr. Reitman:

....My counsel based upon my local experience would be to try to lick them by joining them. Unlike my own lonely situation, I think a national ACLU representative would find natural allies among the various representatives of publishers, etc. So long as we have not accepted Justice Black's philosophy on obscenity (the only consistent one), I believe that we are properly committed to proper judicial enforcement of obscenity statutes. It is obvious that the ambit of the Commission's charge and the terms of acceptance by ACLU would have to be quite specific so that a minority report or subsequent resignation would be well founded in the philosophy of acceptance. I further agree that the non-definitions and predetermined presumptions now implicit in Sections 1 and 9 make it undesirable, but a research provision might revise the whole concept, if it were stated as the first duty of the Commission.

As long as we do not precommit ourselves to an unacceptable position, I think ACLU might serve a very effective purpose by insisting upon specific definitions and drafting, by promoting better understanding of the First Amendment, and by supporting the necessary research proposed in 1960. I think our own tradition of tolerance as expressed by Hand and Holmes should persuade us to attempt to enter into formal constructive discourse, even with those whose premises we don't accept.

At the local level I have had my ups and downs, and have had a prepared letter of resignation under continuous modification for almost a year. Yet our Board and I believe that the overall results have been clearly positive; we have sacrificed no basic principle of the Bill of Rights.

The Art of Public Relations requires much contact with city desk and editorial staff, especially at the sympathetic Post-Dispatch. Dr. Summers' strong letter of resignation is the product of two days' persuasion (see clippings). One must try not to act as a buff for CDL's benefit while enjoying the favorable publicity of an in position.

In general I have followed the ACLU party line, insisting upon due process in refusal to accept the policy of a governmental body pointing out to the citizens what literature is either objectionable or obscene. Major emphasis has been placed on accuracy and definitions. Although our commission of seven includes three CDL members, it refused to accept the standard CDL propaganda used by the St. Louis City Commission. Although the majority has voted to display "objectionable" material in its educational talks, specific authority for the technique of such action has not been given, and the practice has not been undertaken. Should this happen, the chairman, a good lawyer, is well aware that I will resign, and I know that he wants to maintain the approval that I represent. The educational talk we finally agreed upon was partially written by me and was also acceptable to Dr. Guze of our Executive Board. Nevertheless the usual CDL pressures persist.

When I insisted that the talk include the equivocal nature of alleged psychiatric evidence, CDL campaigned (and continues to campaign) for my dismissal. Yet the upshot was that their chief representative proposed that the Commission seek a definite opinion from local psychiatric authorities. He was quite surprised when I seconded the motion! Indeed CDL even recruited one far right psychiatrist whose wife is running a private campaign to get me fired, while she pushes the County Police Department to promote CDL propaganda.

Just last night our Washington University Campus Civil Liberties group had a seminar on Obscenity and the Law including Badaracco, the president of CDL, Webster, Chairman of the County Commission, Jules Gerard, our own law professor and vice-chairman, and me. In this atmosphere of legal excellence and challenging student questioning, Badaracco proved to be a much less potent figure than he has seemed elsewhere, where he can pull out the emotional stops à la Elmer Gantry....

I shall be interested to hear of the Board's decision.

Sincerely yours,

/s/

2 QUIT COUNTY DECENT LITERATURE COMMISSION

Two members of the St. Louis County Decent Literature Commission have resigned and the agency has come to a standstill because of disagreement among members on how to carry out its function.

Joseph H. Summers, chairman of the Washington University English Department, submitted his resignation to County Supervisor Lawrence K. Roos Thursday.

It also was learned Thursday that Mrs. Charles W. Beintker, a Florissant civic leader, resigned about two weeks ago because she is moving to Jefferson County.

In his letter of resignation, Dr. Summers said the primary reason for his resignation is "the burden of my work as chairman of the Department of English."

But he also questioned the public function of the commission. Dr. Summers said it is up to the courts to legally define obscenity and it is up to police to enforce obscenity laws.

Dr. Summers said "although an educational function of the commission has been suggested, this seems to imply only that the commission should support with organized publicity a speakers bureau and a showing of films, the propaganda efforts of some individuals and private groups."

He went on to say that moral campaigns should not be supported by public funds.

Comments from four other members of the seven-member body Thursday indicated two things. One, members generally agree that the commission has an educational function to perform. Two, that they can not agree on how to carry it out.

William H. Webster, commission chairman and a former United States Attorney, said "We're going through the 'why are we here stage.' Many points of view are represented on the commission. It's not a question of everyone jumping in the boat and rowing together."

Mr. Webster said the commission wants to carry out its function in a manner which does not encroach on the rights of individuals.

He said there is a question whether specific publications can be shown to organizations by commission speakers as evidence of the obscenity problem.

He cited a dispute at the last commission meeting over the use of the film "Perversion for Profit" to illustrate the problem.

Ray T. Dreher, an attorney and commission member, moved that the commission indorse the film. Dr. William Landau, a commission member and chairman of the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee, vigorously opposed the motion and it failed for lack of a second with three commission members absent.

Mr. Dreher, who believes the film is an accurate and effective educational vehicle, said Thursday "This commission is going to fold up. Under the present circumstances we're not going to get anything done."

Defending the commission's educational role, he said "The people should be aware of what exists but they are not. It's our duty to make them aware. After that, it's up to the individual to make up his own mind. It is not for us to declare what is obscene."

Dr. Landau said he has no intention of resigning from the commission as was suggested in a recent letter to the editor of The Globe-Democrat.

In accepting appointment to the commission last September, he said in a letter to Mr. Roos "I am opposed in principle to the existence of such a committee because I find it hard to see how it can function without becoming involved with censorship. However, I think intimate involvement with its activities may change my mind, and I shall do my best to serve well."

Dr. Landau said he stands by his prediction and his intention.

Siding with Mr. Dreher on the film Thursday was Sidney Smith, board chairman of the St. Louis Pharmacists Association. He was not present at the last commission meeting.

"I have seen 'Perversion for Profit' and I think it is a good film," Mr. Smith said. "Anyone who sees it will have his eyes opened to the fact that there's a lot of stuff around that shouldn't be."

G. Gordon Hertslet, a commission member and board chairman of the Bayless Building Materials Company, took a position similar to Mr. Webster's. Mr. Hertslet said the commission must move slowly until it can define precisely what it can do within the law.

He does not feel the commission will die through inactivity like the previous County Juvenile Review Board.

He said the commission has met five times since being created last September and the commission feels "there is a job to be done and wants to do it."

STOPS URGING DECENT BOOKS UNIT TO BUY FILM

An advocate of a movie called "Perversion for Profit" said today he would drop attempts to have it adopted by the St. Louis County Decent Literature Commission as a weapon against obscene literature.

Ray T. Dreher, attorney and commission member, defended the motion picture at a meeting of the commission yesterday. But he called on the panel to drop debate about the movie and get on with its work against obscene literature.

Dreher, treasurer of the St. Louis branch of Citizens for Decent Literature, proposed at last month's commission meeting that the commission buy the movie from the St. Louis Decent Literature Commission, a counterpart organization in the city.

Movie Under Attack

The movie came under attack from another County Commission member, Dr. William Landau, and motion died for lack of a second. Dr. Landau, chairman of the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee, questioned the factual content and presentation of the movie.

The movie is a production of the national organization of Citizens for Decent Literature and is used by the city commission for circulation to civic groups.

Dreher said today he believes a majority of the county commission is opposed to the movie and he does not plan to push for further action on it.

Proposes Speakers' Bureau

However, Dreher said he would seek affirmative suggestions from members of the commission on how the group can carry out its work. His proposal that the commission set up a speakers' bureau to discuss obscene literature before civic organizations has not been acted on, Dreher said.

William Webster, commission chairman, indicated yesterday that the group would seek professional secretarial help from the county counselor's office.

This development came after Dr. Landau objected that certain items were missing from the minutes of the March meeting. Among these were Dr. Landau's criticism of the "Perversion for Profit" movie and an account of an interview by Webster and Dreher with the chairman of the city decent literature commission.

Omission Explained

Dreher has been acting secretary of the county commission. He denied purposely omitting these items and said lack of duplicating equipment prevented him from including them in the minutes distributed to the five commission members who were present.

Dreher said that three months ago he suggested that the commission obtain a secretary, but the idea was opposed at that time on the ground that the commission first should determine how it wished to carry on its fight against obscene literature.

The county commission has been in existence six months and has spent all its time seeking to set a policy for its operations. Prof. Joseph H. Summers, chairman of the Washington University English department, resigned recently after questioning whether the commission was a proper function of the county government.

MUNICIPALITIES URGED TO BAN OBSCENE BOOKS

The St. Louis County Decent Literature Commission urged yesterday an increase in the number of laws banning obscene literature. The commission approved a motion urging municipalities in the county that lack ordinances prohibiting pornographic materials to consider enactment of such ordinances.

The motion, submitted by Ray T. Dreher, was passed over the objection of Dr. William M. Landau, a member of the commission and chairman of the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee.

Dr. Landau said there was already a state obscenity law and that more municipal ordinances were likely to complicate legal proceedings and would not necessarily lead to better enforcement.

Dreher argued that the action would be a service to the community and would "strengthen the over-all attitude against pornography."

He pointed out that the county obscenity ordinance only applied in unincorporated areas. "If the county has seen fit to create this commission, I see no reason why we should not urge municipalities to use their own police power," he said. "As I understand it, we are out to eliminate pornography and obscenity."

Landau Disagrees

"I think this is just flag waving," Landau said. "How would duplications of a state law serve to increase enforcement?"

The motion called also for including a copy of the county ordinance with a letter urging the municipalities to consider enacting their own ordinances.

It was noted that the St. Louis County Human Relations Commission took similar action after a county public accommodations ordinance was enacted.

William Webster, chairman of the decent literature commission, pointed out that the letter would make it clear that the county ordinance was forwarded for the information of the municipalities and not as a model.

"We may well want to examine the county ordinance with the idea of recommending changes at some time in the future," he said. "Also, the county and municipalities have different legal powers and obligations."

Model Speech Prepared

The commission unanimously approved a motion to prepare for public distribution a statement based on a commission-approved model speech on the problems of pornography.

Speeches made recently by commission members to parent-teacher and other civic groups have been well received, Webster said. The commission members discussed whether examples of obscene literature should be provided at such talks, but did not arrive at a definite policy.

The county counselor has given the opinion that it would not be improper for such materials to be displayed at a talk so long as the commission does not put itself in a position of labeling specific materials as obscene.

Panel to Be Named

Webster reported progress toward naming a nine-member panel to direct a study on the effects of pornographic materials on behavior.

Six persons were suggested for the panel at a meeting with Dr. G.H. Lawrence, president of the Eastern Missouri Psychiatric Association, and M. Denton King, dean of the Washington University Medical School.

Robert H. Felix, dean of the St. Louis University Medical School, will be consulted later after which the panel members will be announced, Webster said.

After discussion at several meetings in 1963 and 1964, the Church-State Committee made a recommendation concerning ACLU policy on tax exemption of property and income of religious bodies. The Committee's recommendation is attached.

Subsequently, the 1964 Biennial Conference considered the subject and made the following recommendation:

> We are not prepared to state that there is any conflict between the establishment clause and continued tax exemption for churches, nor to predict whether withdrawal of such exemption would conflict with the free exercise clause.

Both recommendations were referred to affiliates for their advice. The enclosed memorandum contains affiliate action.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10010

STATEMENT ON TAX EXEMPTION OF PROPERTY AND INCOME OF RELIGIOUS BODIES ADOPTED BY THE CHURCH-STATE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION AT ITS MEETING ON WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1964

The Church-State Committee recommends to the affiliates and the Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union that:

1. The exemption of property and income used for religious purposes, such as houses of worship and their endowments, and of church-related hospitals, schools, universities, and similar non-profit activities, as part of a pattern of taxation exempting many classes of non-profit associational activities, confers a genuine though indirect benefit on the religious bodies involved. However, such exemption has been so long a part of the pattern of taxation in the United States that we do not believe that any action should presently be taken by the ACLU to attempt to effect any change.

2. The Union should maintain its alertness to the dangers inherent in withdrawals and denials of tax exemption grounded upon matters of faith and creed, such as those which have been litigated where non-theistic denominations were involved. In such cases, the power to grant exemption does operate in the direction of establishment (e.g. of theistic religion in general); moreover, the denial of exemption may be a denial both of equal protection and of a measure of religious liberty to the aggrieved denomination.

3. The Union should oppose the discriminatory granting of tax benefits to religious bodies which are denied to similar classes of associations, such as the exemption of churches from the tax on "unrelated business income" imposed by Section 511 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended. Experience under this section has shown that such discrimination in favor of religious bodies, far from reinforcing the mutual independence of church and state, has involved religious bodies in government scrutiny of intimate matters of belief, practice and canon law, and has resulted in discriminatory application as between religious bodies. The fortunately small impact of this provision, measured in quantitative terms, should not deter us from seeking to eliminate its deleterious effect upon the practices of government and its existence as a precedent.

Re: Affiliate Opinion on Tax Exemption of Property and Income of Religious Bodies

NORTHERN ARIZONA CHAPTER, ARIZONA CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

A committee of 15, including 3 Board members and 12 non-Board members, met under the chairmanship of the Chapter's Church-State Committee. The acting secretary of the Chapter reports:

> The committee limited its discussion to sanctuary property. It was presumed that other property and business income of religious groups are properly taxed. There seemed no disagreement with the position that National should consistently oppose any exemptions in these areas. The majority of the committee (10-3) also felt that exemptions on sanctuary property were in violation of church-state separation and that (7-5) National should take a position on this matter. However, all members of the Committee voting (10-0) felt that as long as tax exemptions are made, ACLU should continue to oppose discrimination against certain "religious" groups in the granting of such exemptions.

ACLU OF NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Board reaffirmed its previous "objection to property tax exemption for religious properties, both real and personal, whether used solely for religious purposes, for income-producing or for non-religious purposes, other than property used solely for non-sectarian and non-religious charitable, welfare or educational projects."

COLORADO BRANCH, ACLU

There has been no discussion of this issue by the affiliate Board but the chairman of the affiliate's Church-State Committee reports on a membership meeting at which the subject was discussed.

> There was some agreement on the outer edges of the issue. On the one hand, it was agreed that it would be an unconstitutional discrimination against religion to tax Church-related institutions like hospitals, schools, etc., which are not taxed when not Church-related. On the other hand, there seemed to be an agreement that it was undesirable for churches to be exempt of taxes on unrelated business taxable income. However, since there was general agreement on the premise that religious institutions should not be treated differently merely because they are religious, the thought seemed to be that there ought not to be tax exemption on UBTI for other kinds of non-profit institutions either.

In the larger area between these outer edges there was less consensus. I am inclined to think that a majority of the group was of the opinion that the questions of tax exemption on property used for specifically religious purposes and of exemption of gifts to religious institutions on personal income tax were matters of policy which the constitution neither requires or forbids. Even among those who were inclined to think these either unconstitutional or otherwise undesirable, there was doubt whether there were any practical political remedy: I gather that it is virtually impossible to test the constitutionality in the courts because of the rules about standing to sue (if that is the right terminology); and it is extremely unlikely that any congress or legislature would be willing to change the present laws on this type of tax exemption.

ILLINOIS DIVISION, ACLU

At its January 28, 1965 meeting the Illinois Division Board adopted the following statement:

Without disagreeing with paragraphs 2 or 3 of the Proposed Statement or with the conclusion in paragraph 1 that no action should be taken on non-discriminatory tax exemption at this time, we believe that paragraph 1 unnecessarily obscures the applicable constitutional principle.

Accordingly, the revision proposed herewith states flatly that such tax exemption confers genuine and major benefits which are often unconstitutional depending upon the institution receiving the benefit of the exemption. In order to avoid the definitional problems inherent in any reference to "church-related" institutions, the statement has been revised to keep the focus on tax exemption by reference to churches and "other church institutions." Reference to the length of time such tax exemption has been a part of taxation patterns has been omitted as only one of the reasons for inaction at this time and to give less emphasis to the argument which bases a claim of validity on longevity of occurrence.

ACLU should affirm that inclusion of church schools in a law exempting all other schools from taxation is not constitutionally required. Notwithstanding the fact that such tax exemption is probably unconstitutional, ACLU can and probably should conclude that the time is not ripe to undertake a test case at this time if for no other reason than that such a decision would probably result in a constitutional amendment weakening the separation of church and state.

For the foregoing reasons the Illinois Division, ACLU recommends that paragraph 1 of the National Church-State Committee statement be revised as follows:

1. The exemption of property and income used for religious purposes, such as houses of worship and their endowments, and other church institutions as part of a pattern of taxation exempting many classes of non-profit associational activities, confers a genuine and major benefit on the religious bodies involved. Such benefits often constitute aid in violation of the First Amendment. However, we do not believe that any action should presently be taken by the ACLU on this subject at this time. Nevertheless, such exemption is not constitutionally required, and any extension of such exemption should be opposed.

In addition, the Illinois Division recommends the insertion of the underlined words in the second sentence of paragraph 2 of the statement: "In such cases, the power to grant, withdraw or deny exemption does operate in the direction of establishment (e.g. of theistic religion in general); moreover, the granting, withdrawal or denial of exemption...."

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF MASSACHUSETTS

Excerpt from October 9, 1964 CLUM Executive Committee minutes:

Mr. Holmes reported for the Church-State Committee on the question of tax exemption for religious bodies, giving the differing opinions of the members of the Committee. The ACLU statement and a redraft of paragraph 1 were distributed for study and comment. After a full discussion it was VOTED: that the ACLU statement be approved. It was suggested that in reporting our vote to the national office attention should be called to the fact that paragraphs 2 and 3 were endorsed unanimously but that there was a division of opinion in both the Church-State Committee and in the Executive Committee regarding paragraph 1, approval carrying in the Executive Committee by a vote of 8 to 5. It was the consensus that the matter is so complex that further study should be made.

ACLU OF MICHIGAN

Rolland O'Hare, Chairman of the affiliate, has sent the following report:

In the discussions of the Michigan Board on this subject, at least three positions were plain. The largest group, approximately one-half of the Board, agreed entirely with the positions spelled out in the Illinois Division statement. A smaller group agreed with the Illinois Division position except that it was worried that adoption of that position, particularly the first numbered paragraph, would foreclose ACLU intervention in an appropriate court challenge to tax exemption practices offensive to the First Amendment. The third group, approximately a third of the Board, was concerned about using religious purposes or church affiliation as a reason for granting or denying exemption; this group thought that there were some serious First Amendment problems involved in excluding church-related hospitals, schools, orphanages and the like from tax exemptions allowed other hospitals, schools or orphanages.

A motion to adopt the Illinois Division position lost by an even thirteen-thirteen vote, with the chair supplying the tying negative vote.

Subsequently, a motion to adopt that position with the deletion of the second from the last sentence in the first numbered paragraph was passed by a substantial majority.

On the first vote, the second and third groups described above voted against adoption. On the second vote, with the deletion of the language offensive to the second group, it joined with the first group to supply a majority.

The first numbered paragraph of the Illinois Division statement, as amended by the Michigan Board, would read:

"1. The exemption of property and income used for religious purposes, such as houses of worship and their endowments and other church institutions, as part of a pattern of taxation exempting many classes of non-profit associational activities, confers a genuine and major benefit on the religious body involved. Such benefits often constitute aid in violation of the First Amendment. Such exemption is not constitutionally required, and any extension of such exemption should be opposed."

There was no expression of opinion by anybody taking any of the three positions set forth above in support of the reliance in the National Church-State Committee's proposed statement upon historical inactivity as a basis for withholding present action. The language which the Illinois Division struck from the first numbered paragraph with respect to that subject had no adherents on the Michigan Board.

There appeared, on the other hand, to be considerable sentiment for intervention by ACLU in an amicus capacity in an appropriate court challenge to tax exemption for churches and church-related institutions.

ST. LOUIS CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE

At the affiliate's Executive Board meeting of January 26:

It was moved that this Committee advise National to have a stiff line against tax exemptions on unrelated business property and income of churches and church related institutions.
Passed 6 to 5

It was moved that this Committee advise National that church related secondary institutions be given the same consideration as other non-religious institutions in the matter of tax exemptions.
Passed unanimously

It was moved that this Committee advise National to support the traditional American practice of tax exemptions for the meeting place and the ground on which it stands of every religious body.
Passed by a majority

UPSTATE NEW YORK DIVISION, ACLU

This opinion represents three-fourths of the UNYD Board.

There is general agreement with the Meserve-Pemberton statement of February 17, 1964. However, there are the following comments:
1) One thinks paragraph 2 confuses principle with expediency and strategy.
2) One feels exemptions are unconstitutional, but not an ACLU problem -- we should leave it alone.
3) Central New York Chapter had no disagreement with paragraphs 2 and 3, but was particularly bothered by paragraph 1, and will make no recommendations on it because they intend to delve into it this year.

NB. The first individual (above) added that a franker statement would have admitted the violation of principle but would have advised no action at this time on pragmatic or strategic grounds.

GREATER PHILADELPHIA BRANCH, ACLU

In submitting the minutes of a February 18 Board meeting devoted solely to this issue, Spencer Coxe, executive director of the affiliate, says:

> I think our discussion here was further evidence of the fact that ACLU is not ready at this time to issue a policy statement on this complex issue. As you see from the extremely close votes on most of the resolutions, there is no consensus here, and I don't think there is on the national board or in the other affiliates. I feel rather strongly that until a consensus emerges, it would be irresponsible to issue a comprehensive statement committing ACLU.
> I believe what is called for is an elaborate formulation of the issue in all its complexity, outlining the many facets of the problem (including a discussion of the tax laws of the states, and the provisions of the federal excise tax laws, the FICA provisions, and many others). This formulation would be as lengthy as the paper put together several years ago on obscenity. It would then be circulated and mulled over for a couple of years.
> While my board did not specifically endorse the proposal I've made in the preceding paragraph, there was an implied reluctance to have ACLU make policy statements in this field.

Excerpt from Greater Philadelphia Branch Board Meeting, February 18, 1965

> Mr. Sawyer, in outlining the history of ACLU's study of this problem, pointed out that it raises a conflict between the establishment and free exercise clauses of the First Amendment. The Board should address itself to the proposed tripartite statement of policy prepared by the Church-State Committee of the national ACLU (hereinafter referred to as the national statement). He called attention to the recommendation of the Philadelphia ACLU's Freedom of Expression Committee as set forth in its minutes* (hereinafter referred to as the committee recommendation). This recommendation, Mr. Sawyer pointed out, endorses paragraph 3 of the national statement in principle (dealing with Section 511 of the Internal Revenue Code), and counsels the national ACLU to remain silent on paragraphs 1 and 2, while making clear that silence does not imply a conclusion that no civil liberties issue is raised by tax exemption.

> * The ACLU should oppose as discriminatory the granting of tax benefits to religious bodies which are denied to similar classes of associations, such as the exemption of churches from the tax on "unrelated business income" imposed by Section 511 of the Internal Revenue Code. ACLU should assist in bringing appropriate action in the courts, if this should be necessary to test the granting of such benefits.
> Opposition to particular benefits conferred upon religious bodies does not imply that there may not be other more fundamental violations of the principle of separation of church and state in the pattern of exemption of property and income used for religious purposes and of church-related non-profit activities.

Mr. Hannold moved that the first paragraph of the committee recommendation be adopted. Mr. Goldberg spoke against the motion, advocating that the Board begin by considering the basic questions raised in paragraph 1 of the national statement. In his view, tax exemption for churches and church-related institutions is indeed an aid to religion, and is thus establishment and a violation of the Constitution. Tax exemption is as much "aid" as are grants or subsidies. This equation was challenged by several. Mr. Sawyer pointed out that aid-by-not-taking is intrinsically limited (to the amount that could be taken) whereas aid-by-giving is theoretically unlimited.

Mr. Poul observed that in the absence of a discriminatory context, it was doubtful that mere failure to tax represented the kind of aid that would rise to "establishment": whether particular organizations are simply omitted from the basic tax imposition, or are carved out by way of exemption. Non-taxation may be distinguished from affirmative grants on the ground that the latter involve a kind of imprimatur -- a special recognition that is not necessarily implied in a decision not to seek tax revenue from a particular source.

Mr. Beardsley suggested that the criterion for exemption be "good works," and that religious properties and income would be exempt if they qualify as a form of good works, not qua religion. But others pointed out that this standard would put government in the untenable position of comparing one religion to another, and would result in favoring those religions and those properties devoted to good works at the expense of denominations and enterprises dedicated solely or mainly to devotion or prayer.

The question (i.e., approval of the first paragraph of the committee recommendation) was moved. Mr. Goldberg repeated his objection that the adoption of the committee recommendation in whole or in part was sterile, since it avoided decision of the main issue. The vote on the question was 9 to 8 in favor.

Mr. Mann then moved that the Board approve the following amended version of paragraph 1 of the national statement:

> The exemption of property and income used for religious purposes, viz., houses of worship and their endowments, as part of a pattern of taxation exempting many classes of non-profit associational activities confers a genuine though indirect benefit on the religious bodies involved, which we believe to be an establishment of religion.

It was asked whether this motion implied that the "establishment" constituted a violation of the First Amendment, as was specifically stated in the Illinois ACLU's recommended version. Mr. Sawyer stated that an "establishment" is sometimes necessary in order to avoid impairment of "free exercise" as in the case of chaplains in the armed services. Therefore, the motion does not necessarily imply that ACLU should oppose the "establishment" as a violation of the First Amendment; in the case of the chaplaincy ACLU prefers establishment to impairment of free exercise.

The Board voted 8 to 8 on Mr. Mann's motion, and Mr. Sawyer voted in favor of it to break the tie, on the grounds that the motion was simply a statement of legal fact.

A motion was made to broaden the scope of the Mann motion by adding the other categories of religious properties in paragraph 1 of the national statement which Mr. Mann had excluded from his motion, viz., "church-related hospitals, schools, universities, and similar non-profit activities." Mr. Schauffler asked what harm was done by continuing the traditional pattern of tax exemption for religious properties. He observed that the primary purpose of the First Amendment is to guarantee religious liberty, and that so long as theoretical breaches of the establishment clause do not impinge upon religious freedom, ACLU should not waste time on them. Mr. Mann replied that in fact the source of the First Amendment was the Virginia Remonstrance, leveled against a proposed tax to be used without discrimination for the support of every denomination in Virginia, in proportion to the number of communicants in each. Tax exemption -- also without discrimination -- constitutes the same type of aid to religion.

The motion was defeated by a vote of 8 to 7.

Mr. Zucker observed that the Board had not taken inconsistent positions. In the first motion the Board had objected to according a special (and preferred) status to religious property vis-a-vis property of other non-profit institutions that are not religious; in the second motion the Board in effect suggested that certain religious property be given a special (and unpreferred) status, vis-a-vis non-religious property.

Next the Board approved, by a vote of 12 to 2, a motion asking the national ACLU to take no action at this time to press for a judicial determination of any of the issues raised in paragraph 1 of the national statement. Opponents of this motion argued that there is no reason to believe that the future will be any more propitious than the present to raise the issue.

The Board then approved, by voice vote, and without dissent, a resolution calling upon the national office to refrain from issuing a policy statement on Section 511 alone. To comment only on Section 511 and say nothing about the issues raised in paragraph 1 of the national statement would make it appear that ACLU regards Section 511 as the chief, or perhaps the only, issue.

Finally, the Board approved by a voice vote a motion calling on the national ACLU to reject the argument set forth in the second sentence of paragraph 1 of the national statement, viz., "...such exemption has been so long a part of the pattern of taxation in the United States that we do not believe that any action should presently be taken by the ACLU to attempt to effect any change."

CENTRAL TEXAS CHAPTER, TEXAS CLU

At a January 6 Board meeting, tax exemption for churches was considered and voted on: four favor it, nine oppose it, two abstained.

WISCONSIN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

At its January 9, 1965 Board meeting, the affiliate adopted the Fellman statement, which follows.

(over)

First, as to the tax exemption of church property, I think that this issue has been settled by history. We have had tax exemption of church buildings and other property used for worship since the beginning of the Republic. It is a universal principle embodied in both state and federal law. Furthermore, we must bear in mind that many other non-profit institutions of a charitable or philanthropic character, also enjoy tax exemption for reasons of public policy, which are comparable to those reasons which relate to the religious exemption. If we should remove the tax exemption from the churches and not apply the same rule to the other groups, I think we would be guilty of discrimination against religion, which I think is clearly contrary to the spirit of the Constitution. I do agree, however, that the exemption should not extend to property which produces income and is used in ordinary ways merely because the property is owned by a religious body. Thus, I would say that the church building is tax exempt, but that if someone leaves an apartment house to the church, the income of which goes to the church, then that apartment house, not being a place of worship, should be subject to ordinary property taxation.

MINUTES

Due Process Committee Meeting
Wednesday, March 10, 1965 - 4:45 pm
ACLU Office

Present: Mr. Ennis, presiding; Judge Dorothy Kenyon, Messrs. Dorsen, Levy, Lusky.

Staff: Messrs. Pemberton, Wulf, Bucholz.

Guest: Mr. Ross.

1. Clemency as a Civil Liberties Issue: Mr. Wulf discussed the history of the debate within ACLU over whether clemency is a civil liberties issue, and summarized his memorandum of February 2, 1965.

Professor Lusky restated the view previously advanced by Alan Reitman: The ACLU has been concerned primarily with issues and principles developed from the provisions of the Bill of Rights. If we were to change our policy to permit participation in clemency appeals, we would have to switch our emphasis from issues to individuals, and this would drastically change the nature of the organization.

Mr. Ennis suggested that we might not want to foreclose the possibility of joining in a clemency appeal in a particular case, especially if a civil liberties issue is present, but that we should not urge the Board to adopt the policy of considering support for all clemency appeals. He thought we might have some interest in the Ginsburg obscenity case, presently pending on petition for certiorari, in the event the conviction is affirmed, because of the severity of the sentence and the likelihood it will operate to stultify adventurous expression in areas not clearly protected by the First Amendment. There will be few writers and publishers who will want to risk a five-year prison term for a risqué novel.

Mr. Lusky suggested that there would be no bar to ACLU's participation in clemency appeals in Smith Act convictions since we have believed all along that the law is unconstitutional.

After further discussion, the Committee agreed that four types of cases might warrant ACLU's participation in a clemency proceedings:

A. When conduct which ACLU believes is constitutionally protected is made the subject of a criminal conviction and the conviction is affirmed, ACLU participation in a clemency appeal could rest on the same basis as our opposition to conviction. Some examples suggested by the Committee include Smith and McCarran Act prosecutions, and obscenity prosecutions where ACLU determines that the work should be clearly protected.

B. ACLU might want to join in a clemency appeal where the case involves civil liberties questions but where it is not clear whether or not conduct is protected by the Bill of Rights, on the grounds that the imposition of a penalty in the circumstances may have an adverse effect on civil liberties. The Ginsburg case was cited as one example. Many obscenity prosecutions might be included in this category, if the trials are fair but there is some doubt as to whether the material is or not obscene.

C. ACLU might well want to join in a clemency appeal in a case where there is no dispute as to the substantive law applied, but where the punishment meted out is so grossly disproportionate and excessive as to be cruel and unusual. See the dissent by Mr. Justice Goldberg from the denial of certiorari in Rudolph v. Alabama, -U.S.-, 11 L. ed. 2d 119 (1963).

D. The Committee felt that a fourth possible clemency case for ACLU would be one in which there was substantial evidence of discriminatory sentencing. An example cited was the general discrepancy in the South between a penalty assessed against a White accused of raping a Negro and the punishment meted out to a Negro accused of raping a White.

The Committee also discussed whether death penalty cases merited ACLU concern on the issue of clemency. It was suggested that clemency might be urged as a means of preserving a remedy when there is some indication in a particular case that proof of innocence could eventually be established. As to this category, the Committee felt its position ought to be contingent on the decision of forthcoming Plenary Board meeting which will discuss ACLU's general position on capital punishment.

The Committee concluded that even if the Board adopts a policy opposing the death penalty, the Union could not possibly undertake clemency proceedings in all death penalty cases. The most we could hope to do with our resources would be to enter clemency proceedings in those cases where there are some unusual circumstances, such as reasonable doubt of guilt.

The Committee agreed that it should not present to the Board a recommendation for a general policy on clemency. The Committee felt more meaningful consideration would result if it were to present to the Board individual cases within the above categories as such cases arose.

2. Radio and TV Broadcasting of Legislative Investigations: The Committee briefly discussed the action of the Free Speech/Association Committee in rejecting its recommendation that all radio and TV broadcasting of legislative hearings be barred. The Committee decided that it could not agree with FS/A and that it would not change its position. However, in view of the fact that the Committee will shortly discuss a wide area of due process protections in legislative investigations, it was agreed to delay the submission of the recommendation to the Board until a general statement on due process in legislative investigations is adopted by the Committee.

3. Arrest Records: The Committee considered 3 papers previously distributed: the Norman Dorsen memorandum, the memorandum prepared by Nanette Dembitz for the NYCLU, date 12/30/64, and the Wulf memorandum of 2/2/65.

The Committee first discussed the problem of the incompleteness of local and FBI arest summaries. The FBI claims to be a mere collection point for information from local law enforcement agencies. If the latter neglect to report that an arrest resulted in an acquittal, there is nothing the FBI feels it can do about it. Mr. Lusky suggested that we might propose a simple way to let arrested persons include their own evaluation of their arrest records by sending a form post card to the FBI on which they could indicate whether they were convicted or acquitted, whether the arrest was in connection with a civil rights demonstration, or whether alibi, mistaken identity, etc., were claimed. Such information would have no legal significance in any court proceeding; its effect would really be aimed at potential employers who might be unduly swayed by the existence of a prior arrest. It was agreed that we should first attempt to obtain a copy of the reporting form which local law enforcement agencies send to the FBI files, and also a sample of the kind of arrest report which the FBI furnishes to law enforcement agencies in return, in order to see what kind of information is currently included in arrest files.

Mr. Pemberton stated that the major problem stemming from incompleteness of arrest reports is not so much the possibility that the person arrested may have subsequently been acquitted, but the fact that a majority of arrests may not even end in prosecution, let alone conviction.

Mr. Dorsen thought the Committee should first clarify its goal before discussing specific remedial measures. Obviously, if the Committee is concerned about use of FBI arrest records by other governmental agencies, then recommendations on administrative procedures governing arrest records should follow, including, perhaps, a ban on solicitation of information on mere arrests. If we are concerned with the way records are used by local enforcement agencies, then a legislative approach in individual states might be needed.

Another question raised was the relevancy of repeated arrests for similar offenses, when not followed by a conviction, to certain types of sensitive employment. For instance, are several arrests for embezzlement relevant to applications for bank teller employment? It was generally agreed that this is one of the most difficult questions the Committee will have to face and that the Committee should not attempt to tackle it initially. Mr. Pemberton stated that in any position which is truly sensitive, there is bound to be a close check on the entire life history of an applicant, and that any normal investigation will be bound to turn up information on prior misconduct, if there has been any. Using arrest records as a shorthand way of disqualifying persons with a history of repeated arrests for sensitive positions is not fair to either the applicant or the employer, and a thorough investigation of an applicant's background should be relied upon instead to disclose relevant information.

Mr. Lusky thought that, instead of seeking to restrict information contained in arrest records, it might be desirable to expand such information. To him, much of the unfairness in arrest records is their summary nature and the fact that they are compiled in an inconsistent manner without the knowledge of the individual affected. He reiterated his suggestion that information obtained from the arrested person should be included in the record itself -- for instance, the assertion that a plea of guilty was entered because counsel advised the person arrested to so plead. This would insure that a question as to the meaning of the notation of arrest would be raised in the minds of persons who place undue reliance on an arrest record.

Another concern expressed was whether there is an equal protection argument in the use of arrest records. It is undoubtedly true that most person arrested are in minority groups and of low economic and social status. Often they are arrested, not because of criminal conduct, but because they are trapped by their environment in areas where crime frequently takes place -- for instance, the crowd of onlookers arrested at the scene of a street fight in a congested neighborhood. The very existence of arrest records works a greater injustice on these person than it does on persons who live in wealthy suburban areas where such street arrests do not as a rule take place.

Last, the Committee took up the question of the difficulties experienced by an individual in attempting to gain access to his arrest record. Mr. Bucholz stated that some cities, but not all, permit individuals to inspect their own arrest records at police headquarters. Even if the difficulties of seeing one's own arrest record are met, it may be impossible to correct plain errors in it. Mr. Bucholz and Mr. Lusky reported cases in their experience which showed that arrest records can contain misleading or incorrect information, such as a statement that a person was arrested for a felony when in fact the crime was a misdemeanor.

Mr. Ennis summed up the Committee consensus as follows:

1. There is no doubt in the Committee's mind that any individual ought to be able to get his arrest record from the FBI either directly or through his local police department. Adequate safeguards would have to be incorporated into any administrative procedure to protect privacy of arrest records from disclosure to unauthorized persons.

2. Arrest records should always contain a notation whether a person arrested was convicted, acquitted, or released without prosecution.

3. Arrest records ought to allow some opportunity for explanation by the person arrested as to the circumstances surrounding his arrest and prosecution.

The Committee asked Mr. Bucholz to prepare a memorandum summarizing the specific recommendations made by members of the Committee and analyzing the arrest records problem in terms of suggested specific actions for ACLU and in the light of the three previous memoranda on the problem. It was also suggested that the memorandum include an analysis of the actual workings of statutes which purport to authorize the destruction of arrest records when an acquittal takes place.

Re: Further Affiliate Opinion on Tax Exemption of Property and Income of Religious Bodies

KENTUCKY CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

The KCLU board "supports property tax exemption of eleemosynary and religious property which is being used for religious or eleemosynary services. This includes property of non-theistic religious groups. It voted, however, that there should be no income tax exemption for unrelated income of church or charitable organizations, and that property tax should be levied on all property owned by religious and charitable organizations which is not used for eleemosynary or religious services; that this property should be subject to the same taxes as private individuals or businesses."

MINUTES

Free Speech/Association Committee Meeting
Friday, March 12, 1965, 12:30 p.m.
ACLU Office

Present: Mr. Soll, presiding; Miss Fingerhood; Messrs. Crowell, Millis, Lowenstein.

Staff: Pemberton, Reitman, Wulf, Bucholz.

Mr. Soll reminded Committee members of the special evening meeting to take place on March 24, 1965 at 6:15 p.m. at which the right of privacy and free speech will be discussed.

Approval of Minutes: The minutes of the last meeting were ordered corrected to show that Mr. Crowell voted for the Channick recommendation and to amend the last sentence on page 2 to read: "Mr. Crowell stated that the matter, in the final analysis, should be left to the responsibility of the publishers."

1. Restrictions on the Dissemination of Propaganda: Mr. Lowenstein summarized his memorandum of January 4, 1965 on the impact of the Foreign Agents Registration Act and other laws on the distribution of campaign material and propaganda and suggested four major areas meriting Committee concern:

A. A federal statute (18 USC 612) punishes distribution of material concerning candidates for federal office when such material does not contain the name of the persons or organization responsible for its production or dissemination. There are also statutes and ordinances in several states and municipalities which contain requirements that all printed matter or that literature relating to an election campaign bear the name of a publisher or distributor.

B. The Foreign Agents Registration Act provides that when material is distributed by "foreign agents" within the United States it must be labeled as "propaganda" produced by a foreign agent.

C. The Act also provides that all persons who are paid to represent foreign governments, such as public relations men and attorneys, must register as "foreign agents" with the Department of Justice. Registration statements must contain exhaustive information on the registrant's business and non-business activities.

D. From the early 1940's to the present date, a variety of programs instituted by the Department of Justice, the Bureau of Customs and the Post Office, have attempted to prevent or hinder the import of so-called "foreign political propaganda" into the United States. The early history of the program was related to the Foreign Agents Registration Act, while its present version is authorized by a separate statutory provision, 39 USC 4008. Under the program, political material from abroad has often been labeled as "propaganda" by the Federal government.

As a preliminary matter, the Committee agreed not to consider the question of post office censorship of foreign political propaganda, the last items listed above, because ACLU has a well-defined position on it, and because cases testing the constitutionality of the program are now pending.

As to A above, the United States Supreme Court held in Talley v. California, 362 U.S. 60 (1960) that a blanket requirement for labeling all handbills with the names of those responsible for dissemination was an unconstitutional abridgment of free speech. ACLU's position appears to agree with the Court in Talley, but we also have expressed agreement with the 18 U.S.C. 612 on the grounds it is a limited measure necessary to preserve the integrity of the election process against anonymous and unfounded last-minute charges which cannot be answered before the election. Mr. Soll wondered whether ACLU's position was supported by its reasoning, in view of the federal statute's application to the entire election period rather than merely to the last-minute campaigning.

As to B above, the labeling of material distributed in the United States by registered agents of a foreign government, the Committee had some difficulty. Although the ACLU has not opposed the labeling requirement for foreign material, its position would seem to be inconsistent with its position on material circulated by domestic sources, as in the Talley case. Mr. Millis and Mr. Soll questioned whether there was any real basis for distinguishing between material circulated by a foreign government and material circulated by an American group. Mr. Lowenstein replied that a distinction could be based on the probably selfish motivation of a foreign government to undermine U.S. policy or destroy its effectiveness, as opposed to the motivation of an American circulating material, which, though critical, is more likely to be well-intentioned. Mr. Soll suggested that an American corporation with a substantial stake in Katanga might circulate material much more deleterious to American interests than the Congolese Government would.

Mr. Soll stated that he could not see any real basis for the distinction between labeling political material from a foreign source and not labeling material from an American source. He suggested that a closer examination of ACLU policy statements on this score be made. Other members of the Committee concurred and suggested the matter be discussed again at a subsequent meeting. In addition, members felt that there may be a separate but related problem arising from the fact that material circulated by a foreign agent in the U.S. must be labeled with the word "propaganda," which carries a derogatory implication as to its reliability and value, while material from citizens or domestic organizations does not have to be so designated.

As to the registration requirements for agents of foreign governments, the ACLU has not opposed such registration in the past on the grounds it is desirable to disclose the usually secret relationship between a spokesman and the foreign government on whose behalf he is paid to act. The theory behind the Act and ACLU's position seems to be that the public and the government have a right to know to what extent foreign governments are directly intervening in American affairs, most particularly through the expenditure of money to influence votes or policy decisions. In the same vein, ACLU has not opposed statutes requiring disclosure of the activities of paid lobbyists in state and federal governments. The Committee felt that there was no real ACLU issue in the registration requirement for foreign agents, but that some of the questions asked in the registration forms dealing with the non-business activities of foreign agents might constitute an invasion to privacy or a hindrance to the exercise of First Amendment rights, particularly those questions dealing with membership in private organizations. It was suggested that the registration forms be obtained and examined closely on this score.

2. Rejection of Advertising: Since the last meeting at which the Committee adopted a proposed statement on the rejection of newspaper advertising, the Greater Philadelphia affiliate has considered the question and submitted its views to the office, copies of which have been previously circulated. The major question raised by the Philadelphia affiliate is whether publicly-owned facilities such as subways and buses should be under a more stringent requirement to accept advertising than the moral imperative contemplated in the proposed statement, and whether publicly regulated facilities such as licensed common carriers and radio and TV stations should similarly be compelled through the regulatory framework to accept advertising with whose contents they disagree.

On the question how governmentally owned advertising space on a subway or transit authority should be treated under the Committee's statement, one member voted for the proposition that such public facilities should be under a moral obligation similar to that of private newspaper owners. Another Committee member voted for the suggestion that such facilities should have a special moral obligation -- but not a binding legal one -- to allow use of advertising space for the expression of ideas on a non-discriminatory basis. Three members of the Committee voted for the proposition that public-owned facilities have an enforcible legal and constitutional duty to make space available for advertising on a non-discriminatory basis.

As to privately owned but publicly regulated media, particularly radio and television stations, the Committee had some difficulty in reaching a decision to whether there exists any special obligation beyond that suggested for newspapers. The Committee reviewed a 1963 incident in which the Committee for Morton Sobell sought to purchase TV time to run a "documentary" on the Sobell case. Their application was denied by a TV network on the grounds (a) that the network had a policy of running only its own documentaries and (b) that it had previously carried programs about the Sobell case in which several of the Sobell Committee members participated. The Radio and TV Committee agreed with the network, as reported in its minutes of June 6, 1963. The FS/A Committee was asked whether it agreed with the Radio and TV Committee's position and if not, whether any changes should be made in its proposed statement on advertising to take account of the Sobell situation and others like it.

The Free Speech Committee concluded that it could not agree with the Radio and TV Committee's rationale. It viewed the Sobell documentary as an advertisement for an unpopular point of view and could not see any distinction between it and films prepared by the Democratic and Republican Parties which are shown on TV -- on purchased time -- during election campaigns. The Committee felt that networks would not ordinarily refuse to accept such films (some of which are styled "documentaries") on the grounds that the network likes to prepare its own films or on the grounds that the issues treated in the film have already been covered.

The Committee concluded that because of the limited time available, radio and TV networks obviously could not accept all advertisements, whether styled "documentaries" or otherwise, regardless of length. Three possible positions were suggested:

A. The same moral obligation which the Committee proposed govern newspaper decisions in the rejection of advertising should apply to radio and TV stations. Votes: 0

B. If radio and TV stations air programs which present one side of a specific social, economic or political issue, they should be under a special obligation to take advertisements presenting the other points of view on that issue. Votes: 3

C. Whatever network or station policies govern the acceptance or rejection of political advertisements -- whether such policies relate to length, style, taste -- that policy must be applied equally to all political advertisements, regardless of their content. In other words, a station or network may not refuse to take a political advertisement merely on the basis of its point of view. Votes: 2

In view of the complexity of the issue, the Committee felt it would not be desirable to include any language on this problem in the proposed draft at this point, but that the matter should be referred to the Radio-TV Committee for its views and that appropriate reconsideration of the statement should be undertaken afterwards.

3. Free Speech Rights of Governmental Employees: Mr. Wulf summarized the ACLU's past concern with this problem in the controversy over whether military personnel had free speech rights and in the Committee discussion of Turner v. Kennedy, where an FBI agent was dismissed because of intemperate public criticism of his agency and his superiors. Mr. Wulf reported that a request for assistance in the case of Arthur Payne had recently been made to the office. Arthur Payne was an employee of the Panama Canal Company, the federal agency which runs the Canal and administers the Zone. Payne worked as a budge officer for the Canal Company and had 15 years of tenure. He was not in a sensitive or policy making position.

At the time of the Canal Zone riots in 1964 over the flying of the U.S. and Panamanian flags, Payne wrote a poem critical of the company and of U.S. policy. He also distributed two letters, one written by someone else and one by him, lambasting U.S. actions in the Zone. Subsequent to the riots, he was charged with: (a) conduct unbecoming a civil servant because of publication of "libelous statements" about the head of the Panama Canal Company; (b) violating specific orders not to distribute letters critical of the Company and U.S. policy; and (c) violating Company regulations requiring clearance before publishing such material. A Company hearing officer ordered him suspended for 31 days. The President of the Panama Canal Company reviewed this action and ordered Payne fired. The Civil Service Commission on review sustained the charges and the firing. The next possible step is a suit in a Federal Court challenging the discharge on First Amendment grounds.

Miss Fingerhood wondered whether the firing could be based on the power of the executive to direct foreign affairs. Certainly, if a U.S.I.A. employee were ordered not to make derogatory remarks in the local press about the population of the country in which he is stationed, there would be a legitimate basis for sustaining his discharge if he violated the order. Mr. Wulf replied that Payne's position could not be compared with that of a U.S.I.A. officer, in that Payne was not doing sensitive work and had nothing to do with policy-making. Mr. Wulf thought the case could be viewed as an unjustified incursion on the free speech rights of government employees, in the absence of a clear showing that the particular speech on which the firing was based triggered the rioting.

Mr. Soll wondered whether the essential issue in the case is the extent to which a governmental employee can publicly lampoon the head of his agency. He noted that the language used by Payne was clearly directed at the head of the Canal Company and impuned the latter's motives and personal integrity.

Mr. Soll asked whether the Committee could distinguish Payne's situation from that of an ordinary U.S. citizen who happened to be traveling in the Panama Canal Zone at the time of the rioting. If the latter were to make anti-Panamanian statements, could the U.S. State Department revoke his passport? Mr. Pemberton thought that the federal government is powerless to punish mere speech made by an American citizen either in this country or abroad. The question, he thought, is whether the difference in status between an ordinary citizen and a governmental employee in a nonsensitive position is sufficient to limit the protection accorded by the First Amendment.

Mr. Millis stated that we might enter the case on the limited ground that the punishment accorded for mere speech was excessive or disproportionate to the offense. Mr. Soll concluded that the Committee seemed to be divided, two members having expressed some interest in the case and one member remaining undecided. It was agreed that the proposal for ACLU participation should be put before the Board, in view of the vote and the necessity of giving Mr. Payne a quick answer on ACLU's intentions.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 1965 -- 12:30 P.M.

PRESENT: Mr. Lacy, presiding; Messrs. Dierstedt, Black, Brown, Evans, Frank, Hacker, Heckscher, Kunstler, Maslow, Miller, Prashker, Rice, Soll, Waring, Whiteside; Mesdames Jacobs, Pilpel, Judge Kenyon.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Haskell, Mote, Wulf, Bucholz, Adler, Speiser; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

1. Minutes. The minutes of the February 15 meeting were approved as circulated.

2. Financial Report. Mr. Haskell reported that the new income for January, 1965, was $220,603.00 which is 21% of the goal for 1965 of $1,012,400.00.

3. Death of Felix Frankfurter. The Board unanimously passed a resolution expressing its deep sense of loss at the death of former Supreme Court Justice Frankfurter, one of the founders of the ACLU.

4. ACLU Constitutional Amendment. Mr. Pemberton presented for the Board's approval an amendment to the ACLU Constitution changing the authorized number of members on the Board of Directors from 35 to 80, thus allowing affiliate representatives to be added to the Board. The amendment was approved unanimously for submission to the constitutional electors.

5. Federal Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Education (Continued from the February 15 meeting). The Board, having already approved as amended parts I and II [through item B(2)] of the majority position adopted by the Church-State Committee at its meeting on June 1, 1963 concerning "Public Aid to Church-Related Institutions of Higher Education", took up consideration of item B(3) as presented by Mr. Meserve. Mr. Hacker objected to the phrase, "in public competition" [3(a)] for he felt that it compromised the award on the basis of academic achievement alone, and Mr. Meserve, with the Board's approval, agreed to strike this phrase. Mr. Prashker moved to amend line 3 of paragraph B by inserting "sectarian" between "accredited" and "institution", and item 3(a) by inserting "or financial need" after "professional aptitude", but his motion failed for want of a second. It was then moved to adopt section B(3) (including a and b), and the motion carried with Judge Kenyon and Mr. Maslow recorded in the negative.

Mr. Meserve moved the adoption of B(4). Mr. Prashker felt that "financial need" should be one of the qualifications for this is a sensible restriction in a public loan program. Mr. Maslow objected that the adjectives in items 3 and 4 can be read to mean no more than that every qualified student will be permitted to go to college -- even a sectarian one -- with the aid of public subsidies; furthermore, even if the money is loaned to the student instead of given (as in a scholarship or grant), to the extent that the student receives favorable terms for the loan he is being subsidized to attend a church-related institution. Mr. Soll concurred with this opinion stating that we should indicate that such aid is not to be given on a wholesale basis; moreover, the Church-State Committee itself meant for there to be some limiting criteria. Mr. Maslow then moved, and Mr. Soll seconded, to amend item 4 by adding "superior" before "academic ability"; and Mr. Lacy announced that if this motion carried he would rule that it also added the qualifying phrase to item 3(a). At this point, Mr. Evans questioned the relevance of the discussion to civil liberties issues and asked what civil liberties principle is violated if a loan or scholarship is given to all ordinary as well as superior students. Mr. Maslow responded that this would be aiding the schools; but with the restrictive criterion of "superior", only certain students would be aided. A vote on Mr. Maslow's motion carried 12 to 4. The whole of item 4 was then voted on and passed, with Judge Kenyon again being recorded in the negative.

Mr. Meserve moved to adopt item 5, but Mr. Frank moved to strike #5 on the grounds that it was so basic that the ACLU need not take a position on it. Mr. Meserve, with the consent of the members of the Church-State Committee in attendance at the Board meeting, withdrew his motion. He then moved the adoption of the entire statement. Judge Kenyon expressed opposition to items B(3) and (4) feeling that the mere addition of "superior" was not enough to overcome her objections which corresponded with those of Mr. Maslow's. Mr. Black questioned the gradual erosion of strict church-state separation principles, and wondered how much compromise the nation can tolerate without being destroyed. Mr. Bierstedt underscored this objection by pointing out that the NDEA had approved a provision which allows direct grants to be made to the institution where an NDEA fellowship student is in attendance. Mr. Soll, on the other hand, disagreed that the choice is between compromising and not compromising; rather this is an appropriate statement to preserve church-state separation. At this point Mr. Meserve reminded the Board that the Church-State Committee considered two questions in recommending the statement: (1) is religion being established? and (2) is the free exercise of religion being inhibited? There is no violation of principle when a public program manifests no tendency toward an establishment provision. After further discussion, the entire statement was adopted (Judge Kenyon recorded in the negative).

6. Recommendations of the NPC Steering Committee. Mr. Pemberton presented the recommendations of the National Planning Committee's Steering Committee and corrected the memorandum of February 18, 1965 (item 2) regarding equipment loans to read $9,400 instead of $19,400. The Board considered this expenditure and, after some discussion, approved it as an economy measure. The Board then turned its attention to the recommendation for a grant to the Louisiana Civil Liberties Union of $15,600.00 to staff and reinvigorate its activities in the face of intense harassment and difficulties. Mr. Pemberton explained that this grant from the Vigilance Fund, although unprecedented, would be for one year only and that the LCLU anticipated other support in 1966, relying upon the interest, especially of larger affiliates, expressed at the Steering Committee meeting. Mr. Prashker opposed this grant for he doubted that it would be the best way to support southern civil rights and civil liberties activity. Could not the work be done in a more organized way through the Southern Regional Office, he asked, or through the LCDC? Furthermore, there is no precedent for giving such massive help to a small affiliate which has little hope of attracting more support. At this point Mr. Pemberton explained the Steering Committee's proposal for the LCDC which would not involve any grants from the Vigilance Fund, but rather giving the LCDC, a tax-exempt organization, ACLU identification and using it as an ACLU tax-exempt arm. After more discussion, during which Mr. Heckscher also expressed doubt at granting one affiliate such a large sum, Mrs. Jacobs moved a grant of $15,600.00 as recommended by the Steering Committee, and Mr. Whiteside moved to reduce this sum to $8,000.00 Mr. Pemberton suggested $11,700 as an alternative, for he stated that the full monthly level of support required by the Louisiana CLU budget would be needed for only 3/4 of the year 1965. There was a vote on Mr. Whiteside's amendment which failed to carry. There was then a motion to adopt Mr. Pemberton's suggestion to grant the LCLU a level of support of approximately $15,600, on a pro rata monthly basis for 1965, not to exceed $11,700, subject to national office participation in the expenditures to be made from it, and Mrs. Jacobs accepted this amendment. After discussion the motion, as so amended, carried.

7. Alabama Affiliate. Mr. Lacy reported the recommendation of the Administration Committee that the Alabama affiliate application be approved on the condition that the 1940 resolution be included in the affiliate's proposed by-laws and that it be encouraged to call itself the Alabama CLU or the CLU of Alabama instead of the Alabama Civil Liberties League. He supported the recommendation with an expression of the Committee's judgment that the leadership of the proposed affiliate seemed very well-qualified. There are 89 ACLU members in Alabama.

8. Washington Office. Mr. Speiser reported the vote on the appropriations for the House Un-American Activities Committee and stated that there were 64 Congressmen (including 6 paired "for") seeking to recommit the appropriation for further study, though after defeat of the motion to recommit, the negative vote on appropriations dropped to 29. This was a significant increase over the vote two years ago when only 20 voted against the Committee on the only roll call that was had -- that on the appropriations. He also discussed the delays in the House Education and Labor Committee, and changes in the subcommittee's report to it, on the Federal Elementary and Secondary Education Bill. He stated that there was still a chance that the provision for judicial review would be included in the Senate version.

9. Mundt Bill. Mr. Rice stated that there should be strong Board action in opposition to this bill. Mr. Pemberton reported that the Union had expressed its strong opposition to the bill, but that Mr. Angell and the staff required advice on the Gruening correspondence. The chair ruled that this issue would have to be carried over to the next meeting's agenda.

The meeting was adjourned.

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

ON THE DEATH OF JOHN PAUL JONES

We have lost a rare spirit in the death of John Paul Jones. During his many years as a member of our Board, the Board of the New York Civil Liberties Union, and his Chairmanship of the latter Board, Dr. Jones' qualities endeared him to us all. He was, in every sense, a true civil libertarian, never swerving because of the unpopularity or heterodoxy of the problems we are so often called upon to consider. Clear and positive in his views he was never dogmatic. He approached each issue with a freshness, almost a gaity, which was always an inspiration to his colleagues. We shall sorely miss him.

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

ON THE DEATH OF AUBREY WILLIAMS

The American Civil Liberties Union expresses its sorrow on the loss of Aubrey Williams, since 1946 a member of the National Committee of the Union. Publisher of The Southern Farmer, head of the National Youth Administration in the Roosevelt Administration, outspoken critic of his times, he influenced countless Americans, and thereby his America, for freedom and justice.

Aubrey Williams never compromised, no matter how hard the times, no matter how strong the opposition, and no matter how bitter the attacks. He was a free man and acted like one in Alabama -- just as he did wherever he lived and worked throughout his seventy-four years.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

MONDAY, MARCH 15, 1965 -- 12:30 P.M.

PRESENT: Mr. Angell, presiding; Messrs. Black, Crowell, Ennis, Evans, Fraenkel, Miller, Millis, Rice, Soll, Westin; Mrs. Pilpel; Judge Kenyon.

Office: Messrs. Pemberton, Reitman, Haskell, Wulf, Mote, Bucholz, Adler, Speiser; Mesdames Floyd, Katz; Miss Strickland.

Visitor: Mr. George La Noue.

1. Minutes. Mr. Millis stated that he had been present at the March 1 meeting, though the minutes do not show it. The minutes were approved as corrected.

2. Visitor. Mr. George La Noue, professor at Teachers' College and advisor to the National Council of Churches of Christ on church-state issues, was introduced and welcomed. Mr. La Noue was Mr. Speiser's colleague in presenting the ACLU testimony before both the House and Senate subcommittees considering the bill aiding elementary and secondary education.

3. Death of John Paul Jones. Mr. Pemberton presented a resolution by Mr. Fraenkel expressing the Board's deep sorrow and sense of loss at the death of Mr. Jones, one of the Board's most active members. The motion carried unanimously.

4. Death of Aubrey Williams. A resolution expressing the Board's regret at the death of Mr. Williams also passed unanimously.

5. Banking Resolutions. Mr. Pemberton asked the Board to authorize a series of resolutions concerning ACLU banking practices: (1) that a savings account at the Chemical Bank and Trust Company (5th Ave. and 20th St.) be opened for the John B. Turner Fund; (2) that the Investment Committee be authorized to open a series of N.Y. savings bank accounts; and (3) that eleven California savings and loan associations be authorized as the depositories for some of the accounts. Mr. Pemberton also requested the Board to authorize the presently authorized officers to open and make withdrawals from these new accounts and explained that only the priviledges of depositing and withdrawing were intended. The Board unanimously approved his resolutions and request.

6. Proposed Commission on Noxious and Obscene Materials. Mr. Angell presented the suggestion by Senator Gruening to include a representative from the ACLU on the proposed Commission on Noxious and Obscene Materials. (See memorandum previously circulated.) Mr. Rice moved that (1) we decline to participate, and that (2) we strongly oppose the bill establishing the Commission. He felt that in view of ACLU's past positions such a stand was mandatory. The Board first considered his motion not to participate. Mr. Ennis stated that he was opposed to representative appointments from organizations as such, and that the President appoints individuals, not organizations, to the Commission. Mrs. Pilpel said that though she found the bill highly objectionable and one to be vigorously opposed, she would favor a commission to inquire into the scientific data on relationships between behavior and alleged obscenity. Mr. Speiser pointed out that the ACLU supported the original bill in 1960 because it was in this form, but then the bill was changed to the present form. Mr. Reitman mentioned the correspondence he has had with Dr. William Landau of the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee (previously circulated) in which Dr. Landau pointed out the value he found in representation on a local "Decent Literature Commission". Mr. Westin said there is a distinction between participating on an obscenity commission on a local or state level and setting up Federal activity in this field. Mrs. Pilpel interjected that wherever possible, we should remain in communication with those we oppose. Mr. Ennis pointed out that the Post Office and the Customs Departments now exercise censorship and that he would like to see persons on the Commission who would fight for a narrow definition of obscenity. Mr. Millis objected to this interpretation for he stated that the bill would give the Commission no authority to determine what is obscene. Mr. Rice rephrased his motion to express opposition to having a representative of the Union participate in the proposed Commission and this motion carried.

The question was then called on Mr. Rice's second motion which carried with one dissenting vote. Mrs. Pilpel then moved that we urge the formation of a Commission on First Amendment Freedoms which would investigate scientific data dealing with the causal relationship between "obscene" literature and criminal and delinquent acts, and further that we seek to testify before whichever Commission is established. Mr. Fraenkel, opposing her motion, stated that we should not seek the establihsment of an obscenity Commission though Mr. Ennis felt that this was a "head in the sand" position. Censorship and obscenity are live issues throughout the country, he stated, and the ACLU shouls support such a study as that suggested by Mrs. Pilpel. Mr. Speiser pointed out that there are already three Congressional Committees which have authority in this field; would any purpose at all be served by the formation of a Commission, he asked? There was a vote on Mrs. Pilpel's motion which failed, 3 - 9 . Mr. Ennis then moved that the ACLU recommend that any investigation of the relation between obscenity and crime be done under private auspices and not by the government. Mr. Fraenkel spoke briefly against the motion saying that the time was not right for the ACLU Board to take this stand. Mr. Ennis's motion lost 3 - 9.

7. Request for Marshall Fund Grant. Mr. Wulf presented a request from the Legal Department for $11,391.15 from the Marshall Fund reflecting the 1964 expenditures on cases which exceeded the Department's normal level of litigational costs. After a brief discussion during which Mr. Fraenkel commented that the costs of some cases listed on the memorandum of March 11th (previously circulated) seemed much too high and that the cooperating attorneys should be cautioned to be more careful, especially with regard to such items as overtime printing. A motion granting the request carried unanimously.

8. Recommendation of the Free Speech and Association Committee on the Case of a Panama Canal Company Employee. Mr. Soll first presented an item not listed on the agenda dealing with the dismissal of an employee of the Panama Canal Company who was not in a policy-making position and who had failed in no way in the performance of his job but who had publicly criticized official U.S. policy before and after the Panama Canal Zone riots of January, 1964, and who had written a poem lampooning his superior. Mr.

Soll pointed out that the defendent had failed to comply with a regulation requiring material to be submitted for clearance before publication but that he was also charged with conduct unbecoming a government employee and failure to comply with his superior's orders. Mr. Soll reported that the Free Speech Committee voted by a small margin to participate in the case with a suit against the Civil Service. Mr. Fraenkel spoke against entering the case for he did not consider it a fundamental one and questioned whether the defendent could not employ private counsel. Mr. Wulf stated that the defendent could not afford counsel and that unless the ACLU pursued the case, the Civil Service Commission's ruling dismissing the employee would stand. He stated further that the case dealt with a basic issue for it involved the right of an employee in a non-policy making position to oppose official government policy when he is an employee of an agency enforcing that policy, After further discussion, during which some members of the Board expressed the opinion that the ACLU should enter the case amicus but should not assume the responsibility for handling the case itself, the motion to accept the case was voted on and failed to pass. At this point, Mr. Pemberton asked the Board for a clarification of its views on when a case should be entered only amicus, and cautioned that we would often be taking a chance the case will not be pursued and the issues not be resolved. Mr. Fraenkel, reiterating a point he had made earlier, recommended that a memorandum be prepared on the case and circulated to the Board and Mrs. Pilpel moved that the matter be reconsidered at the next meeting. This motion was seconded and carried without dissent.

9. Recommendation of the Free Speech and Association Committee with Respect to Wartime Restrictive Measures. Mr. Soll moved the Biennial Conference recommendation but also suggested this action not be publicized for the reasons set forth in Mr. Millis' memorandum. His motion carried unanimously.

10. Recommendation of the Free Speech and Association Committee Concerning Rejection of Non-commercial Advertising. Mr. Soll moved the adoption of the February 17th statement (previously circulated). He pointed out that the statement did not advocate legislation embodying a mandatory requirement, but rather would merely encourage media circulating to generalized audiences to accept all advertisement that met uniform criteria. He mentioned that the Philadelphia affiliate had submitted a request to add the provision that government agencies controlling media (e.g. public transit authorities) be subjected to mandatory requirements. Mr. Rice objected to the proposed statement for he did not think any such obligation should be imposed on publishers. Mr. Fraenkel pointed out that categories of advertisements were not dealt with in the statement, and that an agency should not be required to accept every advertisement on any subject. Mr. Soll stated that he would be willing to accept an amendment to the statement providing that when a certain class of advertisement is accepted, the publisher ought to accept all of that class regardless of the point of view expressed. A distinction was also made between private and public media: the former should be encouraged and exhorted to accept advertising on a non-discriminatory basis, while the latter should be required to accept such advertising. On separate motions as to privately owned and public media, the Committee's recommendations, as so modified by Mr. Soll, were unanimously adopted.

11. Malin Memorial Meeting. Mr. Angell announced that a Malin Memorial Meeting, planned by the ACLU, Swarthmore College and the Roberts Colleges, would be held on Tuesday, March 30th at 4:30 P.M. at the Friends Meeting House, 212 East 15th Street (at Stuyvesant Square).

12. Cancellation of April 29 Board Meeting. Mr. Pemberton announced that because of the plenary Board meeting on April 3-4, the April 29 meeting would be cancelled.

13. Events in Selma. Mr. Reitman reported briefly on Charles Morgan's activities in Alabama during the current crisis in Selma and stated that a telegram had been sent to the Attorney General protesting the use of brutality there and the insensitivity of the Justice Department's initial statement that is was inquiring whether "excessive" force had been used. When the Department later in the week announced prosecutions for interferences with the exercise of rights, the Union commended the Attorney General.

The meeting was adjourned.

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

To: Members of the Board of ACLU

From: The Office

Re: Forthcoming Plenary Board Consideration of ACLU Position on Libel

At the Plenary Board meeting of April 3 and 4, 1965, the ACLU's position on libel will be reviewed. Two proposed position statements from the national Freedom of Speech and Association Committee have already been circulated, and affiliate comment is now being distributed.

In order to aid the Board's consideration of this subject, the office has prepared a short summary of recent court decisions pertaining to several of the points discussed in ACLU position papers on libel.

I. THE NEW YORK TIMES RULE.

New York Times Rule v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 32 L.W. 4184 (1964). Alabama courts awarded a City Commissioner of Montgomery $500,000, without real proof of injury, against the Times and four clergymen for a Times ad entitled "Heed Their Rising Voices" which, in soliciting contributions for civil rights work in the South, recited the difficulties the civil rights movement had experienced at the hands of the police in Montgomery. In unanimously reversing the award, the U.S. Supreme Court interpreted the First and Fourteenth Amendments to require that a public official claiming libel damages for defamatory statements show with "convincing clarity" that such statements were false and that they were made with "'actual malice' -- that is, with knowledge that [they] were false or with reckless disregard of whether [they] were false or not." Justices Black, Douglas, and Goldberg stated in concurring opinions that the Court's standard would furnish insufficient protection against hostile juries, and urged a rule absolutely prohibiting libel judgments for any criticism of official conduct.

II. CRIMINAL LIBEL.

In Garrison v. Louisiana, 33 L.W. 4019, handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court on November 23, 1964, a New Orleans District Attorney was convicted of criminal defamation for stating publicly that local criminal court judges were inefficient and lazy, unsympathetic to vice investigations, and subject to "racketeer influences." The Supreme Court concluded that Louisiana's criminal defamation statute serves the same purposes as a civil suit for libel and is therefore subject to the same First Amendment limitations with respect to criticism of public officials as the libel judgment in the New York Times case. The Court held that the criminal libel statute as applied in this case unconstitutionally permitted the punishment of truthful statements about public officials, and allowed punishment of false statements whether or not made with reckless disregard of their falsity. The Court stated that the New York Times rule "absolutely prohibits punishment of truthful criticism" directed at public officials and indicated that any statute permitting a finding of malice merely from an intent to inflict harm -- as opposed to an intent to inflict harm through the knowing use of falsehood -- was constitutionally deficient. Justices Black, Douglas and Goldberg again concurred in separate opinions, stating that no criminal libel prosecution for criticism of official conduct should be permitted under the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

III. ACTUAL MALICE.

In Baer v. Rosenblatt, 203 A 2d 773 (N. H. 1964), a local newspaper columnist asked several questions about the management of a publicly-operated ski area which implied that its former supervisor had stolen some of the profits. In attempting to follow the New York Times rule, the New Hampshire Supreme Court sustained a $31,500 libel judgment, finding "actual malice" indicated in the columnist's previous charges of nepotism and in his gross and reckless exaggeration of the difference between income from the ski area when it was supervised by plaintiff and income earned when it came under new management. (The Court did not expressly treat the issue of whether a private citizen who contracts to run a publicly owned ski area is a "public official" within the meaning of the New York Times doctrine.)

Goldmark v. Canwell, Superior Court of Washington, (December, 1964). John Goldmark is an active ACLU member in Washington and a former member of the state legislature. During his 1962 campaign for re-election, Goldmark and his wife were charged by defendants with being "Communists," members of a "Communist-front" (ACLU), tools of a "monstrous conspiracy," etc. After an extended trial, during which Jack Pemberton testified as to the nature of the ACLU, the Goldmarks won a $40,000 libel judgment based on several jury findings that the charges -- including the one against ACLU -- were false. The standard of law used by the Court was that a recovery could be had if the published material was false and defamatory. Shortly after the verdict, the New York Times case was decided, and the Court felt compelled by it to award defendants a new trial to determine whether the defamation of the Goldmarks had been made with reckless disregard of the falsity of the charges. Subsequently, the Court entered judgment for the defendants notwithstanding the verdict and without awaiting a new trial, on the grounds that all the defamatory statements were made in the course of a political campaign in which a wide latitude for criticism of candidates should be allowed, and that the testimony previously taken contained no clear indication that the charges had been made with actual malice. The Goldmarks have not yet decided whether to take an appeal from this ruling.

Faulk v. Aware, Inc., 19 A.D.2d 464 (N. Y. 1963-64). John Henry Faulk, a quiz show personality on radio and TV, was discussed in publications sent by Aware, Inc. to station owners, producers, and sponsors, in terms which clearly implied him to be a Communist or to be associated with Communist activities. As a result, he was "blacklisted" and his career was ended. In sustaining judgment for Faulk before the New York Times decision* New York's Appellate Division found that the defendants had deliberately attempted to ruin Faulk through a campaign of false innuendo and malicious villification. However, whether or not the defendants actually knew the material they were disseminating was false is not clear. Subsequent to the Times case, the New York Court of Appeals affirmed without opinion.

IV. LIBEL PER SE.

Clark v. Allen, Pennsylvania Supreme Court, October 26, 1964. Joseph Clark's candidacy for re-election to the United States Senate was opposed by defendant in a letter which stated: "We are shocked at Joe Clark's record on Senate absenteeism and his ADA approved voting record with its Communist tendencies." By a 3-2 majority (2 judges not participating) the Pennsylvania Supreme Court sustained a demurrer to the complaint in advance of trial stating that, in view of the disagreement on what "pro-Communist" and similar expressions mean and in view of the necessity of according great freedom to criticism of public officials under the New York Times doctrine, the language criticising Senator Clark could not be held libelous. The dissenters argued the inconsistency of this position with previous Pennsylvania Supreme Court holdings that labeling a citizen a "Communist" or charging he is engaged in Communist activities is libel

* Affirmance was conditioned on reduction of the amount of the verdict.

per se, and added that the New York Times case did not compel dismissal of the complaint in advance of trial without giving the plaintiff an opportunity to establish the derogatory nature of the language used, its falsity, and actual malice.

V. WHO IS A "PUBLIC OFFICIAL?"

(See Baer v. Rosenblatt, above, where New York Times rule was applied to an employee of a publicly-owned ski area.) In Pauling v. News Syndicate Company, 335 F. 2d 659 (CA 2, 1954), a jury brought in a verdict for a defendant newspaper which had charged Linus Pauling with being sympathetic to Communist aims. The Court of Appeals, in affirming the decision on evidentiary and technical grounds, stated as dictum:

> "Although the public official is the strongest case for [the application of the New York Times rule], it is questionable whether in principle the decision can be so limited. A candidate for public office would seem an inevitable candidate for extension; if a newspaper cannot constitutionally be held for defamation when it states without malice, but cannot prove, that an incumbent seeking re-election has accepted a bribe, it seems hard to justify holding it liable for further stating that the bribe was offered by his opponent. Once that extension was made, the participant in public debate on an issue of grave public concern would be next in line; thus, as applied to the case in hand, if a newspaper could not be held for printing Dr. Pauling's charges that a member of the Atomic Energy Commission had 'made dishonest, untrue and misleading statements to mislead the American people' and that a United States Senator is 'the greatest enemy  the United States has,' as the New York Times case decided, one may wonder whether there would be sound basis for forcing it to risk a jury's determination that it was only engaging in fair criticism rather than misstating facts if it printed, falsely but without malice, that in saying all this Dr. Pauling was following the Communist line. The 'profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open,' now applied to confer immunity on 'vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials,' 376 U.S. at 270, 84 S.Ct. at 721, may some day be found to demand still further erosion of the protection heretofore given by the law of defamation."

Re: Capital Punishment

A memorandum by Norman Dorsen to the Due Process Committee on the subject of capital punishment was circulated to the Board last year. It included the following summary of the Union's consideration of the issue:

a. In a memorandum dated February 10, 1955, Walter Frank expressed for ACLU study "Rough Thoughts on Capital Punishment and Civil Liberties." He argued that the imposition of the death penalty "in itself" does not violate "civil liberties"; that neither discrimination in the imposition of the death penalty nor its irrevocable quality provide the basis for a constitutional attack; that there is no other basis for maintaining that the death penalty violates the Constitution; that "the field in which the Death Penalty is inflicted should be severely curtailed"; that the proper method of achieving this is "education followed by legislation"; and, in conclusion, that the Union refrain from entering this controversy.

b. On January 8, 1959, the Due Process Committee of the ACLU, after discussion, agreed on the following: that judicial challenge to capital punishment was futile; that discrimination in the imposition of capital punishment, if demonstrated statistically, might raise a civil liberties issue; that a recommendation should be made to the National Board that "capital punishment is not a civil liberties issue," but that the Board should not deny to affiliates the right to take their own position on legislation to abolish capital punishment.

c. On February 2, 1959, the National Board adopted the position that "capital punishment is not at this time a civil liberties issue, but in particular cases the character of the punishment combined with the surrounding circumstances of the case might raise a civil liberties issue."

d. On November 14, 1961, the Due Process Committee reconsidered the issue of capital punishment. The impetus was provided by two recently published law review articles that argued that the death penalty raised constitutional questions. Gottleib, Testing the Death Penalty, 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 268 (1961) (death penalty amounts to cruel and unusual punishment), and Oberer, Does Disqualification of Jurors for Scruples Against Capital Punishment Constitute Denial of Fair Trial on Issue of Guilt? 39 Texas L. Rev. 545 (1961) (disqualification of jurors with scruples against capital punishment constitutes denial of fair trial to accused on issue of guilt). The Due Process Committee maintained its former position that capital punishment cannot be challenged judicially.

At its meeting held on May 2, 1963, the Due Process Committee considered the issue of capital punishment. Particular attention was given to a memorandum prepared by Professor Caleb Foote of the University of Pennsylvania Law School for the Philadelphia affiliate of the ACLU, and submitted by the affiliate to the National Office. Professor Foote took the position that the death penalty raises important civil liberties issues and that its continued use should be challenged by the ACLU.

After discussion, the Committee reached the following informal concensus: (a) capital punishment was distasteful from the ethical and humanistic point of view; (b) it was unrealistic to expect a judical declaration of the unconstitutionality of capital punishment, either under the Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause or the Due Process Clause;* (c) abortive efforts to achieve such a judicial declaration could set back legislative efforts to secure abolition of capital punishment; and (d) means should be explored by which the Union could act to secure abolition without maintaining that capital punishment was inconsistent with a specific provision of the Bill of Rights.

Following consideration of the Dorsen memorandum, the Due Process Committee was polled on the various questions that were thought to be of importance in shaping the Union's position. The results of this poll are contained in Mel Wulf's memorandum to the Board of Directors on January 2, 1964, enclosed.

The Board held meetings on capital punishment on January 6 and January 20. It took the following action:

(1) It authorized the staff to enter an appropriate case on the ground that the imposition of capital punishment is discriminatory on the basis of race or class, provided that a factual study has been made which seems to justiry this conclusion;

(2) It requested the Due Process Committee to consider whether the Union should enter an appropriate case raising the issue discussed by Mr. Justice Goldberg in his dissenting opinion in Rudolph v. Alabama, 375 U.S. 893 (1963). Justice Goldbert maintained that it is a violation of the cruel and unusual punishment clause to impose the death penalty on a defendant who has been convicted of a crime which does not involve the taking of a human life; and

(3) It voted to table a motion that the Union seek repeal of laws authorizing the death penalty. This action followed suggestions that the underlying philosophical bases for all of the separate capital punishment questions put to the Board had not been sufficiently defined by the Due Process Committee and that there was need to solicit affiliate advice on these issues.

*This memorandum was written before the decision in Rudolph v. Alabama, 32 U.S.L. Week 3154 (1963), in which Justice Goldberg, joined by Justice Douglas and Brennan, wrote a concurring opinion that maintained that the death penalty violated the Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause of the Eight Amendment when it was inflicted for a crime that did not result in loss of life --- in that case, rape. Accordingly, there now seems to be substantial room for arguing that the Constitution, at least in some cases, prohibits capital punishment.

Affiliate advice was then solicited, both generally and in terms of the first four of the five questions addressed to the Due Process Committee (see June 2, 1964 memorandum), and, in addition, the subject was suggested for membership meetings in accord with the Biennial Conference resolution. Special attention was accorded to the issue in the December, 1964 Civil Liberties.

Responses from the affiliates are enclosed, together with views expressed at membership meetings, views of Roger Baldwin and Walter Fisher, responses from a few members to the coverage in Civil Liberties, and an article from the New Republic giving factual information on the death penalty.

Re: Affiliate Opinion on Shared Time

Northern Arizona Chapter -- The issue was considered by a "committee of fifteen, including three board members and 12 non-board members....Most comments were in opposition to shared time, suggesting that it was a 'backdoor' to released time, would weaken the public school system and would probably lead to clear violations of church-state separation. Almost all members of the committee voting (11-1) opposed shared time although the majority (9-2) felt ACLU should not take a position at the time on the matter."

ACLU of Northern California -- The affiliate board supports "the position taken by Roger Baldwin as well as the position of our State Attorney General that shared time classes would be in contravention of Art. IX, Sec. 8 of the State Constitution, which prohibits direct or indirect aid to sectarian schools."

Colorado Branch, ACLU -- The affiliate board voted unanimously at a fall meeting to recommend the view that shared time does not violate civil liberties.

On January 28, 1965 about 25 persons attended a membership discussion of shared time. The discussion, according to the reporter, reached no conclusion on whether shared time was either desirable or violative of civil liberties.

"Some felt it was a violation of civil liberties for the same reason as released time, in that the public school becomes a vehicle for an educational situation which includes religious indoctrination. Others felt that since citizens of a community have a right to use the schools all of the time, therefore they should also have the right to use it part of the time. Some felt that abridgement of civil liberties might be most apparent in the process of carrying out shared time, that the structure of public schools was the true civil liberties issue. For example, school policies might have to be adjusted to accommodate the parochial school, thus adjusting the public school to the requirements of a particular religious group. There might be fragmentation of school programs, adverse effect on experimental type programs such as core curriculum, and influence on choice of school text books, requirements for graduation, and curriculum plans. There might be a top-heavy science-math program and the neglect of the social studies.

"Some felt that shared time might jeopardize academic freedom, in that the schools would become more susceptible to pressure from various community groups.... There would be a tendency to constantly adjust the curriculum to pacify militant groups who would threaten to set up their own social studies program.

Of concern to the group was the long range effect on public schools. It was generally agreed that shared time would financially assist the parochial school, thus encouraging a dual system. Perhaps parochial school tuitions would be reduced, thus encouraging more students to be diverted into the parochial system. Some felt that the long range effect would be to weaken the public school system, with eventual deterioration of secular education, including ideas of tolerance. However, some felt that parents of parochial school children might tend to give more voter support to public schools under a shared time program."

Indiana Civil Liberties Union -- "It is the consensus of the Church-State Committee... that shared time education as now under discussion can no doubt be defended on constitutional grounds. However, we cannot see how such a program can be administered effectively, and we see in its potential development openings for direct aid to private and parochial education and violations of constitutional provisions against the establishment of religion."

Maryland Branch, ACLU -- "With one dissenting vote, the executive Board of the affiliate approved the first seven points of [the national Church-State Committee recommendation].

"In place of point #8 we would recommend a strong statement concerning ACLU opposition to shared time because it is dangerous public policy. We tend to agree with Roger Baldwin, Leo Pfeffer and Byron Miller that shared time would lead to a proliferation of private part-time schools and a fragmented system of education. We feel that a strong and healthy public school system is necessary if we are to maintain the type of government in which civil liberties can flourish."

"At a membership meeting of the Maryland Branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, February 15, 1965, seventeen members voted to oppose the shared time proposal of the Federal Government and two voted to support it."

Upstate New York Division, ACLU -- An October 9, 1964 report from Dorothy Shields, executive director, says: "There is general agreement with the [Church-State Committee] statement of May 29, 1964, favoring study to work out the problems.

"1) One member is unalterably opposed to any shared time program, by whatever name. He appends to a long argument the following: 'I venture to say that shared time will be for Church-State relations what separate but equal was to civil rights-- a specious doctrine to be endured for decades until maturity born of sad experience enables us to see how far we have followed a wandering fire.' (I include this because it has the ring of prophecy, so that someone besides myself will have read it should he turn out to be correct!)

"2) Central New York Chapter adds only certain points to stress:

"a) It is vital to include, as Pemberton does, in any policy statement on this matter that shared time is neither barred nor is it required by constitutional considerations.

"b) It should be emphasized under the proposed guideline calling for control of shared time programs by public authorities that shared time should be completely a public school program and that public school boards administering the program should not consult parochial school officials on things like course content -- the criterion being that the program is strictly a public school one, and that the public school enrolls part-time students, not a parochial school system.

"c) It should be clearly emphasized that criteria for selecting new public school sites should not include proximity to existing or proposed parochial schools."

A February 12, 1965 report says: "After further discussion of this issue, with one exception, there is no change in the general agreement with the recommendation of [the Church-State Committee]. It is generally agreed that any policy statement the ACLU might issue should include the statement that shared time is neither barred nor required by the Constitution. There is total agreement that shared time must be completely a public school program under public school administration. There is awareness of the tremendous administrative difficulties that will be involved and of the dangers of inherent constitutional violations under the program. But the conclusion is that the ACLU should be alert to such violations as they may occur, rather than to oppose shared time as such.

"The single exception involves a membership meeting of the Genesee Valley Chapter, which informally voted overwhelmingly against shared time. However, two factors incline me to discount the numerical strength of this vote. The first is that in the report sent to me there was no mention of its constitutional aspects, and I gather that the lively discussion was based more on the program's merits. The second is that I am told the speakers against shared time were more effective. These two factors might account for the outcome being so very different from that of the other two chapters and the Upper New York Division Board."

St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee -- The affiliate Executive Board passed the following resolution:

National Capital Area Civil Liberties Union -- The affiliate's Executive Board minutes of October 28, 1964 report: "The Committee recommendation (to accept National position with certain changes) was defeated in favor of recommendation of minority report of the committee. (Motion by Harris amended by Witt) -- the ACLU should oppose shared time programs on the following grounds:

"1. Such programs appear to violate the Establishment clause of the First Amendment, and therefore present a grave constitutional and civil liberties problem because of the very substantial economic benefit that such programs would confer upon parochial schools.

"2. While the precise nature of the results of such programs in practice are at the moment not predictable, one probable result would be the substantial lessening of the influence of the public schools. There is much to be said in favor of the continued vitality of a private school system in this country, both in terms of academic freedom and in terms of insuring that the right of parents to select a particular type of education for their children is made effective. However, it is also plain that the public school system has played a most significant role in fostering the values of tolerance and understanding that have been essential to the preservation of civil liberties in this heterogeneous country. The existing balanced system of private and public school education has developed because of the determined efforts of parents and private organizations on the one hand and the strong support of public schools by the community as a whole on the other. The ACLU should resist any effort to alter radically the balance between the two systems of education, and the shared time proposals represent just such an effort."

Re: Affiliate Advice on Capital Punishment

Northern Chapter, Arizona Civil Liberties Union -- A membership meeting on the issue was held with fifty to sixty persons attending. On voting, 12 voted in favor of ACLU taking a stand, 4 against, and 2 wanted their abstentions noted. The following day, 4 persons in one family changed their votes, 3 from favorable to opposed, one from abstaining to opposed.

Southern Chapter, Arizona Civil Liberties Union -- Attached

ACLU of Northern California -- In 1959 the affiliate Board took the position that the death penalty as such does not raise a civil liberties issue. A special committee is now reconsidering that policy, but the Board will not act on its recommendations until April 8.

ACLU of Southern California -- For a number of years the Southern California affiliate has taken the position that capital punishment per se violates civil liberties. The affiliate replies affirmatively to each of the four questions put to them.

Colorado Branch, ACLU -- Walter Gerash, Esq. has reported on a membership meeting:

"The general consensus of the group was that:

"1. it is a civil liberties issue in that the death penalty is irreversible and that during the long process of appeal there could be a change of law or a change of facts through newly discovered witnesses that could eventually save the liberty or life of the defendant;

"2. with regard to the death penalty as cruel and unusual punishment, it was felt not to be a civil liberties issue at this state of society where death is so prevalent;

"3. in picking a jury the exclusion of members of the jury who do not believe in capital punishment loads the jury with guilt-prone jurors who indeed are not a proper cross-section of the community, and that this could be a civil liberties issue with regard to a fair jury."

Florida Civil Liberties Union -- The affiliate has opposed the death penalty per se for a number of years.

Illinois Division, ACLU -- Attached

Indiana Civil Liberties Union -- "The Legal Panel [of the Indiana CLU] discussed capital punishment and came to the conclusion that it was not a civil liberties question. At the same time the panel agreed that it opposed capital punishment and that individual members of the Union who shared this view would work to have the present abolition bill before the legislative session passed."

Kentucky Civil Liberties Union -- The KCLU Board voted as follows on the questions put to them:

1. 9 affirmative, 2 negative
2. 10 affirmative, 1 negative
3. 5 affirmative, 4 negative, 3 don't know
4a. 8 affirmative, 1 negative, 1 subject to manpower limitations
4b. 9 affirmative, 3 negative
5. 9 affirmative, 2 negative

Maryland Branch -- The affiliate Board voted as follows on the questions put to them:

1. 9 to 9
2. 8 affirmative, 5 negative
3. 0 affirmative, unanimous negative
4a. 12 affirmative, 12 negative
4b. 13 affirmative, 1 negative

Professor Sanford Rosen, Assistant Professor of Law at the University of Maryland and a member of the Board, says: "My impression was that many who oppose capital punishment thought it would be inappropriate for the Union to take a full-blown position opposing it at this time because currently it is more a general socio-political problem than a civil liberties problem. If a policy statement is to be made it was believed that it would be useful for the Union to seek legislative repeal of capital punishment. It was felt, however, that it would be harmful at this time to raise the question judicially, for it is grossly improbable that any court would in the near future hold capital punishment 'per se unconstitutional either under the cruel and unusual punishment clause of the due process clause.' If a court should reach the broad issue and uphold capital punishment as constitutional, the resulting legitimization would have a deleterious effect on any other efforts, including continued political debate, to secure repeal or curtailment.

"As to question number four, it was believed by some that even if no general national policy stand is taken against capital punishment at present, it might still be appropriate to take the action contemplated in the question. It was believed that while such action might imply a national stand against capital punishment in general, it might also imply (or this could be explicated) that when society's ultimate sanction is invoked, without passing a value judgment on the morality, etc., of the sanction itself, the Union feels obligated to redouble its efforts to assure that defendants receive constitutional trials and that their civil liberties have not been violated. In this regard, perhaps something could be formulated that does not smack of shadow fencing."

Subsequently, a membership meeting was called on the subject. Twelve members joined the Board for discussion. Minutes of the meeting say: "Mrs. Sachs took the affirmative and Mr. Wooden the negative, both basing their arguments on the statements of Norman Dorsen and Emanuel Redfield in the December, 1964 Civil Liberties. Again there was lively discussion, with a consensus that there is a steady evolution of Supreme Court interpretation of the Constitution. Mr. Rosen cited the Gideon case as an example of this evolution, and suggested that the recent questions of Justice Goldberg and two other justices on capital punishment indicate a changing climate of opinion on the Court. Mr. Rosen felt, however, that it will be ten years at least before capital punishment will be declared unconstitutional, and that at present ACLU should stay out of Court. Mr. Rosen's motion that ACLU maintain its 1959 position at this time was passed by a vote of 12 to 10."

ACLU of Michigan -- "The Board of Directors of the Michigan affiliate at its meeting on February 6, 1964, with very little discussion, adopted the position of Mr. Dorsen that capital punishment, at this state in the development of our country, poses a civil liberties problem. The additional point was made in the motion adopted that capital punishment, as three Supreme Court Justices have argued, should now be deemed a cruel and unusual punishment forbidden by the Constitution. One Board member summed up the discussion by saying that 'there may be no legal precedent supporting our position, but civilization is on our side.'

"The Board of the Detroit unit had considered the same subject, somewhat more extensively, at its January, 1964, meeting and had arrived at the same conclusion. The right to life, it was argued by a spokesman for the majority, is the most basic of all civil liberties. The idea that the imposition of the death penalty foreclosed the victim from exercising appeal rights, as well as after-acquired remedies, which would otherwise be available to him and thus deprived him, by state action, of equal protection of the laws found some support also . Nobody argued in favor of capital punishment, but the minority position was that the death penalty was within the degree and kind of punishment which it was within the discretion of a State or Congress to impose. The minority felt the question was a policy, not a civil liberties, question.

"Michigan has never in its history as a State executed anybody, although there have been some executions, pursuant to sentences in the Federal courts, carried out within the borders of this state. In the past half century, at least three attempts to reintroduce the death penalty for specified crimes by state-wide ballot have been rebuffed by the electorate at the polls. These historic facts may be of some moment in evaluating the sentiments of the Michigan membership."

Minnesota Branch, ACLU -- The affiliate decided not to reply to the questions since the state doesn't have capital punishment.

Greater Kansas City Civil Liberties Union -- The affiliate believes that capital punishment as such is a civil liberties issue. Three reasons are given.

"1. It is cruel excessive punishment.

"2. Jury selection in capital cases is based in part on a belief in the death penalty and therefore results in a jury biased in the direction of capital punishment or at least not impartial as between the state and defendant on this issue.

"3. It interferes with due process by limiting post appellate review and by discriminating against the poor and non-whites. Those who are convicted in a miscarriage of justice may be executed in spite of their innocence and have little or no opportunity to vindicate themselves."

St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee -- A motion that the Committee decide that capital punishment is a civil liberties issue failed to pass by a 6 to 4 vote.

New York Civil Liberties Union -- Attached (The memorandum from Sol Rubin to the NYCLU's Committee on Proposed New York Penal Law was adopted by the NYCLU Board which thereby reversed its previous position that the death penalty was not a civil liberties issue.)

Upstate New York Division, ACLU -- A poll of the Board on the four questions produced the following:

"1. 5 in favor, 2 opposed. Of the 5 in favor, two specifically state that the stand should be taken on moral grounds, and as contrary to the spirit of civil liberties, for the legal grounds would be difficult to find. It is interesting to note that these two are not lawyers.

"2. 4 in favor, 2 opposed, and one perhaps. The 'perhaps' really belongs with the 'no' votes, for he prefers the effort to be put into direct litigation.

"3. 4 in favor, 3 opposed. Those opposed seem to feel that capital punishment will never be found unconstitutional.

"4a. 4 in favor, 3 opposed
"4b. 1 in favor, 6 opposed
"The considered opinion of half of those opposed to 4b is that this is too early and would involve the ACLU in too many cases.

"Of those opposed pretty generally all the way down the line, one feels that constitutional aspects are the only reason for the ACLU to involve itself while the other, thinking capital punishment will never be found unconstitutional anyway, feels the ACLU has too many other things to do of greater value.

"Another breakdown of this evaluation which should not necessarily influence the views but does, I think, is that the two members most generally opposed all the way down the line are not particularly opposed to capital punishment for any reasons, while most of the others have long since opposed it on moral and social grounds.

"[In addition, the Central New York Chapter] Board discussed the issue and was informally polled, discovering that while most of the Board disapproved of capital punishment, few were in favor of the ACLU's taking a policy position on it."

ACLU of Oregon -- In response to the four questions put to affiliates, the Board voted as follows:

1. Yes (9-2, 1 abstention)
2. Not prepared to answer at this time
3. Yes (one abstention)
4. No (8-3, 1 abstention), unless case involves a substantial civil liberties issue

ACLU of Pennsylvania, Greater Philadelphia Branch, Pittsburgh Chapter -- Spencer Coxe, executive director, has written:

"Pennsylvania Board Action: The State Board endorsed, by a vote of 12 to 7 the proposition that abolition of the death penalty should be supported by ACLU. The poll did not put the Board on record as endorsing abolition on any particular grounds.

"The Board also voted, 14 to 5, after considerable debate, to endorse legislation prohibiting exclusion of jurors in capital cases because of conscientious scruples against the death penalty.

"Pittsburgh Action: The Allegheny County ACLU independently considered abolition of the death penalty, and defeated (6 to 3) a motion that 'the death penalty does constitute a civil liberties issue.' In explaining the vote, Mr. Kerr wrote, 'All those present felt that considerable research of the question would need to be undertaken before a useful brief could be prepared. We would want to be satisfied with the results of such research before really knowing whether or not we would desire to use such a brief. All agreed with Mr. Foote's conclusion that engaged-in legislative activity for repeal of the death penalty is probably a useless exercise. All agreed that on a case-by-case basis, the death penalty may be a civil liberties issue.'

"The Pittsburgh Board approved the State Board's endorsement of legislation prohibiting the exclusion of jurors.

"Greater Philadelphia Branch Action: Both questions were considered carefully.... The Board, on January 17, 1963, voted 9 to 6 for the following resolution:

> "that regardless of whether or not the death penalty violates the equal protection and due process provisions of the Constitution, ACLU opposes it on the ground that it constitutes cruel and unusual punishment.

"It was the sense of the Board that the adoption of this resolution does not commit the Branch to assist in each and every legal challenge to the death penalty, nor to launching a major effort for legislative action.

"The Philadelphia Board defeated by a vote of 14 to 1, a resolution supporting legislation prohibiting exclusion of jurors in capital cases because of scruples against the death penalty. The ground of their action was that so long as the law provides for the death penalty (wisely or unwisely), the Commonwealth has a right and a duty to exclude from juries persons who are unable, because of conscientious scruples, to apply the law.

"The various ACLU groups in Pennsylvania did not address themselves specifically to all the questions you raise on page 2 of your memo to affiliates, dated May 4, 1964. Here are some comments on those questions:

"1. This question was answered, as indicated above.

"2. As a matter of tactics, the Pennsylvania ACLU has shelved any plans for an abolition campaign. A big effort for abolition was made by other groups in 1961, and the bill, after public hearings and great publicity, was decisively defeated.

"3. The consensus here is that the cruel and unusual punishment issue should ultimately be raised judicially, but that ACLU should not indiscriminately enter into a lot of capital cases for this purpose. It is thought that if the U.S. Supreme Court invalidates the Delaware whipping statute on Eighth Amendment grounds, this will give impetus to the eventual judicial abolition of capital punishment on the same grounds.

"4. No comment."

Central Texas Chapter, Texas Civil Liberties Union -- The chapter voted 6-3 in favor of a policy stand which considers capital punishment a civil liberties issue.

Wisconsin Civil Liberties Union -- The affiliate chairman, Professor William Rice, has written: "I thought a poll of our board might be of special interest, because this state has not had the death penalty since before anyone now living was born.

"Our unanimous opinion is that the death penalty should not exist; indeed there is hardly anyone in this state that wants it. I think the Board feels that civil liberties are more respected here than in our next neighbor Illinois in part because we do not have the supercharged murder trials. Here 'justice' is much swifter; punishment, mitigated by parole, is relatively mild. The number of criminal appeals to the Wisconsin Supreme Court is notably small.

"Whether the abolition of the death penalty should be called a civil liberty that concerns ACLU cannot be answered yes or no, for the concept of civil liberties may be variously defined. Some of our board feel the ACLU is already spreading itself too much and would be more effective if it plugged solely for the conventional bill of rights. But whatever their feeling in general, ten of our thirteen board members think ACLU should bring abolition of death by state action within the range of its effort and have asked me to transmit this advice for your consideration...."

In addition, a number of members expressed their views after the debate on capital punishment in the December Civil Liberties. Here are excerpts from some letters.

From the Executive Director of the American League to Abolish Capital Punishment:

"Quite apart from other reasons why the death penalty is a civil liberties matter, is not the irrevocability of the death penalty in and of itself a violation of civil liberties?

"It forecloses forever the opportunity of a defendant to establish his innocence at some future time or to prove that the actual facts in his case did not justify conviction for the specific crime with which he was charged.

"Defendants sentenced for capital crimes, while still alive, have frequently been able to show that their convictions were, to some extent at least, miscarriages of justice. Those who are executed are deprived of this right forever.

"Should not every human being accused and convicted of a crime be free to prove to the proper authorities that he was the victim of miscarriage of justice by showing that the evidence was mistaken or misunderstood, or by producing new evidence?

"Does this situation not raise a question of civil liberties?"

"I have just read your December 1964 edition [of Civil Liberties] and am hastening to write in response to the article "Death Penalty -- A Civil Liberties Issue?" I wish to endorse vehemently the yes of Mr. Dorsen, particularly with regard to the question of finality. Surely a form of punishment which leaves the recipient no further chance for redemption or vindication in this enlightened age must be considered 'cruel and unusual.' Surely this is the most urgent civil liberty issue of all, especially for those unfortunate or unlucky enough to be prosecuted for capital offenses in those states still so backward as to invoke the death penalty."

"It astonishes me that the ACLU should still be in doubt about a position on capital punishment. I should think the reasons for opposing it would be, as someone once put it, self-evident.

"A death sentence is an irrevocable pronouncement of the infallibility of a judge and jury. At the same time, it is an equally irrevocable pronouncement against the mortal value of a human life. Taken together, these mean that a person ceases to exist by the fiat of his fellow-citizens, which is more power over an individual's life than anyone concerned with civil liberties should be willing to concede.

"It may be that these sentiments cannot be reduced to the measured wording of the Bill of Rights, but on the other hand not all civil liberties or civil rights are to be found in the Bill of Rights or the Constitution."

"Having attended the recent Maryland Branch meeting concerned with discussion of...capital punishment, I would like to set forth my own personal reasons for voting on an affirmative answer.

"The strongest technical reason that I know of for considering the death penalty to be a civil liberties issue is that the death penalty is a cruel punishment....

"I believe it to be a fact that if a person has described to him the details involved in electrocuting, hanging, gassing or otherwise executing a person, and is then asked to decide whether he considers such things cruel or not cruel, a vast majority will assert that such practices are cruel. If so, it follows as the night the day that the American Civil Liberties Union has minimal technical grounds for considering the death penalty to involve civil liberties issues.

"One common objection to considering the death penalty to be unconstitutional is that 'other practices may also be unjust or cruel.' Quite so. But here the issue is whether this practice is unjust or cruel, not whether there may be others."

Re: Shared Time

The national Church-State Committee discussed shared time, as an ACLU policy question, at four meetings. It had before it position papers arguing respectively that it would be a violation of civil liberties for public schools not to accept part-time students in shared time programs, that civil liberties issues are not necessarily raised by shared time programs, and that shared time programs do necessarily violate civil liberties. It also had information on several specific shared time plans.

For Board consideration at the April 3-4 meeting, the following papers are enclosed:

1. The Church-State Committee's "Proposed Policy Recommendation on the Issue of Shared Time," a May 29, 1964 memorandum from Jack Pemberton to the affiliates and Board.

2. A June 11, 1964 memorandum from Roger Baldwin.

3. Affiliate opinion on the issue (including results of several membership meetings. These were held in accord with the Biennial Conference resolution suggesting such meetings, and following special feature articles on shared time in the January, 1965 issue of Civil Liberties.)

4. Views of Three ACLU Members

5. An appendix containing information on several specific plans.

Re: Views of Three ACLU Members in Response to Civil Liberties Debate on Shared Time

"As a long-time member of the Civil Liberties Union I strongly disapprove the Church-State Committee's recommendation of the 'shared time' proposal -- 'Cardinal Spellman's camel' as it is known here in Washington. Apparently the learned Committee's involvement in constitutional quibbling lost sight of the real meaning of the proposal. The real meaning, fellow members, is a wedge, yes, I guess I can call it a substantial wedge, in the battle to gain complete public support for parochial schools."

"....If there are church-operated schools, they should accept the responsibility for the whole education of the whole individual.

"The further opposition is this; if the state is to make available facilities for (for example) manual training or science laboratories, it will soon be evident that it would be less expensive and more practical to provide these facilities to the church-operated school outright."

"I do not question the fact that parochial schools are having financial problems, nor do I question the fact that if all the parochial schools were suddenly to close their doors the public education system would have much greater problems. I believe that if there were no private schools the public school system would be much better than it is. I am ready to accept the consequences of an enlarged public system of education.

"Shared time is simply an artificial aid to parochial schools and as such is a threat to the public schools. It is nonsense to say that it is merely an issue of educating children. The Roman Catholic church, and it is for the Catholic schools the pressure is being exerted, maintains schools for the purpose of teaching children to adhere to its doctrines, otherwise there would be no point in staffing schools with priests and nuns. If Catholic parents wish to separate their children from the rest of society that is their privilege. If they do not feel that religious instruction in the church and the home is adequate, then they should be prepared to pay for it.

"I am seriously concerned about this situation in the ACLU....It seems to me rather hypocritical to spend so much effort on cases about creches at Christmas or saluting the flag or prayers in schools if you are going to support the strengthening and spread of parochial schools and thereby foster a division in our society. If you support shared time I cannot help feeling that you betray John Haynes Holmes and Roger Baldwin."

Re: 1964 Board consideration of capital punishment

Excerpt from January 6, 1964 Board minutes

Judge Waring called the Board's attention to the working papers on capital punishment submitted by Professor Dorsen and Mr. Wulf. He reported that the Due Process Committee had, after long discussion, been unable to reach a consensus on the matter, and had agreed to bring it directly to the Board. He stated that in his view the ACLU should not take any action on capital punishment as such, and not intervene in any case on that ground alone. Professor Dorsen then presented the arguments made in his memorandum to the Board. He pointed out that the results of Mr. Wulf's poll of the Due Process Committee showed that the majority of its members were in favor of the Union's taking some specific actions on capital punishment.

Following Mr. Dorsen's presentation, Judge Waring moved that the Union adhere to the position that it take no action on the issue of capital punishment. This motion was seconded. Mr. Ennis stated his opposition to the Union's taking a less progressive position than that of a minority of the Supreme Court (referring to the minority position in Rudolph v. Alabama). Mrs. Pilpel stated that capital punishment does present a civil liberties issue because it has turned, in fact, into class legislation; it is imposed almost exclusively on the poor, the illiterate, the ill-represented. Mr. Rice said that Professor Dorsen's statements on the irreversible nature of the punishment involved were for him the crux of the civil liberties issue involved: when capital punishment has been imposed, the convicted person is conclusively deprived of any available remedy for the possible miscarriage of justice, and thus is deprived of due process of law.

Mr. Fraenkel moved as a substitute for Judge Waring's motion that (provided a factual study has been made which seems to justify the following conclusion) the Union should enter an appropriate case of capital punishment on the ground that the imposition of capital punishment is discriminatory on the basis of race or class. Judge Waring stated that the discrimination involved against minority groups or certain classes of society would be involved in all criminal cases, not just those involving capital punishment. Mr. Fraenkel agreed, but stated that since the Union is not a defense organization, we must select cases on the basis of their presenting a novel issue, which capital punishment does because of its gravity. Mr. Ennis commented that matters of degree do make constitutional issues. Mr. Frank expressed his opposition to the motion, saying that this was not the Union's job, but should be done by such organizations as the New York Committee to Abolish Capital Punishment. The question was called and Mr. Fraenkel's motion passed by a vote of 12-5.

Mr. Fraenkel then moved that the Union enter an appropriate case if one arises within our area of action which deals with the subject of the dissenting Goldberg opinion that there is a constitutional issue in the imposition of capital punishment in cases not involving a threat to life or the taking of a life. This motion was seconded. Mr. Brown moved to table the motion, expressing his strong disapproval of making a policy decision on the basis of a Supreme Court opinion we have not studied. Mr. Fraenkel agreed to substitute for his motion the following: that the Due Process Committee be requested to look into the appropriateness of taking the action suggested in the above motion. This motion was passed by a vote of 9-4.

After a brief discussion of the other questions put to the Due Process Committee in Mr. Wulf's poll, Mr. Fraenkel moved that the Board proceed to the next order of business, and it was agreed to do so.

Excerpt from January 20, 1964 Board minutes

Mr. Baldwin enlarged upon the considerations presented in his letter of January 9, circulated with the agenda. He urged that in principle the imposition of capital punishment does raise an issue of civil liberties concern because it eliminates the opportunity for redress of errors, which may occur especially in cases arousing strong emotions such as political offenses and sex crimes. Mr. Rice, citing the Sacco-Vanzetti case to illustrate Mr. Baldwin's proposition, moved that the Union seek repeal of laws authorizing the death penalty, on the Baldwin ground. Mr. Fraenkel moved to amend this motion to read: "Believing on policy grounds that capital punishment makes it impossible to correct errors in the administration of justice, we support efforts in states which have laws authorizing the death sentence to bring about their repeal." The motion to amend carried 9-5.

Prior to consideration of the main motion Mr. Pemberton urged the Board to adopt whatever position it takes as a tentative position on which to solicit affiliate advice prior to final action. However, Mr. Prashker suggested that the Board's deliberations had subdivided the issue too much, causing a failure to define the philosophical basis for the separate positions proposed (inherently discriminatory application, injustice of imposing where life has not been threatened -- at the January 6 Board meeting -- and state but not federal legislation at this), and moved for this reason to table the main motion pending further consideration by the Due Process Committee. The motion to table carried 11-3.

The Free Speech-Association Committee considered this question at five meetings in 1963 and 1964. The Committee was divided as to what policy to recommend and decided to present alternative statements to the Board. These statements (labeled the Soll and Hendel statements) with supporting comments are enclosed.

Also enclosed are : (1) a factual memorandum on developments in the libel-free speech area since the Supreme Court's 1964 decision in Times v. Sullivan, and (2) a summary of affiliate comments on the Soll and Hendel statements.

Re: Summary of Affiliate Views on Soll and Hendel Statements on Free Speech and the Libel Law

Of those affiliates which responded six indicated general support of the Soll statement, none supported the Hendel statement, and two opposed both the Soll and Hendel statements. A majority of affiliates have not yet commented at all, although some indicated the matter was under discussion. (The ACLU of Washington State has promised to provide a paper which will be circulated later. Their views are especially important because of the Goldmark libel case in that state). In some cases, the comments were not those of the affiliate's board of directors, but instead represented the view of ad hoc committees, free speech committees, etc.

Some affiliates that supported the Soll statement in general felt, nevertheless, that consideration should be given to some changes. For example, the view was expressed that the right to recovery in a libel suit by a lower-ranking civil servant should be no different than that afforded the ordinary citizen, that is, that malice need not be proved by such civil servant (Free Speech Committee of ACLU of Georgia). One affiliate felt there should be no inhibition upon any public official to sue and cited the problems encountered by Senator Yarborough in his recent Senate contest, which would have been more aggravated if there were no libel protection for public officials (Central Texas ACLU Board). A few thought the ACLU should not oppose punitive damages in all cases (Greater Kansas City CLU Board, St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee Board, and perhaps the Illinois Division's Freedom of Communication Committee; the latter two affiliates having opposed both the Soll and Hendel statements). Some felt that extending the group of people who could not sue for libel in the absence of proof of malice from public officials and candidates to "persons in public life" was not wise because the phrase was too vague (Greater Kansas City CLU Board, Freedom of Communication Committee of Illinois Division and the Maryland Branch CLU Board).

One group felt there might be merit to permitting group libel suits (Executive Committee of CLU of Massachusetts). One refused to condemn a criminal libel prosecution in a case where a Nazi had libeled Negroes as a group (ACLU of Michigan Board action in November, 1964 which is now up for reconsideration).

Two groups (Illinois and St. Louis) felt that both the Soll and Hendel statements were unacceptable for basic reasons.

The St. Louis Board said:

1. We do not oppose punitive damages in libel cases on principle and therefore do not support either statement in this area.

2. We do not accept any restriction upon a public official's right to bring a suit for libel and therefore do not support either statement in this area.

The Freedom of Communication Committee of the Illinois Division said:

"The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee believes that in view of the scope and complexity of the problems involved in the laws of libel, it would serve no useful purpose for the American Civil Liberties Union to issue a statement considering problems in the libel area in the abstract.

"The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee believes that, as an organization, we can be most useful by following future specific cases closely and by commenting on problems which may arise in those cases.

"The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee, without wishing to record a considered legal opinion, also takes this opportunity to express a series of preliminary reservations about both the Soll and the Hendel position papers:

1. The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee, disagrees with the Hendel position that the public and the press should be free to criticize officials and discuss public affairs with impunity regardless of any 'malice' involved.

2. The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee disagrees with both Soll and Hendel that recovery in libel suits should be limited only to compensatory damages or actual provable monetary loss.

3. The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee objects to the failure of both the Soll and Hendel statements to clarify those particular aspects of the lives and conduct of public officials which may be criticized with impunity, i.e., may only the actions of public officials in the course of their official duties be criticized or may any aspect of an officials private life be commented on without regard to the relationship between that conduct and the official duties of the individual involved.

4. The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee objects to the general distinction drawn by both Hendel and Soll between comment on an individual's general social or political attitude as compared to comment on an individual's specific affiliation or other overt conduct.

5. The Illinois Division Freedom of Communication Committee objects to the granting of special immunity for statements commenting on persons in public life. Whether the malice test is utilized or not, the formulation by Soll of 'persons in public life' is too vague and extends the privilege of free comment too far."

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

Prepared by George Soll May, 1964

FREE SPEECH AND THE LIBEL LAW

1. A free society is one in which there is freedom of speech and of the press -- where a market place of ideas exists in which all points of view compete for recognition. Whether viewpoints or ideas are wrong or right, obnoxious or acceptable should not be the criterion. Speech cannot be restricted without making the government the arbiter of truth -- a situation no free society can accept.

2. But defamatory attacks on individuals have little relation (if any at all) to the purposes for which freedom of speech is safeguarded. False statements involving character assassination do not forward the process of a market place of ideas. In the absence of an overriding public interest, therefore, the right to sue for libel has not in itself been regarded as a violation of civil liberties.

3. The ACLU believes that civil liberties have not been infringed in the ordinary case where one seeks to recover compensatory damages because of false statements about character. Compensatory damages may include so-called special damages, that is, actual provable monetary loss and general damages, awardable in actions of libel per se, that is, the recovery of damages even when actual loss cannot be proved when the false statement charges dishonesty, immorality, criminality or professional unreliability or misconduct.

4. We deem punitive damages (which are sometimes awarded in addition to compensatory damages when malice is proven) to be inconsistent with First Amendment principles since they are intended, not to compensate the plaintiff for any loss he has suffered, however general in character, but to punish the defendant.

5. Actions under libel laws present a special problem to free speech when false statements are made about present or former public officials, candidates for public office and persons in public life. In order to permit the widest scope or criticism and free discussion, we believe that a false statement about public officials, former public officials, candidates for public office and persons in public life, in matters of public affairs, should not be deemed defamatory unless proven with convincing clarity to have been made with malice. By malice we mean actual knowledge of the falsity of the statement or a reckless disregard of whether or not it is false. Statements about such persons not related to matters of public affairs would, of course, come under the general rules of the libel law.

6. Imputations and charges as to the holding of political, economic, religious or other kinds of views or beliefs should be considered within the protection of free speech and not subject to libel actions. To call a man pro or anti-labor, pro or anti-Semite, pro or anti-Negro for example, is to characterize his attitudes and beliefs. Those attitudes and beliefs may expose him to disfavor and he may therefore be injured if they are falsely represented. But the injury is speculative in amount and often impossible to prove. Moreover, the characterization of attitudes and beliefs is an indispensable ingredient in public debate.

7. However, falsely to accuse a person of overt conduct, such as membership or affiliation with a particular organization is of a different character. For example, to assert that someone is a member of the Communist Party may expose him to legal disabilities (despite A.C.L.U. objection to many statutes that have this result), may result in his deportation, bar him from public employment and subject him to extreme public disgrace and ignominy. The same may be true of characterizing someone as a Nazi or Fascist if membership in a specific organization is intended. A distinction is to be drawn if terms are used as a purported description of social and political attitudes rather than of specific affiliations or other overt conduct. Thus saying that one is a "radical" or "has communistic ideas" should not generally be libelous. But, if the use of such words is in a context which falsely implies overt conduct or specific affiliation then such use may be libelous.

8. Criminal Libel -- The ACLU opposes all criminal prosecutions for libel. We believe that the award of damages in a civil action provides an adequate remedy for the libeled individual and that the public interest in preventing defamation is not sufficient to justify the repressive effect which criminal libel may have on free expression.

Although our opposition to criminal libel laws is not confined to the operation of those laws in cases where the defamed person is a public official, candidates for office or other public figure, we think it is important to note that a disproportionate number of criminal libel prosecutions occur in this context. The repressive effect of criminal libel laws could operate most strongly, therefore, in the very area in which it is vital that the greatest possible scope be given to free expression.

9. Group Libel -- Our opposition to laws which permit criminal prosecution for libel includes the so-called "group libel" laws. Such laws have been enacted in a number of states and, in recent years, federal group libel legislation has been proposed. The Illinois group libel statute was upheld by the United States Supreme Court in Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U.S. 250 (1952), over vigorous dissent.

Group libel laws are aimed at those who engage in false, abusive attacks on racial, religious or other groups within the society and who promote, thereby, unreasoning hatred directed toward such groups. Proponents of group libel laws note that the ordinary law of libel, whether applied civilly or criminally, will not reach defamers of a group except in the unusual case where the group is so small as to compel the conclusion that each individual member of the group is necessarily libeled by the defamatory statement.

The characteristics which distinguish group libel from other criminal libel situations, then, are the special threat to society posed by hatemongering and the absence of an available civil remedy. Neither of these factors is sufficient, in our opinion, to justify group libel legislation. The type of statements sought to be proscribed by group libel laws, like defamatory statements about public officials require protection because they frequently will pertain to social and political issues of public importance. The injury resulting from a group libel is generally remote and inconsequential and, while the statements involved may well be offensive and hateful, still it is better that they be openly expressed and, therefore, accessible to challenge and debate.

WORKING PAPER, NOT FOR PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION

Prepared by Prof. Sam Hendel May, 1964

FREE SPEECH AND LIBEL LAWS

1. In a free society, in the realm of public discussion, all points of view must be permitted to compete for recognition and acceptance. For, when men govern themselves, they must be free to hear the arguments, weigh the evidence, and decide the merits for themselves. As Alexander Meiklejohn has said, "That freedom is the basic postulate of a society which is governed by the votes of its citizens." Accordingly, whether the ideas are "right" or "wrong," acceptable or obnoxious, is not relevant; their expression may not be restricted unless government is to be the arbiter of truth -- a viewpoint no free society will accept.

2. But, even in the private realm, imputing or charging political, economic, religious (or other) views, however extreme or unpopular, should be considered within the protection of freedom of speech and not subject to libel actions. To call a man pro or anti-Communist, fascist, Negro, or Semitic, for example, may expose him to disfavor, and in particular circumstances, cause him personal injury. But the nature and extent of such injury are likely to be spectulative; and, in any event, to extend the rule of libel to encompass such characterization would tend to silence or make hazardous, the expression of unpopular or controversial views.

However, falsely to accuse a person of overt conduct, such as membership or affiliation with a particular organization is of a different character. For example, to assert that someone is a member of the Communist Party may expose him to legal disabilities, result in his deportation, bar him from public employment, and subject him to extreme public disgrace and ignominy. The same may be true if someone is characterized as a Nazi or Fascist -- if membership in a specific organization is charged or imputed. In short, a distinction is to be drawn between a description of social and political attitude, on the one hand, and of specific affiliation or other overt conduct, on the other.

In the circumstances, however, when a suit for libel would not be a violation of civil liberties per se, recovery should be limited to "compensatory" damages i.e., only actual provable monetary loss. A recognized and legitimate exception relates to actions known to the law as libel per se (involving false charges of dishonest immorality, criminality, professional unreliability, or misconduct), when actual loss cannot be proved; in such instances, so-called "general" damages may be awarded. However, we deem punitive damages (which are sometimes awarded in addition to compensatory damages when malice is proven) to be inconsistent with First Amendment principles since they are intended, not to compensate the plaintiff for any loss he has suffered, however general in character, but to punish the defendant, and thus place an unduly heavy burden upon free expression.

3. Laws permitting libel actions when false statements are made about a public official, former public official, or a candidate for public office, in his capacaty as such, present a special problem affecting civil liberties. Defamatory statements and charges of misconduct may do serious injury to the individual. But so compelling is the public interest in free and open discussion, that the First Amendment should be construed, as Mr. Justice Black has suggested, to leave "the public and the press free to criticize officials and discuss public affairs with impunity," and, in these circumstances, to give immunity against actions in libel.

Such immunity is no greater than that enjoyed by all members of Congress, and many other legislators, judges, and executive officers in the performance of their functions of office. It proceeds on the premise of a transcendent public interest in free and untrammeled discussion of public affairs. As Mr. Justice Goldberg has pointed out this "does not leave the public official without defenses against unsubstantiated opinions or deliberate misstatements. Under our system of government, counter argument and education are the weapons available to expose those matters, not abridgment of free speech."

4. Criminal Libel -- The ACLU opposes all criminal prosecutions for libel. We believe that the award of damages in a civil action provides a remedy for the libeled individual and that the public interest in preventing defamation is not sufficient to justify the repressive effect which criminal libel laws may have on free expression.

Although our opposition to criminal libel laws is general and not confined to the operation of those laws in cases where the defamed persons are public officials, candidates for office, or other public figures, we think it is important to note that many criminal libel prosecutions are brought against such persons. The repressive effect of criminal libel laws may operate most strongly, therefore, in the very area of which it is vital that the greatest possible scope be given to free expression.

5. Group Libel -- Our opposition to laws which permit criminal prosecution for libel includes the so-called "group libel" laws. Such laws have been enacted in a number of states and, in recent years, federal group libel legislation has been proposed. (The Illinois group libel statute was upheld as constitutional by the United States Supreme Court in Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U.S. 250 (1952), over vigorous dissent.)

Group libel laws are aimed at those who engage in false, abusive attacks on racial, religious, or other groups within the society and who promote, thereby, unreasoning hatred toward such groups. And, proponents of group libel laws note that the ordinary law of libel, whether applied civilly or criminally, will not reach defamers of a group except in the unusual case where the group is so small as to compel the conclusion that each individual member of the group is necessarily libeled by the defamatory statement.

In our opinion, neither of these factors is sufficient to justify group libel legislation. The type of statements sought to be proscribed by group libel laws, like defamatory statements about public officials, frequently pertain to social and political issues of public importance. The injury resulting from a group libel is generally remote and, while the statements involved may well be offensive and hateful, still it is better that they be openly expressed and, therefore, made accessible to challenge and excoriation. In general, a free society must put its trust in public wisdom rather than in repressive legislation.

STATEMENT SUPPORTING SOLL POSITION

By Herbert Channick

The statements on Free Speech and the Libel Law drafted by George Soll and Professor Hendel agree substantively except with respect to the area of libel actions by "public officials" (and certain others) based on false statements about such persons in their public capacity.

Both statements agree that free discussion of matters of public importance is inhibited if the ordinary rules of recovery in libel cases are to operate in this area. However, they disagree as to the persons who should be placed under special disability in seeking to recover damages for libel and as to the extent of that disability. Professor Hendel restricts the operation of his proposed rule to public officials, former public officials and candidates for public office. The Soll position adds the broad category of persons "in public life" leaving it to the courts to determine whether a particular person meets that description or not.

Keeping in mind the agreed goal of promoting a maximum of free discussion about matters of public importance, it seems clear that the strict categorization of Professor Hendel's approach would produce some questionable results. Many persons who are not public officials and do not run for office nevertheless play such a prominent role in public affairs that statements about them may very well relate to matters of considerable importance to society. Martin Luther King, Robert Welch, H. L. Hunt and James Reston are names which come to mind of persons whose activities have made them a more important subject for public discussion than, say, the former Deputy Sheriff of Suffolk County. It is essential, therefore, to include "persons in public life" among those whose right to sue for libel shall be restricted.

With respect to the second question -- whether the right to sue for libel shall be absolutely barred to such persons or merely limited, the position taken by the Soll paper is that taken by the majority in the recent New York Times case while Professor Hendel supports the position of Justices Black, Douglas, and Goldberg. The Soll statement would permit a public official, candidate for office, former public official or other person in public life to recover for libel when a false statement, made about him in his public capacity, is proved with convincing clarity to have been made with malice. Malice, for this purpose, means actual knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard of whether or not a statement is false. Professor Hendel's position is that the persons within the operation of the rule should be absolutely barred from recovering damages for libel on the basis of any statement made about such person in his public capacity.

No friend of civil liberties will quarrel with the statement that "where public matters are involved, the doubts should be resolved in favor of freedom of expression rather than against it." But this kind of statement, reassuring as it may be to our own feeling of righteousness, does not really help to solve difficult problems.

The Times decision itself represents an historic step forward in the evolution of free speech in the United States. Previously, a public official's right to sue for libel was not substantially different than that of any private citizen. The Times case places on the public official the burden of proving with convincing clarity that the defendant made a statement which he knew to be false or which was made in reckless disregard of whether or not it was false. The Court made it clear that ordinary negligence on the part of the Times would not support a finding of malice. Properly applied, the rule of the Times case represents a rational accommodation between the need for free discussion of public issues and the right of public figures to have some measure of protection against willful or reckless character assassination.

We disagree strongly with two assumptions which seem to underlie Professor Hendel's position. The first is that the requirement of malice will not be enforced. The A.C.L.U. should formulate its position on libel on the basis of sound policy rather than on a pre-judgment as to how courts and juries will behave. Nor should it be assumed that appellate courts will not be capable of dealing with civil court findings which are not supported by the evidence. The second assumption is that we are dealing with a regional problem -- libel actions by Southern public officials in Southern courts against Northern newspapers. In fact, we are trying to formulate a rule which will apply with equal validity to all libel actions by public figures in every part of the country. We are concerned not just with the New York Times as defendant, but with candidate Newmark as plaintiff.

If plaintiffs must prove actual malice with convincing clarity, and if juries cannot award punitive damages, libel actions by public figures will present no substantial threat to free discussion of political and social issues. And willful or reckless lies make no contribution of value to that public discussion of such issues which we seek to encourage and which the First Amendment is designed to protect. Careful consideration of the present problem leads us to conclude that the A.C.L.U. should vigorously endorse the position taken by the majority in the Times case and should add to that endorsement the further constructive steps suggested with respect to criminal libel, group libel, punitive damages and the imputation of unpopular, political or social views.

STATEMENT SUPPORTING HENDEL POSITION
By Samuel Hendel

Apart from variations in organization and phrasing, there is, I believe, only one important difference between the "Soll" and the "Hendel" formulations. (Such reference is for convenience. Actually, each statement is the result of considerable discussion involving a number of persons and each builds upon the 1947 ACLU statement.) That difference relates to libel actions against a special group, i.e., "present or former public officials, candidates for public office and persons in public life" (paragraph 5 of the "Soll" statement), or (as put in paragraph 3 of the "Hendel" statement)' " a public official, former public official, or a candidate for public office, in his capacity as such." The difference in the language describing the group while not insignificant is, I believe, accidental and unintentional. The substantive difference is that in the "Soll" statement false statements against such persons would "not be deemed defamatory unless proven with convincing clarity to have been made with malice," while in the "Hendel" version, the First Amendment would be construed "to leave the public and the press free to criticize officials and discuss public affairs with impunity, and, in these circumstances, to give immunity against actions in libel."

To a substantial extent arguments in support of the "Soll" position will be found in the reasoning of Justice Brennan in New York Times v. L.B. Sullivan, decided March 9, 1964, and those in support of the "Hendel" position in the reasoning of Justice Black and Justice Goldberg.

The weakness of the "Soll" position, in my opinion, is that in circumstances in which the public interest in free and open discussion is compelling and should be transcendent, it would tend to self-censorship or timidity. Thus, even Justice Brennan, in rejecting the argument that the constitutional guarantees are met if truth, may be offered in complete defense stated that:

> "A rule compelling the critic of official conduct to guarantee the truth of all his factual assertions -- and to do so on pain of libel judgments virtually unlimited in amount -- leads to a comparable 'self-censorship.' Allowance of the defense of truth, with the burden of proving it on the defendant, does not mean that only false speech will be deterred....Under such a rule, would-be critics of official conduct may be deterred from voicing their criticism, even though it is believed to be true and even though it is in fact true, because of doubt whether it can be proved in court or fear of the expense of having to do so....The rule thus dampens the vigor and limits the variety of public debate."

It seems to me, although Justice Brennan did not carry the argument so far, that freedom of expression will be in similar jeopardy if the critic of public officials must depend upon the finding of a jury that the false statements had not been "proven with convincing clarity to have been with malice." As Justice Black pointed out in this connection,

> "This record certainly does not indicate that any different verdict would have been rendered here whatever the Court had charged the jury about 'malice,' 'truth,' 'good motives,'

'justifiable ends,' or any other legal formulas which in theory would protect the press. Nor does the record indicate that any of these legalistic words would have caused the courts below to set aside or to reduce the half-million-dollar verdict in any amount."

The New York Times on April 2, 1964 reported that "at least 17 libel actions brought by public officials in three Southern states against newspapers, magazines and a television network are pending in state and Federal courts."

If less than complete immunity is granted in the realm of public discussion, freedom of speech will be greatly inhibited because few are the individuals or organizations who will risk the burden and expense of litigation in the hope that the Supreme Court will ultimately review the evidence and find a lack of malice.

As is pointed out (in paragraph 3 of the "Hendel" statement) such immunity is no greater than that enjoyed by all members of Congress, and many other legislators, judges, and executive officers, and proceeds on the premise of a transcendent public interest in free and untrammeled discussion of public affairs. As Justice Goldberg has said,

> " If the government official should be immune from libel actions so that his ardor to serve the public will not be dampened... then the citizen and press should likewise be immune from libel actions for their criticism of official conduct. There ardor as citizens will thus not be dampened...."

It has been suggested that the ACLU ought not to focus on the perversions of justice in the South without regard to the national implications of its recommendations regarding defamation. One must bear in mind, to be sure, the damage that has been and might be done to public officials or others in public life, by an uninhibited McCarthyite journal. This is a valid consideration but, on balance, I would agree with Justice Goldberg that "where public matters are concerned, the doubts should be resolved in favor of freedom of expression rather than against it." Certainly, this should be true for the American Civil Liberties Union.

Judge Dorothy Kenyon, chairman of the Committee, has asked us to apologize for not scheduling a meeting since last year. She and the office are working on a comprehensive statement summarizing the problems of "compensatory" and "preferential" treatment, based on the Committee's discussions, but a variety of pressures has delayed its completion; we hope to have it ready this Spring.

However, these are other issues which require the Committee's attention, and the April 3-4 meeting will therefore be devoted to:

1) ACLU position on discrimination by private organizations;

2) further action to challenge discrimination in housing (the significance of the Proposition 14 defeat in California and use of local referenda to defeat housing ordinances -- see memorandum by Charles Frankel, enclosed;

3) race labelling by the press (to be considered also by the Free Speech-Association Committee);

4) state laws precluding new residents from voting in federal elections;

5) ACLU cooperation with all lawyers involved in the civil rights movement (Biennial Conference resolution as amended by the Board on September 14, 1964 -- excerpt from Board minutes, enclosed.)

The Committee will meet for dinner (6:15 p.m.) on Thursday, April 1. Please return the enclosed card indicating your attendance.

Re: Excerpt from September 14, 1964 Board minutes

"c. Legal work in the civil rights movement. Mr. Pemberton briefly explained that the Biennial Conference formulation of this recommendation developed in the context of the work of the ACLU-sponsored Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee, some of the constituent organizations of which favored the exclusion from its work of members of the Lawyers Guild. Discussion proposed clarification of the meaning of the statement through substitution of the expression 'by reason of membership in any organization' for 'by reason of membership in an organization that is disapproved,' and confinement of its application to the functioning of LCDC. Other members, however, opposed the latter suggestion, pointing out that exclusion of lawyers from participation in the civil rights movement on grounds of their associations had become a problem affecting the entire effort. Mr. Ennis proposed separate consideration of a narrower version (applicable only to LCDC), without prejudice to the subsequent discussion of a broader resolution. Accordingly he moved that:

> 'The spirit of cooperation being of paramount importance, the ACLU disapproves of the exclusion of any recognized and accredited attorney from participation in the civil rights work of LCDC solely by reason of his membership in any organization.'

"As so worded, the Ennis motion was adopted unanimously.

"Mr. Kunstler then moved consideration of a broader version of the same statement (which would eliminate the reference to LCDC in the foregoing statement and make it applicable as a general rule to ACLU participation in the civil rights movement) but after discussion in which referral to an appropriate committee was suggested, a motion by Mr. Vladeck to table and so refer was adopted by a vote of 9-7.

Memorandum on Referenda and the Democratic Process

by Dr. Charles Frankel

Because referenda are regarded as instruments for the expression of the popular will, they are commonly thought to fulfil important functions in a democratic society. However, there still remains a question whether referenda should be regarded as having more authority than other instruments of democratic government such as judicial decision or legislative action. This question cannot be settled by appeal to the principle that popular will should be supreme in democracy.

1. The issue turns in part on what is meant by "the popular will". In a constitutional democracy, "the popular will" is commonly taken to be expressed, in the last analysis, in and through elections. For this view to be defensible, however, it is obviously necessary to presuppose that the elections are free and fair. It must therefore also be presupposed that the rights of individuals have been protected, that no artificial barriers have been placed on the competition among people and points of view, and that the constituency whose will is expressed in the elections is composed, within limits, of all those who may make a reasonable claim to be considered members of the group affected. Accordingly, a number of antecedent conditions, defining personal liberties and free competition for votes, must be accepted to give definite content to the concept of "the popular will". Referenda cannot be thought to have the authority to remove such safeguards, unless we are prepared to grant a power to referenda to abolish the very method of democratic government within which referenda themselves acquire their justification.

2. Apart from the conditions prerequisite for free and fair elections, constitutional democracies also commonly recognize the existence of "basic" or "fundamental" individual rights which are not subject to overthrow by majority rule. A list of such rights, admittedly, is subject to change. Thus, reasonable men may sincerely disagree whether or not the protection of individuals against discrimination in housing falls within the area of "fundamental" rights. However, with respect to decisions about such matters, referenda are not commonly employed in constitutional democracies to resolve the issue. Legislative action and decisions by the courts are more common. The question whether such authority should be given to referenda depends on the extent to which we are prepared to allow direct democracy to make decisions about fundamental rights. Most democratic theories, for obvious reasons, prefer to adopt the principle of majority rule only within a framework of antecedently recognized rights.

3. It is anything but self-evident that direct decision by the electorate should be accepted as a more direct expression of the "popular will" than the decision of elected representatives in the legislature. The latter can give the issues more concentrated attention, and may normally be expected to have more information at hand with regard to the issues at stake. Moreover, there is no evidence that referenda are freer from political or propagandistic manipulation than are legislative decisions. In fact, all modern constitutional democracies are representative democracies. Under contemporary conditions, direct democracy is not a workable form of government. Within the framework of parliamentary government, referenda may be employed for certain definite purposes. But to justify them on the ground that direct democracy is to be preferred to representative democracy is to import an irrelevant and misleading standard. When referenda are justified, the justification is pragmatic. It cannot be assumed on principle that they are better expressions of "popular will" or "more democratic" than parliamentary government.

4. Obviously, the concept of "representative government" entails that the citizenry have instruments at their disposal by means of which they can influence and restrain the actions of their chosen leaders. These instruments include resources for free inquiry and publicity, independent political parties, rights of free speech and association, and the residual power to appeal to the courts. To this list of instruments for controlling the actions of elected representatives there may also be added the instrument of referenda. The degree to which reliance should be placed upon them, however, depends upon the degree to which they actually function as effective instruments for combatting bossism and other abuses. They are by no means the only instruments for democratic control of elected leaders, nor are they essential instruments. Short of a definition of "democracy" in plebiscitarian terms, referenda cannot be brought among the essential rights of citizens of democracies. The justification for them is entirely pragmatic, and it ceases, in my view, precisely at the point where the safeguarding of fundamental rules of democratic procedure is at stake.

MINUTES

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE FREE SPEECH/ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE
WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 24, 1965 6:15 p.m.
ACLU OFFICE

Present: Mr. Soll, presiding; Miss Fingerhood, Mrs. Pilpel, Messrs. Channick, Crowell, Lowenstein.

Staff: Messrs. Reitman, Bucholz.

The Committee met to discuss formulation of ACLU policy on where the right to report ends and the right to protect the privacy of an individual begins. Mr. Soll referred to two memoranda by Miss Fingerhood and himself previously distributed to the Committee and asked whether any Committee member would suggest an initial position for discussion purposes. Mrs. Pilpel suggested the Committee reaffirm the position it took in the Warren Spahn case: as to a public figure, no right of privacy exists in connection with material put forward as biographical or factual, but that a right of privacy exists if the public figure is treated in a work of fiction. She stated that no privacy case she was aware of had taken this precise position. It was assumed by the members of the Committee that the Board, in deciding not to enter the Warren Spahn case, did not disagree with the Committee's position, but merely indicated doubt as to whether the Warren Spahn case was the proper vehicle for urging it.

The Committee discussed in some detail the practice of many authors of using as background characters in a work of fiction famous personages identified by their real names. For example, FDR was used in Upton Sinclair's works, and the then Senator John F. Kennedy figures in one of Norman Mailer's books. Frequently a conversation with one of these public figures is set out. Mrs. Pilpel stated that the law is quite clear that no right to privacy exists for a public figure used as a mere background character.

After some further discussion, the Committee was able to isolate two specific areas for initial agreement: (1) A right of privacy exists to protect an individual, famous or not, against the use of his name or image in an advertisement endorsing a product without his consent. The Committee felt that significant no free speech problem is involved in the merely commercial use of one's picture or name to sell a product without one's consent. (2) The Committee felt that, going beyond mere use of a name or image in advertising to the treating of a public figure at length in a book, play, story, etc., the latter involves a right of privacy only if the public figure is discussed in a fictional manner. The Committee, however, went on to agree that a public figure could be treated at length in a work of fiction, provided his name were not used and the method of treating him or an incident of his life were not such as to make him easily identifiable. The Committee further felt that in order to safeguard free speech and to avoid discouraging the writing of biographies, the ACLU position on this point should be interpreted so as not to subject works intended as biographies or factual treatment to a right of privacy action merely because they contain substantial factual inaccuracies. (This is the mistake the Committee felt the lower court made in the Spahn case.) In every case the question should be whether the work is intended as fiction, and if so, whether it treats at length a specific and identifiable public figure. The Committee confined its discussion to living public figures: that is, the Committee did not take the position that a privacy action exists on behalf of the estate of a deceased public figure about whom a fictional work is published after his death. If this were the rule, it might limit substantially the writing of so-called "historical novels."

Mr. Lowenstein summed up Committee discussion of public figures as follows:

> If a public figure is discussed in a factual work, no right of privacy imposes restrictions on what may be said;
> If he is named or specifically identified in a work of fiction, he may be used only as a background or incidental character;
> If he is not specifically identified in a fictional work, there is no right of privacy restriction on what may be said.

The Committee then turned to the question of what kind of information, if any, should not be publishable under a right of privacy as to first, public figures, and second, private individuals. The Committee agreed that in the interest of encouraging free speech on important issues, there could not be any restriction imposed by a right of privacy on the disclosure of information about a public figure. Even though in many instances information about the family life or personal eccentricities of public figures is irrelevant to meaningful discussion of an issue or of their merits in their public capacity, the Committee could not say, for example, that the information that an election official drank too much, had peculiar sexual proclivities, or had insanity in his family might not be relevant to judgments about his effectiveness, dependability, etc. Because the Committee felt it was extremely difficult if not impossible to draw a meaningful distinction between that information which the public had a right to know about a public figure and that information which might be kept from public view under a right to privacy doctrine, the Committee concluded that there could be no right of privacy restraint imposed. The Committee recognized, however, that as to public figures, the law of libel imposed some restraint on the malicious disclosure of untruthful information.

The Committee did not grapple with the question of who should be subsumed under the category "public figure." There was some discussion of considering this question at a meeting to be held subsequent to the Plenary Board's discussion of libel on April 4, 1965, which will involve an attempt by the Board to make a similar distinction for purposes of an ACLU policy on defamation. No conclusion on this point was reached.

The Committee considered extensively the question of whether a right of privacy could be supported for a person who is unquestionably not a public figure. Mrs. Pilpel stated the view that Alan Schwartz would have expressed had he been able to attend: That as to clearly private matters in the life of an ordinary citizen, there is no value in permitting unlimited publicity which is sufficient to counterbalance the real damage which can and does result to the lives of such persons from the disclosure of humiliating or intimate personal details. Mr. Soll reminded Committee members that his memorandum fully agreed with this hypothesis, but that he had reached the conclusion that, desirable as it would be to protect the private life of a private individual, no rule could be framed to accomplish this which would not at the same time have a deadening effect on legitimate publication of other matters. For example, in order to frame such a right, courts would have to decide first who is a public figure and who is a private citizen, and then weigh what is public information and what is private information. The probability that in applying such a rule courts would inevitably make mistakes by awarding right of privacy damages for the disclosure of information in which there is a legitimate public interest, conclusively demonstrates in his mind the danger of attempting to limit the disclosure of private public information about non-public figures. After some discussion during which Mr. Bucholz urged the Committee to adopt a rule that a right of privacy be upheld at least in clear cases of private information and non-public figures, the Committee agree on Mr. Soll's position. Part of the rationale which moved other Committee members to accept this position was the conclusion that the cases in which publicity might be given to the private affairs of a non-public figure are very few indeed, and that most cases involve persons who are at least debatably public figures and as to whom information publicized is at least debatably of public concern.

Mr. Soll stated he would redraft his position paper in the light of Committee discussion. The Committee agreed to review the draft at a subsequent meeting, at which it would attempt to thrash out unresolved issues, such as whether institution have a right or privacy or something analogous to it.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10010

POLICY STATEMENT OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION ON THE FAIRNESS DOCTRINE OF THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION --

ADOPTED BY THE ACLU BOARD OF DIRECTORS ON NOVEMBER 23, 1964

"The American Civil Liberties Union's interest in radio and television derives from the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of expression, a guarantee designed to assure citizens a diversity of information and opinion. The premise is that in a marketplace of conflicting ideas, the American public will be exposed to the broadest circulation of contrasting viewpoints which alone makes possible the ultimate exercise of freedom of speech and the press.

"This belief has guided the ACLU's support of measures adopted by the Federal Communications Commission to enlarge diversity of that most important medium of communications, radio and television. Because of the limited number of channels which technically can be developed in the radio and TV spectrum, government regulation is necessary to avoid chaos. Government regulation always carries with it the possibility of censorship, and the ACLU is especially sensitive to this danger. However, each FCC step toward actually increasing diversity -- without interfering with program content -- deserves the backing of civil libertarians eager to have the First Amendment guarantees utilized for the resolution of public issues.

"It is in this spirit that the ACLU endorses in principle the FCC's 'fairness doctrine.' In essence the doctrine says that if broadcasters are to operate their publicly-granted licenses in the 'public interest, convenience and necessity,' they must present different sides of important public issues. Recently the FCC has set forth certain standards to assure that different points of view would be expressed, and the Union fully supports these standards. They provide that: 1) where a licensee permits the use of its facilities for a personal attack upon an individual or organization, the licensee is required to give the person or group attacked time for an adequate response; 2) where a licensee permits the use of its facilities for any person other than a candidate for political office to take a partisan position on the issues involved in an election or to attack one candidate or support another, the station must give each candidate concerned a 'comparable' opportunity to answer. And finally; 3) where a licensee permits the use of its facilities for the presentation of views regarding issues of current importance, there must be similar opportunity for the expression of contrasting views accorded to other responsible groups within the community. (With regard to this third standard, the FCC goes out of its way to emphasize its applicability to the presentation of views regarding racial segregation, integration or discrimination.)

"In its various statements about the 'fairness doctrine,' the FCC has made clear that these standards will be applied on a basis of reasonableness and with a view to the facts of each particular situation. In addition much weight is to be given to the good faith judgments exercised by the licensee in each case. The Union agrees that in order to operate most effectively, the 'fairness doctrine' must and should be applied in this reasonable manner.

"In some of its statements on the 'fairness doctrine', notably its July 26, 1963 statement, the FCC has specified certain procedural requirements which would necessitate, in certain circumstances, the submission of broadcast transcripts by licensees to persons or groups attacked. Although the Union strongly supports the principle of the 'fairness doctrine,' it does not at this time take any position on these procedural requirements. Indeed, it has strong reservations about their advisability and practicality. We suggest that the Commission re-evaluate them in the light of their own experience and the practicalities of the broadcasting industry, especially in the context of this last election campaign.

"With regard to the 'fairness doctrine' itself, the ACLU is not unmindful that when government action even approaches the area of content, dangers arise which may limit freedom of expression on the air. Particularly there is the danger that to avoid involvement with a government agency over interpretation of what is a controversial program, or where a dramatic or other non-discussion format presents an issue, the station management will simply remove the controversy from its programming. The fear is the station will play safe, thus depriving the public of needed exposure to controversy. Such a fear of government involvement with programming on the part of the broadcaster is understandable. But the broadcaster does have a responsibility as a public licensee and a challenging opportunity to acquaint his audience with a variety of points of view -- especially when individuals and organizations are under specific attack and thus the particular controversy is very sharp.

"Government regulation not based on reasonableness or which does not consider whether the licensee acts in good faith, must be opposed, and the Union will act to oppose such regulation if and when it occurs.

"Not all problems have been solved in interpreting the 'fairness doctrine,' nor can they be until particular cases arise. For example where one side of a controversial issue is involved in a program other points of view might be presented in another format. The basic criteria is whether the public is exposed not to one but to a diversity of opinions. The way of doing this, consistent with the principle of fairness and reasonableness, should remain with the station. As the FCC stated in its July 1, 1964 'The History of the Fairness Doctrine':

> In determining in an individual case whether or not a licensee has complied with the fairness doctrine, the Commission looks solely to whether, in the circumstances presented, the licensee acted reasonably and in good faith to present a fair cross-section of opinion on the controversial issue presented. In making such a determination, an honest mistake or error in judgment will not be condemned, so long as the licensee demonstrates a reasonable and honest effort to provide a balanced presentation of the controversial issue. The question of whether the licensee generally is operating in the public interest is determined at the time of renewal on an overall basis.

"The successful working of democracy, indeed the exercise of freedom itself, is not always easy or simple. Effort is required, and broadcasters have the responsibility to make this effort, if their industry is to remain true to the democratic ideal that not one viewpoint, but many, are essential if the public is to know and understand the issues it alone must decide."

Re: Further Information on Libel -- for April 3-4 meeting

From January 29, 1965 letter of Louis Lowenstein, member of national Free Speech Committee:

"Enclosed you will find a summary of a recent case involving Drew Pearson in which the court extended the doctrine of the New York Times case to encompass figures in public life in addition to public officials. This decsion, as well as the several others which have come down in recent months which relied on the Times case, enforce my view that the majority opinion of the Times case is a viable and practical solution to the libel problems discussed by the Free Speech Committee which were the subject of the recent, but conflicting reports.

"It is significant, I think, that there have been no cases decided, since t he New York Times case, which could be said to have required invoking the more extreme view taken by the three concurring judges in the New York Times case. In short, the view taken by the majority which has been attacked as unworkable, seems to work very well.

"While I refer to the majority and concurring views in the New York Times case, they are, of course, reflected in the two different views taken by the separate reports of the Free Speech Committee."

NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

Privilege --

Alaskan newspapers' defamation of widely syndicated columnist in connection with political campaign in which they were editorially supporting rival candidates is protected by same conditional privilege that attaches to criticism of public officials.

This suit results from an editorial referring to the columnist as a "Garbage Man o of the Fourth Estate.

This court is "strongly attracted" to New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 32 LW 4184, which contains an amazing collection of authoritative statements concerning libel and the freedom of the press on matters of public concern. While the historical references in the New York Times case applied primarily to public officials, this category has been extended to candidates for public office and this courts finds no reasonable basis to exempt those who presume to speak for such candidates, particularly those public figures of international stature. Restated with the facts at bar, the columnist, a public figure and internationally known newspaper and radio columnist of no mean proportion, should occupy the same standing in the law of libel as the senatorial condidate whose cause he was publicly supporting. There can be little question that the candidate could have been so assailed with impunity - Hepp,J.

Re: ACLU of Washington's discussions of libel--for April 3-4 meeting

From 3/16 letter of David H. Guren, executive director of ACLU of Washington:

"Sorry, but I am unable to give you much concrete help on the libel question because of the deep divisions in opinion on the Board and because of the time element.

"The Board first considered the question February 4th but because of the lateness of the hour and interest in the issue set a special meeting to consider it in depth.

"That meeting occured on February 18th. The substantive discussion is very poorly reflected in the minutes of that meeting.

"William Dwyer, the Goldmark's attorney discussed the case and the status of the law after the Sullivan decision. There was strong sentiment that the decision would give aid and comfort to the right wing and would unleash smear campaigns of redoubled intensity.

"The discussion centered upon the right of the public to open debate and opinion in a political campaign as opposed to the right of the individual candidate to security of reputation. it was also felt that the Sullivan decision would have a reverse effect from the desired one of promoting public discussion since it might inhibit free discussion on the part of incumbent candidates and timidity in taking controversial stands.

"There was also a feeling that the intervention of the state in prescribing the limits of civil libel might be a dangerous intervention in a field of legal conflict between private citizens.

"Len Schroeter is preparing a position paper on these lines, and David Vernon of the Law School is doing one following the line of the majority decision. No one feels much affinity to the Black-Douglas position.

"We will consider taking a final position on the matter at our annual meeting, April 24th."

Re: Proposed Amendment to Church-State Committee Recommendation on Shared Time -- for April 3-4 meeting

From 3/23/65 letter of Franklyn S. Haiman, chairman, Illinois Division

.../On the shared time issue, I sensed that with only a bit of tinkering with the National Church-State Committee's proposal, it may be possible to muster a fairly substantial majority....I have a proposed amendment, based on what I've read in these documents, which might be helpful....It would add a Paragraph 9 to the Church-State Committee proposal as follows:

9. Finally, the Union would caution that, in embarking upon a shared-time program, a public school system undertakes administrative burdens whose fulfillment may, as a practical matter, quite easily lead to violations of the standards set forth in Paragraphs 3 to 6 above. It would require the utmost day-to-day sensitivity to constitutional principles not to exceed those boundaries. Therefore, as a matter of policy, it may well be decided that the undertaking is not worth the risks involved. If, however, the decision to attempt it is made, the program should be started on an experimental basis only, with adequate provision for review and evaluation as well as for standing of taxpayers to test its constitutionality, if necessary, in the courts.

Minutes

Equality Committee

Thursday, April 1, 1965

Present: Judge Kenyon, chairman, presiding; Messrs. Black, Kunstler, Levenson, Rutledge, Vladeck

From the Office: Mr. Reitman, Mrs. Katz

State Laws Precluding New Residents from Voting in Federal Elections:

Mr. Reitman reported that last fall the Union had challenged unsuccessfully Maryland's requirement that a person reside in the state for one year before he could vote in Presidential elections. A suit on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick G. Drueding, who last June moved to Prince Georges County from Pennsylvania, was rejected by a three-judge Federal District Court. The Court held that the residence requirement did not amount to an irrational or unreasonable discrimination against prospective voters. The United States Supreme Court on March 1, without a written opinion, affirmed the ruling.

Although the Maryland Constitution makes no distinction between voting in local elections and participation in Presidential elections, the Drueding's suit was based only on the latter.

The Committee first agreed that a civil liberties issue was involved because of the question of the right to vote; discussion then centered on the ACLU brief's distinction between appropriate qualifications for national and local elections. It was agreed that state and local elections were no less important than national elections and that there was no reason to assume that knowledge of local issues increased from the time of first moving into an area. (It was pointed out that some persons familiarize themselves with local issues before moving into an area and may know less at a later date.) The Committee adopted a motion recommending that the Union interest itself in the disfranchisement of voters by reason of residence requirements; the same rule should be applicable for federal, state and local elections and should be only for the purpose of avoiding fraud.

[Office note: On April 19, the Board discussed the Committee's recommendation. Its minutes report as follows: "Mr. Fraenkel commented that the Board did not have sufficient facts on which to take a position, and urged that such information as residence requirements for voting in all of the fifty states and the number of people affected is needed. Judge Kenyon noted the findings in the ACLU brief in the Maryland case that between three and four million Americans are deprived from voting in Presidential elections due to residence requirements. Mr. Hacker supported Judge Kenyon's position that this is a matter of genuine civil liberties concern, emphasizing the increasing mobility of the American population. A motion was approved that the issue is important and that the Equality Committee should gather further information and report back to the Board."]

Race Labelling by the Press: Mr. Reitman reported that the ACLU had never opposed the newspaper practice of labelling persons by race in contexts which were irrelevant (mainly crime stories) apparently because of the fear that opposition would be regarded as interference with freedom of the press. The question came up recently when the ACLU of Michigan called attention to an AP story which identified a state legislator unmasked as having a previous criminal record as a Negro. Contact by the office with the AP in New York disclosed the AP policy of using racial identification where "relevant," with such a decision being made locally. The Committee agreed that use of a racial tag in such circumstances was not relevant, and agreed also that it would be in news stories where race has some integral significance for the story, such as promotion of Negroes in industry. The Committee further agreed that the practice of irrelevant labelling seemed to have increased in recent years, that it adversely affected the "public image" of the Negro, exacerbated racial tension and, often, could offend the due process rights of an individual involved in a criminal proceeding. A motion was adopted recommending that newspapers be urged against the practice of racial identification unless it were truly relevant.

Further Action to Challenge Discrimination in Housing: The Committee had before it a Memorandum on Referenda and the Democratic Process, by Charles Fraenkel. Judge Kenyon reviewed the ACLU's previously adopted policy positions on housing discrimination, and Mr. Rutledge reported on a Berkeley, California conference on Proposition 14 and a memorandum by Sol Rabkin prepared for that conference on the use of referenda. That memorandum recommends that the circumstances under which referenda can be held be made more stringent -- e.g., raised percentage requirements for signatures, prohibition against payments for collecting signatures. Judge Kenyon expressed the opinion that the result of a referendum which deprived a state of the right to carry out a guarantee of the Constitution should be attacked legally, but questioned whether referenda as such should be opposed. It was agreed that the Rabkin memorandum would be circulated to the Committee for study and the matter would be reviewed by the Committee again.

Discrimination in Private Organizations: Mr. Reitman reported that the ACLU has always focussed on discrimination in public, governmental areas, or, in the private housing field, for example, in areas heavily invested with the public interest. But as anti-discrimination work goes on, much interest is shown in discrimination by private organizations and in whether the Union should work in this area. No agreement was reached on this subject, although a number of opinions were expressed. Among them were the view that the Union should oppose discrimination in private organizations only where there is a demonstrable economic interest involved; that other organizations might properly press any private organization to abandon discriminatory practices but the Union's objective is limited to protection of civil rights and civil liberties, not always affected by private discrimination; that discrimination by a private organization should be fought when, by its name, it holds itself to represent the community or when it is monopolistic. It was agreed that a subcommittee composed of Messrs. Black, Carter and Vladeck should attempt to formulate a recommended position on this issue.

LEGAL DOCKET - NATIONAL OFFICE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

ACLU Supported Cases:

1. Holt and Dawley v. Virginia. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 464.

Petitioners are Negro attorneys active in civil rights litigation. In a matter growing out of one aspect of that practice, an order was issued against Dawley to show cause why he should not be held in contempt of the Circuit Court of the City of Hopewell, Virginia, for refusing to answer questions which related to the lawyer-client privilege. On the day the motion was returnable, Holt, as Dawley's attorney, filed a motion to disqualify the judge. When that motion was denied, Holt filed a motion for change of venue. Both motions alleged "that the court is now in effect and/or in fact acting as police officer, chief prosecution witness, adverse witness for defense, grand jury, chief prosecutor and judge." The judge had Holt read the motion aloud in court, summarily found Holt and Dawley to be in contempt, and fined them each $50.

Our brief argues three points: 1) Petitioners' legitimate motion for change of venue cannot, consistent with the guarantees of the due process clause, amount to contempt of court on the part of either the attorney who made it or the litigant on whose behalf it was made; 2) Petitioners' summary contempt conviction deprived them of the fair hearing required by due process of law because the constitutional requirements of a fair hearing in a contempt proceeding were not met and because it was not decided by a disinterested judge; 3) The conviction of petitioners, who habitually represent civil rights clients in Virginia, was one more episode in a long history of harassment by state officials who oppose and hope to inhibit petitioners' activities.

Marvin M. Karpatkin and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for petitioners. To be argued May 1965.

2. Harper v. Virginia State Board of Elections. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 835.

A prerequisite for voting in state and local elections in Virginia is payment of an annual poll tax of $1.50 a year plus a 5% penalty for late payment. In order to vote in a given election, poll taxes for the past three years must be paid. In this suit, the poll tax provision is challenged on the ground that it discriminates against the plaintiffs, who are paupers and without economic means to pay the taxes, in violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The precise question presented is:

Whether provisions of Virginia law which require the payment of poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting in state and local elections violate the Fourteenth Amendment by denying the franchise to paupers and indigents and other persons who are without economic means to pay the taxes but who are otherwise qualified to vote.

Also challenged is the constitutionality of Section 23 of the Virginia Constitution which explicitly prohibits "paupers" from registering and voting. Lawrence Speiser, Allison W. Brown, Jr., R. M. Lechner, and Philip Schwartz, for appellants. To be argued next term.

Amicus Curiae Briefs:

3. Dombrowski, et al. v. Pfister, et al. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 52.

At issue in this case are the Louisiana "Subversive Activities and Communist Control Law" and the Louisiana "Communist Propaganda Control Law". Generally, the statutes require the registration of Communists of members of Communist-front organizations. They prohibit a variety of activities including the appearance of any Communist on the ballot, the advocacy of forceful overthrow of the government, and the distribution or storage of "Communist propaganda".

The appellants, all active in the civil rights movement, were indicted for failing to register variously as members of the Southern Conference Educational Fund and the National Lawyers Guild, described by Louisiana as Communist-front organizations.

Our brief argues that the whole scheme of legislation is unconstitutional on its face, that the doctrine of equitable abstention be held inapplicable in civil rights cases, that the power of federal district courts to enjoin deprivations of federal rights be re-emphasized, that the Court clarify the conflicting holdings in Pennsylvania v. Nelson and Uphaus v. Wiman relating to preemption in the area of state-federal jurisdiction over "subversion". Louis Lusky and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, and Leonard Dreyfus, New Orleans, for the ACLU and Louisiana CLU.

4. Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade and the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born v. Subversive Activities Control Board. Oct. Term, 1964, Nos. 65 and 44.

The organizational petitioners were found to be Communist-front organizations by the Subversive Activities Control Board under the provisions of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. §781 et seq.). Our brief puts forward three arguments: 1) The requirement of the Subversive Activities Control Act that Communist-front organizations register, violates the First Amendment on its face, and as applied to petitioners. The decision of the Supreme Court in Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Board, 367 U.S. 1 (1961) is narrowly drawn to hold constitutional only the provisions respecting Communist-action organizations, as applied to the Communist Party of the United States. The holding of constitutionality was based expressly on findings that the Communist Party was directly and deeply involved with what Congress found to be a foreign revolutionary threat against the existence of the United States government. Since no relationship has been demonstrated with respect to alleged Communist-front organizations, the First Amendment commands a holding of unconstitutionality; 2) The Subversive Activities Control Act violates the First Amendment because it is not narrowly drawn to meet the alleged dangers, offends the clear and present danger test, and runs afoul of DeJonge v. Oregon; 3) Sections 3(4) and 13(f) of the Subversive Activities Control Act, are so vague and uncertain, that they violale the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution. Section 3(4) defines a "Communist-front" organization. Section 13(f) sets forth the criteria by which the Subversive Activities Control Board shall determine whether any organization is a Communist-front organization. Marvin M. Karpatkin and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for ACLU.

5. Zemel v. Rusk. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 86.

Relying upon two statutes [22 U.S.C. §211(a) and 8 U.S.C. §1185], the United States has prohibited travel of American citizens to Cuba except by special permission of the Secretary of State. The brief challenges this prohibition on the ground that the statutes do not in fact authorize the Secretary to bar travel to Cuba, that the President has not exercised and does not possess independent constitutional authority to ban travel to Cuba, and that the ban violates both the First and Fifth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Edward J. Ennis and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU.

6. Ralph Ginzburg, et al. v. United States. Oct. Term, 1964, No.807.

The petitioner was convicted under the federal obscenity statute [18 U.S.C. §1461] of using the mails to distribute the magazine "Eros," "The Housewife's Handbook of Selective Promiscuity," and a newsletter entitled "Liaison". He was sentenced to five years' imprisonment and fined $28,000.

Our brief urges the Court to grant certiorari for three reasons: so that in this case, "as in all others involving rights derived from the First Amendment guarantees of free expression, this Court can make an independent constitutional judgment on the facts of the case as to whether the material involved is constitutionally protected"; to enable the Court to reconsider the Roth doctrine as a whole; and to "allow reconsideration of the question whether Roth did not depart from the constitutional standard best designed to give the widest latitude to the precepts of a free society without endangering competing social interests. We refer to the clear and present danger test." Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, and Murray Powlen, Philadelphia, Pa., for ACLU and Pennsylvania C.L.U.

7. Billy Sol Estes v. Texas. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 256.

Portions of petitioner's state trial for swindling were televised live. The Supreme Court granted certiorari limited to the question of the constitutionality of televsion coverage of the trial.

Our brief argues that television coverage of petitioner's trial deprived him of a fair hearing for the following reasons: the presence of television in the courtroom created an atmosphere that made it impossible to conduct a fair trial; the jury could not render a verdict based solely on the evidence introduced at the trial; television coverage of the trial denied petitioner the right to effective counsel; and television coverage is unfair because it precludes the possibility of a meaningful new trial. The brief also argues that the exclusion of television from the courtroom does not conflict with other constitutionally protected interests including freedom of the press. Norman Dorsen and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, and Sam Houston Clinton, Jr., Austin, Texas, for the ACLU and the Texas C.L.U.

8. United States v. Archie Brown. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 399.

Respondent, a member of the Communist Party, was convicted of violating 29 U.S.C. §504 which prohibits a member of the Communist Party from serving "as an officer, director, trustee, member of any executive board or similar governing body, business agent, manager, organizer, or other employee (other than as an employee performing exclusively clerical or custodial duties) of any labor organization...." The respondent served as a member of the executive board of Local 10 of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. Certiorari was granted to review the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit which held the statute unconstitutional.

We argue two points: that the statute's legislative purpose, to prevent instigation of political strikes by members of the Communist Party (a doctrine which received judicial support in American Communications Association v. Doud, 339 U.S. 382, establishes an irrebuttable presumption that every member of the Communist Party involved in trade union activity intends to instigate such strikes; and that the statute is a bill of attainder because Congress had made it indisputable that each and every member of the Communist Party will disloyally advocate political strikes, a finding that is equivalent to a legislative determination of guilt without trial. Marshall W. Krause, Laurent B. Frantz, San Francisco, California, Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for ACLU and Northern Calif. C.L.U.

9. Griswold and Buxton v. Connecticut. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 496.

Section 53-2 of the General Statutes of Connecticut provides: "Any person who uses any drug, medical article or instrument for the purpose of preventing conception shall be fined not less than fifty dollars or imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than one year or both fined and imprisoned."

Buxton, a physician, and Griswold, Executive Director of the Planned Parenthood League of Connecticut, were tried and convicted of aiding and abetting the violation of Section 53-2.

Our brief argues that the statute on its face violates the right of privacy guaranteed by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and that it violates due process because it bears no reasonable relation to a proper legislative purpose. Rhoda H. Karpatkin, Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, Jerome E. Caplan, Hartford, Connecticut, for the ACLU and Connecticut C.L.U.

10. Swain v. Alabama. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 64. Decided March 1,1964.

The Supreme Court held in this case that the petitioner had not established systematic exclusion of Negroes from the juries in Talladega County, Alabama, even though it was shown that 50% of the eligible Negroes in the county were not called for jury service and that no Negro had actually served on a petit jury in the county at least since 1950. This amicus brief is in support of the petitioner's petition for a rehearing. Osmond K. Fraenkel, Edward J. Ennis, and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for ACLU.

UNITED STATES COURTS OF APPEALS

ACLU Supported Cases:

11. Johnson v. United States. Fifth Circuit, No. 21653.
The appellant pled guilty to bank robbery in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi and was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment. Subsequently, in a related trial, he was summarily sentenced to three years' imprisonment for contempt for refusing to answer questions while on the stand.
The brief raises several issues: whether a post-conviction mental examination ordered by the court was improperly limited; whether the appellant had intelligently waived counsel and competently pleaded guilty to the charge of bank robbery; whether the appellant received adequate explanation of his right to counsel and arraignment; whether the court, in the contempt proceeding, should have proceeded upon notice and hearing rather than summarily. Leslie H. Levinson and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for appellant.

12. LaBat v. Bennett. Fifth Circuit, No. 22,218.
This case raises the question of systematic exclusion of Negroes from the juries in Orleans Parish (New Orleans) Louisiana. The appellant was convicted in 1953 of rape and sentenced to death.
Orleans Parish contains 181,775 Negro residents. Nonetheless, no Negro has ever served on a petit jury empanelled to try a Negro defendant; only one Negro has ever been selected to serve on a petit jury empanelled to try any defendant; and no Negroes served on the petit jury which tried the petitioner. Benjamin E. Smith, New Orleans, La., for appellant.

13. Billingsley v. Clayton. Fifth Circuit, No._____.
This is an appeal from a suit by a Negro plaintiff who sought an injunction to restrain the Jury Commissioner of Josephson County, Alabama, from discriminating against Negroes in the selection of jurors. Charles M. Morgan, Jr., Atlanta, Ga., and Jack Greenberg, New York City, for appellant.

Amicus Curiae:

14. Rabinowitz v. United States. Fifth Circuit, No. 21,256.
The appellant, a worker for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee in Albany, Georgia, was convicted of perjury before a federal grand jury which was investigating a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1503 which prohibits the obstruction of justice. The alleged obstruction was picketing by civil rights workers of a store owner who had sat as a juror in an unsuccessful civil rights damage suit.
The brief argues that the indictment and conviction are void because Negroes were systematically excluded from the grand and petit juries. 34.55% of the voting age population within the district are Negroes but only 5.8% of the names in the jury box were Negroes.

The brief also argues that the appellant was deprived of her constitutional right to be tried by a judge alone. Rule 23(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure requires the consent of both the court and the government to a waiver of a jury trial. This issue was disposed of 9-0 against us by the United States Supreme Court in Singer v. United States on March 1, 1965. Maurice Ford and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, and Hugh Gibert, Atlanta, Ga., for the ACLU and Georgia C.L.U.

15. United States v. Hoffa. Sixth Circuit, No. 15,876.

This case arises out of the Chattanooga prosecution of James Hoffa for jury tampering. The principal witness against Hoffa was Edward Partin. Partin, a trusted associate of Hoffa, was actually a government agent. In that dual capacity, he sat in on conferences with Hoffa's lawyers during discussion of the trial out of which the jury tampering charge arose.

Our brief argues that Partin's participation as a government agent interfered with Hoffa's right to counsel and that his testimony ought to have been excluded as illegally obtained. Osmond K. Fraenkel and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU.

16. Keyishian, et al. v. Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York, et al. Second Circuit, No. 29,287.

Section 3021 of the New York Education Law provides for "removal of superintendents, teachers and employees for treasonable or seditious acts or utterances...." Section 3022 of the New York Education Law provides for "elimination of subversive persons from the public school system...." Suit was filed in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York to convene a three-judge court to declare the statutes unconstitutional. The complaint was dismissed. Our brief argues that the statutes impose conditions upon public employment which restrict First Amendment freedoms; that they proscribe a substantial area of constitutionally-protected speech on the part of all publicly minded university teachers and scholars, both within and without the classroom; that the statutes are unconstitutional taken as a whole because their effect is substantially to restrict First Amendment freedoms without substantially enhancing any legitimate state interest which could not be as well served by means less restrictive of such freedoms. The brief also argues that the foregoing issues were not resolved by Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485 (1952). James L. Magavern, Buffalo, N.Y., Herman I. Orentlicher and Kitty Blair Frank, Washington, D.C., Bernard E. Harvith and Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU and American Association of University Professors.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

ACLU Supported Cases:

17. McBride v. Roland. Southern District of New York, No. 64 Civ. 1510.

Plaintiff, a merchant seaman, was denied security clearance by the Coast Guard. The basis for the denial was the plaintiff's membership in the Communist Party from 1936 until 1957, his attendance at the Jefferson School in the late 1930's, his signing a Communist Party nominating petition in 1939, attendance on two or three occasions more than ten years' ago at a summer camp "attended by sympathizers of the Communist Party," and his membership in the International Workers Order from 1941 until 1954. There was no evidence introduced at the hearing to show that the plaintiff ever committed, or intended to commit, any illegal acts.

The suit has been filed to compel the Commandant of the Coast Guard to issue plaintiff a validated ;merchant marine certificate. Melvin L. Wulf, Seymour Bucholz, New York City, for plaintiff.

18. Gordon v. Breazeale. Northern District of Mississippi, No. GC 645

Petitioner was convicted of rape in the Circuit Court of Lowndes County, Mississippi, in June 1962 and sentenced to death. He had been tried first for the same crime in December 1961, but the conviction was reversed by the Mississippi Supreme Court because of systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury service. The evidence showed without dispute that no Negro had ever been called for jury service in Lowndes County since the year 1900 at least. The jury exclusion issue was not raised at the second trial.

The questions raised on this federal habeas corpus petition include the denial of counsel immediately upon arrest, the extraction of two involuntary confessions during the time petitioner was denied counsel, illegal arrest and continued systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury service. R. Jess Brown, Jackson, Mississippi, Martin Bradley, Buffalo, N.Y., Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for petitioner.

19. Ritter v. Matthews. Northern District of Texas (Dallas Division) Civil No. 9238.

Plaintiff was employed on the faculty of North Texas State University. His contract of employment was not renewed because of his activities of meeting and advising other individuals for the purpose of advancing integration of the races in stores and theaters in the area where the University was located. The suit seeks his reinstatement. Albert Levy, Herbert Landau, Marvin Menaker, and George Schatzki, Dallas, Texas, for plaintiff.

20. Smith v. Breazeale. Northern District of Mississippi, No. GC 6440.

Petitioner was convicted of rape in the Circuit Court of Madison County, Mississippi, in September 1961 and sentenced to death.

The principal issue in this habeas corpus petition is the systematic exclusion of Negroes from the grand and petit juries in Madison County. The white population in the county is 9,300; the Negro population is 23,700. During the past 15 years, less than a dozen Negroes have been included upon the lists from which jurors are selected.

Other questions raised in the petition include denial of counsel immediately upon arrest, denial of counsel at preliminaryhearing, denial of the effective assistance of counsel at trial, introduction into evidence of a coerced confession, and illegal search and seizure.

The evidence relating to the ineffective assistance of counsel shows without dispute that the petitioner's court-appointed white attorney spent no more than 1 1/2 hours in preparation for the trial from the time of his appointment to the day of the trial, a period of four days. In addition, he refused to speak to the petitioner's wife who had evidence material to the defense. R. Jess Brown, Jackson, Mississippi, Benjamin E. Smith, New Orleans, La., Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for petitioner.

21. Schwartz, et al. v. Underwood. Southern District of Ohio, No. 6611.

This suit raises the question of the constitutionality of rules adopted by the trustees of the Ohio State University restricting the right of speakers to appear on the University campus. The rules provide, among other things, that:

"Those who are subversive or those who are allied to them in purpose or action or those whose views do not contribute in some way to the University's educational program are not acceptable as guest speakers."

One of the plaintiffs is Frank Wilkinson, Executive Director of the National Committee to Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee. He was invited to speak on the campus by a recognized campus organization, but the University President demanded that Wilkinson submit a non-Communist affidavit, that the organization show why there was no other qualified person who could be invited to speak on the work of the House Un-American Activities Committee, that the student organization which was sponsoring the meeting show it was acting in good faith, and assurances that an invitation to Wilkinson would serve the best interest of the University. The demands were not met and Wilkinson was denied permission to speak. This suit was then filed. Jack Day, Cleveland, Ohio, for plaintiffs.

22. Cheung v. Ailes. U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 2782-64.

One year, 11 months, and 21 days after plaintiff enlisted in the Army for a two-year period, it was discovered that he had failed to disclose that he was not a citizen of the United States at the time of enlistment. He was discharged and issued a "General Discharge". After exhausting his administrative remedies, plaintiff filed this suit against the Secretary of the Army to procure an "Honorable Discharge".

On motion for summary judgment, it is argued that Harmon v. Brucker, 355 U.S. 579 (1958) forbids the armed forces from issuing less than Honorable Discharges on any basis other than the character of the soldier's military service. The defendant has admitted that the plaintiff was discharged only because he concealed the fact that he was not a citizen of the United States at the time of his enlistment. Mark A. Weiss and Lawrence A. Speiser, Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

23. Sims v. Frink. Middle District of Alabama, No. 1744-N.
This is the next stage of the Alabama reapportionment case decided by the U.S. Supreme Court last term, sub nom Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533. Charles Morgan, Jr., Atlanta, Ga., for plaintiffs.

24. Bailey, et al. v. Wharton, et al. U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Miss., No. 3674 (J)(C).
This class suit attacks the systematic exclusion of Negroes from the grand and petit juries of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi. The complaint alleges that the defendants (the Clerk of the Court and Jury Commissioner respectively) have failed to call the plaintiffs for jury service solely because they are members of the Negro race, in violation of Title 28, U.S.C. §1863(c); that the plaintiffs, though subjected to violations of their civil rights for which they are entitled to redress at law, have been unable to obtain such redress because of the exclusion of members of their race from the juries in the Southern District of Mississippi; that the plaintiffs and the class they represent have been subjected to acts which have been made criminal by federal statutes, but that the statutes have not been enforced because of the exclusion of Negroes from grand and petit juries in the Southern District of Mississippi. R. Jess Brown, Jackson, Miss., Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, Charles Morgan, Jr., Atlanta, Ga., for the plaintiffs.

25. United States v. O'Neal. U.S. District Court for the Eastern Dist. of Missouri, No. 65 CR 22(1).
The defendant's claim for exemption from military service based upon his conscientious objection to war was rejected on the ground that his objections were social and political rather than religious. At the defendant's arraignment, held the week after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Seeger v. United States, the court directed the U.S. Attorney to reconsider the indictment in light of the Seeger opinion. Arthur J. Freund, Stephen W. Skrainka, St. Louis, Mo., Marvin M. Karpatkin, Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for defendant.

Amicus Briefs:

26. Thompson v. Gleason. U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 1853-59.
The plaintiff was receiving Veterans Administration funds for service connected disabilities suffered in combat in World War II. In 1956 the payments were declared forfeited on the ground that Thompson had "rendered assistance to an enemy of the United States" in the form of public statements made in 1950-1951 criticizing American prosecution of the Korean War. The Veterans Administration held that the statements disclosed a violation of the Espionage Act, 18 U.S.C. §2388(a), and that forfeiture was therefore mandatory.

We argue that the World War I cases upon which the Veterans Administration relies to support its interpretation of the Espionage Act are no longer authoritative. The brief also argues that the Veterans Administration's characterization of Thompson's comments about the Korean War as being "false statements" violates the First Amendment which protects all utterances no matter how perverse or incorrect they may appear to be. Osmond K. Fraenkel, Melvin L. Wulf, Seymour Bucholz, New York City, Lawrence Speiser, Washington, D.C., for the ACLU.

27. Driver v. Hinnant. U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, Civil No. 1639.

The petitioner was charged with public intoxication in violation of Section 14-335 of the North Carolina General Statutes. At trial it was established by uncontradicted evidence that the petitioner is a chronic alcoholic. He has been arrested and convicted for public intoxication more than 203 times in the past 34 years. After exhausting his state remedies, the petitioner filed this application for a writ of habeas corpus.

Our brief argues that chronic alcoholism is a sickness, not a crime; that punishment of a chronic alcoholic for public intoxication, when he is unable to avoid that act, violates the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment; that punishment of a chronic alcoholic merely for publicly exhibiting the symptoms of his illness, violates the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. Peter Barton Hutt and Michael S. Horne, Washington, D.C. for the ACLU, National Capital Area C.L.U., and Washington Area Council on Alcoholism, as amici curiae.

STATE COURTS

ACLU Supported Cases:

28. Ashton v. Kentucky. Kentucky Court of Appeals, No. W-125-64.

The appellant was convicted of publishing material critical of the officials of Hazard, Kentucky.

The brief argues that the trial court's definition of criminal libel was so vague and inclusive that the appellant's conviction was without due process of law and violated the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press. The brief also argues that there was no showing that the material, alleged to have libeled a public official, was published with actual malice as required by New York Times v. Sullivan. Ephraim London, New York City, for appellant.

29. Bass v. Mississippi. Supreme Court of Mississippi, No._____.

The defendant was convicted of rape in December 1964 in Warren County, Mississippi (Vicksburg) and sentenced to death. The questions raised on appeal include the systematic exclusion of Negroes from grand and petit juries in the county, the introduction of evidence illegally seized, and the refusal of the trial judge to permit production of contemporaneous notes made by F.B.I. agents who testified at trial about physical and chemical tests made upon various items of evidence introduced by the prosecution. R. Jess Brown, Jackson, Miss., Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for petitioner.

30. Walters v. Reinicke. Supreme Court, Hartford (Conn.) County, No. ____.

The petitioner in this habeas corpus was convicted of murder in June 1956 and sentenced to life imprisonment without benefit of release. The petition alleges that the petitioner was arrested without either a warrant or probable cause, and interrogated at length by several police officers without being granted the assistance of counsel though he repeatedly requested the right to consult an attorney. The petition also alleges that the petitioner's automobile was searched by the police without a search warrant after he was taken into custody.

After three days of interrogation, during which he was denied the right to consult counsel, and after being confronted with property illegally seized from his home, person and automobile, incriminating statements were involuntarily extracted from the petitioner.

The petition claims that the admission of the incriminating statements against the petitioner at trial was unconstitutional, that the property taken from his home, car, and person was illegally admitted into evidence at trial, and that he was denied counsel at crucial stages of the proceedings against him. Leslie H. Levinson and Melvin L. Wulf Wulf, New York City, Jerome E. Caplan, Hartford, Conn., for petitioner.

31. Georgia v. Whitus and Davis. Superior Court of Mitchell County (Georgia), No.____.

Both defendants were convicted of the murder of a prominent local white citizen in 1959. Their convictions were reversed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in 1964. Whitus v. Balckom, 333 F.2d 496, cert. den. 33 U.S. L.Week 3209 (U.S. Dec. 7, 1964) on the ground that Negroes had been systematically excluded from grand and petit juries in Mitchell County. Re-trial is scheduled for the week of April 12, 1965 and the question of systematic exclusion is being raised again. An application for a change of venue has been filed. P. Walter Jones, Albany, Ga., Charles Morgan, Atlanta, Ga., for defendants.

32. In Re the Extradition of Daniel J. Hinson. Superior Court of Fulton County, Ga.,No._.

Hinson had several criminal charges lodged against him in two counties of South Carolina. While serving a federal sentence in the Atlanta Penitentiary, Hinson sought rulings from South Carolina courts to force them to provide him with a speedy trial. Federal penitentiary procedure calls for the transportation of an inmate of the Federal penitentiary to be returned for trial if request is made by the state and if certain financial obligations are met by the state. South Carolina refused to take the steps to return Hinson but is now seeking his return to stand trial. Hinson is presently confined in the Atlanta City Jail, Atlanta authorities having arrested him on detainer warrants upon his release from the Federal penitentiary. Habeas corpus is being sought in state court on the ground that Hinson was deprived of his right to a speedy trial. Charles Morgan, Atlanta, Ga., for petitioner.

33. North Carolina State Bar v. Reginald Lee Frazier. Supreme Court of N. Carolina

Frazier, a Negro attorney in New Bern, North Carolina, active in civil rights litigation, was accused by a Negro woman of misappropriation of funds. She was represented by a white lawyer in a lawsuit and recovered a judgment against Frazier. The judgment was affirmed by the North Carolina Supreme Court. Subsequently, the Secretary of the North Carolina Bar Association brought charges against Frazier seeking his disbarrment, claiming that Frazier misappropriated funds of his client and discussed the case with the woman after she was represented by different counsel.

Several questions are being raised including the existence of two bar associations in the state - one, the state integrated bar from which Negroes are not excluded and which has few activities, and the other active association from which Negroes are excluded. Charles Morgan, Jr., Atlanta, Ga., Julius L. Chambers, Charlotte, North Carolina, for the respondent.

34. Georgia v. Woods. Superior Court of Emanuel County, Georgia, No.____.

A motion for a new trial has been filed on behalf of George Woods, Jr., a Negro, who was involved in an automobile crash in Georgia. An 18 year-old white boy in the other automobile was killed. The state charged that Wood had been driving over the speed limit, under the influence of alcohol and had not yielded the right of way. He was convicted of "wilfully and feloniously and with malice aforethought and with reckless disregard for human life" commiting the act of murder. After 30 minutes' deliberation, the jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree. Woods was sentenced to life imprisonment.

The issues raised in the motion for a new trial are the systematic exclusion of Negroes from the grand and petit juries, and the absence of any evidence from the record to support the conviction. Charles Morgan, Jr., for the defendant.

Amicus Curiae:

35. Alabama v. Mills. Supreme Court of Alabama, Sixth Division, No. 950.

Title 17, Section 285 of the Code of Alabama provides: "It is a Corrupt Practice for any person on any election day...to do any electioneering or to solicit any votes... for or against the election or nomination of any candidate, or in support of or in opposition to any proposition that is being voted on, on the day on which the election affecting such candidates or propositions is being held."

The appellee, Editor of the Birmingham "Post-Herald", was charged with violating Section 285 because the newspaper ran an editorial on election day 1962 soliciting support of a proposition for a change of form of the Birmingham city government. The trial court sustained a demurrer against the complaint on the ground that the statute violated the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution. Our brief makes three arguments:

1) Electioneering and solicitation of votes on election day with respect to a candidate or proposition to be voted on that day do not create a clear and present danger of substantive evils which the State of Alabama is constitutionally entitled to prevent. 2) The balancing test properly should be applied only to regulation of conduct which has a minor and incidental effect on speech, or to regulation of the time, place and/or manner of speaking. It is not applicable to a regulation, the operation of which depends upon the content or subject matter of speech. 3) Even if the balancing test is applied in the present case, Section 285 is unconstitutional for Alabama has no compelling interest in the silencing of political advocacy on election day in the sense required to sustain legislation which infringes First Amendment liberties. Charles Morgan, Atlanta, Ga., Herbert S. Channick, New York City, for ACLU.

36. Jones and Marquez v. Shaw. Supreme Court of Oklahoma, No.41393.

42 Okla. Stat. Ann., Sections 312, 313, 314, 315, prohibit inter-racial marriage. Our brief sets forth the present status of miscegenation decisions from Pace v. Alabama, 106 U.S. 83 (1883), to McLaughlin v. Florida, 379 U.S. 184 (1965) and argues that the Oklahoma statutes violate the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, deny the individual plaintiffs the equal protection of the laws required by the Fourteenth Amendment, deny the plaintiffs due process of law because they interfere with the right to marriage, a fundamental right; that the statutes violate the due process clause because they are capricious, unreasonable, and arbitrary classifications without any valid legislative purpose. Bernard S. Cohen, Philip J. Hirschkop, Alexandria, Virginia, Melvin L. Wulf, New York City, for the ACLU and National Capital Area C.L.U.

MISCELLANEOUS

U.S. COURT OF MILITARY APPEALS

37. United States v. Gallagher. United States Court of Military Appeals, No. 18,212.

Article 67(b)(1) requires the Court of Military Appeals to review the record in cases affecting a general or flag officer regardless of such officer's election to petition the Court for review and regardless of whether or not he is able to demonstrate good cause. All others must petition the Court and make a showing of good cause before the Court will review a case on the merits.

Our brief challenges this provision on the ground that there is no reasonable connection between the statutory purpose and the classification favoring flag or general officers, and that it denies the euqal protection of the laws to military defendants other than general and flag officers. Joseph Lobenthal, New York City, Lawrence Speiser, Washington, D.C., for the ACLU.

CASES DECIDED SINCE LAST DOCKET (November 23, 1964)

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

ACLU Supported Cases:

38. Stanford v. Texas. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 40
Search and seizure of petitioner's books unanimously held to violate the Fourth Amendment.

39. Pate v. Page. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 426 Misc.
Certiorari was twice denied since the last docket. However, a sanity hearing was held and the petitioner was found to be insane and therefore not subject to execution.

40. McReynolds and Pappenheim v. Christenberry. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 605.
Certiorari was denied in this case which raised the question of the constitutionality of Title 39 U.S.C. §4008 which regulates the importation and distribution of "foreign political propaganda". Two other cases will be argued before the Court this term, including one from Northern California ACLU.

Amicus Curiae Briefs:

41. Calhoon v. Harvey. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 17.
Decided adversely on December 7, 1964 by a vote of 8 to 1. We had argued that suits may be filed under the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 prior to union elections in order to challenge their validity, and that the statute's post-election remedy was not exclusive. The Court held to the contrary.

42. Freedman v. Maryland. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 69.
Decided favorably on March 1, 1965 by a unanimous Court. The decision held Maryland's movie censorship statute unconstitutional.

43. Beck v. Ohio. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 18.
Decided favorably on November 23, 1964 by a vote of 6-3. We had argued that a search without warrant is per se unreasonable where there is ample time to secure a warrant, that there was insufficient probable cause to conduct a warrantless search in this case, and that an arresting officer must disclose the identity of an informer in order to permit the court to determine whether probable cause for a search existed. The decision of the Court held there was insufficient probable cause to support the arrest.

44. United States v. Mississippi. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 73.
Decided more or less favorably on March 8, 1965 by a unanimous Court. Our brief had argued that Mississippi's voting statutes, including its literacy and constitutional interpretation test, its good moral character test, and the state's poll tax requirement, were unconstitutional. The Court remanded the case to the District Court for trial rather than disposing of the statutes on their face.

45. Seeger, Jakobson and Peter v. United States. Oct. Term, 1964, Nos. 50, 51, 29.

Decided favorably on March 8, 1965 by a unanimous Court. We had argued the unconstitutionality of Section 6(j) of the Universal Military Training and Service Act because it provided only for exemption of conscientious objectors who believe in a Supreme Being. The decision of the Court held the statute constitutional but gave the broadest definition to the Supreme Being in which a belief is required.

UNITED STATES COURTS OF APPEALS

ACLU Supported Cases:

46. Colliflower v. Garland. Ninth Circuit, No. 19,170.

Decided favorably on January 12, 1965. The court held that the Indian tribal court which had convicted the appellant was subject to the requirements of the due process clause of the Fifth and/or Fourteenth Amendments. The case was remanded to the District Court for a hearing on the petition for habeas corpus.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

ACLU Supported Cases:

47. Kissling v. Rusk. Southern District of New York, No.____.

This case again raised the constitutionality of denying a passport to an individual who had travelled to Cuba. Shortly after the complaint was filed, the Department of State issued the passport.

STATE COURTS

ACLU Supported Cases:

48. Harper v. Mississippi. Mississippi Supreme Court, No. 42,767.

Unanimously reversed on the ground that Negroes had been systematically excluded from service upon grand and petit juries in Scott County, Mississippi.
